

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

"Land" is a term used to designate all real estate, just as money is used to designate the whole volume of the medium of exchange. Montgomery County v. Cochran, 121 Fed. 17, 21, 57 C. C. A. 261.

"The word 'land' * * * comprehends ground, soil, or earth, pastures, woods, springs, wells, lakes, ponds, and all things that have become a fixed part of the soil." Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S. W. 486, 494, 225 Mo. 414, 20 Ann. Cas. 1072.

The primary meaning of the word "land," at common law, is "any ground, soil, or earth whatsoever; as meadows, pastures, woods, waters, marshes, furzes and heath." In a more limited sense the term denotes the quantity and character of the interest or estate which the tenant may own in the lands. Kemp v. Goodnight, 80 N. E. 160, 161, 168 Ind. 174.

"Land," in its legal signification, has an indefinite extent upwards, so that by a conveyance of land all buildings, growing timber, and water erected and being thereupon shall likewise pass. Trustees of the Freeholders & Commonalty of Town of Brookhaven v. Smith, 90 N. Y. Supp. 646, 650, 98 App. Div. 212.

It is elementary that the word "land" in its legal signification has an indefinite extent upwards as well as downwards, and therefore if it were possible for a man to live in a state of nature, unconnected with other individuals, the proprietor of land would own not only the face of the earth within the boundaries of his proprietorship, but also everything under it and over it. An imaginary person living in such a state of nature would be at liberty to use his land as he pleased to build on it to any height and to dig into it to any depth without restraint. But as man was formed for society and is incapable of living alone, organized society is essential to his well-being and happiness, and every person who enters society must give up a part of his so-called natural rights and liberty for the benefit of the community. Cochran v. Preston, 70 Atl. 113, 114, 108 Md. 220, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1163, 129 Am. St. Rep. 432, 15 Ann. Cas. 1048 (citing 1 Bl. Comm. p. 125).

Land in its broadest signification includes not only the surface of the earth but the mines, quarries, and everything under it; and whoever has the fee in the surface presumptively owns everything of a permanent nature under or over it. Notwithstanding it is competent for the owner to convey the mines or quarries by a separate grant vesting in one person a freehold in the soil and in another a freehold in the mines or quarries and to sever the ownership of the surface from the ownership from that which is under it, there may exist a double ownership or two freeholds in the same parcel of land. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Boykin, 76 Ala. 560, 563 (citing 2 Washb. Real Prop. 375).

The word "land" includes not only the soil, but everything attached to it, whether attached by the course of nature, as trees, herbage, and water, or by the hand of man, as buildings and fences. Crawford Co. v. Hathaway, 93 N. W. 781, 788, 67 Neb. 325, 60 L. R. A. 889, 108 Am. St. Rep. 647 (citing McGee Irrigating Ditch Co. v. Hudson [Tex.] 22 S. W. 967).

Anderson's Law Dict. says that the word "land" comprehends all things of a permanent and substantial nature, being a word of very comprehensive significance. Act Feb. 22, 1851, pp. 64, 65, is entitled "An act for the benefit of William Jewell College. Certain lands owned by William Jewell College exempted from tax." And section 1 provides that "all the land and improvements thereon now owned by the William Jewell College * * * and all the lands that may hereafter be granted or devised to said college, or any other institution of learning in this state, for the benefit of education, be, and the same are hereby, exempted from all taxes * * * so long as said lands may be owned by said college." Section 2 releases from delinquent taxes the "land" belonging to the college in the counties named, and section 3 makes it a misdemeanor to willfully injure or destroy timber, etc., from any of the lands belonging to the college. The entire endowment fund of the college was in lands when the act was passed, the colleges of that time being generally endowed in land alone, and the charters of a number of colleges perpetually relieved them from taxation on all kinds of property. Held, that the word "land" as used in the act will be construed to include personalty, so that the college cannot be taxed on its endowment fund, consisting of personalty. State ex rel. Waller v. Trustees of William Jewell College, 136 S. W. 397, 399, 401, 402, 234 Mo. 299.

The term "land" in statutes conferring power to condemn is to be taken in the legal sense, and includes both the soil and buildings and other structures on it and all interests therein. White v. Cincinnati, R. & M. R. R., 71 N. E. 276, 278, 34 Ind. App. 287 (quoting and adopting definition in Lewis, Em. Dom. [2d Ed.] § 285).

"The term 'land,' in statutes conferring power to condemn, is to be taken in the legal sense, and includes both the soil and buildings and other structures on it, and any and all interests therein." In assessment of damages in proceedings for condemnation of land, the appraisers should value the land taken with the buildings on it, and it will be presumed that the buildings were included in the award. Stauffer v. Cincinnati, R. & M. R. R., 70 N. E. 543, 544, 33 Ind. App. 356 (quoting Lewis, Em. Dom. [2d Ed.] § 285; citing Brockett v. Ohio & P. R. Co., 14 Pa. 241, 53 Am. Dec. 534; State v. Reed, 38 N. H. 59; Mills, Em. Dom. §§ 49, 223).

The word "land" comprehends ground, soil, or earth, pastures, woods, spring, wells, lakes, ponds, and all things which have become a fixed part of the soil. The word "tenement," in its ordinary meaning, means a "house," which is the subject of tenure, and includes, not only corporeal hereditaments, which are or may be held, but also all inheritances issuing out of any of these inheritances, or concerning or annexed to or exercised within the same, though they lie not in tenure. "Tenement" is a word of greater scope than "lands," and though, in its vulgar acceptance, is only applied to houses and other buildings, yet, in its original, proper, and legal sense, it signifies anything that may be holden, provided it be of a permanent nature, whether of a substantial and sensible, or of an unsubstantial, ideal, kind. The term "hereditaments" includes rights unconnected with land, but generally used as the widest expression for real property of all kinds, being divided into real hereditaments, which are lands and tenements, and personal hereditaments, which are rights concerning neither lands nor tenements. As so defined, neither the term "tenement" nor "hereditament" includes in law a lease of lands for years. Orchard v. Wright-Dalton-Bell-Anchor Store Co., 125 S. W. 436, 494, 225 Mo. 414, 20 Ann. Cas. 1072.

In common speech the nonmineral portion of land, the portion which covers and envelopes the minerals, is called the "surface" of the land, and the proprietor of land who devests himself of title to the minerals which it contains is still spoken of as the owner of the fee or of the surface or of the land. Kansas Natural Gas Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Neosho County, 89 Pac. 750, 751, 75 Kan. 335.

The word "land," as a conveyance, carries every kind of property, right, and appurtenance which is legally embraced in that word, but what rights go to a patentee of land depend, not upon any supposed adjudication contained in the patent, but upon the general law of the state where the land is situated. City of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles Farming & Milling Co., 93 Pac. 869, 871, 152 Cal. 645.

A will whereby testator devised farm lands to his daughters for life, remainder in fee simple to their children, and whereby he provided that they might sell their respective lands, proceeds to be reinvested in "lands" to be held for the same use, and that purchaser must see that the reinvestment was made before acquiring title to land devised, did not require reinvestment in farm lands, but reinvestment could be made in city real estate; the word "lands" including every form of real estate. Clay v. Bogle (Ky.) 119 S. W. 737, 738.

Statutory definitions

"Gen. St. 1901, § 7342, defines the word 'land' in the phrases 'real estate' and 'real property' as including lands, tenements, and hereditaments and all rights thereto and interest therein, equitable as well as legal." Clarke v. Lawrence, 88 Pac. 735, 738, 75 Kan. 28.

The word "land" or "lands," as used in Code 1899, c. 13, § 17, cl. 16, relating to taxation, expressly includes lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and all rights thereto and interests therein, except chattel interests and chattels real. Harvey Coal, etc., Co. v. Dillon, 53 S. E. 928, 936, 59 W. Va. 605.

Under Ky. St. 1909, § 458, providing that the words "real estate" or "land" shall be construed to mean any interest other than a chattel interest, and section 470, providing that no action shall be brought upon a contract relating to real estate unless in writing, a parol contract to board and care for the owner of a life estate in land in consideration of the use of the land is void, though board was furnished in reliance on the contract. Hampton v. Glass (Ky.) 116 S. W. 243, 244.

Under the statutes declaring that the word "land," and the phrases "real estate," and "real property," shall include lands, tenements, hereditaments and all rights thereto and interests therein equitable as well as legal, and providing that lands not exempt by law shall be liable to be taken on execution, land held by an equitable title may be levied upon and sold by virtue of an execution. Poole v. French, 80 Pac. 997, 1000, 71 Kan. 391.

Laws 1903, p. 376, relating to street openings, requires by section 15 that each lot, piece, or parcel of land be designated upon a diagram as a basis for assessments. Section 17 requires the amount of assessment to be set opposite each lot, piece, or parcel of land which under section 20 is made a lien upon the property assessed. These sections and sections 23 and 26, use the terms "property," "lands," and "each lot, piece or parcel of land," interchangeably. Held that, in requiring the superintendent of streets to assess the benefits from street improvements on the property of any street railroad within the assessment district, the word "property" was used in a limited sense and as referring to that species of property designated as "land," which as defined by Civ. Code, § 659, is "the solid material of the earth," and hence there was no authority for an assessment against the "ties, tracks, poles, rails and switches" as such or apart from the franchise. Los Angeles Pac. Co. v. Hubbard, 121 Pac. 308, 308, 17 Cal. App. 646.

The vendee's right to specific performance of a contract to convey land is "lands" and "real estate" within the statute definition (Rev. St. § 4971, subd. 9), as including "lands, tenements and hereditaments and all rights thereto and interests therein." The lands, on the vendee's death, descend at once, by operation of law to his children (Rev. St. § 2270, subd. 1). An administrator cannot sue to compel specific performance of a contract to convey land to his decedent, the price for which has been paid, where it does not appear that the administrator is in possession, or that the personal assets of the estate are insufficient to pay the debts. Carpenier v. Fopper, 68 N. W. 874, 94 Wis. 146.

As agricultural or grazing land

"Lands of the state," as used in the title of act to promote public health, etc., by draining such lands, included agricultural lands. Sisson v. Board of Suprs of Buena Vista County, 104 N. W. 454, 458, 128 Iowa, 442, 70 L. R. A. 440.

In Rev. Civ. St. 1897, § 4218fff, prescribing the classified free school, asylum, and public lands subject to sale to actual settlers, the terms "land" and "other lands" are used in the popular sense "as not embracing town lots, but meaning agricultural or grazing lands." Conn v. Terrell, 80 S. W. 608, 609, 97 Tex. 578.

Building or other structure

According to Blackstone, "land" legally includes all castles, houses, and other buildings, for they consist of two things—land, which is the foundation, and the structure thereupon. Where defendant in trespass to try title disclaimed any title or interest in the land, but claimed title to a house standing thereon, the plea of the three-year statute of limitations was without application; the land legally including all houses. Fidelity Cotton Oil & Fertilizer Co. v. Martin (Tex.) 136 S. W. 533.

An assessment under Pub. St. 1901, c. 79, §§ 4, 8, authorizing an assessment on lands receiving special benefits from the construction of a sewer, for their just share for the cost of construction and maintenance, etc., recognizes the ownership of buildings on lands of another, and buildings so situate are real estate for the purposes of assessment, and are properly assessed to the owner thereof; such buildings being "lands." Granite State Land Co. v. Town of Hampton, 79 Atl. 25, 29, 76 N. H. 1.

"Under the general tax law, and by the general understanding, the term 'lands,' when used with reference to assessments for purposes of taxation, includes with the land above or under water all constructions which have been erected upon or affixed thereto."

In re City of New York, 76 N. E. 18, 19, 183 N. Y. 245.

Where one making an excavation in a lot negligently left it exposed to inclement weather for an unreasonable length of time without putting in foundation walls, thereby causing injury to a building on an adjoining lot by the caving in of the ground, he is liable to the adjoining owner for the injury to the building, though Rev. Civ. Code, § 291, providing that each coterminous owner is entitled to the lateral support which his land received from the adjoining land, subject to the right of the adjoining owner to make proper excavations on using ordinary care, and taking reasonable precautions to sustain the land, and giving previous reasonable notice to the other of his intention to make the excavations, and section 187, defining "land" as the solid material of the earth, whatever may be its ingredients, give only the right to damages for injuries to the land itself, and not to buildings placed thereon. Hannicker v. Lepper, 107 N. W. 202, 203, 20 S. D. 371, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 243, 129 Am. St. Rep. 938.

Easements and incorporeal hereditaments

The word "land," as used in Code 1904, § 1105f (3-6), authorizing the condemnation of lands or any interest or estate therein, includes easements, and other incorporeal hereditaments, and all rights thereto and interest therein, and is synonymous with the terms "real estate" and "real property." Swann v. Washington Southern R. Co., 61 S. E. 750, 751, 108 Va. 282 (quoting 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 306).

In an eminent domain statute which authorizes certain classes of public service corporations to condemn land for their use, the word "land" is comprehensive, and includes any interest in land, and under it an easement or right of way may be condemned. Pacific Postal-Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Oregon & C. R. Co., 163 Fed. 967, 969.

The term "lands," as used in the condemnation statute, embraces all rights and easements growing thereout. South Bound R. R. v. Burton, 46 S. E. 340, 342, 67 S. C. 515.

The word "land," as used in the Eminent Domain Act, is capable of including easements in its signification. McEwan v. Pennsylvania, N. J. & N. Y. R. Co., 60 Atl. 1130, 1131, 72 N. J. Law, 419.

The word "lands" is not coextensive with the words "tenements and hereditaments," and does not comprehend incorporeal hereditaments. In re Handley's Estate, 57 Atl. 755, 757, 208 Pa. 388 (citing 2 Jarm. Wills, 382).

Under Laws 1896, p. 796, c. 908, § 2, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 1589, c. 712, providing that the term "land" shall include, not only the land itself, but all buildings and other articles and structures and superstructures erected on or under the same, where a turnpike company did not own the fee in the land, but owned a continuing easement therein for the maintenance of the pike during the life of the company's franchise, such easement, together with the corporation's tangible property, consisting of bridges, culverts, ditches, prepared roadbeds, and structures on the soil, were taxable to it as land. In re President, etc., of Albany & B. Turnpike Road, 87 N. Y. Supp. 1104, 1105, 94 App. Div. 509.

Franchise of corporation

Under Tax Law, § 2, subd. 3, defining the terms "land," "real estate," and "real property" to include land, underground railroads, including the valuation of franchises to construct and operate the same, and defining a "special franchise" to include the value of the tangible property of a corporation situated in or under or above any street, a corporation owning special franchises to operate an underground railroad under city streets owns special franchises subject to taxation, though only so small a part of the railroad is constructed and in operation as is insufficient to meet operating expenses, taxes, and interest, and the franchises, if possessing a value, are taxable, though they are not used. People ex rel. Hudson & M. R. Co. v. State Board of Tax Com'rs, 127 N. Y. Supp. 918, 143 App. Div. 26.

Laws 1896, p. 796, c. 908, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 1589, c. 712, § 2, subd. 3, defines the terms "lands," "real property," and "real estate" as including, besides the tangible property enumerated, the value of all franchises, rights, authority or permission to construct, maintain, or operate in, under, above, upon, or through any streets, highways, or public places, mains, pipes, etc. The term "real property" for the purposes of taxation seems to be limited to such intangible rights or franchises as relate to public streets or highways and to exclude by interference such as relate to public waters. People ex rel. Edison Electric Illuminating Co. v. Commissioners of Taxes & Assessments, 110 N. Y. Supp. 833, 58 Misc. Rep. 249.

The tax law (Laws 1881, c. 293), defining the terms, "land," "real estate," and "real property" as including "all surface, underground or elevated railroads," and the value of all franchises to construct or operate railroads, in, under, above or through streets, is not limited to street surface railroads only, but includes long distance surface steam railroads, and hence a franchise granted by the state to a steam surface railroad for its road in, under, above, or through streets is property, and a special franchise, and taxable. People ex rel. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Woodbury, 133 N. Y. Supp. 135, 139, 74 Misc. Rep. 130, 145.

Growing grain

Growing crops of grain are fructus industriales, and Civ. Code, §§ 186-188, defining "land" as the solid material of the earth, whether soil, rock, or other substance, exclude growing grain, and only include such growing things as are annexed to the earth by roots, such as are deemed fructus naturales. Bjornson v. Rostad (S. D.) 137 N. W. 567, 570.

Highway, street, or right of way

Rem. & Bal. Code, § 8739, authorizes any railroad corporation to enter upon any of the state school lands to locate its road. Section 8740 authorizes every railroad corporation to "appropriate" by condemnation any land or interest therein, and any rights of way for tunnels beneath the surface, including state school lands, tide lands, etc., necessary for the line of the road, provided that, if the bed of such railway is upon a state or county road, the corporation shall be responsible for the cost of relocating the road appropriated. Section 8738 permits any corporation to change the grade or location of its "road or canal" in order to avoid dangerous or deficient curves, etc. Section 5717, provides that "when it shall be necessary in the location of any road herein mentioned to appropriate any part of any public road, street or alley," etc., the county court may, except within the limits of a municipal corporation, agree with the corporation upon the conditions upon which it may be appropriated, and, if the parties cannot agree, the corporation may appropriate so much thereof as may be necessary in the location of the road. Section 5718 provides that whenever a private corporation is authorized to appropriate any public highway, etc., as mentioned in the last section, if it be within any town, incorporated or not, the corporation shall locate its road upon the particular street, etc., designated by the local authorities; but if they refuse to make such designation the corporation may make such appropriation without reference thereto. Section 5719 provides that when a public highway, etc., is taken by agreement, the corporation may place tollgates thereon with the consent of the local authorities, but shall not when the highway is appropriated without agreement. Section 8737 authorizes every railroad corporation to construct its railway across, along, or upon any stream, plank road, turnpike, etc., paying any damages caused thereby. Held, that a railway company could not acquire by eminent domain as against the public the exclusive right to use one-half of a street for a double-track railway; the term "land," as used in sections 8739 and 8740, not including land already devoted to a public use, such as a street. State ex rel. B. Schade Brewing Co. v. Superior Court of Spokane County, 113 Pac. 576, 578, 62 Wash. 96.

Mine

The word "lands," as used in a statute governing descent and distribution, which provides that a surviving spouse shall be entitled to an estate for life in the lands of an intestate leaving issue, remainder to such issue, includes a mine open at the time of the vesting of the life estate, and such mine is, under the statute, inherited as lands by the life tenant. Lone Acre Oil Co. v. Swayne (Tex.) 78 S. W. 380, 383.

The term "land," as used in statutory enactments, means and includes mines and mining claims. Bradford v. Morrison, 29 Sup. Ct. 349, 351, 212 U. S. 389, 53 L. Ed. 564 (quoting and adopting definitions in Rev. St. Ariz. pars. 2708, 2948).

"Land" includes coal and minerals in place. Huss v. Jacobs, 59 Atl. 991, 994, 210 Pa. 145.

Under Code, c. 2, § 5, subsec. 10, providing that "land" includes lands, tenements, and hereditaments and all rights thereto and interest therein other than a chattel interest therein, where on a bill filed by a vendor for a specific performance, it was decreed that the land be sold, and the entire acreage was sold and conveyed without restriction or reservation, the conveyance carried title to the coal and minerals beneath the surface of the land. Steinman v. Vicars, 39 S. E. 227, 229, 99 Va. 595.

A bill may be maintained to quiet the title to coal and other minerals under and on a tract of land; the minerals being "land" within Code 1896, § 809, providing that when any person is in peaceable possession of lands, whether actual or constructive, claiming to own the same, and his title thereto or to any part thereof is denied or disputed, he may maintain a suit in equity to settle the title and to clear up all doubts and disputes concerning it. Gulf Coal & Coke Co. v. Alabama Coal & Coke Co., 40 South. 397, 398, 145 Ala. 228.

Petroleum, oil, and natural gas are included in the comprehensive idea which the law attaches to the word "land" and are a part of the soil in which they are found. A lease of land for the purpose of mining coal or extracting oil or natural gas from the soil or rock is in effect a grant of the corpus of the land. Haskell v. Sutton, 44 S. E. 533, 536, 53 W. Va. 206.

Pontoon

A pontoon floating upon the water of a navigable stream, between high and low water mark, though fastened to the shore by a cable, is not "land," and an action for an injury to a person thereon by a moving vessel is within the admiralty jurisdiction. The Mackinaw, 165 Fed. 351, 352.

Premises synonymous

Premises as including land, see Premises.

The Liquor Tax Law (Laws 1897, p. 225, c. 312, § 24, subd. 1), prior to the amendment made by Laws 1905, p. 145, c. 104, made it unlawful to traffic in liquor within one-half mile of the building and "premises," of any state hospital, and the amendment added the words "or lands" after the word "premises." On a petition for the cancellation of a liquor tax certificate, it was stipulated that defendant, prior to the amendment, had been legally selling liquor at the place in question. Held, that "lands" was synonymous with "premises," and in view of the stipulation there could be no cancellation of the certificate, whether defendant was carrying on his business within one-half mile of lands owned and used by a state hospital and contiguous to it, or within one-half mile of the buildings, or not. The terms "premises" and "lands" are synonymous, and, if there is any distinction between the words, it is that the word "premises" is more inclusive. According to Bouv. Law Dict. and Worcest. Dict. the word "premises" is defined as "lands and tenements." According to Cent. Dict., it is defined as "lands and houses or tenements." According to Stand. Dict., it is defined as "land or lands; land with its appurtenances." In re Cullinan, 99 N. Y. Supp. 374, 375, 113 App. Div. 485.

Proceeds of sale

Act of Separation from Massachusetts (Rev. St. 1883, p. 1005) § 1, par. 7, exempting from taxation "lands" theretofore granted to any religious society, etc., while the same continue to be owned by such society, does not exempt a fund created from the proceeds of a sale of such lands. Inhabitants of Gorham v. Trustees of Ministerial Fund in First Parish in Gorham in Cumberland County, 82 Atl. 290, 292, 109 Me. 22.

Real estate and real property synonymous

The word "land," as used in Code 1904, § 1105 (3-6), authorizing the condemnation of lands or any in trust or estate therein, is synonymous with "real estate" and "real property." Swan v. Washington Southern R. Co., 61 S. E. 750, 751, 108 Va. 282.

As security

See Security.

Submerged land

The word "lands" includes the beds of nonnavigable lakes and streams, and lands are none the less land for being covered with water. State v. Jones, 122 N. W. 241, 243, 143 Iowa, 398.

"Land" covered by water within the public domain of the United States is as much a part thereof as the dry land. Kean v. Calumet Canal & Improvement Co., 23 Sup. Ct. 651, 659, 190 U. S. 452, 47 L. Ed. 1134.

The owner of the bank of a navigable stream owns to the center of the stream, unless the ownership of the bank and the bed of the stream has been separated, subject only to governmental and public rights; and the bed of a navigable stream is "land." Green Bay & Mississippi Canal Co. v. Telulah Paper Co., 122 N. W. 1062, 1065, 140 Wis. 417.

Timber

The word "lands," in Const. 1890, § 211, prohibiting the sale of school lands, includes the soil only, and not timber growing thereon; and hence Code 1906, § 4702, is not unconstitutional because it authorizes a sale of such timber. L. N. Dantzler Lumber Co. v. State, 53 South. 1, 2, 97 Miss. 355.

Town lots or blocks

Where a party contracts for the purchase of a threshing outfit, unless he shall go to Oklahoma and buy land, the word "land" is broad enough to include a piece of real property described as a block in a town site. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Mickley, 83 Pac. 970, 72 Kan. 372.

Trees

At common law, "land" embraces, not only the soil, but its natural products, such as trees, growing upon and affixed to it. L. N. Dantzler Lumber Co. v. State, 53 South. 1, 2, 97 Miss. 355.

Trees standing on land are a part of the "land," the title to which can be passed by a statutory deed. Morgan v. Pott, 101 S. W. 717, 719, 124 Mo. App. 371.

Water and water power

"Land" includes the water upon it, and, when the fee to land is acquired by condemnation, everything which is comprehended in the term "land," including water, vests in the expropriator. Philadelphia Trust, Safe Deposit & Ins. Co. v. Borough of Merchantville, 69 Atl. 729, 730, 74 N. J. Eq. 330.

Under Gen. St. 1902, § 2321, which provides for the taxation of land owned or taken by a municipal corporation for the creation or furnishing of a supply of water, if the inhabitants of the town in which it is situated do not have the use and do actually use such water supply on the same terms as the inhabitants of the municipal corporation, in which case the property shall be exempt, a dam located on such land is not an item subject to taxation separate from the land, and should have been included in an item of the assessment denominated "land used in connection with reservoir." City of Norwalk v. Town of New Canaan, 81 Atl. 1027, 1029, 85 Conn. 119.

The Flowage Act (Laws 1868, c. 20, § 1; Pub. St. 1901, c. 142, § 12) provides that any corporation authorized by charter may erect and maintain on its land a water mill or dam to back the flowage of water for the development of power and section 13 provides that if land is overflowed or otherwise injured by the use of such dam, and such injury is not within 30 days after due notice satisfactorily adjusted, petition may be brought to the superior court to have the damage assessed. Held, upon petition to assess damages for the flowing out or taking of the head or falls of a stream located upon petitioner's land, which had been neither utilized nor developed, that the term "land" in the act was not used in a narrow or restricted sense to apply only to land as distinguished from water, but to land with all the incidents of full ownership; that the damage or "injury" intended by the act was such as resulted from depriving the landowner of the ability to use his land to the best advantage in view of its location and natural adaptability; and that a limitation of the use of undeveloped water power was an injury to land, for which compensation must be made. Swain v. Pemigewasset Power Co., 85 Atl. 288, 289, 76 N. H. 498.

LAND CERTIFICATE

As chattel, see Chattel.

As personal property, see Personal Property.

A "land certificate" is the obligation of the government entitling the owner to secure the designated quantity of land by following the requirements of the law. Waterman v. Charlton, 120 S. W. 171, 172, 102 Tex. 510.

LAND DAMAGES

Compensation for land taken under the power of eminent domain, and for the buildings on it, is technically "land damages." The building is technically not only a part of the land, but is technically land; and an action for compensation for land taken under the power of eminent domain, and buildings which are upon that land, is as matter of technical law and ordinary parlance, spoken of as an action for "land damages." In an award of special commissioners to assess damages for land taken to widen a street under a railroad's track directing that the town should pay the entire expense of land damage occasioned by the taking of land and property, the term "land damages" was not limited to the value of the land taken apart from the erection thereon, and hence, where the land taken supported one of the abutments of the railroad bridge, the railroad was entitled to damages for the taking of the abutment as well as the land. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Blackstone, 69 N. E. 315, 316, 184 Mass. 491.

LAND FOR HOLDING WATER

The words "land for holding such water," in St. 1883, p. 469, c. 177, creating a water company to supply the inhabitants of a town with water, and authorizing the company to take and hold water of designated streams and all lands "necessary for holding and preserving such water," mean land for a reservoir. Dorr v. Inhabitants of Sharon, 84 N. E. 446, 449, 198 Mass. 240.

LAND JOBBER

A man who occasionally buys and sells land cannot be said to be a land jobber or a dealer in lands; but, if a man makes a particular business of buying and selling land to obtain profit, he is properly designated as a "land jobber" or dealer in land. Vanderbilt University v. Cheney, 94 S. W. 90, 92, 116 Tenn. 259.

LAND SUITABLE FOR CULTIVATION

See Suitable for Cultivation.

LAND, TIMBER, AND TIMBER RIGHTS

The term "land, timber and timber rights," as used in a lease of a railroad, etc., specifying that plaintiff demised, let, etc., to defendant for 91 years, all land, timber, and timber rights, etc., included all the standing timber. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., 61 S. E. 185, 190, 147 N. C. 368, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 223, 125 Am. St. Rep. 550, 15 Ann. Cas. 363.

LAND TITLED

Const. art. 14, § 2, provides that all general land certificates shall be located, surveyed, or patented only on vacant and unappropriated public domain, and not on any "land titled" or equitably owned under color of title from the sovereignty of the state, evidence of the appropriation of which is on the county record or in the general land office, or when the appropriation is evidenced by the occupation of the owner or of some person holding for him. Held, that where it was not claimed that certificates by which land was surveyed under a railroad grant were improperly issued, and the descriptions in the patents in express terms covered the land described in a subsequent patent to K., it being necessary to resort to evidence allunde to show that the railroad patents did not convey the state's title to the land in controversy, it was "land titled," within such constitutional provision. McLennan v. Fisher (Tex.) 130 S. W. 598, 599.

LAND TO LAND

Fishing for menhaden with purse or drag seines, in a bay on our coast not having an entrance over three nautical miles in width between headlands on the main, or between the mainland and an island, or between islands, is prohibited by chapter 261, Pub. Laws 1885, defining the width of such entrance, or any part thereof, to such prohibited waters, measured from "land to land." McClain v. Tillson, 19 Atl. 457, 458, 82 Me. 281.

LAND VALUABLE FOR MINERALS

"Lands valuable for minerals" in the law means all lands chiefly valuable for any of the mineral deposits treated in the legislation relating to mining claims, rather than lands chiefly valuable for agricultural purposes. Webb v. American Asphaltum Min. Co., 157 Fed. 203, 205, 84 C. C. A. 651.

Under Rev. St. U. S. §§ 2318, 2319, reserving from sale lands valuable for minerals, and opening for exploration and purchase all valuable mineral deposits in the lands of the United States, to render lands valuable for minerals there must be minerals in such quantities as to justify effort to extract them; but it is not necessary that minerals of sufficient amount to allow immediate profitable working be shown to exist, but it is enough if the vein or deposit has a present or prospective commercial value. Madison v. Octave Oil Co., 99 Pac. 176, 178, 154 Cal. 788.

LANDED

Plaintiff, cotton company, delivered cotton to a compress company and subsequently delivered the warehouse receipts of that company to a railway company and received in exchange bills of lading. The cotton company shipped the cotton over the railway line to a purchaser under a contract requiring that the cotton should be delivered in good condition to the purchaser's mills "landed," and drafts for the purchase price with bills of lading attached were drawn by the cotton company on the purchaser and honored before the cotton was delivered at its destination. Held, that "landed" meant that the cotton company was responsible for the entire shipment of cotton and for damages to it until delivered at the point of destination, and therefore the right of recovery for damages to the cotton resulting from exposure to the weather while in the possession of the compress company was in the cotton company, although it had not been called on to repay any of the purchase price. Southern Ry. Co. v. Jones Cotton Co., 52 South. 899, 900, 167 Ala. 575.

LANDED PROPERTY

In an act annexing certain territory to a city, providing that the rates of taxation on all "landed property" so annexed shall not exceed a certain rate, the phrase "landed property," as used in the act, meant rural, unimproved land, as distinguished from real estate compactly built on, as in a city. Mayor, etc., of City of Baltimore v. Rosenthal, 62 Atl. 579, 581, 102 Md. 298 (citing Sindall v. City of Baltimore, 49 Atl. 647, 93 Md. 533).

The term "landed property" is defined by Acts 1902, p. 199, c. 130, as "real estate, whether in fee simple or leasehold, and whether improved or unimproved." Joesting v. Mayor, etc., of Baltimore, 55 Atl. 456, 457, 97 Md. 589.

Annexation Act, § 19 (Acts 1888, p. 127, c. 98), declared that until 1900 the rate of taxation on all "landed property" in certain territory annexed to Baltimore should not exceed the rate for Baltimore county, and that after 1900 the county rate should not be increased for city purposes on "landed property" within the territory until avenues, streets, or alleys shall have been opened or constructed through the same, nor until there shall be on every block of ground so to be formed six dwellings or storehouses ready for occupation. Acts 1902, p. 199, c. 130, § 4a, defined "landed property" to mean real estate, whether improved or unimproved and until avenues, streets, or alleys shall have been opened, constructed, and improved, shall be construed to mean until avenues, streets, or alleys shall have been opened, graded, curbed, and otherwise improved to full width by some substantial material. Held, that property within the territory annexed to the city by the act of 1888 situated in a block bounded by improved streets, though not containing six dwellings or storehouses, was not "landed property" within such act. Hiss v. City of Baltimore, 64 Atl. 52, 103 Md. 620.

Acts 1888, p. 127, c. 98, § 19, relating to the annexation of a certain tract to Baltimore, provided that until 1900 the tax rate upon all "landed property" and taxable personal property in the tract should not exceed the rate of Baltimore county for 1887, and that after 1900 the rate should be the same as for the rest of the city of Baltimore, provided that the increased rate should not take effect until avenues, streets, or alleys should be opened through the property, and at least six dwellings or storehouses be ready for occupation upon each block of ground so to be formed. Acts 1902, p. 199, c. 130, provided that the term "landed property" in the act of 1888 should mean real estate whether in fee simple or leasehold; that the provision as to the opening of avenues, etc., should mean avenues, etc., opened, graded, curbed, and otherwise improved from curb to curb by pavement or other substantial material, and that the term "block of ground" should mean an area not exceeding 200,000 superficial square feet bounded on all sides by intersecting avenues, streets, or alleys, graded, curbed and otherwise improved from curb to curb, by pavement or other substantial material. A triangular block, being part of the tract annexed by the act of 1888, contained 1,000,000 superficial square feet, bounded on one side by 3034 feet of a road, part of which was curbed and macadamized, the rest covered with an inch of stone, but uncurbed. On another side was a common road not graded, curbed, or paved, and on the third side was a private toll road, curbed and paved in the middle. There were about 47 dwellings and storehouses on the block. Held, that a leasehold interest in the block was taxable under the county, and not the city, tax rate. City of Baltimore v. Schafer, 68 Atl. 138, 140, 107 Md. 38.

Acts 1888, p. 127, c. 98, § 19, provides after the year 1900 the Baltimore county rate of taxation at the time of the passage of the act shall not be increased for city purposes on any landed property within the annex until avenues, streets, or alleys shall have been opened or constructed through the same, nor until there shall be on every block of ground so to be formed at least six dwellings or warehouses ready for occupation. Acts 1902, p. 199, c. 120, defines "landed property" to mean real estate, whether in fee simple or leasehold, and whether improved or unimproved. Held, that a wholly unimproved lot bound by a street or alley on two of its four sides and contiguous to a 28-acre tract of land with no visible boundary separating it from such tract was "landed property" within the meaning of the acts, and hence not subject to the Baltimore city rate of taxation until it had reached the standard of development required by the act to make it urban property. City of Baltimore v. Gail, 68 Atl. 282, 285, 106 Md. 684.

LANDHOLDER

Acts 1903, p. 255, c. 145, relating to improvement of gravel and macadamized roads, contemplates as resident "landholders" of the county, whose lands abut upon the proposed improvements, who are entitled to sign a petition for the improvements, only the holders of a title in fee, and not mere life tenants. Kemp v. Goodnight, 80 N. E. 160, 162, 168 Ind. 174.

LANDING

See Public Landing.

According to the accepted meaning, the act of "landing" is setting on shore, or coming on shore. Taylor v. United States, 152 Fed. 1, 10, 81 C. C. A. 197 (dissenting opinion).

"Landing from such vessel" takes place and is complete the moment the vessel is left and the shore reached within Immigration Act March 3, 1903, c. 1012, § 18, 32 Stat. 1213, 1217, making it the duty of any officer in charge of any vessel bringing an alien to the United States to adopt precautions to prevent the landing from such vessel of such alien at any time or place other than that designated by the immigration officers. Taylor v. United States, 28 Sup. Ct. 53, 54, 207 U. S. 120, 52 L. Ed. 130.

The transfer of a Chinese person from the vessel in which he was brought to the United States to a detention shed maintained by the owners of the vessel on their dock, where he was detained under guard pending determination of his right to enter the United States, did not constitute a "landing" of such person within Act Cong. May 6, 1882, c. 126, § 2, 22 Stat. 59, as amended by Act July 5, 1884, c. 220, 23 Stat. 115, prohibiting the master of any vessel from knowingly landing or permitting to be landed any Chinese laborer, etc. United States v. Seabury, 133 Fed. 983, 985.

Act March 3, 1903, c. 1012, § 18, 32 Stat. 1217, declares that it shall be the duty of the owners, officers, and agents of any vessel bringing an alien to the United States to adopt due precautions to prevent the "landing" of any such alien "from such vessel" at any time or place other than that designated by the immigration officers, and any such owner, etc., who shall land or permit to land any alien at any other place shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that the words "landing from vessel" as so used mean "to go ashore," the landing being complete the moment the vessel is left and the shore is reached. Niven v. United States, 169 Fed. 782, 785, 95 C. C. A. 248.

The word "landing" in Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, c. 93, § 28, par. "b," providing that there must be maintained at the "landing" at which miners take or leave the cage sufficient light to show the "landing" and surrounding objects, when considered in connection with section 16, par. "e," requiring the mine superintendent to see that sufficient lights are maintained at the top and bottom landings when the men are hoisted and lowered, and section 2, par. "b," providing that at the bottom of every shaft and at every caging place therein a sufficient passageway must be cut around the landing place, is broad enough to cover the place at the bottom or at the top of the shaft where miners enter or leave the cage and the mine operator must keep each of those places lighted. Robertson v. Donk Bros. Coal & Coke Co., 87 N. E. 373, 374, 238 Ill. 844.

As wharf or place for loading and unloading

"A 'landing' is a space adjacent to a navigable water where vessels may approach and land to unload and receive passengers and freight, and where articles of freight may be left for loading on the vessel, or after they have been unloaded until they can be taken away." Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. People ex rel. Dailey, 78 N. E. 790, 793, 222 Ill. 427 (quoting and adopting definition in Farnham, Water & Water Rights, § 145a).

LANDING PLACE

Land abutting upon water, from which water shipments can be made, and leased for that purpose, with privileges of piling lumber, is a landing place, within Rev. St. c. 9.

§ 13, subsec. 1, authorizing taxation of personalty employed in trade where the owner occupies a landing place. Inhabitants of Georgetown v. William E. Hanscome & Co., 79 Atl. 379, 380, 108 Me. 131.

Rev. St. c. 9, § 12, provides that all personal property within or without the state shall be assessed to the owner in the town where he is an inhabitant on the 1st day of each April. Section 22 provides that partners in business whether residing in the same or different towns, may be jointly taxed under their partnership name in the town where their business is carried on for all personal property enumerated in section 13, par. 1, employed in such business, except that, if any portion of such property is placed or situated in a town other than where their place of business is under specified circumstances, they shall be taxed therefor in such other town. Section 13, par. 1, provides that all personal property employed in trade shall be taxed in the town where so employed on the 1st day of each April, provided that the owner, his servant, subcontractor, or agent so employing it occupies any "landing place," etc., therein for the purpose of such employment. Held that, to sustain an assessment of taxes on lumber belonging to a firm in a certain town, it must appear that the firm were at the time of the assessment carrying on business in the town, and that the property assessed was employed in that business, or if their place of business was in another town that the property so employed was placed or situated in the town where sought to be assessed and the property must be employed in trade, etc., and, if their place of business is in another town than that in which the property is deposited, it must appear that the firm or their servants or agents so employing the property occupied for purposes of the employment a "landing place," etc., in the town where the assessment is sought to be made, and where members of a firm resided in other towns and cut logs in other towns, which were hauled to a town where they were sought to be assessed for taxation, there sawed by a portable sawmill, and "stuck up" to season in a field within the town with the intent to leave it there until sold, when it was to be hauled to a railroad siding, half a mile distant also in the town, for shipment, and all the work done on the lot was done under contract of another person, the firm, however, supervising the work so far as to determine the size and shape of the manufactured product, the firm having no office anywhere, their books being kept in another town at a dwelling house from where the correspondence of the firm was carried on and prospective purchasers taken by the firm to the sticking grounds to examine the lumber, the business of the firm was being carried on in another town, and the lumber was not subject to taxation in the town where deposited, since the field where the lumber was "stuck up" was not a "landing place" within the statute, the term "landing" first incorporated into the statute in Laws 1869, c. 53, then meaning a place on a river or other navigable water for landing and unlanding goods, or for taking on or letting off passengers or a place where any kind of craft lands or for storing logs for winter. McCann v. Inhabitants of Town of Minot, 78 Atl. 465, 467, 107 Me. 393.

LANDLORD

A man to be a "landlord" must sustain some relation to the land, such as owner, or quasi owner, and, while a landlord may assign the rent, the assignee is not a "landlord" within the meaning of the statute giving a landlord's lien. State v. Elmore, 46 S. E. 939, 941, 68 S. C. 140.

"A 'landlord' is a person whose lands are occupied." Hence, when a petitioner said he was a landlord, he, in effect, said he was the person whose lands were occupied. Loft v. Kaziz, 84 N. Y. Supp. 228, 230.

Under General Milwaukee Ordinance, c. 20, § 36, inhibiting all persons from leasing or letting either as landlord or agent, any room, house, or other premises to be used for the purpose of prostitution or lewdness, the term "landlord" is not restricted in its meaning to the owner of an estate in lands, but refers to lessees who let particular rooms. City of Milwaukee v. Beatty, 135 N. W. 873, 874, 149 Wis. 349.

Under a statute enacted in the reign of George II, a landlord was permitted to appear and defend in ejectment, and the word "landlord" was interpreted to include all persons claiming title consistent with the persons sued as tenants in possession. Bower v. Cohen, 54 S. E. 918, 919, 126 Ga. 35.

Premises were leased for one year, and before the expiration of that term the landlord leased to another the premises for a term to begin at the expiration of the first term. The first tenant held over, and the landlord brought summary proceedings to dispossess him. Section 2231, Code Civ. Proc. provides that a tenant holding over at the expiration of his lease may be removed and section 2235 provides that the application may be made by the "landlord or lessor." Held that the lessor of both tenants was the "landlord or lessor" within the statute, and could maintain an action to dispossess the first tenant, if there had been no election by the landlord to continue the lease. Bells v. Morse, 127 N. Y. Supp. 438, 440, 142 App. Div. 592.

A petition in summary proceedings for the possession of land, alleging that the petitioner is the lessee and "landlord" thereof, is not a sufficient compliance with Code Civ.

Proc. § 2235, requiring the petition to state the interest of the petitioner in the premises. The statement that the petitioner was the "lessee" and "landlord" is the assertion merely of an interest and not a description of such interest. Ferber v. Apfel, 99 N. Y. Supp. 215, 216, 113 App. Div. 720 (citing Kazis v. Loft, 80 N. Y. Supp. 1015, 81 App. Div. 636; Loft v. Kazis, 84 N. Y. Supp. 228; Engel-Heller Co. v. Henry Elias Brewing Co., 75 N. Y. Supp. 1080, 37 Misc. Rep. 480; Potter v. New York Baptist Mission Soc., 52 N. Y. Supp. 294, 23 Misc. Rep. 671; Ross v. Same, 52 N. Y. Supp. 303, 23 Misc. Rep. 683; Cram v. Dietrich, 78 N. Y. Supp. 948, 38 Misc. Rep. 790.

Owner not equivalent

A description of the petitioner as the "landlord of the premises hereinafter described" is insufficient to confer jurisdiction of summary proceedings, for that does not state that he is the owner, but merely alleges the relation of the parties without stating petitioner's interest in the premises. Underhill v. Cohen, 114 N. Y. Supp. 115, 117, 61 Misc. Rep. 627.

LANDLORD AND CROPPER

A verbal contract between a cropper, who owed a large supply account for which his landlord was security and also owed his landlord for supplies, and his landlord, whereby it was agreed that, if the cropper should desire to work elsewhere the following year, he should settle up his supply account and notify the landlord before a time fixed, so that he might have time to get some one else, and that, if the cropper did not settle up and notify the landlord before the time fixed, then he was to be a cropper for the landlord for the following year, does not create the relation of landlord and cropper within Act Dec. 17, 1901 (Acts 1901, p. 63), as amended by Act Aug. 7, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 91), providing that, where the relation of landlord and cropper has been created, it shall be unlawful for any person during the contract to employ the cropper or to disturb in any way such relation; that act contemplating a complete contract and not a contract whereby the relation will be created in the future on the happening or nonhappening of a given contingency, dependent on the will of one of the parties. Polk v. Thomason, 61 S. E. 123, 124, 130 Ga. 542.

LANDLORD AND TENANT

The relation of "landlord and tenant" is that which subsists by virtue of a contract for the possession of lands at will, for a definite period, or for life. Foss v. Stanton, 57 Atl. 942, 76 Vt. 365.

The relation of landlord and tenant arises under contract, express or implied, for possession of lands or tenements in consideration of certain rent to be paid therefor; possession being an essential element. Whitehead v. Oasis Club, 142 S. W. 752, 753, 162 Mo. App. 502.

The words "landlord and tenant" signify not only the immediate parties to a lease, but also their respective successors in interest. Where a landlord assigns his lease with his right to the control, occupancy, and possession of the premises for more than four years beyond the expiration of the term, and the tenant holds over, the assignee may elect to treat the holding over as a tenancy for another year. United Merchants' Realty & Improvement Co. v. Roth, 103 N. Y. Supp. 1112, 1113, 53 Misc. Rep. 92.

Under the direct provisions of Code 1806, § 2711, where one party furnishes land for raising a crop and another furnishes the labor and the team to cultivate it, with a stipulation for a division of the crop between them, the relation of landlord and tenant exists between them; the status, fixed by the statute, being contractual. Kennedy v. McDiarmid, 47 South. 792, 793, 157 Ala. 496.

Where one enters into possession of land under a deed claiming it in good faith as owner, and does not recognize any interest in the grantor, the relation of "landlord and tenant" does not exist, and he cannot be summarily dispossessed as a tenant at sufferance. Sharpe v. Mathews, 51 S. E. 706, 707, 123 Ga. 794 (citing Watson v. Tolliver, 29 S. E. 614, 103 Ga. 123).

The reservation of rent in some form and allegiance to the title are distinguishing characteristics of a contract by which the relation of landlord and tenant exists. Andrews v. Erwin (Ky.) 78 S. W. 902, 903.

Reservation of rent is not essential to the creation of the relation of "landlord and tenant." Plaintiffs conveyed to defendant by deed all the timber and trees on the tract of land described; the deed providing that the grantee should have all the rights of way and privileges over and upon the land usually extended to lumbermen, provided that the timber should be removed within three years, and that all refuse, timber, barns, houses, cabins, sheds, etc., remaining on the premises at that time should revert to and become the property of plaintiffs. Held, that such deed was not a mere license, but was sufficient to create the relation of "landlord and tenant." Alexander v. Gardner, 96 S. W. 818, 819, 123 Ky. 552, 124 Am. St. Rep. 378.

Plaintiff, who resided on a farm, contracted to allow defendant to occupy free of rent one of the houses on the farm and carry on the same for a term of years. Each party was to furnish certain things for the farm, and the crops were to be sold and proceeds divided. Held, that the relation of "landlord and tenant" did not exist between the parties as to the house, but that defendant's occupancy was a mere incident of his carrying on the farm, and an action would not lie against him to recover possession of the house under V. S. 1560, providing that, when a lessee holds possession without right, the person entitled to possession may have a writ to restore him thereto. Mead v. Owen, 67 Atl. 722, 724, 80 Vt. 273, 13 Ann. Cas. 231.

LANDOWNER

The county named in the preliminary report of the surveyor as a landowner affected by a proposed drainage is not a "landowner" within the provision of the drainage act requiring the dismissal of the petition upon remonstrance of two-thirds of the "landowners" affected. Honnold v. Endicott, 83 N. E. 502, 170 Ind. 16.

The word "landowner," in the statute giving a company power to condemn land, and providing that it shall be liable for all such damages as may be established by any landowner, embraces not only the owner of the fee, but a lessee for years and any other person who has an interest in the property affected by the condemnation. Woodstock Hardwood & Spool Mfg. Co. v. Charleston Light & Water Co., 66 S. E. 194, 196, 84 S. C. 306.

LANGUAGE

See Doubtful Language; Ordinary Language.

English language, see English.

Obscene language, see Obscene—Obscenity.

Profane language, see Profane—Profanity.

"Language" is the expression of thought by means of spoken or written words which are but signs of ideas. United States v. One Car Load of Corno Horse and Mule Feed, 188 Fed. 453, 462.

"Language" is a generic term, and includes any words or speech by which thought may be conveyed, and language may be obscene and vulgar when used in the presence of a female without the use of a single word which could be intrinsically classified as being obscene and vulgar. Morris v. State, 65 S. E. 58, 59, 6 Ga. App. 395.

"Language" is the offspring of the past, but its life is in and for the ever opening and progressive future. Its principal mission is to convey from one mind to another the new thoughts as they arise; for the old is continually dying, while the new is being born. If each word had a single fixed and unchanging meaning, and if there simply were certain established collocations of words, each with one signification, the powers of language would be very limited, and it could never express a new idea." State v. Stuart, 92 S. W. 878, 881, 194 Mo. 345, 112 Am. St.

Rep. 529, 5 Ann. Cas. 963 (quoting and adopting definition from Bishop).

LAP

Where one grant conflicts in part with another, occasioning what is called a "lap" or "interlock," the elder patentee under his grant acquires at once constructive seisin in deed of all the land embraced within its boundaries, although he has taken no actual possession of any part thereof. The junior grantee under his grant acquires similar constructive seisin in deed of all the land embraced by his boundaries, except that portion within the interlock, the seisin of which had already vested in the senior grantee. Green v. Pennington, 54 S. E. 877, 878, 105 Va. 801 (citing Koerner v. Rankin's Heirs [Va.] 11 Grat. 427).

LAP POSITION

In the railway automatic quick action brake system, the position known as the "lap position" was, where the engineer thought that the train pipe pressure had been sufficiently reduced by the resultant brake application, he moved the handle back a short distance so as to close all the ports and hold the brakes at the point at which they had been set. Westinghouse Air Brake Co. v. New York Air Brake Co., 119 Fed. 874, 875, 56 C. C. A. 404.

LAPPINGS

"Lappings" consist of a woven fabric composed of a flax warp and a wool filling and is dutiable under paragraph 346 of the Tariff Act of 1897. United States v. E. De F. Wilkinson Co., 154 Fed. 751, 752.

LAPSE

LAPSE OF TIME

The phrase "lapse of time," as used in a constitutional provision giving the Legislature power to revive any remedy which may have been barred by "lapse of time" or "by any statute of limitations," means a period of time limiting the action, and relates alone either to an express statute of limitations or to a "lapse of time" dealt with either under the statute or the general law, as a limitation of time. North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. of London & Edinburgh v. Edwards, 37 South. 748, 85 Miss. 322.

"Larceny" is taking personal property by stealing; by theft. Cox v. Territory, 104 Pac. 378, 379, 2 Okl. Cr. 668.

"Larceny" is predicated on the wrongful taking of property with intent to convert it. Axtell v. State, 91 N. E. 354, 355, 173 Ind. 711.

"Larceny" is the felonious taking of the property of another. State v. Wasson, 101 N. W. 1125, 1126, 126 Iowa, 320.

"Larceny" is the taking of another's personal property without the owner's consent, accompanied by an intent to wholly deprive him of its value. State v. Hinton, 109 Pac. 24, 27, 56 Or. 428.

"Larceny" is the felonious taking and carrying away of the personal property of another, with the intent to convert it to the use of the taker without the consent of the owner. State v. De Luca (Del.) 77 Atl. 742, 743, 2 Boyce, 158; State v. Stewart (Del.) 67 Atl. 786, 788, 6 Pennewill, 435.

"Larceny" is the felonious taking and carrying away of the personal goods of another, with intent to deprive the owner of his property therein, and to appropriate the same to the use of the taker. State v. Spencer (Del.) 53 Atl. 337, 338, 4 Pennewill, 92.

"Larceny" is the felonious taking and carrying away of the personal property of another, with intent to convert it to the taker's use, and to deprive the owner of the same, without the owner's consent. State v. Palmer (Del.) 53 Atl. 359, 4 Pennewill, 126.

"Larceny" is the felonious taking and carrying away of the personal property of another, with intent to convert it to the taker's use and deprive the owner of its use without his consent. State v. Dredde, 73 Atl. 1042, 1043, 6 Pennewill, 446.

"Larceny" is the wrongful or fraudulent taking and carrying away by any person of the personal goods of another without the owner's consent, with a felonious intent to convert them to the taker's use. State v. James, 113 S. W. 232, 233, 133 Mo. App. 300.

"Larceny" is the wrongful or fraudulent taking and carrying away of the personal goods or property of another, with the felonious intent to convert it to his own use and make it his own property without the consent of the owner. State v. Wolf (Del.) 66 Atl. 739, 741, 6 Pennewill, 323.

At common law, as well as by statute, "larceny" is the wrongful taking and carrying away of the personal property of another, with a felonious intent to convert it to the taker's use without the owner's consent. State v. Brewington (Del.) 78 Atl. 402, 403, 2 Boyce, 71.

"Larceny" is defined as 'the wrongful or fraudulent taking and carrying away of the personal property of another, from any place, with a felonious intent to convert the same to the taker's use, and make it his own, without the consent of the owner.' " State v. Weatherman, 100 S. W. 482, 483, 202 Mo. 6 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Gray, 37 Mo. 463).

"Larceny" is a felonious taking and carrying away of the personal goods or chattels of another with intent to deprive the owner of his property therein and to appropriate the same to the use of the taker. Asportation, nonconsent of the owner, and a felonious intent to thereby convert the stolen property to the defendant's own use are necessary elements of larceny. Ladeaux v. State, 103 N. W. 1048, 1049, 74 Neb. 19.

A "larceny" has been defined as a felonious taking of the property of another, without his consent and against his will, with intent to convert it to the use of the taker, or "the wrongful or fraudulent taking or carrying away by any person of the personal goods of another with a felonious intent to convert them to his (the taker's) own use and make them his own property without the consent of the owner." Bassett v. Spofford, 45 N. Y. 387, 391, 6 Am. Rep. 101 (citing 2 Russ. Crimes, 1; Mowrey v. Walsh [N. Y.] 8 Cow. 238).

The phrase "deemed guilty of larceny," as used in B. & C. Comp. § 1805, providing that, if any person shall embezzle or fraudulently convert any money belonging to another in his possession, he shall "be deemed guilty of larceny," and on conviction shall be punished accordingly, refers to statutory larceny and not larceny at common law. State v. Browning, 82 Pac. 955, 956, 47 Or. 470.

Where one collects money for another and neglects or refuses to turn it over but uses the money himself, he commits a "larceny." Specifically, it is embezzlement and is punishable as "larceny." State v. Conklin, 84 Pac. 482, 484, 47 Or. 509.

If the general bookkeeper of a bank, having no general or special custody or possession of the funds of the bank, secretly takes from the safe or drawer of the receiving or paying teller moneys of the bank, with the intent to appropriate the same to his own use, he commits an act of "larceny." United States v. Breese, 131 Fed. 915, 920.

In a prosecution for larceny, the state must prove that the property taken was personal property of some value belonging to the owner named in the indictment and that it was taken feloniously by the defendant with intent to convert it to his own use within two years prior to the finding of the indictment, and in the county in which the case was being prosecuted. State v. De Luca (Del.) 77 Atl. 742, 743, 2 Boyce, 158.

A bill of particulars, filed with an indictment for "larceny" of a receipt, which alleged that accused told prosecutor that he would loan prosecutor money and take from him as collateral a negotiable receipt of a third person for certain bonds, that accused falsely represented to prosecutor that he intended either to keep the certificate in his possession or to place the same as collateral with a bank for a loan, that accused loaned to prosecutor money and received as collateral the receipt, that accused sold the receipt, that after the maturity of the debt prosecutor made demands on accused for the return of the receipt and tendered the amount of the debt, that accused declined to deliver the receipt or any receipt of the same amount, and that accused never intended to retain possession of the receipt, but at the time of making the representation and receiving the receipt he intended to dispose of the same, etc., permitted the commonwealth to prove common larceny, embezzlement, obtaining property by false pretenses, or larceny, defined by Rev. Laws, c. 208, § 26, making one who, with intent to defraud, obtains property by false pretense guilty of "larceny." Commonwealth v. Althause, 93 N. E. 202, 205, 207 Mass. 32, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 999.

In a trial for "larceny," the gist of the offense is the unlawful taking and appropriating by the accused of the property of another, the name of the owner being a matter of secondary importance or consideration. Where the name of the owner is not known, it is sufficient to allege that fact. State v. McDuffy, 60 South. 80, 81, 131 La. 695 (citing State v. Hanks, 1 South. 458, 39 La. Ann. 234; State v. Dominique, 1 South. 665, 39 La. Ann. 323; State v. Harris, 8 South. 530, 42 La. Ann. 980; State v. Southern, 19 South. 668, 48 La. Ann. 628).

Statutory definitions

"Larceny" is the felonious stealing or carrying away the personal property of another. People v. Devlin, 76 Pac. 900, 143 Cal. 128 (citing Pen. Code, § 484).

Pen. Code, § 441, defines "larceny" as the felonious stealing, taking, carrying, leading, or driving away of the personal property of another. Buffehr v. Territory, 89 Pac. 415, 11 Ariz. 165.

"Larceny" is the felonious stealing, taking, carrying, leading, or driving away the personal property of another. State v. Davis, 76 Pac. 705, 706, 28 Utah, 10 (citing Rev. St. 1898, § 4355).

"Larceny" is to take, steal, and carry away. An instruction thus defining larceny in the words of the statute was sufficient, since the words employed are daily in common use and such as the jury were presumed to understand. State v. Carter, 121 N. W. 694, 695, 697, 144 Iowa, 280.

Ann. St. 1899, Ind. T. § 965, defines "larceny" as follows: "'Larceny' is the felonious stealing, taking, carrying, riding or driving away the personal property of another." It was not error for the trial court to give the jury the following definition of "larceny," to wit: "'Larceny' is the felonious stealing, taking, carrying, riding or driving away the property of another." It is the felonious taking; that is, wrongful and corrupt taking. Hendrix v. United States, 101 Pac. 125, 128, 2 Okl. Cr. 240.

Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 38, § 167, provides that larceny may be committed by feloniously taking and carrying away any bond, bill, receipt, or any instrument of writing of value to the owner. So an indictment charging the larceny of a bill of exchange must aver the value thereof. People v. Silbertrust, 86 N. E. 203, 204, 236 Ill. 144.

Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 38, § 75, provides that if any agent embezzles or fraudulently converts to his own use, or takes with intent to do so, without the consent of the employer, any property of the employer which has come to his possession or to his office by virtue of such employment, is to be deemed guilty of "larceny." So an indictment, charging in the language of the statute that defendant was the agent of B., and as such agent collected and embezzled funds belonging to her in the amount of $7,000, was sufficient. People v. O'Farrell, 93 N. E. 136, 139, 247 Ill. 44.

Pen. Code, § 484, defines "larceny" as the felonious stealing, taking, carrying away of the property of another. So an information charging that accused, from the immediate presence of prosecutor, by means of force and against prosecutor's will, did take, steal, and carry away certain property of the value of $1,026 of the personal property of prosecutor, was sufficient. People v. Ho Sing, 93 Pac. 204, 205, 6 Cal. App. 752.

"A person who, with the intent to deprive or defraud the true owner of his property, or of the use or benefit thereof, or to appropriate the same to the use of the taker, or of any other person, either: (1) Takes from the possession of the true owner, or of any other person, or obtains from such possession by color or aid of fraudulent or false representation or pretense, or of any false token or writing, or secretes, withholds, or appropriates to his own use, or that of any person other than the true owner, any money, personal property, thing in action, evidence of debt or contract, or article of value of any kind; or (2), having in his possession, custody, or control, as a bailee, servant, attorney, agent, clerk, trustee, or officer or any person, association, or corporation or public officer, or as a person authorized by agreement, or by competent authority, to hold or take such possession, custody, or control, any money, property, evidence of debt or contract, article of value of any nature or thing in action or possession, appropriates the same to his own use, or that of any other person other than the true owner or person entitled to the benefit thereof, steals such property and is guilty of larceny." People ex rel. Perkins v. Moss, 100 N. Y. Supp. 427-429, 50 Misc. Rep. 198 (citing Pen. Code, § 528).

Pen. Code, § 528, makes it "larceny" for a servant to appropriate to his own use any money which he has in his possession as such servant, with intent to deprive the true owner of his property or the use thereof. Section 548 provides that it is a sufficient defense that the property was appropriated openly under a claim of title preferred in good faith, but that the section shall not excuse the retention of the property of another to pay demands held against him. An employé collected over $900 for his employer, and deducted therefrom over $400, which he claimed was for arrears of salary and expenses and a certain other item, and sent his check to the employer for the balance, with a statement showing how it was arrived at. Held, that where the employer owed less than $100, and the claim of the employé was made with intent to avoid payment of certain sums due, the employé was guilty of larceny under the Code, for the appropriation was not under a claim of title, but under a claim of indebtedness, and was not made in good faith. J. W. Matthews & Co. v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp., 111 N. Y. Supp. 76, 77, 127 App. Div. 195.

Penal Code, § 528, declares that a person who, "with intent to deprive or defraud the true owner of his property," etc., appropriates the same to his own use or benefit, or that of any other person other than the true owner, is guilty of larceny, and section 548 declares that on an indictment for larceny it shall be a defense that the property was appropriated openly under a claim of title made in good faith, even though such claim is untenable. The president of a life insurance company, having promised to contribute up to $50,000 to a political campaign, requested relator, a vice president, to make the payment personally, as that would make it easier to refuse the other demands, and that the president would see that the matter was taken care of later. Relator made the payment, after which the president brought the matter to the attention of the finance committee of the insurance company, and, it being of the opinion that relator should be reimbursed from the company's funds, the president, under his authority to pay out the company's money on executive order, caused such reimbursement to be made without further action on the part of the finance committee or trustees of the company. In proceedings for relator's arrest for the larceny of such fund, the proof showed that relator derived no personal advantage from the money, and that it was paid by him in the honest belief that he was benefiting the insurance company. Held, that the facts did not establish prima facie the commission of larceny; there being no evidence of an attempt to defraud. People ex rel. Perkins v. Moss, 80 N. E. 383, 387, 187 N. Y. 410, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 528, 10 Ann. Cas. 309.

Under the statutes of Oklahoma a person who takes personal property unlawfully, feloniously, and with intent to deprive another thereof, is guilty of larceny; and it is immaterial whether the property is taken from the owner or another. State v. Clark, 128 Pac. 161, 163, 8 Okl. Cr. 432.

"Larceny" is defined by Snyder's St. § 2591, as the taking of personal property accomplished by fraud or stealth and with intent to deprive another thereof. Section 2606 punishes any person who shall steal any stallion, mare, etc., creates a separate and distinct offense, and to support a conviction under it the state must prove a felonious intent on the part of accused to deprive the owner thereof, and to convert the same to his own use, which specific proof is not necessary to support a conviction under the general larceny statute. Crowell v. State, 117 Pac. 883, 884, 6 Okl. Cr. 148.

Pen. Code, § 528, defines "larceny" as follows: "A person who, with the intent to deprive or defraud the true owner of his property, or of the use and benefit thereof, or to appropriate the same to the use of the taker, or of any other person, * * * having in his possession, custody or control, as a bailee, servant, attorney, agent, clerk, trustee or officer of any person, association or corporation, * * * any money, property, evidence of debt or contract, article of value of any nature or thing in action or possession, appropriates the same to his own use, or that of any other person other than the true owner or person entitled to the benefit thereof, steals such property is guilty of 'larceny.'" People v. Burnham, 104 N. Y. Supp. 725, 727, 119 App. Div. 302.

Section 880 et seq. of the Penal Code contains the definition of "larceny," which is, in substance, that every person who, with the intent to deprive or defraud the true owner of his property, or of the use and benefit thereof, or to appropriate the same to the use of the taker, or of any other person, takes property from the possession of another, or, having in his possession property of another, appropriates the same to his own use, or that of any other person other than the one entitled to it, is guilty of "larceny." When the property taken is of a value exceeding $50, or when it is taken from the person of another, it is termed grand larceny; otherwise, petit larceny. Under this section what at common law constituted the offenses of larceny and embezzlement are merged in the one offense of larceny, and thereby the distinction formerly recognized between cases where the taking was unlawful and those where the possession had been lawfully obtained is abolished. Property must have an owner before it is the subject of larceny, but this statute does not define the character of that ownership—whether it is general or special, joint or several, absolute or qualified, arises from title or from possession. The particular ownership of the property stolen does not fall within the definition, and is not of the essence of the crime. Neither the legal nor moral quality of the act is affected by the fact that the property stolen, instead of being owned by one, or by two or more jointly, is the several property of different owners. The gist of the offense is the felonious taking or appropriation. The grade of the offense is determined by the value of the property taken. State v. Mjelde, 75 Pac. 87, 29 Mont. 490.

Where a territorial statute defined larceny as a taking with a felonious intent to deprive the owner of the property taken, and with intent to appropriate the same to the use and benefit of the taker, an instruction authorizing a conviction if the property was taken by defendant with the felonious intent to deprive the owner thereof was erroneous. Miller v. Territory of Oklahoma, 149 Fed. 330, 339, 79 C. C. A. 268, 9 Ann. Cas. 339.

An indictment alleging that accused, doing business as the L. Company, misrepresented to a certain person the resources of such company, and induced such person, relying on the misrepresentations, to subscribe and pay for stock in an Arkansas corporation, thereby fraudulently obtaining of such person a certain amount of money, without showing that accused or the L. Company were in any manner connected with the Arkansas corporation, and without alleging that the L. Company was the Arkansas corporation, nor that accused owned any stock in the Arkansas corporation, nor was an officer or agent thereof, or authorized to represent it in the sale of its stock, did not charge an offense under Kirby's Dig. § 1689, making one guilty of "larceny" who with intent to defraud or cheat another shall designedly, by color of any false token or writing, etc., obtain from any person any money. State v. Lester, 126 S. W. 846, 847, 94 Ark. 242.

Rev. St. 1899, § 1903, enacted in 1835, provides that if a person alter the marks of any animal the subject of larceny, being the property of another, with intent to steal or convert it to his own use, he shall be guilty of larceny, and punished in the same manner as if he had feloniously stolen such animal. Prior to the revision of 1879, grand larceny was the felonious stealing, taking, and carrying away of goods worth $10 or more or any horse, sheep, hog, etc., belonging to another and by the revision the act was amended by striking out the words "sheep" and "hog," and by increasing the value of the stolen property to $30. Held, that section 1903 does not limit the offense to the felonious marking of any animal the subject of grand larceny, but merely the subject of larceny, which includes petit larceny, and the fact that the amendment of the statute excluded hogs and sheep from the list of animals, the stealing of which constituted grand larceny, per se, did not operate to exclude such animals under the value of $30 from the operation of section 1903. State v. Zehnder, 128 S. W. 960, 962, 228 Mo. 310.

An employé of a railroad company was required to make an independent check of the men employed by a construction company, which relied on the reports made by the employé in paying the men. The employé and the timekeeper of the construction company reported that a third person was entitled to receive compensation for work done, and they procured the presentation to the construction company of a check therefor, which it paid. They received the proceeds. The report was false. Held, that the employé was guilty of larceny under Pen. Code, § 528, punishing one who, with intent to defraud, obtains from another by aid of fraudulent representations any money, etc. People v. Eaton, 107 N. Y. Supp. 849, 853, 122 App. Div. 706.

Intent is a necessary element of "larceny." Sutherland v. St. Lawrence County, 91 N. Y. Supp. 962, 966, 101 App. Div. 299.

To constitute "larceny" the taking must be done with a felonious intent. Bailey v. State, 122 S. W. 497, 498, 92 Ark. 216.

Criminal intent is the principal element of "larceny," whether of grand larceny which is a felony, or petit larceny which is a misdemeanor. State v. Claybaugh, 122 S. W. 319, 321, 138 Mo. App. 360.

It is insufficient to constitute "larceny" that the taking was without color of right or authority, but it must have been with a felonious intent. State v. Peterson, 92 Pac. 302, 303, 36 Mont. 109.

Where one has taken and converted animals to his own use, if at the time of the taking there was a felonious intent to deprive the true owner of the permanent use and benefit of his property, he is guilty of larceny. Blackshare v. State, 128 S. W. 549, 552, 94 Ark. 548, 140 Am. St. Rep. 144.

It is essential to a conviction of "larceny" that the property be taken "animus furandi," and where it clearly appears that the taking was perfectly consistent with honest conduct, although the party charged with the crime may have been mistaken he cannot be convicted of "larceny." Bird v. State, 37 South. 525, 527, 48 Fla. 3.

Under Pen. Code, § 528, making guilty of larceny one who takes property with intent to deprive the owner of the same, or of the use and benefit thereof, a taking of property without an intent to so permanently appropriate the same as to deprive the owner of the property itself, or its use and benefit, is not "larceny." There must be something more than an intention to retain possession of property, without an intent to actually appropriate it. People v. Kenny, 119 N. Y. Supp. 854, 855, 135 App. Div. 380.

"Larceny" is the wrongful and fraudulent taking or carrying away of the personal goods of another with felonious intent to convert them to the taker's own use and make them his property without consent of the owner; but the felonious intent is not necessarily an intent to gain an advantage for the taker, it being sufficient that there be an intention to deprive the owner of his property; and, even in those jurisdictions where a lucri causa is required, it is not necessary that the benefit to the defendant be of a pecuniary nature. Canton Nat. Bank v. American Bonding & Trust Co., 73 Atl. 684, 685, 111 Md. 41, 18 Ann. Cas. 820.

"Larceny" is the unlawful taking and carrying away the goods or property of another, secretly or furtively with the felonious intent to appropriate them to the use of the trespasser. * * * From the foregoing authority we deduce the rule that, under the English common law, and consequently under our statute, which is merely declaratory thereof, one cannot commit the crime of 'larceny' or robbery without a felonious intent, or, in other words, he cannot commit them by inadvertence or through ignorance." Where accused took from the possession of the court's receiver certain cattle belonging to him and taken from him under process in an action against him, he was not guilty of robbery or "larceny," in the absence of evidence of felonious intent. Triplett v. Com., 91 S. W. 281, 282, 283, 122 Ky. 35.

Both at common law and under Pen. Code, § 880, and section 883 as amended by Sess. Laws 1897, p. 247, defining larceny as a taking "with intent to deprive or defraud" the true owner, an indictment charging that defendant "feloniously and with the intent then and there to steal," etc., sufficiently charges a felonious intent, the phrase following the word "feloniously" taking nothing from the effect thereof. State v. Allen, 87 Pac. 177, 178, 34 Mont. 403 (citing Wharton's Precedents, 415; State v. Rechnitz, 52 Pac. 264, 20 Mont. 488).

In an action for slander by a daughter against her father, where it was doubtful whether the father meant to charge his daughter with the crime of larceny, the court should have charged that the crime of larceny is committed where one person takes the property of another with intent to convert it to his own use or that of another, and that the crime is not committed where the taking is done by a person innocently and without any evil intent, and that unless the words were intended to charge the plaintiff with the crime of larceny, and would be naturally so understood by the person hearing them, they should find for defendant. Beams v. Beams, 129 S. W. 298, 299, 138 Ky. 818.

Same—At time of taking

"Larceny" at common-law was the felonious taking of the property of another against his will, with the intent to convert it to the use of the taker, or, as some authorities hold, the use of the taker or a third person. In "larceny" the felonious intent must have existed at the time of the taking of the property. Williams v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 66 Atl. 495, 496, 105 Ind. 490.

"Larceny" consists of an intent to trespass on the personal property of another, coupled with an intent wholly to deprive the owner thereof, and the crime is not committed unless such intents concurrently and contemporaneously exist. State v. Teller, 78 Pac. 980, 45 Or. 571 (citing 1 Bish. Crim. Law [7th Ed.] §§ 207, 342; Rapalje, Larceny, § 20; State v. Hull, 54 Pac. 159, 33 Or. 56, 72 Am. St. Rep. 694; State v. Meldrum, 70 Pac. 526, 41 Or. 380; Johnson v. People, 113 Ill. 99).

A felonious intent at the time of the taking is essential to "larceny." To make the finder of a check guilty of larceny, he must have had an intent or fraudulent purpose to convert it to his own use at the time he took possession thereof, and that he knew or had reasonable means of knowing the owner is evidence of such intent, if he afterwards converts it to his own use. State v. Hinton, 109 Pac. 24, 27, 56 Or. 428.

In every "larceny" there must be a trespass in the original taking of the property; that is, in larceny the felonious intent must have existed at the time of the taking. State v. Casey, 105 S. W. 645, 647, 207 Mo. 1, 123 Am. St. Rep. 367, 13 Ann. Cas. 878 (citing State v. Shermer, 55 Mo. 83; State v. Ware, 62 Mo. loc. cit. 602).

Defendant took a bull from the range, believing it to be his own, and later, ascertaining that it belonged to another, converted it. There was no willful trespass in the taking. Held, that it was not "larceny," as the felonious intent at the time of taking was absent, and, there being no trespass, the doctrine that a person, taking property by trespass, who subsequently wrongfully converts it, is guilty of larceny, had no application here. Wilson v. State, 131 S. W. 336, 96 Ark. 148, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 549, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 339.

The crime of "larceny," under the statute defining "larceny" as the taking of personal property accomplished by fraud or stealth, with intent to deprive another thereof, may be shown by proof that at the time of the taking of the property it was taken with the felonious intent to convert it to the taker's own use, and to deprive the owner thereof, regardless of the fact as to whether the taking was accomplished by fraud or stealth. To constitute larceny the criminal intent must exist at the time of the taking, and the taking may be by stealth with such criminal intent, or the taking may be with the owner's knowledge through fraudulent practice. Flohr v. Territory, 78 Pac. 565, 570, 14 Okl. 477.

Asportation

Any felonious taking or asportation of personal property may be "larceny"; therefore the omission of the word "away" from a charge as to "the felonious taking and carrying of the personal property of another" is not per se error. Presley v. State, 57 South. 605, 607, 63 Fla. 37.

In a trial under an indictment charging defendant with larceny of a suit case and its contents from a railroad depot the court, after defining larceny as the felonious stealing, taking and carrying away of the personal property of another, charged that if defendant actually took into his hands the property named in the indictment and lifted it from the place where the owner had put it, so as to entirely remove it from the place where it was put defendant was guilty of larceny, and that if the jury did not find that defendant took the property from the depot, but did find that he took and carried it away from a place outside of any building, the verdict should be guilty of larceny, fixing therein the value of the property stolen. Held that, in the absence of a request by defendant for instructions, the instructions were as specific as the case demanded. State v. McDermet, 115 N. W. 884, 885, 138 Iowa, 86.

Asportation to new jurisdiction as new offense

Where defendant induced R., who had previously been employed by a dray company authorized to receive goods for a consignee of certain shoes, and who was known to the servants of the carrier holding such goods for delivery, to go to the freight depot of the carrier in Illinois after his employment by the dray company had terminated, and procure a load of shoes from the carrier, and R. obtained such shoes, and delivered them to a person other than the consignee in Missouri, such act constituted "larceny," and not "false pretenses," and was therefore punishable under Rev. St. 1899, § 2362, providing that every person who shall steal the property of another in any other state and shall bring the same into Missouri may be convicted and punished for larceny as though the property was stolen in Missouri. State v. Mintz, 88 S. W. 12, 16, 189 Mo. 268.

Under section 285, Crimes Act (Gen. St. 1901, § 2286), providing that every person who shall steal or obtain by robbery the property of another in any other state, territory, or country, and shall bring the same into this state, may be convicted and punished for larceny in the same manner as if such property had been feloniously stolen or taken within this state, and section 83, Crimes Act (Gen. St. 1901, § 2076), making the alteration of brands with intent to steal or convert the branded animal "larceny," one who in another state marks or brands, or alters the mark or brand of, any animal, the subject of larceny and the property of another, with intent to steal it or convert it to his own use, so that if the marking, branding, or alteration were done in this state he would be guilty of the larceny as defined by section 83, may be convicted and punished for larceny under section 285, whether or not the original taking may have been a crime against the laws of the state or country where it was committed. State v. White, 92 Pac. 829, 831, 76 Kan. 654, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 556.

Confidence game distinguished

See Confidence Game.

Consent of owner

As used in Cr. Code, § 114, making it criminal to steal money or other property, the word "steal" includes all the elements of larceny at common law. If the original taking of the property is with the consent of the owner, the crime of "larceny" is not committed. Cohoe v. State, 113 N. W. 532, 533, 79 Neb. 811.

Where the owner of personalty voluntarily parts with its possession for a particular purpose, and the person receiving possession for that purpose has at the time a fraudulent intent to make use of such possession as a means of converting the property to his own use, the crime is larceny. Bivens v. State, 120 Pac. 1033, 1036, 6 Okl. Cr. 521.

Where one by fraud, trick, or false pretense induced the owner to part merely with the possession of his property, there being no intent to pass title, and the party receiving takes it with intent fraudulent to convert it to his own use, the crime is "larceny." State v. Loser, 104 N. W. 337, 340, 132 Iowa, 419 (citing State v. Edwards, 41 S. E. 429, 51 W. Va. 220, 59 L. R. A. 465; State v. Hall, 40 N. W. 107, 76 Iowa, 85, 14 Am. St. Rep. 204; People v. Morse, 2 N. E. 45, 99 N. Y. 662; State v. Anderson, 47 Iowa, 142; People v. Rae, 6 Pac. 1, 66 Cal. 423, 56 Am. Rep. 102; Loomis v. People, 67 N. Y. 329, 23 Am. Rep. 123; 1 Whart. Cr. Law, § 1179).

Where it appeared that the whole scheme by which a person obtained money was a fraud from the beginning and that possession obtained by mere trickery with a present intent to convert it to his own use that he had no rightful possession, and that delivery was made to him without any intent to pass the title, but merely to enable him to make a specific use of the money, his appropriation of it constituted "larceny" at common law. Commonwealth v. King, 88 N. E. 454, 460, 202 Mass. 379 (citing Commonwealth v. Flynn, 45 N. E. 924, 167 Mass. 460, 57 Am. St. Rep. 472; Commonwealth v. Rubin, 43 N. E. 200, 165 Mass. 453; Commonwealth v. Lannan, 26 N. E. 858, 153 Mass. 287, 289, 11 L. R. A. 450, 25 Am. St. Rep. 629; Commonwealth v. Barry, 124 Mass. 325).

Conversion

There was a "conversion," within B. & C. Comp. § 1807, declaring guilty of larceny one who receives money of the state and converts it, where money being deposited in a bank by the State Treasurer for safe-keeping was paid out to others than such Treasurer. State v. Ross, 104 Pac. 596, 599, 55 Or. 450, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 601.

Converting or claiming property found

Where accused, as agent of prosecutor, had an interest in certain rent collected by him, he could not be convicted of larceny by embezzlement of such rent, under Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 38, § 75, providing that, if an agent fraudulently embezzles or converts property in his hands belonging to his employer, he shall be guilty of larceny. People v. O'Farrell, 93 N. E. 136, 139, 247 Ill. 44.

On an information drawn under Comp. Laws 1909, § 2591, defining larceny generally, a conviction may be had under section 2592 on proof that accused found lost property with means of inquiry as to the owner, and appropriated the same to his own use without a reasonable effort to discover the owner; the latter section only prescribing a rule of evidence. Berry v. State, 111 Pac. 676, 677, 4 Okl. Cr. 202, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 849.

When a delivery of goods is made for a specific purpose, the possession is still supposed to reside in the first proprietor, and, where any person has the bare charge of another's effects, legal possession remains in the owner, and therefore, where the finder of the purse told defendant's wife thereof, and she stated that the purse looked like her husband's and took the same telling the finder that, if it did not belong to her husband, she would return it, and afterwards possession was given to him on his claim of ownership, when in fact it belonged to another, the legal possession remained in the finder, and defendant's claim thereto constituted larceny. Williams v. State, 75 N. E. 875, 877, 165 Ind. 472, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 248 (citing Smith v. People, 53 N. Y. 111, 13 Am. Rep. 474; Bish. New Cr. Law, § 824).

"Larceny" is divided into two degrees, or otherwise varied in punishment, by the value of the thing stolen; and an indictment must allege the value of the article stolen, and the proof of value will be adequate if it simply shows to which of the classes meriting corresponding punishment the offense belongs. Woodring v. Territory, 78 Pac. 85, 86, 14 Okl. 250, 2 Ann. Cas. 855.

Under Rev. Pen. Code, §§ 605, 607, 608, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 175, c. 151, "larceny" is the taking of personal property accomplished by fraud or stealth and with intent to deprive another thereof. Larceny is divided into two degrees, the first of which is termed "grand larceny"; the second, "petit larceny." Grand larceny is larceny committed in either of the following cases: (1) When the property taken is of value exceeding $20. (2) When such property, although not of value exceeding $20, is taken from the person of another. (3) When such property, although not of value exceeding $20, is a bull, steer, cow, heifer, or calf, or is a stallion, mare, gelding, horse, or colt. Larceny in other cases is petit larceny. Under Rev. Pen. Code, §§ 605, 607, 608, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 175, c. 151, making it grand larceny to take property exceeding $20 in value, or when the property, though not of value exceeding $20, is a stallion, mare, gelding, horse, or colt, there is no variance between an information alleging larceny of a horse and proof of the larceny of a gelding, especially in view of Rev. Code Cr. Proc. § 509, providing that neither a departure from the form or mode prescribed as to any pleading nor error therein renders it invalid, unless it has prejudiced defendant, and section 229, providing that an indictment is sufficient if the act charged is clearly set out in ordinary and concise language, so as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended. State v. Matejousky, 115 N. W. 96, 98, 22 S. D. 30.

To feloniously take from the person of another the goods of that other and carry the same away has always been a crime, punishable as either grand or petit "larceny," so that the Legislature in defining and making punishable the specific act of feloniously taking property from the person of another did not create a new offense, but recognized such act as a degree of larceny in which the grades of grand and petit larceny are included, so that a defendant charged with larceny from the person may properly be convicted of any of the lesser offenses proved. State v. Clem, 94 Pac. 1079, 1080, 49 Wash. 273.

See Burglary.

Under Comp. Laws 1909, § 2554, making it burglary to break and enter any building, etc., with intent to steal therein, the word "steal" involves a felonious intent on the part of the taker to deprive the owner of property and to convert it to the taker's use; while any trespass involving the taking of personal property with intent to deprive another thereof is "larceny," within section 2557, making it burglary to enter any building, etc., with intent to commit any felony, larceny, or malicious mischief. Sullivan v. State, 123 Pac. 569, 570, 7 Okl. Cr. 307.

Under Rev. St. 1898, § 4334, as amended by Sess. Laws 1905, p. 16, c. 19, making it burglary for any person to break and enter a building with intent to commit a "larceny" or any other felony, an information, charging the breaking and entering a building at night with intent to steal goods, without stating their value, sufficiently charges a burglary in the first degree, as "larceny" within such section includes both a misdemeanor and a felony, and the words "or any other felony" are equivalent to "or any felony other than that embraced within the larceny." State v. Hows, 87 Pac. 163, 31 Utah, 168.

Embezzlement distinguished

"Larceny" and "embezzlement" are distinguishable, in that in larceny possession of the property may be obtained by fraud, while it cannot be so obtained in embezzlement. People v. Grider, 110 Pac. 586, 588, 13 Cal. App. 703.

The distinction between "larceny" and "embezzlement" is one fully recognized in the criminal law. While the two offenses have much in common, for the purpose of prosecution they have uniformly been regarded as distinct. In every "larceny" there must be a trespass in the original taking of the property; that is, in larceny the felonious intent must have existed at the time of taking. Whereas "embezzlement" is the fraudulent and felonious appropriation of another's property by a person to whom it has been intrusted, or into whose hands it has lawfully come. State v. Casey, 105 S. W. 645, 647, 207 Mo. 1, 123 Am. St. Rep. 367, 13 Ann. Cas. 878.

The crimes of "embezzlement" and "larceny" are so different in their character that they should be treated in an indictment as distinct and separate offenses. State v. Finnegean, 103 N. W. 155, 157, 127 Iowa, 286, 4 Ann. Cas. 628.

The term "embezzle," as used in the statute, is a broader term than "larceny," but not exclusive of it. State v. Sullivan, 21 South. 688, 689, 49 La. Ann. 200, 62 Am. St. Rep. 644; State v. Pellerin, 43 South. 159, 161, 118 La. 547.

To constitute "larceny" as distinguished from "embezzlement," there must be a trespass to the possession, but it is larceny where one gains possession of another's personal property so as to constitute only a bare custody, or procures it by subterfuge; the owner's property not being divested in such case; he still having constructive possession. Boswell v. State, 56 South. 21, 22, 1 Ala. App. 178.

At common law, possession was a necessary element of "larceny," and the distinction between "larceny" and "embezzlement" depends on the nature of the possession and the manner of obtaining it, and it would seem that a mere credit is not the subject of "larceny" at common law. Higbee v. State, 104 N. W. 748, 749, 74 Neb. 331.

"Embezzlement" is defined as the fraudulent appropriation of property by a person to whom such property has been intrusted or into whose hands it has lawfully come. It differs from "larceny" in the fact that the original taking of the property was lawful or with the consent of the owner, while in "larceny" the felonious intent must have existed at the time of the taking. United States v. Allen, 150 Fed. 152, 153 (citing Moore v. United States, 16 Sup. Ct. 294, 295, 160 U. S. 268, 269, 40 L. Ed. 422).

"One who obtains money or goods by some fraudulent trick or artifice, and carries them away, is guilty of 'larceny.'" Thus where one marries a woman in pursuance of a scheme to procure money which she has on deposit in bank, and later procures a check for the money on representations that he will use the money in making an investment for her, he is guilty of "larceny" and not "embezzlement." Hunt v. State, 79 S. W. 769, 771, 72 Ark. 241, 65 L. R. A. 71, 105 Am. St. Rep. 34, 2 Ann. Cas. 33 (citing Beasley v. State, 38 N. E. 35, 138 Ind. 552, 46 Am. St. Rep. 418).

The crime of "embezzlement" differs in its essential ingredients from the crime of "larceny" in this: That in "larceny" the gravamen of the offense is the unlawful and felonious taking of personal property with the intent to convert and steal the same, while in "embezzlement" the taking is lawful, because of the trust reposed in the agent, servant, or trustee receiving it, and the gist of the offense consists of the conversion of the property so received with a felonious and fraudulent intent of converting the same to the use of the agent, servant, or trustee. State v. Culver, 97 N. W. 1015, 1016, 5 Neb. (Unof.) 238.

According to Pen. Code, § 528, "larceny" includes every act which was larceny at common law, and in addition such acts as formerly constituted "false pretenses" and "embezzlement." At common law, if a person honestly and in good faith received possession of personal property in trust, and thereafter converted the same to his own use, he was guilty of "embezzlement." If he obtained possession of the property by fraud, the owner intending nevertheless to part with the title as well as the possession, the offense was obtaining property under "false pretenses." If the possession was wrongfully or fraudulently obtained, without the owner's consent, and without color of title, and with a felonious intent of converting the property to the use of the taker or another, the offense was "larceny." People ex rel. Perkins v. Moss, 99 N. Y. Supp. 138, 144, 145, 113 App. Div. 329 (citing People v. Mill- "Larceny" was a crime at common law and consisted of a trespass, committed in the taking of the personal goods and chattels of another with intent to convert them to the taker's use, without the consent of the owner. "Embezzlement" cannot be committed unless the defendant is in the lawful possession of the property at the time of the conversion. As trespass is an injury to the possession only, it logically and legally follows that one in the lawful possession of goods cannot commit larceny of them, for it were idle and absurd to talk of one committing an injury to his own possession. "Embezzlement" consists in the breach of some trust relation by one in the lawful possession of the personal property of another who fraudulently converts it to his own use. In "larceny" there is no breach of any confidential relation as in embezzlement, while in the latter crime there is no trespass as in larceny. State v. Browning, 82 Pac. 955, 956, 47 Or. 470.

"Larceny" at common law was the felonious taking of the property of another against his will with intent to convert it to the use of the taker, or, as some authorities hold, the use of the taker or third person. "Embezzlement" consists in the fraudulent appropriation to one's own use of money or goods intrusted to him by another. In larceny the felonious intent must have existed at the time of taking, whereas in embezzlement the fraudulent act consists in the appropriation of the property to the use of the taker or third party, but the felonious or fraudulent intent is of the essence of the offense in each case. Where an insurance agent was entitled under his contract with the company to a credit of three months on his monthly balances due the company, the fact that at the end of the three months he was unable to pay, or simply failed to pay, with no proof of a fraudulent disposition of the money, would not have established embezzlement. The mere failure to pay a debt without compulsion even by one having the financial ability is neither larceny nor embezzlement. Williams v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 66 Atl. 495, 496, 105 Md. 490.

The distinction between larceny by fraud and embezzlement is determined as to the time when a fraudulent intent to convert arose, and in larceny the criminal intent must exist at the time of the taking, and if the taker received the property as a bailment with intent to conform to the owner's wishes and thereafter fraudulently appropriates the property, the crime is embezzlement under Snyder's Comp. Laws 1909, §§ 2591 and 2609. Bivens v. State, 120 Pac. 1033, 1036, 6 Okl. Cr. 521.

"Where one honestly receives the possession of goods upon trust, and after receiving them fraudulently converts them to his own use, it is a case of 'embezzlement.' But where the possession has been obtained through a trick or device, with the intent, at the time the party receives it, to convert the same to his own use, and the owner of the property parts with the possession and not with the title, the offense is 'larceny.'" Where a person gave money to another as a stakeholder on a bet, such delivery having been brought about by fraud and artifice of the stakeholder, who intended to appropriate the money in any event, and who did so, the offense was "larceny." State v. Ryan, 82 Pac. 703, 706, 47 Or. 338, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 862 (quoting and adopting the statement in People v. Tomlinson, 36 Pac. 506, 507, 102 Cal. 19, 23).

Where a person honestly receives the possession of goods, chattels, or the money of another on any trust, express or implied, and after receiving them fraudulently converts them to his own use, he may be guilty of "embezzlement" but not of "larceny," except as "embezzlement" is by statute made "larceny." State v. Buck, 84 S. W. 951, 952, 186 Mo. 15, 2 Ann. Cas. 1007 (citing Commonwealth v. Barry, 124 Mass. 325).

False pretenses distinguished

The distinction between the crime of larceny and that of cheating by "false pretenses" is this: "If the false pretenses induce the owner to part with his property intending to transfer both title and possession, the crime is cheating by 'false pretenses.' If, on the other hand, one by fraud, trick, or false pretense induces the owner to part merely with the possession of his property, there being no intent to pass the title, and the party who receives it took it with intent fraudulently to convert it to his own use, the crime is 'larceny.'" State v. Loser, 104 N. W. 337, 339, 340, 132 Iowa, 419.

Prosecutor met defendant through a newspaper advertisement, and defendant offered to sell him a half interest in the rooming house department of a brokerage company for $200, and represented that he (defendant) needed an assistant, and that the business netted profits of between $200 and $300 a month. Prosecutor desired a salary, but thereafter paid defendant $50 to be kept by him for 30 days; defendant agreeing to return the same to prosecutor at the expiration of such time if he was dissatisfied, which defendant failed to do. Held that since the ownership of the money so deposited remained in prosecutor, and there was no intent on his part to deliver possession thereof to defendant, except temporarily, the latter's offense, if any committed, was "larceny," and not obtaining money by "false pretenses." State v. Anderson, 84 S. W. 946, 949, 186 Mo. 25 (citing State v. Vickery, 19 Tex. 326; 2 Arch. Cr. Pl. 372; Loomis v. People, 67 N. Y. 322, 23 Am. Rep. 123; People v. Morse, 2 N. E. 45, 99 N. Y. 662).

"Larceny" and "false pretenses" are distinguishable, in that in larceny the owner does not intend to part with his property to accused, though he may intend to part with possession; while in false pretenses he does intend to part with his title. People v. Grider, 110 Pac. 586, 588, 13 Cal. App. 703.

The distinction between "false pretenses" and "larceny" is that in the former the owner parts with the possession and title of property by reason of false and fraudulent representations knowingly and designedly made, while in the latter the owner of the property stolen must not have intended to part with the title to it. People v. Proctor, 82 Pac. 551, 552, 1 Cal. App. 521.

"Where, by means of fraud, conspiracy, or artifice, possession of the property is obtained with felonious intent, and the title still remains in the owner, 'larceny' is established, while the crime is 'false pretenses' if the title, as well as possession, is absolutely parted with." People v. Delbos, 81 Pac. 131, 132, 146 Cal. 734 (quoting and adopting definition in People v. Rae, 6 Pac. 1, 66 Cal. 425, 56 Am. Rep. 102).

Where possession of personal property is obtained from the owner by fraud, trick, or device, and the owner intends to part with both possession and the title when he surrenders control of the property, the offense is obtaining property by "false pretenses"; but if the possession is fraudulently secured, and the owner does not intend to part with the title, the offense is "larceny." Beckwith v. Gallice Mines Co., 93 Pac. 453, 455, 50 Or. 542, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 723.

"If the possession has been obtained by fraud, trick, or device, and the owner of it intends to part with his title when he gives up possession, the offense, if any, is obtaining money by 'false pretenses.' But where the possession has been obtained through a trick or device, with the intent, at the time the party receives it, to convert the same to his own use, and the owner of the property parts with the possession and not with the title, the offense is 'larceny.'" Where a person gave money to another as a stakeholder on a bet, such delivery having been brought about by fraud and artifice of the stakeholder, who intended to appropriate the money in any event, and who did so, the offense was "larceny." State v. Ryan, 82 Pac. 703, 706, 47 Or. 338, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 862 (quoting and adopting the statement in People v. Tomlinson, 36 Pac. 506, 507, 102 Cal. 19, 23).

If the owner of property part with not only the possession but with the right of property also, the offense of the party obtaining the property will not be larceny, but will be that of obtaining goods by "false pretenses." Zink v. People, 77 N. Y. 114, 128, 33 Am. Rep. 589 (adopting definition in Smith v. People, 53 N. Y. 111, 13 Am. Rep. 474).

One who went to a wholesale cigar store, and, giving an assumed name, falsely represented that he had come to get cigars for a retail dealer, and thereby procured the cigars and converted them to his own use, was guilty of "larceny," since the wholesaler intended to deliver him merely the possession of the goods for the retailer, and not to sell them to him personally, and was not guilty of "obtaining property by impersonating another," within the meaning of Rev. St. 1899, § 1900. State v. Kosky, 90 S. W. 454, 457, 191 Mo. 1.

Where defendant induced R., who had previously been employed by a dray company authorized to receive goods for a consignee of certain shoes, and who was known to the servants of the carrier holding such goods for delivery, to go to the freight depot of the carrier in Illinois after his employment by the dray company had terminated, and procure a load of shoes from the carrier, and R. obtained such shoes, and delivered them to a person other than the consignee in Missouri, such act constituted "larceny," and not "false pretenses," and was therefore punishable under Rev. St. 1899, § 2362, providing that every person who shall steal the property of another in any other state and shall bring the same into Missouri may be convicted and punished for larceny as though the property was stolen in Missouri. State v. Mintz, 88 S. W. 12, 16, 189 Mo. 268.

According to Pen. Code, § 528, "larceny" includes every act which was larceny at common law, and in addition such acts as formerly constituted "false pretenses" and "embezzlement." At common law, if a person honestly and in good faith received possession of personal property in trust, and thereafter converted the same to his own use, he was guilty of "embezzlement." If he obtained possession of the property by fraud, the owner intending nevertheless to part with the title as well as the possession, the offense was obtaining property under "false pretenses." If the possession was wrongfully or fraudulently obtained, without the owner's consent, and without color of title, and with a felonious intent of converting the property to the use of the taker or another, the offense was "larceny." People ex rel. Perkins v. Moss, 99 N. Y. Supp. 138, 144, 145, 113 App. Div. 329 (citing People v. Miller, 62 N. E. 418, 169 N. Y. 350, 88 Am. St. Rep. 546).

Prosecutor applied to defendant for a position, who introduced him to A. to arrange the terms of his employment. A. required prosecutor to deposit $50 as a guaranty of his honesty, to be returned on termination of his employment; but defendant on the next day told prosecutor that, as $400 or $500 would pass through prosecutor's hands every day, he must deposit $150 more, which he did. Defendant pretended to give him a receipt for this money, which, instead, was a bill of sale for a one-half interest in the rooming house business conducted by the concern. Prosecutor worked for $15 per week for three or four weeks, during which time he drew $15.75, and, becoming dissatisfied, demanded the return of his money, which defendant refused to pay him, and then prosecutor discovered that his receipt therefor was a bill of sale. Held that, prosecutor never having intended to part with the title to the money so deposited, defendant, having acquired the same by fraud, with the felonious intent to convert it to his own use, was guilty of "larceny," and not "false pretenses." State v. Buck, 84 S. W. 951, 952, 186 Mo. 15, 2 Ann. Cas. 1007 (citing Commonwealth v. Barry, 124 Mass. 325; People v. Morse, 2 N. E. 45, 99 N. Y. 662; People v. Dunmar, 13 N. E. 325, 106 N. Y. 502; People v. Miller, 62 N. E. 418, 169 N. Y. 339, 88 Am. St. Rep. 546; People v. Gottschalk, 20 N. Y. Supp. 777, 66 Hun, 64).

Force and arms

Though an indictment charged that accused "with force and arms" stole a horse, those words should have been omitted from the instructions, for, neither force nor arms being an element of the offense, their use in the indictment was unnecessary. Walklate v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 118 S. W. 314, 315.

Gambling distinguished

The obtaining of money under pretext of betting at cards and the best hand winning, but where in fact prosecuting witness had no chance to win, and was the only player who actually risked anything, is within Comp. Laws 1907, § 4355, defining "larceny" as the felonious taking of the property of another, and such a game cannot be held to constitute gambling merely. State v. Donaldson, 99 Pac. 447, 449, 35 Utah, 96, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1164, 136 Am. St. Rep. 1041.

Property of another

To constitute "larceny," the thing stolen must be the property of another; but either general or special ownership may be sufficient. State v. Roswell, 133 S. W. 99, 100, 153 Mo. App. 338.

"Larceny" consists in two essential elements: First, the misappropriation; and, second, the accompanying intent. Evidence of ownership is therefore admissible, even necessary, in proving the misappropriation, since one may not usually wrongfully appropriate his own property. But it is as much a crime to steal one person's property as another's. The ownership of the property is not an essential ingredient of the crime, so long as it appears that the title to the same is not in the accused. The crime is complete when it appears that the property feloniously taken or appropriated was not the property of the accused. People v. Mead, 109 N. Y. Supp. 163, 164, 125 App. Div. 7.

"'Larceny' is the felonious stealing, taking, carrying, leading, or driving away the personal property of another," and an indictment charging defendant with willfully, etc., taking from the person and possession of prosecutors said money, was insufficient in not charging that the property was not that of defendant. People v. Cleary, 81 Pac. 753, 1 Cal. App. 50.

One who has taken an estray and is in possession thereof has such property interest therein that the taking of it from him may be "larceny"; so, also, one in possession of stolen property purchased from the thief; so, also, a thief, in possession of property he has stolen, as against another than the owner. Maxwell v. Territory, 85 Pac. 116, 10 Ariz. 1.

Pen. Code. § 484, defines "larceny" as the felonious stealing, etc., of personal property of another. Held, that the phrase "personal property of another," as so used, means property in the possession of another who is entitled, as bailee or otherwise to retain possession for some benefit or profit to himself to the exclusion of all others, and not absolute ownership as defined by Civ. Code, § 679, so that a taking of a helifer by the general owner thereof from the possession of an agister entitled to hold the same under a lien for pasturage, with the intent to deprive the latter thereof, constituted "larceny." People v. Cain, 83 Pac. 1037, 1039, 7 Cal. App. 163.

Trespass

"Larceny" is the felonious stealing and carrying away, etc., of the personal property of another, every larceny including a trespass to the possession, which cannot exist unless the property was in the possession of the person from whom it is charged to have been stolen. People v. Hoban, 88 N. E. 806, 807, 240 Ill. 303, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1132, 16 Ann. Cas. 226.

"To constitute 'larceny' there must be a trespass in the taking. * * * It is not necessary that the taking be by force or stealth. If possession is obtained by fraud with intent to convert the property to the use of the taker, and it is so converted, 'larceny' may be charged." Where E. and defendants conspired to steal the funds of a labor union, and to that end procured the election of E. as recording secretary of the union, and pursuant to his duty as such recording secretary he drew money from a bank to be forwarded to the district and national organizations, and carried the money on his person until late in the evening, when pursuant to the conspiracy he pretended to have been held up and robbed, the crime was not "larceny" because of the absence of a felonious taking. State v. Cothorn, 115 N. W. 890, 891, 138 Iowa, 236.

"At common law and under the statute, in 'larceny' there must be a trespass. Where the ownership of property is not parted with and by a fraud or trick the possession of the property is obtained and is converted to the use of the taker without the consent of the owner, and at the time of resorting to the trick or fraud to obtain the possession it was intended to take the property and permanently deprive the owner of it, this would constitute 'larceny' at common law as well as under the statute." State v. Copeman, 84 S. W. 942, 945, 186 Mo. 108 (citing 1 Bish. New Cr. Law, § 585; State v. Murphy, 90 Mo. App. 548; Loomis v. People, 67 N. Y. 322, 23 Am. Rep. 123; State v. Vickery, 19 Tex. 326).

LARCENY AFTER TRUST DELEGATED

If a person, fraudulently intending to get possession of the money of another and appropriate the same to his own use, by false representations induces the owner to deliver the money to him for the purpose of being applied for the owner's use or benefit, and then appropriates it in pursuance of the original intent, he is guilty of both "larceny" after trust delegated and simple larceny, and may be prosecuted for, and convicted of, either offense. Martin v. State, 51 S. E. 334, 123 Ga. 478.

LARCENY BY BAILEE

See, also, Bailee.

The language of Mills' Ann. St. § 1256, defining "larceny" by a bailee converting money, etc., "he shall be deemed guilty of larceny in the same manner as if the original taking had been felonious, and on conviction shall be punished accordingly," makes the conversion by a bailee with intent to steal the exact equivalent of a felonious stealing, taking, and carrying away. Quinn v. People, 75 Pac. 396, 397, 32 Colo. 135.

LARCENY BY FALSE PRETENSES

See False Pretense.

LARCENY FROM THE HOUSE

House as element of, see House.

Under Pen. Code 1895, § 178, providing that "larceny from the house" is the breaking or entering any house with intent to steal, or after breaking or entering said house stealing therefrom anything of value, the offense can be committed in four different ways. It may consist in the breaking of a house with intent to steal, provided the offense is not burglary; entering any house with intent to steal; breaking a house and stealing therefrom, where it can be accomplished without entry or entering and stealing. Section 182 defines two classes of "larceny from the house" and distinguishes them. It provides that "any person breaking and entering any house or building (other than a dwelling house or its appurtenances) with intent to steal, but is detected and prevented from carrying such intent into effect or in stealing any of the articles therein contained." The section then provides that "any person breaking or entering any such house or building and stealing therefrom any money, goods, chattels, wares or merchandise or any other article of value shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." This second division of the section is subdivided into thefts where there is a breaking and entering in order to accomplish the theft, and where there is no breaking, but merely an entrance into the building and a theft is accomplished. But in both cases a theft must actually be committed. Under the first portion of section 182, as in the first clause of section 178, where a house other than a dwelling house and its appurtenances is broken and entered with intent to steal, and the offender is detected, he is guilty of "larceny from the house," though nothing be taken. Glaze v. State, 58 S. E. 1126, 1127, 2 Ga. App. 704.

LARCENY FROM THE PERSON

Included in robbery, see Robbery.

Robbery distinguished, see Robbery.

See, also, Theft from the Person.

The crime of "larceny from the person" (B. & C. Comp. § 1800) is a compound larceny consisting of simple larceny (section 1798) aggravated by the circumstance of taking the property from the person of another in which the value of the property is not an ingredient of the offense, as in case of simple larceny. State v. Reyner, 91 Pac. 301, 302, 50 Or. 224.

The act of pocket picking is the offense of "larceny of the person." State v. Whitten, 92 N. E. 79, 80, 82 Ohio St. 174.

The two elements peculiar to "larceny" from the person in the nighttime are that it must be "from the person" and "in the nighttime"; and, upon information for larceny from the person in the nighttime, a verdict of larceny from "a" person in the nighttime is insufficient. State v. McGee, 80 S. W. 899, 900, 181 Mo. 312.

LARD

Where "lard" compound was made of cotton seed oil and oleostearine, and was generally described as lard both in trade and among consumers, proof of the theft of such compound was sufficient to sustain a conviction under an indictment charging the theft of lard, though "lard" as defined by the dictionaries and the pure food law means a product of a hog. Roman v. State, 142 S. W. 912, 913, 64 Tex. Cr. R. 515.

LARGE

See At Large.

A complaint for injury to a pedestrian while passing along a sidewalk on a dark night by running into a stone, in alleging that the city had permitted a "large" stone, unguarded and unprotected, to remain along the sidewalk, at the edge thereof, for a long time prior to the accident, and that it was the city's duty to guard against the danger by erecting barriers, is insufficient; it not showing the size or location of the stone, or how long it had been there, so as to make it clear that it was the city's duty to maintain barriers. The word "large," as here used, like "along" and "edge," is a relative term. It does not indicate the size or character of the stone, except in a comparative sense. City of Vincennes v. Spees, 74 N. E. 277, 280, 35 Ind. App. 389.

LARGE CONSUMER

The term "large consumer," used in a contract between a city and a water company providing that the cost of furnishing water to manufacturers and large consumers was to be estimated according to the size of the establishment, does not mean persons taking water for ordinary family use, where such persons are fully covered by a schedule based on houses having a certain number of rooms and occupied by different numbers of families, but contemplates concerns like manufacturing, which differ more or less from instances specifically provided for. Berends v. Bellevue Water & Fuel Gaslight Co., 82 S. W. 983, 984, 119 Ky. 8.

LARRY

A "larry" is a kind of car used to haul coal from a coal mine tippie to coke ovens, and from which larry ovens are charged with coal. Hairston v. United States Coal and Coke Co., 66 S. E. 473, 66 W. Va. 324.

LASCIVIOUS

See, also, Lewdness.

Character usually cannot be characterized as lascivious, wanton, or lewd unless it was intentionally calculated to incite to lust. It is thus distinguished from indecency and impropriety, which may or may not indicate lust, depending upon the purposes or feelings of the person who is guilty of such indecency or impropriety. Indecency of conduct may tend to prove lasciviousness, but when lasciviousness is proven an unchaste character is thereby established. State v. Hummer, 104 N. W. 722, 724, 128 Iowa, 505.

Rev. St. § 3893, declares every obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet, print, or other publication of an indecent character, or notices giving information for obtaining such publications, to be nonmailable matter, and prescribes a punishment for the use of the mails to transmit or circulate the same. Held, that the words "obscene," "lewd," and "lascivious," as used in such section, signify that form of immorality which has relation to sexual impurity, having the same meaning as is given them at common law in prosecutions for obscene libel. Hanson v. United States, 157 Fed. 749, 750, 85 C. C. A. 325.

"Lasciviousness" is defined as wantonness or lewdness. State v. Hummer, 104 N. W. 722, 723, 128 Iowa, 505 (citing Ex parte Doran, 32 Fed. 76; United States v. Clarke, 38 Fed. 732; United States v. Durant, 46 Fed. 753; State v. Lawrence, 27 N. W. 126, 19 Neb. 307).

LAST

See Same as Last.

LAST ADJUSTED VALUATION

Under Act April 12, 1905 (P. L. 142), providing for the levy of a road tax on "the last adjusted valuation" for county purposes, there is no such valuation until the county commissioners have corrected the assessor's return, and the board of revision has given the taxpayers opportunity to object. H. C. Frick Coke Co. v. Mt. Pleasant Tp., 71 Atl. 930, 931, 222 Pa. 451.

LAST ASSESSMENT

The "last county assessment," contemplated by Kirby's Dig. § 5683, providing that no single improvement shall be undertaken which exceeds in cost 20 per cent. of the value of the property in the improvement district as shown by the "last county assessment," includes the valuation added by the county board of equalization, and where the value is thus increased before the board of improvement of a city reports the estimated cost of an improvement, and before the passage of an ordinance levying the assessment to pay for the improvement, such increased value must be considered. Board of Improvement Dist. No. 5 of Texarkana v. Offenhauser, 105 S. W. 265, 268, 84 Ark. 257.

LAST CLEAR CHANCE

See, also, Discovered Negligence; Discovered Peril; Humanitarian Doctrine.

The doctrine of the "last clear chance," generally attributed to the case of Davies v. Mann, 10 Mees. & W. Rep. 546, in which the owner of a donkey, who negligently turned it out on the highway with its feet hobbled, was allowed, notwithstanding his own negligence, to recover from a person driving along the highway who carelessly ran into and killed it, is that the contributory negligence of the party injured will not defeat the action if it be shown that the defendant might by the exercise of reasonable care and prudence have avoided the consequences of the injured party's own negligence. Pilmer v. Boise Traction Co., 94 Pac. 437, 438, 14 Idaho, 327, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 254, 125 Am. St. Rep. 161.

"The last clear chance doctrine" arises where plaintiff has been negligent in placing himself in a position of danger, but that negligence has spent its force at the time he received an injury owing to the negligence of defendant. Scholl v. Belcher, 127 Pac. 368, 975, 63 Or. 310.

Under the "last clear chance doctrine," one is liable for injury negligently inflicted upon another, though the injured person by his own negligence put himself in the place of danger, if the person inflicting the injuries saw the peril in time to have avoided the accident by using ordinary care. Cerrano v. Portland Ry., Light & Power Co., 126 Pac. 37, 40, 62 Or. 421.

The "last clear chance" to avoid injury is the last opportunity to avoid the danger, by one of the parties learning of it, and knowing that the safety of the other depends solely upon his conduct, and the rule does not apply where the act of the injured party and the defendant are substantially concurrent. Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Bolin, 78 N. E. 210, 213, 215, 39 Ind. App. 169.

The "last clear chance" doctrine, which is the rule that, notwithstanding the injured person's original negligence, the defendant is liable if, by the exercise of ordinary care, he might have discovered plaintiff's peril in time to have avoided the injury, is in conflict with the contributory negligence rule. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Lilley, 93 N. W. 1012, 1016, 4 Neb. (Unof.) 286.

"Last clear chance" is the doctrine that though the plaintiff may have been guilty of negligence, and although that negligence may in fact have contributed to the accident, yet, if the defendant could, in the result, by the exercise of proper care and diligence, have avoided the mischief which happened, the plaintiff's negligence will not excuse him. McClanahan v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co., 35 South. 902, 906, 111 La. 781.

If the negligence of both parties co-operate there is usually no liability, except for the "humanitarian or 'last chance' doctrine," which means that, though the injured party may have been negligent in placing himself in a position of peril, yet if defendant, by ordinary care, did see, or could see, him in time to have averted injury, defendant is liable. Matz v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 117 S. W. 584, 591, 217 Mo. 275.

The doctrine of "last clear chance" is not limited to cases where the peril of the person injured has been actually discovered by those causing the injury, but extending to cases where the peril could have been discovered by the exercise of reasonable care on their part. The duty to exercise due care to avoid the consequence of another's negligence arises when the circumstances are such that an ordinarily prudent person would have reason to apprehend its existence. Nichols v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 98 Pac. 808, 814, 44 Colo. 501.

The "last clear chance" doctrine is somewhat of an exception to the general rule of law, by which an injury caused by the joint negligence of the wrongdoer and the person injured is not actionable. Murphy v. Wabash R. Co. (Mo.) 128 S. W. 481, 485.

The doctrine of the "last clear chance" does not involve the recognition of liability in case of concurrent negligence, and does not involve a case of comparative negligence, but requires one to use reasonable care not to injure another in the condition in which the latter has placed himself, though the latter is guilty of negligence in putting himself in a place of danger avoidable by reasonable precautions. Welsh v. Tri-City Ry. Co., 126 N. W. 1118, 1119, 148 Iowa, 200.

The exception to the general rule making contributory negligence a defense, known as the "last chance doctrine," does not apply where there is no negligence of the defendant supervening subsequently to that of the plaintiff, as where his negligence is continuous and operative down to the moment of the injury, or where his negligence or position of danger is not discovered by the defendant in time to avoid the injury. Denver City Tramway Co. v. Cobb, 164 Fed. 41, 43, 90 C. C. A. 459.

The rule of "the last clear chance" implies that the one charged with negligence knew the person injured was in a place of danger and negligently failed to avoid injuring him; but his testimony that he did not have such knowledge is not conclusive. Such knowledge may be shown by proof that the person injured was in a situation of imminent danger, and so situated that the one injuring him, if he used his senses as human beings ordinarily do, must have known the danger. Zitnik v. Union Pac. R. Co., 136 N. W. 995, 997, 91 Neb. 679.

The doctrine of "last clear chance" cannot be applied where both parties are contemporaneously and actively in fault, and by their mutual carelessness an injury ensues to one or both of them. Rowe v. Southern California Ry. Co., 87 Pac. 220, 221, 4 Cal. App. 1 (citing Holmes v. South Pac. Coast Ry., 31 Pac. 834, 97 Cal. 169).

The "last clear chance doctrine" applies to the facts of the particular case, and the doctrine is applicable if it appears that plaintiff was negligent and the defendant was not negligent in bringing about the dangerous situation, but saw or might have seen plaintiff's peril in time to prevent the injury. McGee v. Wabash R. Co., 114 S. W. 33, 35, 214 Mo. 530.

The doctrine of "last clear chance" is an exception to the general rule that contributory negligence of the person injured will bar recovery without reference to the degree of negligence, and under the doctrine, an injured person may recover from the injury resulting from the negligence of another though his own negligence exposed him to the danger of injury, if the injury was more immediately caused by want of care on the other's part to avoid the injury after discovering the peril of the person injured. Clark v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 106 Pac. 361, 363, 24 Okl. 764.

The doctrine of the "last clear chance" rests upon the principle that there is something in the plaintiff's condition or situation to admonish the defendant that he is not able to protect himself. It is the doctrine of prior and subsequent negligence, or remote and proximate cause, and presupposes the intervention of an appreciable interval of time between the prior negligence of the plaintiff and the subsequent negligence of the defendant. It applies notwithstanding the contributory negligence of the plaintiff when the defendant knows, or by the exercise of ordinary care ought to know, of plaintiff's danger, and fails to do something which it has power to do to avoid the injury, or when the plaintiff is in some position of danger from a threatened contact with some agency under the control of the defendant, when the plaintiff cannot and the defendant can prevent a resulting injury. Roanoke Ry. & Electric Co. v. Carroll, 72 S. E. 125, 127, 112 Va. 598.

"The party who has the last opportunity of avoiding an accident is not excused by the negligence of any one else. His negligence, and not that of the one first in fault, is the proximate cause of the injury." Again it has been stated in this way: "Where both parties are negligent, the one that has the last clear opportunity to avoid the accident, notwithstanding the negligence of the other, is solely responsible for it; his negligence being deemed the direct and proximate cause of it." The rule is bottomed sometimes upon one proposition, and sometimes upon the other, and sometimes upon both. The first is that in such cases defendant's negligence, instead of being concurrent, is the sole and proximate cause of the injury, and the other is that plaintiff's negligence is no defense to wanton or willful negligence. When bottomed solely upon the last proposition, to wit, wantonness or willfulness, it is apparent that something more than the want of ordinary care is necessary. The injury must either be willful, or, as said in some cases, be due to such gross negligence as that wantonness or willfulness may be inferred. When bottomed upon the former proposition—that is to say, upon the doctrine that defendant's negligence, being last in point of time, is the proximate, and plaintiff's precedent negligence the remote, cause—neither wantonness nor willfulness nor their equivalent need be shown. But it must appear in such cases that plaintiff's and defendant's negligence are not concurrent in point of time. If concurrent in this sense, then there can be no recovery save where the rule of comparative negligence obtains. McCormick v. Ottumwa Ry. & Light Co., 124 N. W. 889, 892, 146 Iowa, 119.

Under the "last chance" doctrine, "though plaintiff negligently placed himself in a perilous position by driving near the track, the motorman operating the car owed the plaintiff the duty to avoid injuring him, and plaintiff's previous negligence did not bar a recovery if the injury resulted from the negligence of the motorman is not stopping or checking the car." Deitring v. St. Louis Transit Co., 85 S. W. 140, 144, 109 Mo. App. 524 (quoting and adopting definition in Sepetowski v. St. Louis Transit Co., 76 S. W. 693, 102 Mo. App. 119; Morgan v. Wabash R. Co., 60 S. W. 195, 159 Mo. 262; Hutchinson v. St. Louis & M. R. Co., 88 Mo. App. loc. cit. 383).

The theory of the last chance doctrine, which applies only where there is negligence of defendant subsequent to the negligence of plaintiff, so that defendant's negligence is the proximate cause of the injury notwithstanding plaintiff's prior negligence, is not submitted by instructions that plaintiff could recover if she, in attempting to cross a street, and while crossing it, was exercising ordinary care to avoid injury, and defendant's driver negligently failed to give warning of her danger, or negligently failed to stop the team after he could have seen by the exercise of ordinary care that plaintiff was in danger of collision with the team. Vaughn v. Wm. J. Lemp Brewing Co. (Mo.) 132 S. W. 293, 297.

What is termed as the "last chance doctrine" is the doctrine to the effect that in cases of contributory negligence he who has the last clear opportunity to avoid inflicting an injury is responsible if in the exercise of ordinary care he fails to do so. Where those in charge of a locomotive saw plaintiff's team slowly approaching a crossing 150 feet away, they were not chargeable with negligence in failing to check the train, but were entitled to presume plaintiff would stop. Lambert v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 79 Pac. 873, 875, 146 Cal. 231.

An instruction that if the jury find from the evidence that plaintiff was negligent in attempting to cross the street, yet if they further find that defendant's agent or servant in charge of the car alleged to have inflicted the injury, either saw, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have seen, the danger of plaintiff's position in time to have avoided the collision, but failed to exercise care and negligently allowed the car to collide with plaintiff and injure her, then plaintiff is entitled to recover, presented what is known as the "humanitarian" or "last chance" doctrine. Hough v. St. Louis Car Co., 123 S. W. 83, 86, 146 Mo. App. 58.

The doctrine of the "last chance," or "last clear chance," makes it necessary for the servants of a railway company, after they see the danger of a person who has negligently come upon the track, to avoid injuring him. To this end, the servants of the railway company are bound to keep a vigilant lookout in front of advancing engines or trains in order to discover persons exposed to danger on highway crossings, or at other places where they have a legal right to be, and the railway company will be liable for running over them if, by maintaining such a lookout and by using reasonable care and exertion to check or stop its train, it could avoid injury to them. The doctrine applies where the negligence of the person injured is remote and that of the railway company proximate, for if both be negligent, and the negligence of both be concurrent and directly contributing to produce the accident, then the case is one of contributory negligence pure and simple. If, however, the negligence of the person injured merely puts him in the place of danger and stops there and does not actively continue until the moment of the accident, and the railway company either knew of his danger, or by the exercise of such diligence as the law imposes would have known it, then, if the negligence of the person injured did not concurrently combine with that of the railway company to produce the injury, the company's negligence is the proximate cause, and that of the person injured is the remote cause. Drown v. Northern Ohio Traction Co., 81 N. E. 326, 328, 76 Ohio St. 234, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 421, 118 Am. St. Rep. 844.

The "last clear chance" doctrine is thus defined in Thompson on Negligence, 449; "When it is said, in case where the plaintiff has been guilty of contributory negligence, that the company is liable if by the exercise of ordinary care it could have prevented the accident, it is understood that it will be so liable if by the exercise of reasonable care, after a discovery by defendant of the danger in which the party stood, the accident could have been prevented, or if the company failed to discover the danger through the recklessness or carelessness of its employes, when the exercise of ordinary care would have discovered the danger and averted the calamity." This rule calls for "ordinary care" and not for extraordinary care, and the use of all possible precautions; and where plaintiff stepped onto the track in front of some cars moving towards him by gravity under control of the brakes alone, the mere fact that the crew of the switching engine standing close by, on a parallel track, did not sound either whistle or bell, but attempted to warn him by shouting to him, was not negligence on their part which would create a liability under the "last clear chance" doctrine, but at most an error of judgment in an emergency created by plaintiff's own act, especially where plaintiff heard but did not heed the shouts. Jones v. Sibley, L. B. & S. R. Co., 46 South. 61, 64, 121 La. 39 (citing Harlan v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. Ry. Co., 65 Mo. 22).

In an action for injuries to a person on the track of an electric street railway, an instruction that the motorman must use diligence to avoid danger to a person on the track, and that the car must be stopped, if there is time to stop it, where the person is in a dangerous position, and if there was time, in the exercise of ordinary care, for a motorman to have stopped the car after seeing, or after he was bound to see, with ordinary care, the dangerous position of the person on the track, and failed to check the speed of the car, then the defendant was guilty of negligence, is not objectionable in not properly stating the theory of "the last clear chance." Indianapolis St. Ry. Co. v. Seerley, 72 N. E. 169, 1034, 35 Ind. App. 467.

The rule that one's neglect to discover peril of another is to be held to be the sole proximate cause of resulting injury is not an arbitrary but a reasonable one. The test is: What wrongful conduct occasioning an injury was in operation at the very moment it occurred or became inevitable? If just before the climax only one party had the power to prevent the catastrophe, and he neglected to use it, the legal responsibility is his alone. If, however, each had such power and each neglected to use it, then their negligence was concurrent, and neither can recover of the other. The doctrine of "last clear chance" will not be extended to cases where the plaintiff's own negligence extended up to and actually contributed to the injury. To warrant its application there must have been some new breach of duty upon the part of the defendant subsequent to the plaintiff's negligence. In an action for damages for the death of a railroad employe who was run over by an engine while at work on the track, where there was no evidence to show whether he looked and listened, an instruction that, if the employe in charge of the engine could by the exercise of reasonable diligence have seen deceased on the track in sufficient time to have stopped the engine and avoided the injury, plaintiff will be entitled to recover, notwithstanding deceased was negligent in failing to see the approach of a train, was erroneous. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Bentley, 93 Pac. 150, 152, 78 Kan. 221 (quoting and adopting definition in Dyerson v. Union Pac. R. Co., 87 Pac. 680, 74 Kan. 528, 7 L. R. A. [N. S.] 132, 11 Ann. Cas. 207).

The engineer of a train who has given the danger signal, commencing when a trackman was seen on the track 600 feet away, and, as soon as he discovers that the man is apparently unconscious of the approach of the train, adopts every possible means to avert the accident, by sounding bell and whistle and reversing the engine and putting on the air brakes, has done his full duty, as respects "the last clear chance." Hoffard v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 110 N. W. 446, 450, 138 Iowa, 543, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 797.

As applied to an action for injuries to a traveler in a collision with a street car, the doctrine of the "last clear chance" is that, even assuming the negligence of plaintiff contributed to the injury of which he complains, still if, after the occurrence of such contributory negligence, the employees of defendant saw the dangerous condition in which plaintiff was placed, and by the exercise of ordinary care could have stopped the car, and so have avoided injuring him, and failed to do so, the defendant is responsible. Henderson v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 89 Pac. 976, 980, 150 Cal. 689.

The theory of the "last clear opportunity," in the case of injury to one on the track by being struck by the engine, is that the engineer saw the party injured and realized her perilous situation and had ample opportunity to have avoided the accident by the exercise of reasonable caution and care. Zipperlen v. Southern Pac. Co., 93 Pac. 1049, 1053, 7 Cal. App. 206.

Under the doctrine of the "last clear chance," where negligence of defendant is the proximate cause of the injury for which suit is brought, and that of plaintiff a remote cause only, the plaintiff may recover. In the case of a person injured at a street railway crossing, if the motorman saw, or could have seen by the exercise of ordinary care, the situation of the person in time to have avoided injuring him, and fails to do so, the railroad company is liable for his injury, and, notwithstanding the negligence of the person in placing himself in a position of peril, under the doctrine of the "last clear chance," this operates as an exception to the general rule forbidding recovery by plaintiff guilty of contributory negligence. It is no departure from just principles, but a wholesome and humane doctrine, to hold that if after the defendant knew, or in the exercise of ordinary care ought to have known, of plaintiff's negligence, he could have avoided the accident, but failed to do so, the plaintiff can recover. Grass v. Ft. Wayne & W. Val.

Traction Co., 81 N. E. 514, 517, 42 Ind. App. 395 (citing Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Kidd, 79 N. E. 347, 350, 167 Ind. 402, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 143, 10 Ann. Cas. 942).

In an action for injuries to a person on the track of an electric street railway, an instruction that the motorman must use diligence to avoid danger to a person on the track, and that the car must be stopped, if there is time to stop it, where the person is in a dangerous position, and if there was time, in the exercise of ordinary care, for a motorman, to have stopped the car after seeing, or after he was bound to see, with ordinary care, the dangerous position of the person on the track, and failed to check the speed of the car, then the defendant was guilty of negligence, is not objectionable in not properly stating the theory of the "last clear chance." Indianapolis St. Ry. Co. v. Seerley, 72 N. E. 169, 170, 35 Ind. App. 467.

The doctrine of the "last clear chance" means that notwithstanding the previous negligence of plaintiff, if at the time of the injury it might have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable care on the part of defendant, defendant will be liable for the failure to exercise such care. Hence, where a passenger, a girl under 14 years of age, unaccustomed to riding on street cars, becomes frightened by the negligence of the defendant's servants in carrying such passenger past her known destination, and the conductor knows, or by the exercise of due care and diligence under the circumstances should know, of such passenger's frightened condition, and that she is about to leave the moving car, it is his duty to exercise the highest degree of care possible under the circumstances to prevent such passenger from alighting from the moving car. Kruger v. Omaha & C. B. St. Ry. Co., 114 N. W. 571, 573, 80 Neb. 490, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 101, 127 Am St. Rep. 786.

LAST DESCRIBED

A deed from a tax collector to the territory, which recites the assessment and levy of taxes for the year on property described as "Cabin and Lot 6 of Block 60 and Cabin and Lot 7 of Block 60" of a city and on personal property, and which states that the taxes were delinquent, and that the property was sold to the territory, and which conveys to the territory "all that lot * * * of land * * * above and last described in this deed," conveys only lot 7. Abell v. Swain, 100 Pac. 831, 832, 12 Ariz. 421.

The phrase "last herein described," in a finding that a bankrupt was the owner of a business, together with a leasehold interest of the premises and the furniture contained therein, and the good will of the business, and that he had sold the property "last herein described," confines the sale by the bankrupt to a sale of the good will of his business and the furniture used in connection therewith, and not a sale of his leasehold interest. Leist v. Dierssen, 88 Pac. 812, 814, 4 Cal. App. 634.

The rule that the expression, "the real property last hereinbefore described," used in the granting part of a tax deed, includes only one tract of several described in the deed, applies only where the last description is of a single tract which is segregated from the others and described wholly apart from them for some independent purpose, and where no language intervenes between such description and the operative words of the grant which will extend the application of the word beyond that tract. King v. Gibson, 113 Pac. 429, 430, 84 Kan. 29.

LAST GENERAL ELECTION

See General Election.

LAST KNOWN ADDRESS

Under Pol. Code, § 3650, which requires an assessor to state in the assessment of property the name and post office address, if known, of the person to whom the property is assessed, the address shown on the last assessment constitutes the last known post office address so far as the tax records are concerned, and, in the absence of other information, the tax collector must take notice of the address so shown and mail the notice of resale to such address. Campbell v. Moran, 119 Pac. 89, 90, 161 Cal. 325.

LAST PLACE OF ABODE

A service of a writ of scire facias, in a suit commenced in Massachusetts, by the officer's leaving a copy therefor at the "last and usual place of abode" of a trustee in that state, according to the laws of the state, was sufficient, though prior to such service he had removed to a neighboring state. Adams v. Rowe, 11 Me. 89, 90, 25 Am. Dec. 266.

LAST PORT OF DISCHARGE

See Final Port of Discharge.

LAST PRECEDING

The term "last preceding," in a statute providing that when the common council in any city, having at the "last preceding" state census more than 50,000 inhabitants, shall consider it necessary to procure grounds for a public market, such council shall appoint a committee, refers to the state census which may immediately precede in point of time the action of the council, and the law is general. State ex rel. Board of Education of City of Minneapolis v. Brown, 106 N. W. 477, 480, 97 Minn. 402, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 327.

LAST PUBLICATION

In Comp. Laws N. M. 1897, §§ 2956, 2967, relating to a publication of a notice, and requiring the last publication at least two weeks before the return day, by "last publication" the last act of making the notice public—the last insertion in a newspaper prescribed—was intended, not the last day of the period for which the publication was directed. Harrison v. Wallis, 90 N. Y. Supp. 44, 49, 44 Misc. Rep. 492.

LAST SESSION

In a statute providing that supervisors might, at their last session before regular election, etc., "last session" means the last regular session appointed by law. It has no reference to special sessions called for some specific purpose. The "session" includes the entire sittings of the board, from the meeting on the first day till the final adjournment. Tuohy v. Chase, 30 Cal. 524, 527.

LAST SICKNESS

See During Last Sickness.

The term "last sickness," as used in statutes of wills, means where the testator is in extremis, or overtaken by a sudden and violent sickness, and has not time nor opportunity to make a written will. A nuncupative will is made "at the time of the last sickness," as required by Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 4605, though not made when testator is in extremis, or overtaken by sudden and violent sickness, and has not time or opportunity to make a written will, where made when the last sickness has so progressed that testator expects death, and is liable to die at any time, and in view of, and as preparatory to, such result, which followed, he made the verbal will, and this without regard to his opportunity then or afterwards to make a written will. In re Miller's Estate, 91 Pac. 967, 47 Wash. 253, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092, 125 Am. St. Rep. 904, 14 Ann. Cas. 1163 (quoting and adopting the definition in Prince v. Hazelton [N. Y.] 20 Johns. 502, 11 Am. Dec. 307).

Where a verbal will is made in the last sickness, of which the testator dies, when such sickness has progressed to such a point that he expects death at any time, and realizes that he is liable to die therefrom at any time, and in view of such expected death, and as preparatory thereto, makes a will near to the time of his death, such will is made in the "last sickness" of the testator, although a sufficient time may have intervened between the making of the oral will and the death of the testator to have permitted the making of a written will. Godfrey v. Smith, 103 N. W. 450, 455, 73 Neb. 756, 10 Ann. Cas. 1128.

"Last sickness," as the term is used in statutes allowing a verbal will to be made in the "last sickness" of the testator, does not mean that he must be in extremis or articulo mortis, nor is it necessary that he be prevented from making a written will by surprise of sudden death. The requirement is satisfied if the disease of which the testator dies has progressed to such a point that he expects death at any time and is liable to die therefrom at any time, and in view of such expected death and as preparatory thereto such will is made, and that thereafter death from such sickness does occur. Baird v. Baird, 79 Pac. 163, 165, 70 Kan. 564, 68 L. R. A. 627, 3 Ann. Cas. 312.

LATE

The word "late," as used in an officer's return of service of the summons by leaving at defendant's "late place of residence" means formerly, recently, existing not long ago. "Late" is defined as "existing not long ago; not long ago but not now." The term "late place of residence" evidently meant the place where the defendant had recently resided but did not then reside, and hence the return did not show compliance with the statute requiring service by leaving at defendant's usual place of residence. Minnesota Thresher Mfg. Co. v. L'Heureux, 118 N. W. 565, 566, 82 Neb. 692 (quoting and adopting definitions in 25 Cyc. p. 161; Webst. Dict.).

LATELY PENDING

Where an exhibit in the record recited that certain chancery causes were "lately pending" in a certain circuit court, such recital did not show that such causes were still on docket. Scott v. Thomas, 51 S. E. 829, 831, 104 Va. 330.

An order-book entry of final judgment is essential to show in the record on appeal rendition thereof. Reference to the cause, in the clerk's certificate, as one "lately pending" in the court below, is not enough. Chicago Horseshoe Co. of Indiana v. Gostlin, 66 N. E. 514, 515, 30 Ind. App. 504.

LATENT

"Latent" means not discernible by examination. Anderson v. Van Riper, 128 N. Y. Supp. 66, 67.

LATENT AMBIGUITY

A "latent ambiguity" is one developed by extrinsic evidence, where the particular words, in themselves clear, apply equally well to two different meanings. Wolff Truck Frame Co. v. American Steel Foundries, 195 Fed. 940, 944, 115 C. C. A. 628 (citing definition in Petrie v. Trustees of Hamilton College, 53 N. E. 216, 158 N. Y. 458).

A "latent ambiguity," as defined by Lord Bacon, is "that which seems certain and without ambiguity for anything that appeareth upon the deed or instrument, but there is some collateral matter, outside of the deed, that breedeth the ambiguity." If this double meaning is apparent on the face of the instrument, then the ambiguity is a patent one. If the language is apparently not of double meaning, but is shown to be so only by the aid of collateral or extrinsic facts, the ambiguity is "latent." Oliver v. Henderson, 49 S. E. 743, 121 Ga. 836, 104 Am. St. Rep. 185 (citing 1 Jarm. Wills [Am.

"Latent ambiguity" arises from some collateral circumstance or extrinsic matter in a case where the language of the instrument is intelligible. Barrett v. Kansas & Texas Coal Co., 79 Pac. 150, 151, 70 Kan. 649.

A "latent ambiguity" exists when, there being no defect in the description on the face of the instrument, it becomes necessary to fit the description to the thing—in other words, to identify it by parol evidence; and evidence of surrounding circumstances and inferences from such circumstances are admissible to show to which thing the ambiguous description applies. Sherrod v. Battle, 70 S. E. 834, 838, 154 N. C. 345.

"A 'latent ambiguity' in a will, which may be removed by extrinsic evidence, may arise (1) either when it names a person as the object of a gift, or a thing as subject to it, and there are two persons or things that answer such name or description; or (2) when the will contains a misdescription of the object or subject, as where there is no person or thing in existence, or, if in existence, the person is not the one intended, or the thing does not belong to the testator." Wheaton v. Pope, 97 N. W. 1046, 1048, 91 Minn. 299 (quoting Patch v. White, 6 Sup. Ct. 617, 117 U. S. 210, 29 L. Ed. 860).

A "latent ambiguity" is one where the equivocality of expression or obscurity of intention does not arise from the words themselves, but from the ambiguous state of extrinsic circumstances to which the words of the instrument refer, and which is susceptible of explanation by the mere development of extraneous facts without altering or adding to the written language or requiring more to be understood thereby than will fairly comport with the ordinary or legal sense of the words and phrases used. Teague v. Sowder, 114 S. W. 484, 488, 121 Tenn. 132.

Where there is no defect on the face of a will, but there is an uncertainty in attempting to put it into effect, the ambiguity is "latent." Jennings v. Teibert, 58 S. E. 420-421, 77 S. C. 454.

LATENT DEFECT

A "latent defect" is one which could not have been discovered by inspection. L. McManus Co. v. Drexel Furniture Co., 68 S. E. 859, 860, 8 Ga. App. 158.

A defect in a roll of cloth sold, which consists of holes in the cloth, is not a latent defect, since it is easily discoverable. Strauss v. Salzer, 109 N. Y. Supp. 734, 735, 58 Misc. Rep. 573.

LATERAL

branch ditch, drain or water course necessary to secure the object of the improvement, whether the same is mentioned therein or not," the word "lateral" does not qualify the words "branch ditch, drain or water course," and therefore, under a petition to improve a ditch extending in a southerly direction, it is proper to order the construction of a branch ditch commencing half a mile northeast of the starting point of the main ditch and intersecting the main ditch about a hundred feet from its starting point. Omaha & N. P. R. Co. v. Sarpy County, 117 N. W. 116, 117, 82 Neb. 140.

Sess. Laws 1905, c. 140, p. 254, § 1, requiring a "lateral passageway of at least 900 feet" between all fish traps, means that every trap must be so located that there shall be no other trap within a distance of 900 feet laterally therefrom; and a trap was not properly located where a parallelogram, formed by lines 900 feet long, projected at right angles to the ends of the trap and lines connecting the same drawn parallel to the course of the trap 900 feet on either side thereof, intersected traps previously located, though the trap in question did not intersect similar parallelograms of the prior traps. Johansen v. Mulligan, 83 Pac. 417, 418, 41 Wash. 379.

LATERAL RAILROAD

"A 'lateral road' is one proceeding from some point on the main trunk between its termini." Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Waters, 66 Atl. 685, 688, 105 Md. 396, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 326 (quoting and adopting definition in Newhall v. Galena & C. U. R. Co., 14 Ill. 273).

Within the meaning of section 1 of the Interstate Commerce Act (Act Feb. 4, 1887, c. 104, 24 Stat. 379), as amended by Act June 29, 1906, c. 3591, § 1, 34 Stat. 584, which provides that "any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act upon application of any lateral branch line of railroad * * * shall construct, maintain and operate upon reasonable terms, a switch connection with any such lateral branch line of railroad," etc., and further providing (as amended by Act June 18, 1910, c. 309, § 7, 36 Stat. 545) that, if it fails to make such connection on application, the Interstate Commerce Commission may, on complaint and after a hearing, order it done, whether a road is or is not a "lateral branch line of railroad," and entitled to invoke the powers of the commission, depends on the relation which it bears to the line with which switch connection is asked, and not upon its relation to the shippers or territory. It is such a lateral branch when it is tributary to and dependent on the other line for an outlet, or in other words is essentially a feeder, but not when it is in effect an independent and competing line, although it does not compete as to a portion of the territory involved, and such dependent relation is not established by the fact that it seeks the connection at one of its terminals. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. R. v. United States, 195 Fed. 962, 965.

An interurban electric railway for passengers and some freight, running under a state charter between points in the state through the middle of a diamond-shaped area inclosed by two steam railways, and in its general course parallel to and more or less competing with the steam roads, and working on a different plan, is not a "lateral branch line of railroad," within the meaning of the act to regulate commerce of February 4, 1887, as amended by the act of June 18, 1910, requiring carriers subject to the act to establish switch connections with such lines on certain conditions, and permitting owners of such lines as well as shippers to make complaint to the Interstate Commerce Commission in case of the carrier's failure upon written application, and authorizing such commission to hear, investigate, and determine whether such conditions exist, and to make an order directing the carrier to comply with the act. United States v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co., 33 Sup. Ct. 5, 6, 226 U. S. 14, 57 L. Ed. 104.

Laws 1869, p. 2399, c. 917, §§ 3, 4, under which plaintiff railroad company was organized by the consolidation of the N. and H. Railroad Companies, provide that the consolidation shall not release the new corporation from any of the restrictions or duties of the several corporations. Laws 1846, p. 272, c. 216, creating the H. Company, authorized it to construct a single, double, or treble track road between New York and Albany, and section 1 further authorized it to construct the branches for depot and station accommodations needed for its business. Plaintiff seeks to condemn land for 35 miles of track from its general depot in New York City for an "additional main track," and to afford a more expeditious means of handling traffic. Held, that the charter contemplated such tracks as would accommodate the depot conditions for a treble-track railroad, and the purposes of the desired track in question came within the spirit of the additional charter power to construct branches for station accommodation needed for railroad business, though it already had treble tracks over the same distance. So it is true that a "lateral or branch railroad" usually contemplates one running from some point on the main line, intended as a connecting line or feeder, to quote the American & English Encyclopedia of Law (volume 18, p. 561); but in the present case the statute itself defines the branch or branches to be constructed, and these are "for depot and station accommodations, as may be required for the business of said railroad." New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Untermyer, 117 N. Y. Supp. 443, 446, 183 App. Div. 146.

M

A "lateral railroad" built under the lateral railroad law (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, §§ 5398-5404) is governed by the general railroad laws so far as applicable, and is subject to governmental regulation. A railroad, to be built by a stone company, is not deprived of its character as a lateral railroad within the lateral railroad law (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, §§ 5398-5404), because it is to connect with a lateral road already existing, where the two roads together do not exceed the length fixed by the statutes and will be used as one road. Westport Stone Co. v. Thomas, 94 N. E. 406, 409, 175 Ind. 319, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646.

The right given to a railroad company chartered to construct a railroad from the city of Baltimore to the Ohio river, to construct "lateral railroads," in any direction whatever, in connection with such railroad, is not, in the absence of anything in the charter to that effect, limited to construction of branches which will be feeders for the port of Baltimore, but authorizes the construction of a branch from the main line to connect with another branch, so as to take around the city of Baltimore freight going in either direction, and not intended for that city. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Waters, 66 Atl. 685, 688, 105 Md. 396, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 326.

LATERAL SUPPORT

The right of "lateral support" extends no further than to avoid negligence as to land incumbered with buildings. Sharpless v. Boldt, 67 Atl. 652, 653, 218 Pa. 372.

"Law," according to an ancient maxim, "is good sense, and what is contrary to good sense is not good law." Burke v. State, 119 N. Y. Supp. 1089, 1099, 64 Misc. Rep. 558.

"Law" is a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power, says Blackstone. It can never properly be a law, unless notified to those who are to obey it. Ingersoll v. Coal Creek Coal Co., 98 S. W. 178, 185, 117 Tenn. 263, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 282, 119 Am. St. Rep. 1003, 10 Ann. Cas. 829 (citing Green Bag, Oct. 1906).

"Law" might be defined as the aggregate of those rules and principles of conduct promulgated by legislative authority or established by local custom, and our laws are the resultant derived from a combination of the divine or moral laws, the laws of nature and human experience, as such resultant has been evolved by human intellect influenced by the virtues of the ages. State v. Central Lumber Co., 123 N. W. 504, 508, 24 S. D. 136, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804.

"Law" is defined to be a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a state, commanding what is right and prohibiting what is wrong. The laws of a state are more usually understood to mean the rules and enactments promulgated by legislative authority or long-established local customs having the force of law. Henry v. Cherry & Webb, 73 Atl. 97, 105, 30 R. I. 13, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, 136 Am. St. Rep. 928, 18 Ann. Cas. 1006.

"Legislative power," within Const. art. 4, § 1 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 175), providing that the legislative power shall be vested in the General Assembly, is the power to make laws; a "law" is a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power of a state; a "rule" is distinguished from whim, caprice, compact, agreement, or discretion, and "prescribed" means that the rule shall be manifested and published, so as to be known as a rule of civil conduct. Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis v. Knott, 111 S. W. 565, 571, 212 Mo. 616.

"Law" is something more than mere will exerted as an act of power. In the language of Mr. Webster in his famous definition: "It is the general law, the law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry to render judgment after trial so that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property and immunities under the protection of the general rules which govern society." It is not every act of legislation in form that is law. Jamison v. Wimlish, 130 Fed. 351, 358 (quoting Hurtado v. People of California, 4 Sup. Ct. 111, 110 U. S. 535, 28 L. Ed. 232).

The phrase, "which may by law be brought before him," used in a statute defining the offense of bribery, and making it a material element thereof that the offered bribe shall be on a question which may by law be brought before the person sought to be bribed in his official capacity, means a law in force at the time of the offered bribe. State v. Butler, 77 S. W. 560, 572, 178 Mo. 272.

It is not every act, legislative in form, that is "law." "Law" is something more than mere will asserted as an act of power. It must be not a special rule for a particular person or a particular case, but, in the language of Mr. Webster, "the general law, a law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial, so that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities under the protection of the general rules which govern society," and thus excluding, as not due process of law, acts of attainder, bills of pains, and penalties, acts of confiscation, acts reversing judgments, and acts directly transferring one man's estate to another, legislative judgments and decrees, and other similar special, partial, and arbitrary exertions of power under the forms of legislation. Arbitrary power, enforcing its edicts to the injury of the persons and property of its subjects, is not law, whether manifested as the decree of a personal monarch or of an impersonal multitude. In re McNaught, 99 Pac. 241, 247, 1 Okl. Cr. 528 (quoting with approval from Hurtado v. California, 4 Sup. Ct. 111, 110 U. S. 516, 28 L. Ed. 232).

The rule that equity will not reform a deed on the ground of mistake where the mistake is one of law applies only where the word "law" is used in the sense of general law, or law of the country, and does not apply where it is used in the sense of a private right, for in such case the mistake is really one of fact. Marshall v. Lane, 27 App. D. C. 276, 280.

To have the force of "law," a rule must possess the quality of uniformity and universality and must operate upon all improvements of the entire political community affected by it alike. "Laws" are not like garments which citizen and judge may put on and off at will. A law for a section of the state is not a law of the land, and modification of the common law to meet the conditions and wants of individuals in localities would not constitute modifications to meet the conditions and wants of the people. Nothing less than the welfare of the whole people can be considered, and the sovereignty of society at large must be behind the adoption and enforcement of any rule or it is not law. Clark v. Allaman, 80 Pac. 571, 580, 71 Kan. 206, 70 L. R. A. 971 (citing 1 Black. Com. 45).

Regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture for the inspection, disposition, etc., of cattle, sheep, etc., and the carcasses and meat food products of cattle sheep, etc., not inconsistent with Act Cong. June 30, 1906, c. 3913, 34 Stat. 674, authorizing such regulations, had the force of "law." State v. Peet, 68 Atl. 661, 663, 80 Vt. 449, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 677, 130 Am. St. Rep. 998.

"Law" is a statement of the circumstances, in which the public force will be brought to bear upon men through the courts. But the word commonly is confined to such prophecies or threats when addressed to persons living within the power of the courts. A threat that depends upon the choice of the party affected to bring himself within that power would be called law in the ordinary sense. We do not speak of blockade running by neutrals as unlawful. And the usages of speech correspond to the limit of the attempts of the lawmaker, except in extraordinary cases. It is true that domestic corporations remain always within the power of the domestic law." Acts done by domestic corporation outside of the United States, which largely depend for their efficacy upon the co-operation, in a conspiracy to drive a rival out of business, of soldiers and officials in Costa Rica, acting under governmental sanction, in territory over which that state exercises a de facto sovereignty, cannot be made the basis of the action to recover threefold damages authorized by the Sherman Anti-Trust Act of July 2, 1890 (26 Stat. 209, 210, c. 647) § 7, on behalf of those injured in their business by reason of violations of that statute. American Banana Co. v. United Fruit Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 511, 512, 213 U. S. 347, 356, 53 L. Ed. 826, 16 Ann. Cas. 1047.

Under Const. art. 6, § 23, making the county court a tribunal of limited jurisdiction, and after designating certain matters of which it shall have cognizance adds and such court and criminal jurisdiction as may be conferred by "law," and section 28 of the same article, requiring that all laws relating to courts shall be general and of uniform operation throughout the state and the organization, jurisdiction, powers, proceedings, and practice of all the courts of the same class or grade so far as regulated by "law" shall be uniform. The word "law," as that word is used in section 23, obviously means law which is enacted by the legislative department of the state government which the Constitution has created, and "law" found in section 28 is of the same character. Const. art. 20, provides for the organization of the city and county of Denver. By section 4 of the article the people of the new organization are vested with the exclusive power to make their own municipal charter, and under this constitutional authority a charter was adopted. Section 182 of the charter provides that all cases of contested elections shall be tried by the county court, with certain exceptions. Const. art. 6, § 23, makes of the county court a tribunal of limited jurisdiction, not including matters of election contests. Section 28 provides that all laws relating to courts shall be of uniform operation throughout the state. Const. art. 7, § 11, provides that the General Assembly shall pass laws to secure the purity of the elections. Section 12 that the General Assembly shall by general law designate the courts by whom the election contests not therein provided for shall be tried. Held, that legislation relating to the jurisdiction and procedure of the state courts is exclusively within the purview of the General Assembly, and that section 182 of the charter is void. Hence the county courts did not have jurisdiction of a proceeding to contest an election on the proposition of granting certain franchises in the city streets. Williams v. People, 88 Pac. 463, 465, 38 Colo. 497.

Const. 1901, § 45, providing that no "law" shall be revived, amended, or the provisions thereof extended or conferred, by reference to its title only, but so much thereof as is revived, amended, extended, or conferred shall be enacted and published at length, reaches only those cases where the act is strictly amendatory or revisory in its character; and if a law is in itself complete, intelligible, and original in form, it does not fall within the meaning of the Constitution. Miller v. Griffith, 54 South. 650, 651, 171 Ala. 337.

"There is no merit in the contention that section 222 of the Constitution prohibits the passage of a single law covering the issuance of bonds, and that it requires that more than one law should be passed to authorize a city or town to issue the bonds. The authority to the Legislature, given by this section, is to pass general laws authorizing counties, cities, towns, villages, districts, or other political subdivisions of counties, to issue bonds; and the plural word 'laws' was employed manifestly for the purpose of allowing the Legislature to pass a different act for cities, towns, and villages, and another act for counties and political subdivisions of counties. If the plural had not been used, and the Legislature had been simply authorized to pass a general law, then it would have been compelled to pass one general law, applying alike to cities and counties. Blakey v. City Council of Montgomery, 39 South. 745, 746, 144 Ala. 481.

As domestic laws

The statutes of a state have no extraterritorial force, and are not "law" in another state, in the ordinary sense of the term. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Prewitt, 105 S. W. 463, 465, 127 Ky. 399.

By-laws of corporation

That a day fixed by the by-laws of a corporation for the regular monthly meeting of the directors fell on a holiday did not warrant a meeting the next day, where the by-laws made no such provision; Civ. Code, § 11, permitting an act appointed by "law or contract" to be performed on a particular day, which falls on a holiday, to be performed on the next business day, being inapplicable. Cheney v. Canfield, 111 Pac. 92, 93, 158 Cal. 342, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 16.

Constitutions and amendments

The word "law," in Const. 1867, art. 2, § 17, declaring that a bill shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the Governor, etc., does not include a proposed constitutional amendment authorized by article 14, empowering the General Assembly to propose constitutional amendments, and a proposed constitutional amendment adopted by the General Assembly need not be submitted to the Governor for his approval. Warfield v. Vandiver, 60 Atl. 538, 540, 101 Md. 78, 4 Ann. Cas. 692.

The term "law," as used in Const. art. 5, § 31, providing that no law shall extend the term of any public officer after his election, does not refer to the Constitution and the will of the people expressed at the polls in the matter of proposed amendments to that instrument, but relates to statutes enacted by the Legislature. State ex rel. Teague v. Board of Com'rs of Silver Bow County, 87 Pac. 450, 451, 34 Mont. 426.

The state and federal Constitutions are "laws," within How. Ann. St. c. 164, § 4, giving mutual benefit associations power to make regulations for their own government not contrary to the laws of the United States or this state. Kern v. Arbeiter Unterstuetzungs Verein, 102 N. W. 746, 750, 139 Mich. 233.

Decisions

Where a statute or decisions of the courts authorizes a reversal on the ground that the verdict is contrary to the "law," the "law" referred to means the "law" of that case as given by the court, whether right or wrong. Lynch v. Sneed Architectural Iron Works, 116 S. W. 693, 695, 696, 132 Ky. 241, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 852.

A judicial decision is not a "law." It is merely evidence of what the law is, and a change of decision is not the promulgation of a new law. Hence the constitutional provision as to laws impairing the obligations of contracts does not apply to judicial decisions. Swanson v. City of Ottumwa, 106 N. W. 9, 13, 131 Iowa, 540, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 860, 9 Ann. Cas. 1117.

Municipal ordinance

Ordinance distinguished, see Ordinance.

"Ordinances" are mere rules or by-laws of a municipal corporation. The word "law" does not ordinarily include a municipal ordinance. Wright v. City of Macon, 64 S. E. 807, 813, 5 Ga. App. 750.

A city ordinance may be considered a law of the state, within the constitutional provision prohibiting the state from passing laws impairing the obligation of contracts. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Memphis, 198 Fed. 955, 956.

Though an ordinance of a county requiring one engaged in the business of raising cattle to pay a license fee does not denounce failure to obtain the license as a crime, one so failing is subject to prosecution by virtue of Pen. Code, § 435, declaring guilty of a misdemeanor every person who commences or carries on any business without procuring a license required by "any law of this state" for the carrying on of the same; an ordinance being a law within such code provision. Ex parte Miller, 110 Pac. 139, 13 Cal. App. 564.

In Ky. St. § 3096, as amended and reenacted by Acts 1910, c. 107, providing that when, in any city of the second class having a street railway, the railway company is required by law or its franchise, or by any contract with the city, to pave any part of a street or alley, the cost shall be assessed against the company, the term "required by law" applies where the general council passes an ordinance making the requirement and such a requirement by ordinance is authorized by the act. City of Newport v. Silva, 137 S. W. 546, 549, 144 Ky. 450.

A municipal ordinance providing what officer of a municipality shall sign the certificate of legality to be indorsed on municipal bonds issued under authority of Rev. St. 1899, §§ 1719-1724, is a provision of "law," within the constitutional requirement that such certificate shall be indorsed on the bond of any county, etc., to be signed by the county auditor or other officer "authorized by law." Diefenderfer v. State, 83 Pac. 591, 593, 14 Wyo. 302.

The clause "law of this state," as used in Pen. Code, § 435, providing that every person who commences or carries on any business, etc., for the transaction or carrying on of which a license is required, by "any law of this state," without taking out a license prescribed by such law, is guilty of a misdemeanor, includes a "county ordinance." Plumas County v. Wheeler, 87 Pac. 906, 913, 149 Cal. 758 (citing In re Lawrence, 11 Pac. 217, 69 Cal. 608).

A complaint by a city filed in the recorder's court of the city which alleges that accused committed the prohibited act within the police jurisdiction, contrary to law and in violation of an ordinance of the city, charges a violation of the ordinance, for the word "law" may include an ordinance, and accused must know that he is prosecuted for a violation of an ordinance of the city. Dowling v. City of Troy, 56 South. 116, 117, 1 Ala. App. 508.

A complaint by a city by its attorney which alleges that accused did the prohibited act "contrary to law" fails to charge a violation of a municipal ordinance; the phrase "contrary to law" having been appropriated by Code 1907, § 7353, to the definition in indictments of violations of statutes, and the word "law," unless otherwise qualified in a penal proceeding, presumptively referring to the common law, in the absence of a statute giving it another meaning. Rosenberg v. City of Selma, 52 South. 742, 743, 168 Ala. 195.

Order of court

The term "by law," as used in Ky. St. 1903, § 4129, providing that the sheriff shall be collector of all taxes unless the payment thereof is "by law" directed to be made to some officer, means a statute and does not include an order of the fiscal court. Commonwealth v. Wade's Adm'r, 104 S. W. 965, 966, 126 Ky. 791.

Special laws

The word "laws," in a constitutional provision that all laws not repugnant to the Constitution shall be continued in force until they expire by limitation, etc., applies to all special as well as general laws. Butler v. City of Lewiston, 83 Pac. 234, 236, 11 Idaho, 393.

Statutes and common law

The expressions "required by law," "allowed by law," and "limited by law," and the like, employed in a statute, refer to statutory law. People v. Knapp, 132 N. Y. Supp. 747, 750, 147 App. Div. 436.

A plea averring that arbitrators were sworn according to the law is not subject to the objection that it omits to aver that the arbitrators were sworn in accordance with Civ. Code 1896, § 515, since the term "law," if unqualified, except in cases involving penal matters, embraces legislative enactments, as well as the common law. Tennessee Coal, Iron & R. Co. v. Russell, 46 South. 866, 870, 155 Ala. 435, 130 Am. St. Rep. 56.

The term "laws," in Const. art. 3, vesting the legislative power in the Senate and House of Representatives, constituting together the General Assembly, and declaring that the style of their "laws" shall be, etc., denotes action of the General Assembly in its legislative capacity, and their style must be that of enactment, and they are the outcome of a bill for an act which has been presented to the Governor for his approval. McGovern v. Mitchell, 63 Atl. 433, 441, 78 Conn. 536.

The word "laws," as used in the federal statute denouncing conspiracies to commit offenses against the laws of the United States, means statutory laws. United States v. Thomas, 145 Fed. 74, 79.

It is a general rule of construction that, where an act of the General Assembly refers to the "laws" of its own state, the expression will be held to refer to statute law, rather than to unwritten law, unless the context requires a different construction; and especially is this true of acts which are themselves in derogation of the common law. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Beach, 70 S. E. 137, 138, 8 Ga. App. 720 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, pp. 4021, 4022).

Unconstitutional act

"An unconstitutional act is not a law. It confers no rights. It imposes no duties. It affords no protection. It creates no offense. It is in legal contemplation as inoperative as though it had never been passed." Wright v. Davis, 48 S. E. 170, 172, 120 Ga. 670 (quoting Norton v. Shelby County, 6 Sup. Ct. 1121, 118 U. S. 425, 30 L. Ed. 178).

LAW DAY

"Foreclosure" and "law day" are synonymous in the sense that it is the time when the mortgagor declares a default and submits his case to a court of competent jurisdiction. The word "foreclosure," as used with reference to the rule under which a mortgage is discharged by a tender before foreclosure, must be taken in the meaning which is commonly and generally accepted by the laity, as well as by the bar; that is, the institution of a suit, or the "law day," as contradistinguished from the "law day" of the common law. Murray v. O'Brien, 105 Pac. 840, 844, 56 Wash. 361, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 998.

LAW MERCHANT

See, also, Commercial Law.

There is no presumption that the so-called "law merchant," taken as a vaguely defined portion of the common law or in its widest interpretation of the law of European countries having the Roman and the Frankish law for its parents, prevails in other countries. Aslanian v. Dostumian, 54 N. E. 845, 846, 174 Mass. 328, 47 L. R. A. 495, 75 Am. St.

Rep. 348 (citing and adopting Savage v. O'Neil, 44 N. Y. 298, 300, 301; Owen v. Boyle, 15 Me. 147, 32 Am. Dec. 143; Flato v. Mulhall, 72 Mo. 522; 2 Starkie, Ev. [4th Am. Ed.] 568; Whart. Ev. §§ 314, 315, 1292; Smith, Merc. Law [10th Ed.] Introduction).

LAW OF THE CASE

The opinion delivered on a former appeal is the "law of the case." Hocker v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 96 S. W. 526, 527.

"The doctrine of 'law of the case' extends only to the questions squarely presented and distinctly passed upon on the former appeal." Hunter v. Porter, 77 Pac. 434, 439, 10 Idaho, 86.

A decision of the Supreme Court on appeal, is the "law of the case" on a subsequent trial, whether right or wrong. Neary v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 110 Pac. 226, 235, 41 Mont. 480.

A decision of the Supreme Court on appeal is the "law of the case" governing the trial court on a subsequent trial. Berger v. Metropolitan Press Printing Co., 111 Pac. 872, 61 Wash. 35.

The phrase "law of the case," as applied to the effect of a decision of an appellate court in an earlier appeal in the same case, merely expresses, in the absence of statute, the practice of courts generally to refuse to reopen what has been decided, and not a limit to their power. Messinger v. Anderson, 32 Sup. Ct. 739, 740, 225 U. S. 436, 56 L. Ed. 1152.

The opinion of the Court of Appeals is the "law of the case" on the subsequent trial. South Covington & C. St. Ry. Co. v. Schilling (Ky.) 89 S. W. 220, 221.

The "law of the case" is a rule of expediency, which should not be lightly disregarded; but it should be restricted to such questions as have been presented to and decided on the former appeal, and those necessarily involved in such decision, and should not apply to a mere expression of opinion in regard to matters not actually involved in the decision, nor should it apply to questions referred to by intimation only, and not determined. First Nat. Bank of Hastings v. Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Platte Center, 95 N. W. 1062, 1064, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 104.

The decision of certain questions by a District Court of Appeal, with a view to further proceedings in the case, only concurred in by two of the justices of such court, does not constitute "the law of the case" for further proceedings. Turner v. Fidelity Loan Concern, 83 Pac. 70, 2 Cal. App. 122.

The evidence on retrial being substantially the same as on the first trial, the decision on the questions presented on the former appeal is the "law of the case" on a subsequent appeal. Teakle v. San Pedro, L. A. & S. L.

R. Co., 102 Pac. 635, 637, 36 Utah, 29 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4024).

A decision on appeal that, upon the facts in the record, plaintiff cannot recover, becomes the "law of the case" on a subsequent appeal, wherein the record discloses a substantially unchanged set of facts. Thuis v. City of Vincennes, 73 N. E. 1098, 35 Ind. App. 350.

On the first appeal of a suit concerning the title to land, the question involved was: Did a decree in a former suit to correct a deed to the land by striking therefrom the words "her bodily heirs," inserted after the name of the grantee, finding that the deed should be so corrected and the master's deed made pursuant to that decree, to correct the former deed, divest the plaintiffs, T. and S., bodily heirs of the original grantee, of the fee-simple title thereof? And it was held that the decree was inoperative, and that the master's deed did not divest these plaintiffs of the fee-simple title, but that it still remained in them. On a second appeal the question presented was: Did the court properly decree upon the cross-bills filed after the case was reinstated, on the evidence submitted to it, that the deed should be corrected, and in correcting it and decreeing the fee-simple title to the land to be in defendants, the remote grantees of the original grantee? Held, that the decision of the court on the first appeal is not conclusive against the rights of the defendants on the second appeal, since the question presented for determination is not the same. Teel v. Dunnihoo, 82 N. E. 844, 847, 230 Ill. 476, 120 Am. St. Rep. 319.

A decision on a former appeal is the "law of the case" as to all questions then decided, so far as the facts remain the same; the court on a subsequent appeal being entitled to look to the report of the former appeal to determine to what extent the rule applies. Gipe v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. Ry. Co., 82 N. E. 471, 472, 41 Ind. App. 156.

A holding on appeal that plaintiff's evidence entitled him to have the issues submitted to the jury is not conclusive that plaintiff is entitled to go to the jury on a retrial, but that question depends on the evidence introduced on retrial. Hartley v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 73 N. E. 398, 399, 214 Ill. 78.

That principle of the "law of the case," when applicable to a subsequent appeal of the same case, is limited to decisions on a prior appeal on points necessary to a determination of the cause. City of Rushville v. Rushville Natural Gas Co., 73 N. E. 87, 89, 164 Ind. 162, 3 Ann. Cas. 86.

Where, in an action at law tried to the court, the facts were in dispute, a submitted proposition as the "law of the case," which was a mixed proposition of law and fact, was properly refused. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Seitz, 73 N. E. 585, 586, 214 Ill. 350, 105 Am. St. Rep. 108.

Where, in an action by a servant for injuries, the cause was reversed on appeal on the ground that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, as shown by his testimony that he was not looking, at the time of the injury, at the piece of machinery which caused the injury, but on the next trial he testified that he was looking at it, the holding on the former appeal was not the "law of the case" on the next appeal. Buehner Chair Co. v. Feulner, 73 N. E. 816, 817, 164 Ind. 368.

Where the only question involved or decided on a former appeal was the sufficiency of an answer setting up the statute of limitations as a defense, and no question as to the sufficiency of the complaint was disclosed, but, after the case was remanded, plaintiff filed an amended complaint which was not shown to be substantially the same as the original, the ruling on the former appeal that the answer was insufficient was no bar to a subsequent objection to the sufficiency of such amended complaint. Stafford v. St. John, 73 N. E. 596, 600, 164 Ind. 277.

The decision of the Supreme Court on appeal on a will contest as to the insufficiency of the evidence to overthrow the will is the "law of the case" on those facts. Westfall v. Wait, 73 N. E. 1089, 1091, 165 Ind. 353, 6 Ann. Cas. 788.

The "law of the case" does not mean the application of the recognized rules of law to the proven facts but is a precise application of the law as laid down by the trial judge and if erroneous is ground for reversal, though given at the request of the complaining party. Weeks v. Auburn & S. Electric Ry. Co., 113 N. Y. Supp. 636, 637, 60 Misc. Rep. 400.

Where the instructions of the court on the second trial of a cause conform to the opinion on appeal from the judgment on the first trial, it is not error to refuse requested instructions. Where, on the first trial of a cause, a peremptory instruction was not given or requested, and that question was not presented on appeal, the propriety of giving a peremptory instruction on the second trial must be determined by the evidence, without reference to the opinion of the appellate court. Miller v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (Ky.) 89 S. W. 183, 184.

The rule of the "law of the case" has no application to questions of fact, so that nothing said on a former appeal as to the facts can bind the trial court or be conclusive on a second appeal. Where, in an action on a policy, the Supreme Court reversed a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and remanded the cause for new trial, holding that the policy was void for breach of a condition, and that the facts proved did not establish a waiver thereof, such judgment was not res judicata of the issue of waiver on the retrial at which the evidence was materially different. Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Enoch, 96 S. W. 393, 394, 79 Ark. 475.

The decision of the appellate court will be followed on a subsequent appeal, where the record therein supports the conclusion reached on the prior appeal. Malone's Committee v. Lebus (Ky.) 96 S. W. 518, 521.

Under Acts 1903, p. 55, c. 39, making it the duty of the court to charge the law of the case, "the law of the case" means the substantial issues of the case. Gibson & Cunningham v. Purifoy, 120 S. W. 1047, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 379.

"According to the more rigid rule, an expression of opinion, however deliberate upon a question, however fully argued, if not essential to the disposition that was made of the case, may be regarded as a dictum; but it is, on the other hand, said that it is difficult to see why, in a philosophical point of view, the opinion of the court is not as persuasive on all the points which were so involved in the cause that it was the duty of counsel to argue them, and which were deliberately passed over by the court, as if the decision had hung upon but one point." Bouvier. Where, in an action on a contractor's bond for the construction of a high school, the constitutionality of the Code provision providing for such bonds, and the validity of the bond in question given thereunder, were directly presented and decided by the court, to the effect that the bond was enforceable as a common-law bond voluntarily given, regardless of the validity of the statute, such decision was not obiter, but constituted the "law of the case" and was conclusive on the parties on a subsequent appeal. People's Lumber Co. v. Gillard, 90 Pac. 556, 557, 5 Cal. App. 435.

The doctrine of the "law of the case" presupposes error in the enunciation of a principle of law applicable to the facts of a case under review by an appellate tribunal, but the ruling adhered to in the single case where it arises is not carried into other cases as a precedent. Allen v. Bryant, 100 Pac. 704, 705, 155 Cal. 256.

"The doctrine of the 'law of the case' is this: That where the Supreme Court, in deciding an appeal, states in its opinion a principle of law or rule necessary to the decision, that principle or rule becomes the 'law of the case,' and must be adhered to throughout its subsequent progress, both in the lower court and upon subsequent appeal, * * * and this, although in its subsequent consideration this court may be clearly of the opinion that the former decision is erroneous in that particular." Westerfeld v. New York L. Ins. Co., 107 Pac. 699,

The rule of the "law of the case" is applicable only where the same matters determined in a previous appeal are involved in a subsequent appeal, and a judgment on appeal sustaining a demurrer to a complaint is not conclusive on a subsequent appeal, where the facts alleged are different and present different questions of law. Flood v. Templeton, 92 Pac. 78, 83, 152 Cal. 148, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 579.

LAW OF CONTRACT

"The 'law of contract' may be described as the endeavor of the state, a more or less imperfect one, by the nature of the case, to establish a positive sanction for the expectation of good faith which has grown up in the mutual dealings of men of average right-mindedness." Viles v. Barre & M. Traction & Power Co., 65 Atl. 104, 105, 79 Vt. 311 (quoting and adopting Williston's Wald's Pol. Cont. 1).

LAWS OF THE COUNTRY

See Conformably with the Laws.

The treaty between the United States and the Argentine Republic of July 27, 1853 (article 9, 10 Stat. 1009), provides that if any citizen of either of the two contracting parties shall die without will in any of the territories of the other, the Consul General or consul of the nation to which decedent belonged, or the representative of such Consul General or consul, may intervene in the possession, administration, and judicial liquidation of decedent's estate, conformably with the laws of the country, for the benefit of the creditors and legal heirs. Held, that the phrase "laws of the country," so far as the United States is concerned, means the local laws of administration and procedure of the respective states, and qualifies the right and the method of intervention, as well as the procedure after intervention takes place, so that if a consul intervenes he must do so in the manner, to the extent, and for the purpose prescribed by the laws of the jurisdiction where the property is situated, and the Italian Consul General, under the treaty of May 8, 1878, between Italy and the United States (article 17, 20 Stat. 732), providing that the respective Consuls General, etc., shall enjoy in both countries all the rights which are or may hereafter be granted to the officers of the same grade of the most favored nation, would not have the right to be appointed administrator of the estate of a subject of Italy resident in California, leaving property there with his heirs resident in Italy, in view of the California law providing that the public administrator of the county shall officiate in such a case. In re Ghio's Estate, 108 Pac. 516, 518, 157 Cal. 552, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 549, 137 Am. St. Rep. 145.

LAW OF HIS RESIDENCE

Code Civ. Proc. § 390, provides that, where a cause of action not involving real estate within the state accrues against a non-resident, an action cannot be brought thereon in the state after the expiration of the time limited by the "law of his residence" for bringing a like action. Held, that the phrase "law of his residence" means the law of the debtor's residence at the time the cause of action accrued, and not the time when the action was commenced. Utah Nat. Bank v. Jones, 96 N. Y. Supp. 338, 339, 109 App. Div. 526.

LAW OF THE LAND

See Due Process of Law.

LAW OF NECESSITY

The "law of necessity," as applied to the power to punish for contempt, is the law of self-defense. People ex rel. Attorney General v. News-Times Pub. Co., 84 Pac. 912, 967, 35 Colo. 253 (adopting definition in Thomas, Constructive Contempt).

LAW OF THE ROAD

The custom of the road, and the law founded on it, to go to the right of the center of the road in order to safely pass governs the case of vehicles passing on the same side of the roads and streets so wide that there is no necessity for them to turn to the right of the center line in order to pass safely. Wright v. Fleischman, 85 N. Y. Supp. 62, 41 Misc. Rep. 533.

LAW OF THE STATE

The "laws of a state" are such enactments as its Legislature promulgates, and as expounded by its courts, and a state statute has such meaning as the judicial department of the state construes it to have, though without such judicial construction the federal courts might from its language construe it differently. Commonwealth v. International Harvester Co. of America, 115 S. W. 703, 706, 131 Ky. 551, 133 Am. St. Rep. 256; American Tobacco Co. v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 115 S. W. 755, 756.

A provision in a note that the same shall be construed by the "laws of the state" of Kansas means the statute of the state with reference to negotiable instrument and the rights and liabilities of the parties thereto, and does not comprehend the decisions of local courts construing like contracts that had been or might thereafter be announced, nor can it be expended so as to make the decisions of the local courts the governing law with respect to the construction of the provisions of the mortgage given to secure such note. Keene Five Cent Sav. Bank v. Reid, 123 Fed. 221, 227, 59 C. C. A. 225.

Within the provision of Bankr. Act, § 64b(5), giving priority to debts owing to any person who by the laws of the state or the United States is entitled to priority, insolvency laws are "laws of the states," although their operation is suspended by the bankruptcy act. In re Bennett, 153 Fed. 673, 687, 82 C. C. A. 531 (citing in re Wright, 95 Fed. 807).

The phrase "laws of the states," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, providing for the payment of debts owing to any person who, by the "laws of the states," or the United States, is entitled to priority, means that the priorities must be determined by the laws of the particular state where the proceeding is pending, and not by the laws of all the states together. In re P. J. Potter's Sons, 143 Fed. 407, 411.

A county ordinance regulating sheep grazing, and imposing a license tax thereon "is a law of this state" within Pen. Code, § 435, providing that every person commencing or carrying on any business for which a license is required by any "law of this state," without taking out or procuring the license prescribed, is guilty of a misdemeanor. Plumas County v. Wheeler, 87 Pac. 909, 913, 149 Cal. 758; Sierra County v. Flanigan, 87 Pac. 913, 149 Cal. 769 (citing in re Lawrence, 11 Pac. 217, 69 Cal. 608).

Municipal ordinances are "laws of the state," within the provisions of Pen. Code, § 435, making it a misdemeanor for a person to carry on any calling for the transaction of which a license is required by any law of the state, without taking out or procuring the prescribed license. Ex parte Sweetman, 90 Pac. 1069, 1070, 5 Cal. App. 577; Ex parte Bagshaw, 93 Pac. 864, 865, 152 Cal. 701.

LAW OF THE UNITED STATES

Congressional enactments having general application throughout the United States, and not the purely local laws of the District of Columbia, are what are meant by the provision of the Federal Judicial Code, § 250, for the appellate review in the Federal Supreme Court of judgments and decrees of the court of appeals of the District in cases in which the construction of "any law of the United States" is drawn in question by the defendant. American Security & Trust Co. v. Commissioners of District of Columbia, 32 Sup. Ct. 553, 554, 224 U. S. 491, 56 L. Ed. 856.

The phrase, "laws of the United States," as used in the removal acts, authorizing removal of a cause arising under the laws of the United States, means acts of Congress, and does not include executive rules and regulations, unless a recovery of damages is expressly authorized by statute for a disregard of such regulations. Beck v. Johnson, 169 Fed. 154, 162.

The laws enacted by a territorial Legislature, subject to disapproval by Congress, are not "laws of the United States," and a suit arising under them, as where a corporation organized under them is a party to the suit, does not arise under the laws of the United States, and a federal court has no jurisdiction on that ground. Maxwell v. Federal Gold & Copper Co., 155 Fed. 110, 112, 83 C. C. A. 570.

LAWS, RULES, AND REGULATIONS GOVERNING THE SOCIETY

A certificate in a mutual benefit association, requiring that members should comply with all "laws, rules, and regulations governing the society," or that might be thereafter enacted for its government, related to by-laws enacted to control the internal management of the association, and did not include a by-law by which the society attempted to limit its liability on all outstanding certificates to an amount not exceeding one-half of the amount the association had contracted to pay on the death of members in good standing. Bornstein v. District Grand Lodge No. 4 Independent Order B'nai B'rith, 84 Pac. 271-275, 2 Cal. App. 624.

LAWFUL

See Shall be Lawful.
See, also, Legal.

Where plaintiffs alleged that, being the owners of certain capital stock in defendant company, they deposited it with the company, to be sold by defendant and the proceeds used in paying its debts, in consideration of an agreement that plaintiffs should hold certain offices of defendant until its business should be in successful operation, that defendant violated its agreement and ejected plaintiffs from the offices, and had sold and issued the stock to others, and refused and failed to deliver it to plaintiffs, or to pay plaintiffs the value thereof, though requested to do so, there could be no recovery as on a contract, as the alleged contract was illegal under Civ. Code, § 431, requiring directors of a corporation to be elected annually by the stockholders or members, and section 2240, declaring that which is contrary to an express provision of the law not "lawful." Glass v. Basin & Bay State Min. Co., 77 Pac. 302, 304, 31 Mont. 21.

Legal, adequate, and reasonable synonymous

In speaking of the provocation necessary to arouse the heat of passion, which would result in reducing the crime to manslaughter, "this court has held that 'lawful,' 'legal,' 'adequate,' and 'reasonable,' when used as adjectives qualifying 'provocation,' are synonyms; and, as a general rule, with very few exceptions, it takes an assault or personal violence to constitute this provocation." State v. Heath, 121 S. W. 149, 154, 221 Mo. 565; State v. McKenzie, 76 S. W.

1015, 1019, 177 Mo. 699 (quoting with approval from State v. Bulling, 15 S. W. 367, 16 S. W. 830, 105 Mo. 204).

LAWFUL ACT

The words "lawful act," as used in Pen. Code 1895, § 684, providing that if any person in the performance of a lawful act shall by negligence and carelessness cause the death of another he is guilty of negligent homicide of the first degree, is defined by article 685 as an act not forbidden by the penal law, and which would give no just occasion for a civil action. Gorden v. State (Tex.) 90 S. W. 636, 637.

LAWFUL AUTHORITY

See Proper and Lawful Authority.

Plaintiff's superintendent visited the land on which defendants were claimed to have committed a trespass in cutting timber, and on each of the visits stopped at defendants' camp. On his first visit the superintendent pointed out the section or lot lines to the foreman of defendant company and requested him to keep an accurate account of all timber he might cut. A like request was made of defendant S., who was president and general manager of defendant company. Held, sufficient to show that plaintiff acquiesced in the cutting and removing of the timber, subject to defendants' accounting for its actual value, and that it was not cut without "lawful authority," within Rem. & Bal. Code, § 939, authorizing a recovery of treble damages for the cutting of timber without lawful authority, etc. Lytle Logging & Mercantile Co. v. Humptulps Driving Co., 111 Pac. 774, 775, 60 Wash. 559.

LAWFUL BENEFICIARY

The word "lawful," as used in a benefit certificate, providing that the beneficial association would pay to the beneficiary a certain sum of money, provided he was the "lawful" beneficiary of the member at the time of his death, means, according to the laws of the beneficial association, that plaintiff should be at the time of the member's death within the order of family relationship to the beneficiary mentioned in the charter. Davin v. Davin, 99 N. Y. Supp. 1012, 1014, 114 App. Div. 396.

LAWFUL BUSINESS

In Business Corporations Law, § 2, authorizing the formation of stock corporations for any lawful business, "lawful business" means one lawful to all who engage in it and does not include the business of practicing law; the right to practice law being in the nature of a franchise from the state conferred only for merit. In re Co-operative Law Co., 92 N. E. 15, 16, 198 N. Y. 479, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 55, 139 Am. St. Rep. 839, 19 Ann. Cas. 879.

LAWFUL CHASTISEMENT

Where the punishment inflicted by a parent on a child is so excessive and cruel as to show that the parent was not acting in good faith for the benefit of the child, the parent is guilty of an unlawful assault, and cannot justify his act by claiming that the punishment inflicted was a "lawful chastisement"; but so long as a parent acts in good faith, honestly thinking that what he does is for the benefit of the child, he is within his prerogative, and the law will not interfere. State v. Koonse, 101 S. W. 139, 141, 123 Mo. App. 655.

LAWFUL CHILD

Where a will provided that the property given to one of the devisees should, if he died without lawful children, go to the heirs of another devisee, an adopted child of the devisee first mentioned was not a "lawful child," within the meaning of the will. Cochran v. Cochran, 95 S. W. 731, 732, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 259.

LAWFUL CLAIM

A good faith claim, appearing to be formidable and founded on grounds having the appearance, though false, of a paramount title, is not covered by a warranty against lawful claims, but such a warranty is intended to cover real claims and not claims only appearing real. An outstanding legal title is within a covenant of warranty against "lawful claims," and if asserted, is a "lawful claim," though an eviction may be avoided by showing a superior equity. Mackenzie v. Clement, 129 S. W. 730, 731, 144 Mo. App. 114.

LAWFUL COURSE

A bond recited that plaintiff lumber and oil company had a claim on certain timber in litigation which had been attached in a certain suit against the S. Lumber Company, and provided that in consideration of the release of the attachments, and that plaintiff would not litigate its rights in such suit, the obligors bound themselves to pay any interest which plaintiff might have in the timber to be determined by any lawful course. Held, that a lawful course for determining plaintiff's interest was by suit on the bond; plaintiff not being required to establish first its interest in the timber by suit against the S. Lumber Company. Camp v. Capital Mining, Lumber & Oil Co. (Ky.) 128 S. W. 323, 324.

LAWFUL CURRENCY

See Lawful Money.

An indictment charging theft from the person of "two dollars in money, lawful currency of the United States of America and of the value of two dollars," was sustained by proof of the theft of two dollars in silver; the term "currency," or "lawful currency," being sufficiently broad to include gold and silver, as well as paper money. Brittain v. State, 105 S. W. 817, 819, 820, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 169.

Under a statute providing that in an indictment for the larceny of money it is sufficient to allege the larceny of the same, without specifying the denomination or kind thereof, an indictment, charging accused with stealing money "lawful currency of the realm" (i. e., of the United States), to the amount and value of $20 or more, sufficiently describes the money, to constitute larceny, within Ky. St. 1903, § 1194, punishing larceny of money of the value of $20 or more. Todd v. Com. (Ky.) 93 S. W. 631, 632 (citing Commonwealth v. Mann [Ky.] 14 S. W. 685; Jones v. Commonwealth, 13 Bush [76 Ky.] 356; Travis v. Commonwealth, 27 S. W. 863, 96 Ky. 77).

Where a theft is charged, and the allegation is general that the money taken was lawful current money of the United States, the evidence must show that it was legal tender coin or legal tender currency of the United States, and the nickel is legal tender under the provisions of U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2349. Black v. State, 79 S. W. 311, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 107.

LAWFUL DEBT

"A 'debt' is defined as 'that which is due from one person to another, whether money, goods, or services; that which one person is bound to pay to or to perform for another, that which one is obliged to do, or suffer.'" Plaintiff's husband gave his bond for the payment of money, secured by a mortgage on his farm, in which plaintiff joined. The husband died, devising the farm to plaintiff, who deeded it to her son, who assumed and agreed to pay the mortgage, but failed to do so. On the death of the son, without issue, his widow, having a dower in trust in the farm, executed a quitclaim deed of it to plaintiff and the other heirs, subject to decedent's "lawful debts," which plaintiff assumed and agreed to pay. Held that, since plaintiff did not sign the bond and was not personally liable for the mortgage debt, the covenant of her son to pay it was not enforceable against him, and hence the covenant in the deed from his widow to plaintiff did not obligate plaintiff to pay the debt; a claim not enforceable at law not being a "lawful debt." Bonhoff v. Wiehorst, 108 N. Y. Supp. 437, 441, 57 Misc. Rep. 456 (quoting and adopting definition in Imp. Dict.; citing Latimer v. Veadar, 46 N. Y. Supp. 823, 20 App. Div. 426).

LAWFUL DEFENSE

By the words "lawful defense of the person" is meant what is sometimes termed self-defense. Robinson v. Territory, 85 Pac. 451, 455, 16 Okl. 241.

LAWFUL DUTY

In Rev. St. § 5451, which makes it a criminal offense to give or offer bribes, etc., to induce any officer of, or person acting for or on behalf of, the United States in any official function to do or omit to do any act in violation of his lawful duty, the phrase "lawful duty" is not restricted to a duty imposed by statute, but is broad enough to cover a duty imposed by a lawful superior; and an indictment charging a conspiracy to induce an assistant statistician in the Department of Agriculture to furnish to the accused advance news of crop conditions, and to cause to be published false reports as to such conditions in violation of the rules of the department, to aid defendants in market speculations, by promising such employé a percentage of the profits of such speculations, charges a conspiracy to commit an offense against the United States under Rev. St. § 5440. United States v. Haas, 163 Fed. 908, 910.

Regulations of the Agricultural Department having forbidden the giving out of any statement relating to the business of the department without the approval of the chief of the bureau, and secrecy having been imposed on all employés by the established usage and practice, indictments charging bribery of an associate statistician of the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Agriculture to divulge the contents of the current cotton crop report in advance of its official publication stated an offense under Rev. St. § 5451, making it a crime to bribe any person acting for the United States in any official function to do or commit any act in violation of his lawful duty. Haas v. Henkel, 166 Fed. 621, 627.

LAWFUL ENTRY

The expression that the "entry must be lawful" means, not that it must have been effected under a formal right capable of enforcement by legal proceedings, but that it must not be through any unlawful or wrongful act, upon which the mortgagee would be estopped to found a right. Stouffer v. Harlan, 74 Pac. 610, 613, 68 Kan. 135, 64 L. R. A. 320, 104 Am. St. Rep. 396.

LAWFUL EXCUSE

That provision for alimony made by a Nevada court is not enforceable against the husband, a resident of California, because no jurisdiction of his person was acquired, does not constitute a lawful excuse within Pen. Code, § 270, which makes it an offense for a parent to willfully omit without lawful excuse to furnish necessary food, etc., for his child. Ex parte McMullin, 126 Pac. 368, 370, 19 Cal. App. 481.

LAW EXPENSES

Other lawful expenses, see Other.

LAWFUL FENCE

See, also, Legal and Sufficient Fence.

A fence, posts of which are rotted off, is not a lawful fence within Rev. St. 1899, § 3295, providing that in a county where swine are restrained from running at large a fence composed of three barbed wires, stretched on posts, firmly set in the ground, not more than 16 feet apart, shall be a lawful fence. Smith v. Chicago & A. Ry. Co., 105 S. W. 10, 12, 127 Mo. App. 160.

Under Rev. St. 1899, § 1105, requiring a railroad company to construct and maintain fences sufficient to prevent stock getting on the track, an instruction, in an action under such section for injuries to stock, which defined a lawful fence as one sufficient "to resist horses, cattle, swine, and like stock," was not erroneous for using the phrase "to resist"; such phrase not being as strong as the phrase "to prevent" in the statute. Hax v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co., 100 S. W. 693, 695, 123 Mo. App. 172.

Rev. St. 1899, § 3295, providing for the construction of fences sufficient to prevent swine from running at large, composed of wire 4 feet high and posts 16 feet apart, referred to outside fences other than those required of railroads, so that a fence conforming to such specifications, constructed by an adjoining landowner along a railroad right of way, did not constitute a "lawful fence," for the building of which the landowner could recover from the railroad under Rev. St. 1899, § 1105 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 945). Sharp v. Quincy, O. & K. C. Ry. Co., 123 S. W. 507, 508, 139 Mo. App. 525.

The petition in an action for damages to growing crops from trespassing stock alleged that the premises were situated in a subdivision where hogs, etc., were prohibited from running at large, and were inclosed by a lawful fence under the statute when the trespasses occurred, and described the stock law district by metes and bounds, and further alleged that, in the event that plaintiff's fence was not in strict compliance with the statute, nevertheless it was sufficient to keep out all stock sought to be excluded of an ordinary disposition, and not of a fence-breaking nature. Held, that the petition alleged a common-law liability based on the stock owner's negligence in knowingly permitting vicious animals to run at large, as well as the statutory liability based upon plaintiff's maintenance of a "lawful fence," within the statute. Posey v. Coleman (Tex.) 133 S. W. 937, 939.

Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 2496, requires every farmer, etc., to make a sufficient fence at least five feet high, which shall be hog-tight, around his cleared land. Article 2497 permits one injured by the trespass of cattle or other stock to complain to a justice of the peace, who shall appoint two freeholders to ascertain the sufficiency of the fence and the damages, and, if it appears that the fence was sufficient, the owner of the stock shall be liable for the damages. Article 2498 authorizes the impounding of trespassing stock for a second offense when the owner of the premises deems it necessary for his protection. Article 2499 exempts the stock owner from liability if the fence be insufficient. Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, art. 4998, as amended by Acts 1901, c. 123, provides that any fence in a locality which has statutory restrictions upon the running at large of stock which is sufficient to keep out ordinary stock permitted to run at large under the chapter shall be deemed a lawful fence, and requires all such fences to be four feet high. Held, that the statutes were enacted to give landowners complying with their requirements as to fences a special remedy for damages by trespassing stock, irrespective of negligence. Posey v. Coleman (Tex.) 133 S. W. 937, 939.

Under Code Civ. Proc. c. 44, providing that a corral fence exclusively for the purpose of inclosing stacks, if outside of any lawful inclosure, shall be sufficient and lawful if it is not less than 15 feet distant from the stacks, is substantially built with posts not more than 8 feet distant from each other and with not less than 5 strands of barbed fence wire and not less than 5 feet high, and that any other kind of fence which is as effective for the purpose of a fence as that above prescribed is lawful and sufficient, a fence the posts of which were 17 or 18 feet apart, which approached the stacks in places within 6 feet, consisted of but 4 strands of barbed wire, and was only 46 inches high, was not a "lawful fence." Johnson v. Rickford, 122 N. W. 386, 389, 18 N. D. 268.

Rev. St. 1899, § 1973, defining a lawful fence, and providing that unless the fence comes up to the requirements any person may have a right of action for damages resulting from injuries to his live stock from such illegal fence, refers to what is termed a "lawful inclosure," and does not create a liability on the railroad company for the killing of live stock in collision with a train, where such stock strayed onto the right of way because of a defect in the railroad's right of way fence. Martin v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., 89 Pac. 1025, 15 Wyo. 493.

LAWFUL HEIRS

See Personal and Lawful Heir.

Devise to lawful heirs as devise to class, see Class.

The word "lawful" before the word "heir" in a devise does not, in the absence of a contrary intent clearly indicated in the will, mean "legitimate," but means simply the person designated by law to take by descent. Harrell v. Hagan, 60 S. E. 909-911, 147 N. C. 111, 125 Am. St. Rep. 539.

"Children" are embraced within the term "lawful heirs," but the word is not per se descriptive of the whole line of lawful heirs. Reilly v. Bristow, 66 Atl. 262, 264, 105 Md. 326.

The word "lawful," qualifying the word "heirs," is not sufficient per se to show an intention not to use the word "heirs" in its ordinary legal sense as a word of inheritance or of limitation. Wool v. Fleetwood, 48 S. E. 785, 789, 136 N. C. 460, 67 L. R. A. 444.

The words "lawful heirs," as used in a will whereby the testator bequeathed his residuary estate to his lawful heirs, without other or further designation as to who are intended as his beneficiaries, and directed that the same should be equally divided among his lawful heirs, share and share alike, described all the persons who, at the time of the death of the testator, answered the description of lawful heirs and were entitled to share in the residuary estate, regardless of the degree of their relationship to the testator, and resort must be had to the statute in order to determine who were the legal heirs of the testator. Mooney v. Purpus, 70 N. E. 894, 895, 70 Ohio St. 57.

In construing a will using the words "legal heirs" and "lawful heirs," the words "legal" and "lawful" do not modify or change the legal effect of the word "heirs." Stisser v. Stisser, 85 N. E. 240, 242, 235 Ill. 207.

In common parlance, the terms "heirs at law" and "lawful heirs" are used indiscriminately as synonymous and convertible terms, and, whenever either is used, they invariably refer to the heirs on whom descent is cast by law, and not to an heir by adoption. The relation of an heir by adoption is an exceptional and unusual one, and does not come within the ordinary and usual meaning of the words "lawful heirs," and those words ought not to be held ex vi termini to include an adopted heir. Hockaday v. Lynn, 98 S. W. 585, 589, 200 Mo. 456, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 117, 118 Am. St. Rep. 672, 9 Ann. Cas. 775 (citing Reinders v. Koppelman, 7 S. W. 288, 94 Mo. 338).

A devise to the testator's "lawful heirs" should be construed as referring to those who are such at the testator's death, unless a different intent is plainly manifested by the will. Hill v. Hill, 132 N. W. 738, 739, 90 Neb. 43, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 198.

A devise of land to testator's children, subject to the provision that the share of any child dying without issue of his body shall descend to the survivors of the children, or the lawful heirs surviving any of the children, gives to the children an estate in fee, defeasible as to each on his dying without leaving lawful issue, and on the death of a child, without issue surviving, his interest passes to the surviving children or grandchildren surviving any of the children; the words "lawful heirs" meaning surviving children and grandchildren of the devisees,

Under a will giving all the testator's land to his son for life with remainder to his "lawful heirs born of his wife," the son did not take a fee under the rule in Shelley's Case so as to give his widow a dower therein. The words "born of his wife," qualifying and explaining his "lawful heirs," confining the remainder to the children of his wife, and preventing the operation of the rule. The superadded words show that the deviser intended to make the words "lawful heirs" designatio personarum; that is, they show an intention on his part to limit the remainder over to a particular class of heirs. Thompson v. Crump, 50 S. E. 457, 138 N. C. 32, 107 Am. St. Rep. 514.

Testatrix adopted defendant in 1890, but, aside from recording of the deed, no public recognition of the relationship appears, testatrix having assumed no authority over defendant who continued to reside with her natural parents and other relatives until her marriage. In 1905 testatrix made a will giving defendant, who was designated "my young friend," $100. After various other dispositions, the will provided that the residue of the estate should go to testatrix's "lawful heirs," excepting specified nephews. Held, that defendant is not entitled to share under the residuary clause. Warden v. Overman, 135 N. W. 649, 652, 155 Iowa, 1.

Where a testator devises a parcel of real estate to his son for life with remainder to his lawful heirs, and the son marries after the death of the testator, held, that upon the death of the son, the wife takes as heir, where there is nothing in the will tending to show that the testator used the words "lawful heirs" in a different sense from their strict technical import. Miller v. Miller, 29 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 451, 454.

In a devise to the testator's grandson of a tract of land, and if he should die without "lawful heirs of his body" then to the testator's granddaughter, does not limit the estate of the grandson to a life estate where he had heirs of his body, but merely creates a conditional estate in the granddaughter by way of executory devise or shifting use. Sessoms v. Sessoms, 56 S. E. 687, 688, 144 N. C. 121 (citing Smith v. Brisson, 90 N. C. 284; Morrisett v. Stevens, 48 S. E. 661, 136 N. C. 160; Jones v. Ragsdale, 53 S. E. 842, 141 N. C. 200; Whitfield v. Garriss, 42 S. E. 568, 131 N. C. 148, reaffirmed in 45 S. E. 904, 134 N. C. 24; criticizing Bird v. Gilliam, 28 S. E. 489, 121 N. C. 328; Dawson v. Quinlerly, 24 S. E. 483, 118 N. C. 188; Thompson v. Crump, 50 S. E. 457, 138 N. C. 32, 107 Am. St. Rep. 514).

A grantor executed a deed to his son, granting the property to him during his natural life, and at his death, then to his lawfully constituted heirs. Held, that the term "lawfully constituted heirs" was merely a tautological way of referring to his lawful heirs at his death; and that the grantee took a life estate, with remainder to those who should comprise the class known as the grantee's heirs at his death. Bradley v. Goff, 147 S. W. 1012, 1014, 243 Mo. 96.

A testator gave his wife, for life, all of his estate, and provided that after her death it should go to his eldest daughter for life. He then declared that after the daughter's death such portion of his estate as might remain should be equally divided between his lawful heirs. Held, that the testator meant by the term "lawful heirs" those persons who at his death were entitled to inherit his intestate real estate. In re Cowley's Will, 97 N. W. 930, 931, 120 Wis. 203.

LAWFUL ISSUE

See Die Without Lawful Issue Surviving.

The term "lawful issue" is not a technical term, and when used in a deed does not necessarily bring the deed under the rule in Shelley's Case, like the word "heirs," which is always a technical word, necessarily bringing the deed under the rule regardless of intention. Hopkins v. Hopkins, 114 S. W. 673, 676.

As children born in wedlock

After death of testator and probate of his will, devising land in New York to B. for life, and on his death to his "lawful issue," Acts Mich. 1881, p. 48, No. 55, and Laws N. Y. 1896, p. 313, c. 531, declaring that the subsequent marriage of the parents shall legitimize their children previously born, were passed. Prior to either act, and while B. had a lawful wife, M., by whom he had children, he had children by another woman, S., and, after enactment of the Michigan act, he, in an action in that state in which jurisdiction was not acquired of M., a resident of New York, and on grounds not recognized by the laws of New York for divorce, obtained a decree of divorce; and thereafter in Michigan there was a marriage ceremony between him and S. Subsequently, in an action in New York by M. against B. for separation, there was a decree establishing the fact that M. was still the wife of B., notwithstanding the Michigan decree. Held, that B.'s children by S. were not entitled to take under the will. Olmsted v. Olmsted, 83 N. E. 569, 190 N. Y. 458, 128 Am. St. Rep. 585.

Under the rule that, where statutes can reasonably be construed to avoid conflict, that construction must be adopted. Civ. Code Cal. § 1388, providing that when an illegitimate child, who has not been acknowledged or adopted by his father, dies intestate without lawful issue, his estate goes to his mother, or in case of her decease to her heirs at law, and section 1387, providing that every illegitimate child is an heir to the person who, in writing signed in the presence of a competent witness, acknowledges himself to be the father of such child, and in all cases is an heir of his mother, and inherits his or her estate, in whole or in part, as the case may be, in the same manner as if he had been born in lawful wedlock, will be held not to be in conflict in the case, where both the mother and child are illegitimate, on the ground that section 1387 makes the child the heir of his mother, while section 1388, taken alone, excludes him, but section 1387, which has to do solely with the right of illegitimates to inherit, will be construed as applicable only to inheritance by an illegitimate from a parent who is legitimate, or, for purposes of inheritance, the illegitimate child by reason of section 1387 is to be held to be within the terms "lawful issue," as that term is used in section 1388. In re De Cigaran's Estate, 89 Pac. 833, 835, 150 Cal. 682.

Where the father of defendants at the time of their birth was the lawful husband of another woman than their mother, but thereafter, in Michigan, obtained a divorce legal in that state, though not in the state of New York, and married their mother thereby establishing their legitimacy in that state, under Act Mich. March 28, 1881 (Pub. Acts 1881, p. 48, No. 55), they are entitled in New York to take under a devise to "the lawful issue" of their father. Olmsted v. Olmsted, 102 N. Y. Supp. 1019, 1020, 118 App. Div. 69.

A will, dated and which took effect in 1872, gave property in trust for the testator's son, with remainder to his "lawful issue." The son was then married and had children. After the death of his then wife, he married the mother of certain illegitimate children. Laws 1895, c. 531, providing that illegitimate children whose parents had theretofore intermarried or should thereafter intermarry should thereby become legitimized. Held, that the illegitimate children were not entitled to share in the remainder, since, while all children, whether legitimate or not, are the "issue" of their parents, that word, when qualified by the adjective "lawful," which is the antithesis of unlawful or illegitimate, is ordinarily understood to mean those only begotten and born in lawful wedlock, and it cannot be assumed that the testator considered the contingencies of the birth of illegitimate children, the enactment of a statute by which they might be legitimized, and the marriage of their parents. Central Trust Co. of New York v. Skillin, 138 N. Y. Supp. 884, 886, 154 App. Div. 227.

As descendants

The words "lawful issue, if any, of the body," mean lineal descendants, taking by right of representation per stirpes. Union Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Dudley, 72 Atl. 166, 169, 104 Me. 297.

The primary meaning of "lawful issue" is descendants, and, in the absence of the use of the words in a will in another sense, it will be so construed. Under a residuary bequest to testator's stepmother and half-sister, in equal portions, and, in the event of either dying without issue, the share of the one so dying to the survivor, the stepmother dying before testator, he does not die intestate as to the share given, but there is an implied bequest of it to her issue. In re Disney's Will, 103 N. Y. Supp. 391, 392, 118 App. Div. 378 (quoting and adopting definition in New York Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Viele, 55 N. E. 311, 161 N. Y. 11, 76 Am. St. Rep. 238; Chwatal v. Schreiner, 43 N. E. 166, 148 N. Y. 683).

Under a will, establishing a trust fund for the benefit of a daughter of the testatrix during her life, and directing that on her death the principal be paid to her then "lawful living issue," the term "lawful living issue" does not include an adopted daughter. In re Hopkins, 89 N. Y. Supp. 467, 468, 43 Misc. Rep. 464 (citing New York Life Insurance & Trust Co. v. Viele, 55 N. E. 311, 161 N. Y. 11, 76 Am. St. Rep. 238).

Where testator by will devised his property in trust for his wife, on her death to be divided among his lawful issue, and gave the same to the persons entitled to the other half of his residuary estate, and by a clause disposing of such half testator provided that it should go to the lawful issue of his children or to his lawful issue per stirpes and not per capita, it was the intent of the testator to limit the phrase "lawful issue" in the first clause to the lawful issue of his children, or to his lawful issue. Inglis v. McCook, 59 Atl. 630, 633, 68 N. J. Eq. 27.

"The words 'lawful issue,' when used in a domestic will, primarily and generally mean descendants. Where there is nothing to the contrary to be found in the context of the instrument, or in extraneous facts proper to be considered, that is the sense in which they are presumed to be used. The real question * * * is whether the testatrix used them in that sense or in some other sense. In giving construction to the words used by the testatrix in a domestic will, we cannot assume, without the clearest evidence, that she used the words 'lawful issue' in the sense they might possibly bear under the laws of a foreign country in which she died." In re Tenney, 93 N. Y. Supp. 811, 813, 104 App. Div. 290 (quoting and adopting definition in New York Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Viele, 55 N. E. 311, 161 N. Y. 19, 20, 76 Am. St. Rep. 238).

Testator's will directed that his estate be divided into as many parts as he had children, the income of each part to go to a child for life, and upon the child's death the part to be divided among the "lawful issue" of the child. At the time the will was executed several of the testator's children were married and had children. Held, that the daughters of a deceased daughter and a grandchild of such daughter took equally under the clause "lawful issue"; that phrase being equivalent to "descendants." Phelps v. Cameron, 96 N. Y. Supp. 1014, 1016, 109 App. Div. 798.

Testator gave one half of his residuary estate to trustees for the use of his wife for life, and on her death to divide the same among his lawful issue, or to trustees for their use as his wife should direct by will. In default of such will, he gave the same to persons then entitled to the other half of his residuary estate, to be distributed and held on the same trusts and in the same proportions as were mentioned in another clause of his will. Held, that the term "lawful issue" includes not only children but descendants. Inglis v. McCook, 59 Atl. 630, 635, 68 N. J. Eq. 27.

Where the phrase "lawful issue" is used in a will, if it clearly appears that it was used in a particular meaning, the phrase may be restricted to children then living, or to children then living and to the representatives of any deceased child. Inglis v. McCook, 59 Atl. 630, 635, 68 N. J. Eq. 27.

Testator gave property to trustees in trust, with directions to pay the net income to his three children for life; the trust to continue as long as any of the children lived. He provided that, if any of his children should die without lawful issue, the surviving children should have his share, and if any of the children should die, leaving lawful issue, the child so surviving should take the share of the income which the deceased parent would have taken, had he survived, and on the termination of the trust the property should vest in the surviving lawful issue of testator's children. Held, that words "lawful issue" meant children, and included only the lawful children of testator's children in being at the time of their death. Brisbin v. Huntington, 103 N. W. 144, 147, 128 Iowa, 166, 5 Ann. Cas. 931.

As words of purchase

The words "lawful issue" in a deed are words of purchase and not of limitation. Lacey v. Floyd, 87 S. W. 665, 667, 99 Tex. 112.

Where a deed conveyed land to the grantee and his wife and to the legitimate heirs of the grantee, and in case of no "lawful issue" then over, the words "lawful issue" mean legitimate heirs and are words of purchase. Lamb v. Medsker, 74 N. E. 1012, 1013, 35 Ind. App. 662.

LAWFUL MERCHANDISE

Asphalt is "lawful merchandise" in a charter for West Indian trade, which provides that the vessel shall be employed in carrying "lawful merchandise." Dene Shipping Co. v. Tweedie Trading Co., 143 Fed. 854, 855, 74 C. C. A. 606.

LAWFUL MONEY

See Lawful Currency.

The term "lawful money," in an indictment charging "larceny" of certain money being "lawful money" of the United States, means money as commonly understood and includes bank notes. State v. Finnegean, 108 N. W. 155, 157, 127 Iowa, 286, 4 Ann. Cas. 628.

"Lawful money" means money which passes from hand to hand and from person to person and circulates through the community, and is synonymous with "current money." Lawful money is that which is usually used as a medium of exchange. State v. Quackenbush, 108 N. W. 953, 955, 98 Minn. 515.

LAWFUL OBSTRUCTIONS

Although the grass plats and shade trees along the sidewalk may be "obstructions," yet when ample width is left to answer the demands of travel they are obstructions that serve a useful purpose and are not inconsistent with the object for which streets are made and maintained. Like a fence, a hydrant, a hitching post, telephone or telegraph poles, they are "lawful obstructions," and a wire stretched around a grass and tree plat in a street for the protection of the plat is not such an obstruction as to render the city liable for injuries received by one who tripped and fell over such wire; the wire being in plain sight of pedestrians passing along the street. Teague v. City of Bloomington, 81 N. E. 103, 104, 40 Ind. App. 68 (citing Lostutter v. City of Aurora, 26 N. E. 184, 126 Ind. 436, 12 L. R. A. 259; City of Vincennes v. Spees, 74 N. E. 277, 35 Ind. App. 389; Weinstein v. City of Terre Haute, 46 N. E. 1004, 147 Ind. 556).

LAWFUL ORDER

Interstate Commerce Act, § 16, relating to the authority of a commerce commission, provides with respect to proceedings at law in a Circuit Court of the United States in case of the disregard of a "lawful order" of the commission, the finding of facts of the commission shall be prima facie evidence of the matters therein stated. The court says that the phrase "lawful order" implies more than the exercise of mere jurisdictional power or authority. "The words 'lawful order' mean an order the commission has jurisdiction to make. An order may be lawful and at the same time erroneous, so that if the commission made an order in a matter over which they had jurisdiction, which was merely an error of judgment as to precisely the degree of reparation, for instance, the carrier ought to make, the order would still be lawful." Western New York & P. R. Co.

v. Penn Refining Co., Limited, of Oil City, Pa., 137 Fed. 343, 352, 70 C. C. A. 23.

LAWFUL POSSESSION

In St. 1907, p. 999, c. 538, § 2, providing that the owner or other person in the lawful possession of land may recover damages by trespassing animals from the owner or person chargeable with the care of such animals, the words "lawful possession" mean only peaceable or quiet possession, contradistinguished from possession which is not merely constructively tortious, but actually so. Fisch v. Nice, 106 Pac. 598, 599, 12 Cal. App. 60.

LAWFUL PURPOSE

County Government Act 1897 (St. 1897, p. 466) § 25, subd. 35, authorizes county supervisors to grant franchises over the public roads and highways for all "lawful purposes" on such terms and conditions as, in their judgment, may be necessary and proper, and in such manner as to present the least possible obstruction and inconvenience to the traveling public. Held, that the words "lawful purposes," as so used, should be construed as limited to purposes in aid of the public's easement of travel, something which would promote the public comfort and convenience in the use of the highway; and hence such act did not authorize a county board of supervisors to grant a franchise to an electric power company to erect its power line along a highway, the title to the soil of which is not in the abutting property owners, for the primary purpose of furnishing light and power to private individuals, without rendering compensation to such abutting owners. Gurnsey v. Northern California Power Co., 117 Pac. 906, 909, 160 Cal. 699, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 185.

The payment of a debt by a county which the Legislature has authorized is a "lawful purpose," for the issuing of bonds as authorized by County Law, § 12 (Laws 1892, p. 1746, c. 686), giving to boards of supervisors the power to borrow money on the credit of the county. County of Ontario v. Shepard, 91 N. Y. Supp. 611, 614, 100 App. Div. 200.

A "lawful purpose" which will excuse one for carrying a concealed weapon is "a lawful purpose that was specific, and, in a sense, temporary. For example, if a person should buy a deadly weapon at a store, and put it in his pocket for the purpose of taking it home; or if a person should find a deadly weapon, and place it in his pocket for the purpose of keeping it only till he could restore it to the owner, or make some other disposition of it—such person would not be carrying a deadly weapon concealed within the meaning of said act." State v. Iannucci (Del.) 55 Atl. 336, 337, 4 Pennewill, 193.

Under County Government Act Cal. 1897 (St. 1897, p. 458) § 25, subd. 35, authorizing a board of supervisors to grant franchises along and over the public roads and highways for all "lawful purposes," upon such terms and conditions as in their judgment may be necessary and proper, the authority of the board has relation to the purposes for which a highway is dedicated, and is limited by the uses, primary and incidental, to which under the law a highway is devoted; the "lawful purpose" must be consistent with the character and in furtherance of the design of the easement which the public has in and to the highways. The only right which the public has in and to the highways is to use it for the purpose of traveling over it without obstruction or interference; and the control which the board of supervisors can lawfully exercise must have in view the promotion of that use, and cannot extend beyond whatever is necessary to facilitate travel. A grant by a county board of supervisors of a franchise to erect poles and string electric wires thereon, along and over the public highway of a county for the purpose of lighting the highway, is an incident to the contemplated use of such highway, and is for a "lawful purpose," and it is immaterial that the lighting was in part used for private purposes. Gurnsey v. Northern California Power Co., 94 Pac. 858, 860, 7 Cal. App. 534.

The words "lawful purposes," in the New York statute providing that no corporation shall issue either stock or bonds except for money, labor, or property actually received for the use and lawful purposes of such corporation, are general in character, but would seem to mean such property as would be germane to, or connected with, the business purposes of the corporation, as defined in its charter or articles of incorporation. Corporate bonds cannot be issued for the consideration of a note which is never collected. In re Waterloo Organ Co., 134 Fed. 341, 343, 67 C. C. A. 255.

LAWFUL REASONS

LAWFUL RESTRAINT

Where a bank which paid money into the state treasury as taxes, supposing that it had the right to do so, in lieu of county and city taxes, delayed for more than two years to make application to the auditor to issue his warrant for the repayment of the money, relying upon a decision of the Court of Appeals to the effect that such payments by other banks similarly situated were proper, it lost the right to demand such a warrant, though that decision was overruled after the lapse of the two years, as the decision was not a "lawful restraint," within Ky. St. § 2544, providing that, in all cases where the doing of an act necessary to save any right or benefit is restrained or superseded by injunction or other "lawful restraint," the time covered by the injunction or restraint shall not be estimated in the application of any statute of limitations. Bank of Commerce of Louisville v. Stone, 56 S. W. 683, 684, 108 Ky. 427.

LAWFUL RESTRICTIONS

The "lawful restrictions" authorized by P. L. 1893, p. 302 (Gen. St. p. 3235), providing for the granting of a location for street railway tracks subject to restrictions, refer to restrictions that are to be made in the interest of the public and indicate a legislative act in granting a location. An ordinance granting a location may contain restrictions in the form of covenants requiring the street railway company to pave the streets in which the tracks are laid, and such restrictions are obligatory on any subsequent purchaser of the street railway tracks and franchises, even without an express assumption. Borough of Rutherford v. Hudson River Traction Co., 63 Atl. 84, 88, 73 N. J. Law, 227.

LAWFUL USE

An instruction, in an action for the death of an automobilist struck by a car, that the street railway company must use reasonable care to operate its cars on public streets with regard to "the lawful and customary use" of the streets by others, and that if, at the time decedent was killed, the company was not operating the car with regard to "the lawful and customary use" of the streets, but negligently operated the car, it was liable, is not erroneous as referring to the extent of travel, of which there was no evidence, but refers to the use of the street by the public; the word "lawful" meaning according to law as distinguished from an unlawful use and the word "customary" meaning according to usage and referring to the mode of using the streets. Smiley v. East St. Louis & S. Ry. Co., 100 N. E. 157, 158, 256 Ill. 482.

LAWFULLY AUTHORIZED

Under Civ. Code 1901, pars. 721, 725, 782, 2696, providing that no estate in land for a term of more than one year shall be conveyed, except by an instrument in writing subscribed by the party, "or by his agent thereunto authorized in writing," prohibiting actions on any lease for more than one year, unless in writing and signed by the party to be charged, "or by some person by him thereunto lawfully authorized," a lease for more than a year, signed by one of the parties and by a person verbally authorized by the other party, but not acknowledged by either, is not a valid lease, but is not within the prohibition in paragraph 2696, and is enforceable as a contract to lease; the words "lawfully authorized" in paragraph 2696 not meaning an authorization in writing. Murphey v. Brown, 100 Pac. 801, 804, 12 Ariz. 268.

LAWFULLY CLAIMING POSSESSION

Civ. Code, § 1927, provides that agreements of letting upon hire bind the letter to secure to the hirer the quiet possession of the thing hired during the term of the hiring against all persons lawfully claiming the same. Defendant on August 29, 1906, leased to plaintiff for 22 months, to commence January 21, 1907, certain land. P. A. was in possession of the land under lawful lease from the owners, and it was determined in litigation to oust him that he was entitled to possession until March 6, 1907. Plaintiff had been a tenant of P. A. but his lease expired in November, 1906, but he was permitted by P. A. to occupy a house but instructed by P. A. not to farm the land. He did farm the land and gave defendant his share of the crops as rental under the lease commencing January 1, 1907. During January and February, 1907, P. A.'s cattle got upon the land and did damage to the plaintiff's crop. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to damages from defendant as for breach of the implied covenant for quiet enjoyment, as P. A.'s act was the act of one lawfully claiming possession. Agoure v. Lewis, 113 Pac. 882, 884, 15 Cal. App. 71.

LAWFULLY NATURALIZED

In Rev. St. § 1994, providing that any woman married to a citizen of the United States, and who might herself be lawfully naturalized, shall be deemed a citizen, the clause "who might herself be lawfully naturalized" limits the section to a woman lawfully within the country, her own capacity independent of her marital status, being essential to citizenship; so that where an alien married woman was not entitled to enter the country under the immigration regulations, because of a contagious disease, the naturalization of her husband would not make her a citizen entitled to enter, under the statute. In re Rustigian, 165 Fed. 980, 982.

LAWYER

As laborer, see Laborer.

As learned in the law, see Learned in the Law.

As member of learned profession, see Learned Profession.

A "lawyer" is one skilled in the law, while an "attorney" is an officer in a court of justice who is employed by a party in a cause to manage it for him. A law student fresh from his school and not a licensed officer of the court may well be termed a lawyer, but not an attorney. Danforth v. Egan, 119 N. W. 1021, 1024, 23 S. D. 43, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1030, 20 Ann. Cas. 418.

LAY—LAID

As construct

Where the city of Camden laid new pipes in place of old ones, which had been laid by a water company, the city's predecessor, such laying is within the meaning of Act March 9, 1871 (P. L. p. 415), authorizing the city to charge 75 cents per foot of frontage on land bordering on streets through which water pipes are laid. Doughten v. City of Camden, 59 Atl. 16, 17, 71 N. J. Law, 426.

LAID DOWN

The word "laid down," in a contract of sale which requires the buyer to pay a specified price f. o. b. cars at his place of business in this country, or "laid down" at his place of business, or free at his place of business, duty unpaid, must be construed according to the universal understanding of merchants and importers throughout the United States and the foreign country, and the universal understanding is that the buyers should pay import duties; and the buyer must pay such duties without deduction from or credit on the price. Steidtmann v. Joseph Lay Co., 84 N. E. 640, 642, 234 Ill. 84.

LAID UP

Ship

A yacht is "laid up for repairs," within a provision of the charter party, in such case allowing a rebate from the charter money, where it is at rest, having some damage made good, that in a material degree impairs its ability to pursue the voyage as a yacht, though the charterer may continue to eat and sleep and entertain friends on board. Dahlgren v. Whitaker, 124 Fed. 695, 696.

LAY OFF—LAID OFF

The words "laid off," in Pierce's Code 1905, § 3560, providing that all streets, lanes, and alleys "laid off" and recorded in accordance with the statute shall be considered highways, must be given their usual and ordinary meaning, and a town site or addition is "laid off" when it is surveyed or measured and marked on the ground. Meachem v. Seattle, 88 Pac. 628, 630, 45 Wash. 380.

Though the words "lay off" were used in a notice terminating the service of an employé, it was a sufficient indication of action under Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, p. 636, c. 466) § 1543, authorizing his suspension without pay for a year. Shane v. City of New York, 120 N. Y. Supp. 428, 430, 135 App. Div. 218.

LAY OUT—LAID OUT

The words "lay out," in the will of Benjamin Franklin, creating a trust fund for the town of Boston, do not mean merely the adoption of a plan for the use of the money in accordance with the will, but include the actual expenditure of it by the board of managers named in the will in the establishment of public works of the kind described. City of Boston v. Doyle, 68 N. E. 851, 854, 184 Mass. 373.

Under the deed of U., the owner of the east half of a block, of the southern half of his land, the northern boundary line of the land conveyed being described as binding on a 10-foot alley "here laid out," and the grant including the use of this alley in common, "together with the use of any alley 10 feet wide to be laid out by U., extending northerly parallel to P. street from the northwest corner of" the land conveyed "to H. street," while the words "laid out," in reference to the latter alley, are used in the sense of constructed or improved, and not in their ordinary meaning of the adoption of out-lines or location, the alley being laid out in such sense by the deed, which clearly defines its location, the grantee's easement in the alley is not dependent on the grantor improving it, and is not lost by nonperformance of his personal covenant to do so. Oberhelm v. Reeside, 81 Atl. 590, 592, 116 Md. 265 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4037).

The delineation of a street on a map made pursuant to Act March 21, 1871 (P. L. p. 638) § 23, in amendment of the charter of the village of Passaic, does not suffice to make an actual street within section 57 of the charter (Act April 2, 1873 [P. L. p. 507]), empowering the counsel to alter any street already or thereafter to be laid out. Erie R. Co. v. City of Passaic, 74 Atl. 338, 339, 79 N. J. Law, 19.

Laws N. H. 1903, p. 257, c. 255, § 3, relative to establishment of waterworks, provides that, "in case the town shall not be able to agree with the owner of any property or right taken for the purposes of this act, either party may apply to the superior court to have the same 'laid out' and damages determined." The court says the words "laid out" are undoubtedly derived from the procedure followed in laying out highways, "and the term itself and the direct reference indicate that the method of the divestiture of private title in road-laying proceedings was within legislative contemplation in this class of legislation. The decision of the selectmen laying a highway is a judgment, and includes both a finding upon the question of public good and a location upon the ground of the new way. The term 'laid out' is of familiar use in the taking of land for railroads. In such cases the corporation is authorized to locate its road, subject to petition by any landowner for a change of location, and to obtain title by deed to any lands which it deems necessary for the road. Pub. St. 1901, c. 158, § 8. If such deeds cannot be obtained, application may be made for an assessment of damages. Id. § 9. The damages must be paid, or tendered, or deposited for the landowner, before entry is made upon the land to construct the road, except by the owner's consent. Id. §§ 18, 19. From all the evidence it is clear that by the permission given in certain cases to apply to have the desired right 'laid out' was meant an application to have the desired right, in the language before quoted (Laws 1901, p. 806, c. 290, § 2), 'taken, appropriated, and condemned.' The words 'laying out' and 'taking,' in a statute relating to eminent domain, were held to have the same meaning in Charlestown Branch R. v. County Com'rs of Middlesex, 7 Metc. [48 Mass.] 78, 84. The legislative intention seems clear, therefore, to authorize the plaintiffs to secure the necessary rights by purchase if they could; if not, by condemnation." Town of Littleton v. Berlin Mills Co., 58 Atl. 877, 880, 73 N. H. 11.

As surveyed or platted

A town site or addition is "laid out" when it is surveyed or measured and marked upon the ground. Meachem v. City of Seattle, 88 Pac. 628, 630, 45 Wash. 380.

All necessary steps included

The city of Boston took part of lands for a short parkway, to be controlled by the park commissioners, and made a settlement with the owner, by which the city agreed to construct a roadway and walk, to which he should have perpetual access, and to assume any assessment for betterments for the construction of the park on the land not taken. Subsequently the city street commissioners laid out a street several miles long, which, where the owner's land lay, was superimposed on the parkway, and no physical change was made therein. Held not to preclude assessment for betterments on the owner's lands for the new street, which was a wholly new layout by the commissioners; to "lay out" meaning, in this connection, to fix the termini and prescribe the boundaries of a highway, and establish it as a public easement of travel, by official act of the proper authorities. Leahy v. Charles, 95 N. E. 834, 835, 209 Mass. 316.

The word "established," in Pol. Code, § 671, providing that, if a private way is "established" over the wild lands of a person who has no notice of the proceeding, he may within six months after receiving such notice, and not thereafter, proceed to have his damages assessed, has the same meaning as the words "laid out" in section 672; that is, the laying out of a way under the order of the ordinary. Watkins v. Country Club, 47 S. E. 538, 539, 120 Ga. 45.

Under Burns' Rev. St. 1894, § 8759, declaring that every public highway "laid out," or which may hereafter be "laid out," and which shall not be opened or used within six years from the time of its being laid out, shall cease to be a highway for any purpose whatever, the words "laid out" doubtless mean established, surveyed, declared a road; a highway has been laid out—that is to say, it has been established and declared to be a highway by the judgment of the court. Where a highway was established by the judgment of the county commissioners, and within six years thereafter it was included within the corporate limits of a town, it did not become extinct, under such statute, though not opened or used as a highway. Baltimore, O. & C. R. Co. v. Town of Whiting, 65 N. E. 759, 761, 30 Ind. App. 182 (quoting and adopting definitions in Decker v. Washburn, 35 N. E. 1111, 8 Ind. App. 673).

As locate

A petition for a highway was not objectionable, because it prayed that the court "locate and establish" a road, instead of asking to have the road "laid out"; the term "laid out" being colloquial, meaning "to plan in detail," while "to locate" is to define the limits, to establish in a particular place, and, in a road proceeding, is as comprehensive as "lay out"—the term "lay out" expressing the work to be done by the viewers in establishing on the ground the lines and angles of the road. Feagins v. Wallowa County, 123 Pac. 902, 62 Or. 186.

LAYING OR RELAYING

Buffalo City Charter, § 288 (Laws 1891, p. 200, c. 105, as amended by Laws 1901, p. 661, c. 228, § 8), provides for the laying and relaying of sidewalks at the expense of abutting owners. Laws 1891, p. 221, c. 105, § 393, divides streets into carriage ways and sidewalks, and Buffalo City Ordinance, c. 4, pars. 8, 9, declares that the owner or occupant may be required to grade and level the sidewalk in front of his premises between the street and curbs, and, on his failure to grade and level the sidewalk for ten days after notice, the same may be done at his expense. Held, that the words "laying or relaying" of a sidewalk, within section 288, have the same meaning as "grading or regrading" in section 8, in each case referring to original work on the sidewalk or street, and not to repair after the sidewalk is once laid or relaid. Konowalski v. City of Buffalo, 115 N. Y. Supp. 467, 470, 131 App. Div. 465.

LEAD

The zinc ores known as carbonate, silicate and sulphide of zinc are free of duty, the carbonate and silicate as "calamine," and the sulphide as "minerals, crude," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List pars. 514, 614, 30 Stat. 196, 199, except that when they contain lead they are subject to the duty provided on "lead-bearing ore of all kinds," in section 1, Schedule C, par. 181, 30 Stat. 166. United States v. Brewster, 167 Fed. 122, 123, 92 C. C. A. 574.

LEADINGLEADING LIFE OF PROSTITUTION AND LEWDNESS

Resorting to a hotel for the commission of acts of lewdness during one night, constituting parts of a continuous transaction, does not amount to "leading the life of lewdness" within Code, § 4943. State v. McDavitt, 118 N. W. 370, 140 Iowa, 342, 132 Am. St. Rep. 275.

A woman who inhabits a house of ill fame or other place as a shelter or resort in which to engage in unlawful sexual commerce is "leading a life of prostitution and lewdness," within the meaning of Code, § 4943, which provides that if any person for the purpose of prostitution or lewdness resorts to, uses, occupies, or inhabits any house of ill fame or place kept for such purpose, or if any person be found leading a life of prostitution, such person shall be imprisoned, etc. The law means during every instant of her residence there, and not merely while in the flagrant act. True, as counsel say, "she must be found while in the act prohibited by the statute"; but the acts here prohibited is not the act of sexual intercourse, but the living of a life of prostitution and lewdness in the house or other resort in which she is found. State v. Shaw, 101 N. W. 109, 125 Iowa, 422.

LEADING QUESTION

A "question is leading" when it suggests the desired answer to the witness. El Paso & S. W. Ry. Co. v. Welter (Tex.) 125 S. W. 45, 49.

"Leading questions" are such as suggest answers favorable to the interests of the party asking them. Parsons v. Bridgham, 34 Me. 240, 242 (citing 1 Starkie, Ev. [7th Ed.] 169).

A "leading question" is a question "embodying a material fact and admitting of an answer by a simple negative or affirmative." Walker v. Baldwin & Frick, 68 Atl. 25, 30, 106 Md. 619 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Greenl. Ev. § 434; Lee v. Tinges, 7 Md. 234).

A "leading question" is one which suggests the desired answer; and a question susceptible to either an affirmative or negative answer, which does not suggest the desired answer, is not objectionable as leading. Williams v. Smith, 72 Atl. 1093, 1099, 29 R. I. 562.

"Any question by which the fact is made known to the witness, which the interrogator wishes to find asserted in and by his answer, is a 'leading question.' It is none the less leading because the alternative form of expression is used, as 'Did you, or did you not?'" Parsons v. Huff, 38 Me. 137, 141 (citing People v. Mather [N. Y.] 4 Wend. 247, 21 Am. Dec. 122; Hopper v. Commonwealth, 6 Grat. [47 Va.] 684).

"Leading questions" are defined to be those which ordinarily suggest to the witness the answer desired, or which, embodying a material fact, admit of a direct answer by a simple "yes" or "no," or which instruct a witness how to answer on material points. Rosenkovitz v. United Railways & Electric Co., 70 Atl. 108, 110, 108 Md. 306.

A question is not necessarily "leading" because it admits of a direct negative or affirmative answer, but to make it objectionable when only a single fact is sought to be elicited it should suggest the answer. The use of the words "whether or not" in propounding a question to a witness does not in all cases relieve the question from the objection of being leading. Bryan Press Co. v. Houston & T. C. Ry. Co. (Tex.) 110 S. W. 99, 100, 101.

A question, containing the words "whether or not," so as in most instances to prevent the use of the words "yes" or "no" in answer, is said to be ordinarily not leading; whether it is or not depends on the nature of the question, the subject-matter, and the particular manner in which the other parts of it are framed. State v. Taylor, 50 S. E. 247, 254, 57 W. Va. 228.

A question is "leading" when it indicates the real or supposed fact which the examiner desires to have confirmed by the answer and the use of the words "whether or not" does not necessarily prevent a question from being leading if it still suggests the answer desired. Peebles v. O'Gara Coal Co., 88 N. E. 166, 168, 239 Ill. 370.

A question propounded plaintiff, as to whether two items in an account previously rendered defendant, and offered in evidence by him, represented or was intended to represent the notes sued on, was rightfully rejected as being "leading." Sayre v. Woodyard, 66 S. E. 320, 322, 66 W. Va. 288.

The question, "Did you make any demand upon the defendant for the value of said damaged goods?" addressed to a witness, was not "leading." International & G. N. R. Co. v. H. P. Drought & Co. (Tex.) 100 S. W. 1011, 1012.

A witness was asked by the state in a burglary case, in order to identify a suit case as one which accused and another had in their possession: "Do you think that you would know that grip if you was to see it? A. I do not know; I think I would. Q. How does that compare with it? A. That kinder looks like the color of the grip they had. Q. Do you know whether it is or not? A. No, sir; I do not know exactly whether it is or not." Held, that the questions were not objectionable as leading; a "leading question" being one framed so as to indicate the answer desired. Majors v. State, 140 S. W. 1095, 63 Tex. Cr. R. 488.

The question asked by the defense, if it was possible, during the time the fight was in progress, for any man to leave the crowd and go 40 feet and return with a bat without witness seeing him, which question was addressed to the evidence of the state that defendant had done just this thing, is not a "leading question"; a question not being leading because it can be answered "Yes" or "No," but being leading where it suggests the answer desired. People v. Jones, 117 Pac. 176, 180, 160 Cal. 358.

In an action by a mine employé for injuries resulting from the fall of rock or slate from the roof, a question on the direct examination of a witness called on behalf of plaintiff "whether in that mine that roof will sound all right in response to tapping and drumming with a pick and in a minute or two fall," is objectionable as leading. Harper v. Black Diamond Coal Co., 142 Ill. App. 584, 597.

A "leading question" is one that may be answered "yes" or "no," and suggests the answer desired. Indeed, by a "leading" question is meant one which suggests to the witness the desired answer. Merely because it may be answered by "yes" or "no" does not render the question leading. Where a witness was asked by his counsel (1) "if his wife * * * had ever had any cough or lung trouble" prior to a certain exposure; (2) "whether or not his wife had ever had any female trouble" prior to such exposure; (3) "if his wife * * * ever suffered with rheumatism, lumbago, or anything of that kind" before such exposure—it was held not leading, though answerable "yes" or "no." St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Lowe (Tex.) 97 S. W. 1087, 1088 (citing Able v. Sparks, 6 Tex. 350; Mathis v. Buford, 17 Tex. 155; Trammel v. McDade, 29 Tex. 361; Lott v. King, 15 S. W. 231, 79 Tex. 292; Birgen v. Producers' Yard, 11 S. W. 1027, 72 Tex. 55; Cleveland v. Duggan, 2 Willson, Civ. Cas. Ct. App. § 84).

LEAF TOBACCO

Filler tobacco as leaf tobacco, see Filler Tobacco.

"Congress is, of course, presumed to be familiar with the fact that 'leaf tobacco' is divided into classes, or is subjected, before being placed in bales, to some kind of an assortment." Erhardt v. Schroeder, 15 Sup. Ct. 45, 48, 155 U. S. 124, 39 L. Ed. 94.

LEAGUE

See Major League; Square League.

"League" and "legion" are of entirely different meanings; "league" being defined as an "alliance of persons," and "legion" as a "military body or organization." People ex rel. Felter v. Rose, 80 N. E. 293, 295, 225 Ill. 496.

LEARNED

LEARNED IN THE LAW

Where an attorney has been disbarred for violation of legal ethics, which is one of the branches required by Pol. Code, § 686, to be considered in passing upon the qualifications of one seeking admission to the bar, he is not "learned in the law" within the constitutional provision requiring that a state's attorney shall be learned in the law. Danforth v. Egan, 119 N. W. 1021, 1025, 23 S. D. 43, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1030, 20 Ann. Cas. 418.

LEARNED PROFESSION

Aliens imported under contract as expert accountants were not members of a recognized "learned profession," within Act Cong. March 3, 1903, c. 1012, 32 Stat. 1213, relating to the departure of aliens, and declaring in section 4 that the inhibition against the importation of aliens to perform labor or services of any kind, skilled or unskilled, shall not apply to persons belonging to any recognized learned profession. The definition of the word "profession" given in the Century Dictionary and approved in United States v. Laws, 16 Sup. Ct. 998, 163 U. S. 259, 41 L. Ed. 151, is a broad one, and it seems not unreasonable to assume that Congress qualified it with the adjective "learned" for the express purpose of restricting the scope of the exception. In re Ellis, 124 Fed. 637, 643.

Physicians, teachers, and lawyers belong to the "learned professions." Flanders v. Daley, 48 S. E. 827, 120 Ga. 885.

LEASE

See Entire Lease; Further Lease; Granted and Leased; Lessee; Mining Lease; Oral Lease; Sublease.

Expiration of lease, see Expire—Expiration.

See, also, Let.

"The right 'to lease' by the ordinarily accepted meaning of the terms is unto the lessee. The owner, or first party, grants the lease, lets or demises the leased premises, and it is the second party who leases." Hence where plaintiff's predecessor in title as "party of the first part" executed a lease of certain premises to defendant "as party of the second part" for a term of two years, which contained a clause that at the expiration of the lease the party of the "first part" should have the privilege of leasing the premises for a further term of one year, etc., the words "party of the first part" used in such renewal clause were so plainly a clerical error, used in the place of party of the "second part" intended, as to put a purchaser of the property on inquiry as to the ten-

A "lease" is a commutative contract. Werlein v. Janssen, 88 South. 216, 218, 112 La. 31.

"A 'lease' is nothing but a contract, and is governed by the same rules that other contracts are." Feaster v. Fagan, 113 N. W. 478, 479, 135 Iowa, 633.

The contract employed in the creation of the relation of landlord and tenant is called a "lease," and with reference to this the parties are designated as "lessor" and "lessee." Foss v. Stanton, 57 Atl. 942, 76 Vt. 365.

The indenture or writing is the evidence of the lease, though the term "lease" is sometimes used to designate the writing or instrument. Mattlage v. McGuire, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1083, 1085, 59 Misc. Rep. 28.

The word "lease" has a settled technical import. It imports a contract by which one person, either natural or artificial, divests himself, or itself of, and another person takes possession of, lands or chattels for a term. Moorshead v. United States Rys. Co., 96 S. W. 261, 272, 203 Mo. 121.

A "lease" in writing constitutes a written contract, and the lessee cannot surrender it or be released from its terms without the consent of the lessor, and it is absolutely essential to the termination of the term that both the lessor and lessee agree to the surrender, and, when this is shown, the tenant is no longer liable. To constitute the surrender there must be a mutual agreement between the lessor and lessee. Higgins v. Street, 92 Pac. 153, 154, 19 Okl. 45, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 398, 14 Ann. Cas. 1086.

A "lease" is "a species of contract for the possession and profits of lands and tenements, either for life, or for a certain term of years, or during the pleasure of the parties." A writing by which defendants gave plaintiff the right to enter on and take possession of a strip of their land, and construct thereon a tramway, and occupy it for a stated time, in consideration of a certain amount per year, is a lease. Asher v. Johnson, 82 S. W. 300, 301, 118 Ky. 702 (quoting Bouvier).

An instrument reciting that it is agreed that a lease will be given on certain terms, and which was preceded by a letter in which different terms were proposed, and the parties subsequently agreed on still other terms, did not constitute a "lease," though it was accompanied by a payment of rent and the lessee took possession. Ver Steeg v. Becker-Moore Paint Co., 80 S. W. 346, 351, 106 Mo. App. 257.

To constitute a "lease" the essentials of a contract must be present, and there must be an offer and an acceptance of the terms of the offer. Israelson v. Wollenberg, 116 N. Y. Supp. 626, 627, 63 Misc. Rep. 293.

A "lease" is a contract for the possession and profits of land and tenements on the one side and the recompense of rent or property on the other. Ward v. American Health Food Co., 96 N. W. 388, 391, 119 Wis. 12.

A paper cannot be considered as a "lease," where it is not signed by the lessee, does not identify the premises, or state when the term is to begin or upon what dates the rent is payable. Kuntz v. Mahrenholz, 88 N. Y. Supp. 1002, 1003.

An agreement to give a lease is not a "lease," unless followed up by occupation, which is evidence of lessee's agreement to hire. Goldberg v. Wood, 90 N. Y. Supp. 427, 428, 45 Misc. Rep. 327.

No particular form of expression is necessary to constitute a lease, and whatever expressions explain the intentions of the parties to be that one shall divest himself of the possession of his property and that the other shall take it for a certain period of time are sufficient, and will amount to a "lease" for the specified time as effectually as if the most proper form of words had been used for that purpose. Board of Sup'rs of Hancock County v. Imperial Naval Stores Co., 47 South. 177, 179, 93 Miss. 822, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 693.

The word "lease," as used in Burns' Ann. St. Ind. 1901, § 5524, providing that any telephone company authorized under the act shall have power to lease or attach to other telephone lines or exchanges by lease or purchase, does not include the power to sell all the property and franchises of a telephone company to another corporation, nor can the power to sell be necessarily implied from the grant of the expressed powers. Cumberland Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. City of Evansville, 127 Fed. 187, 193.

The word "lease," as used in a lease for a term of one year with the privilege of four years' additional "lease," was equivalent to "term." Quinn v. Valiquette, 68 Atl. 515, 519, 80 Vt. 434, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 962 (citing Harding v. Seeley, 33 Atl. 1118, 148 Pa. 20).

A direction by one who had been occupying an apartment to the janitress, who was without authority to lease the same, not to let any one have the apartment during his absence, and a statement by him that when he came back he would sign the lease with the agent and that he wanted it for a year, did not constitute an "oral lease," and was no more than an agreement for a lease. Columbia Bank v. Clarke, 108 N. Y. Supp. 587, 588.

An instrument reciting receipt from defendants of $10 for deposit on rent of two specified lofts, "rent to be $65 per month and to run for two years," did not constitute a "lease" of the lofts for two years; it having been delivered to defendants by an agent of the owners not authorized to make leases, and it also being contemplated that a "lease"

An instrument described as a "lease," which fixed no length of time for it to run nor expressed any consideration therefor, and which recited that it was for "— months," and provided that "on leaving the order for said goods — dollars on the delivery of the same, — dollars, and every week thereafter the sum of — dollars," and which purported to be for the rent of household goods and jewelry, which were nowhere set forth or included in the covenants or agreements contained in the instrument, was not a "lease." State v. Cordray, 98 S. W. 1, 2, 200 Mo. 29, 9 Ann. Cas. 1110.

Since Rev. St. 1899, § 1187, expressly authorizes a street railway company to lease its property, and since section 4160, provides that when technical words having a peculiar meaning are used in a statute they shall be understood according to their technical import, a street railroad company leasing its property and franchises to another street railroad company is not liable for an injury to a passenger resulting from the negligence of the employes of the latter company; the word "lease" importing a contract by which one person divests himself and another person takes possession of property for a term. Moorshead v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis, 100 S. W. 611, 613, 203 Mo. 121.

Where the owner of a sewing machine places it in possession of a prospective purchaser with an option to purchase at a fixed valuation, and with no agreement to rent, such transaction is not a lease within Comp. St. 1907, c. 32, § 26, providing that an agreement for lease must be in writing, and a copy filed with the county clerk. Singer Sewing Mach. Co. v. Omaha Umbrella Mfg. Co., 119 N. W. 958, 959, 83 Neb. 619.

The word "lease," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 1060, authorizing railroad leases, contemplates such an instrument as divests the lessor of possession and control and places the same in the lessee to the exclusion of the lessor, possessing all the qualities and incidents of a lease at common law between landlord and tenant. The rule that a landlord, in the absence of a covenant to do so, is under no obligation to make repairs, is applicable to leases of railroads; so that the lessor, in the absence of a covenant to repair, is not liable for injuries sustained by employes of the lessee company by the latter's negligence in failing to keep the track in proper repair. Hahs v. Cape Girardeau & C. R. Co., 126 S. W. 524, 528, 147 Mo. App. 262.

Where an instrument granted to defendants the use of and the right to occupy certain lands described as a game preserve, and provided that it was understood that any failure on defendants' part to perform any of the agreements expressed should work "a forfeiture of this lease," and plaintiff in its complaint alleged that it "entered into a certain indenture of lease," and that "at the time of the commission of said acts last aforesaid such defendants were tenants of said plaintiff under and by virtue of said lease, and for the purposes therein mentioned," the instrument would be regarded as a "lease," creating the relation of landlord and tenant. Shafter Estate Co. v. Alvord, 84 Pac. 279, 2 Cal. App. 602.

A "lease" is defined by Bouvier to be: "A species of contract for the possession and profits of lands and tenements either for life or for a term of years or during the pleasure of the parties. A conveyance by way of demise always for a less term than the party conveying has in the premises. Duration for a shorter period than the duration of the interests of the lessor in the land is one of its essential features, for if the lessor disposes of his entire interest it becomes an assignment, and is not a lease. In other words, the granting of a lease always supposes that the grantor reserves in himself a reversion." In 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d Ed.) 597, a lease is defined as: "A contract for the possession and profits of lands and tenements on the one side and the recompense or rents on the other, or in other words, a conveyance to a person for life, years or at will, in consideration of a rent, or other recompense." Within these definitions a sealed writing, witnessing that "the lessors do demise, let and lease for coal mining and coke manufacturing purposes for a period of thirty years" a tract of land, and which expressly agrees that "if at the expiration of the said period of thirty years, all the available merchantable coal which can be profitably mined has not been mined and removed, the lessees shall have the privilege of an extension of this lease on the same terms and conditions as those hereinbefore set forth, for a reasonable additional time until the whole of said coal can be so mined and removed," and which provides for a rent or royalty to the lessors of a certain amount per ton, created a "lease." Harvey Coal & Coke Co. v. Dillon, 53 S. E. 928, 930, 59 W. Va. 605, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 628.

Where a statute provides for the payment of a franchise tax by railroads, express companies, chair and dining car companies, etc., to the state, and also a local tax to the county, city, or taxing district, and another statute provides for the ascertainment of the franchise tax according to that proportion of the capital stock which the length of lines operated, owned, or leased in the state bears to the total mileage operated, owned, or leased, and the proportion of the tax to be paid in any locality is to be computed in the same way, a traffic arrangement by which one railroad obtains the right to use the tracks of another for a certain period of time at a certain rental, in order to obtain ingress to a terminal city, is a "lease," within the meaning of the statute and for the mileage operated under which the railroad is liable to pay a franchise tax. Jefferson County v. Board of Valuation & Assessment of Kentucky, 78 S. W. 443, 445, 117 Ky. 531.

Where a will devised a farm to a son of testatrix, and provided that if the farm should be leased for the purpose of mining the proceeds of the lease should be divided among the children of testatrix, the word "lease" was not used in a technical sense, but indicated a method of converting the minerals into proceeds. Hyde v. Rainey, 82 Atl. 781, 784, 233 Pa. 540, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 726.

Under a covenant in an oil and gas lease that the lessor would, in and by any deed thereunder executed by him, prohibit any drilling for oil or gas on any land so conveyed, the word "deed" does not include a "lease," so as to prohibit the lessor from leasing the land for the purpose of drilling oil and gas wells thereon. Test Oil Co. v. La Tourette, 91 Pac. 1025, 1029, 19 Okl. 214.

The use in a writing of such words as "lease" and "rent," the fact that it is for a definite period and a recited consideration, that it provides for an abatement of rent in case of the obstruction of the wall by other buildings, also for necessary access through and upon the premises, and that the lessor warrants the title to said leasehold for the time herein mentioned, demonstrates that the writing was intended as a "lease." Levy v. Louisville Gunning System, 89 S. W. 528, 530, 121 Ky. 510, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359.

The words "reserves" and "leases," in the title and body of chapter 244, p. 456, Laws 1897, providing for the assessment and taxing of mineral reserves, or leases, or separately owned mineral, or mineral rights, to the owner thereof, separately from the land, and providing penalties for its violation, mean at one time reserved or leased mineral, and at another written instruments evidencing mineral rights. Kansas Natural Gas Co. v. Board of Com'rs of Neosho County, 89 Pac. 750, 751, 75 Kan. 335.

Naphtha lamps and fire alarm lanterns owned and used by a lighting company in performance of its contract to light and maintain all naphtha lamps used by the city for lighting are not within Rev. Laws, c. 12, § 23, cl. 2, making personal property "leased" for profit liable to taxation where located, since the lamps are not held by the city as a "lessee." Rising Sun St. Lighting Co. v. City of Boston, 63 N. E. 408, 181 Mass. 211.

A "lease" granted premises, described on a blueprint attached, reserving from the said "leased premises" that portion lying between the tracks of the L. Railroad, as shown on such blueprint, and also reserving a strip of land 10 feet on either side of said railroad tracks. Another clause granted the lessee an option to purchase the said "leased premises" at a certain price. Held, that the saving clause was not a reservation of an easement merely, but reserved from the operation of the lease the fee of the portion reserved, and, such reservation having been omitted from a deed executed on the exercise of the option, the grantor was entitled to have the mistake corrected. Los Angeles & R. R. Co. v. New Liverpool Salt Co., 87 Pac. 1029, 1030, 150 Cal. 21.

A jury's negative answer to the special interrogatory, "Did you find that" the landlord's agent "had authority to waive the lease" of the landlord on any part of the crop covered by his lien, is not inconsistent with the verdict for the defendant, as authority to "waive the lease" is something different from authority to waive the lien. Fishbaugh v. Spunaugle, 92 N. W. 58, 60, 118 Iowa, 337.

As conveyance

Conveyance as including, see Conveyance.

A "lease" is defined to be "a conveyance of lands or tenements to a person for life, for a term of years, or at will, in consideration of a return of rent or some other recompense." Hayes v. City of Atlanta, 57 S. E. 1087, 1089, 1 Ga. App. 25 (quoting and adopting definition in Black, Law Dict.).

A "lease" is a conveyance of an estate or interest in real property for life, for years, at will, or for a term less than the grantor had in the real property. The term is not satisfied by a contract by which a landowner gives to another a right to convey water from a spring. Clark v. Strong, 93 N. Y. Supp. 514, 516, 105 App. Div. 179.

"A 'lease' may be in a sense a conveyance, but such is not the commonly accepted nor the accurate meaning of the term. When we say premises are 'leased,' we generally mean that the use of them is transferred." Duff v. Keaton, 124 Pac. 291, 294, 33 Okl. 92, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472 (quoting definition in Perkins v. Morse, 2 Atl. 130, 78 Me. 17, 57 Am. Rep. 780).

A "lease" is a conveyance by the owner of an estate to another of a portion of his interest therein for a term less than his own, and it passes a present interest in the land for the period specified. Chandler v. Hart, 119 Pac. 516, 519, 161 Cal. 405, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1094.

To "lease" is to transfer, for a term specified therein, from the lessor to the lessee, the property therein demised. Moorshead v. United Rys. Co., 96 S. W. 261, 277, 203 Mo. 121.

The word "lease" is sometimes used to signify the interest and estate which is conveyed, but may properly apply to the instrument or means of conveyance. Weander v. Claussen Brewing Ass'n, 84 Pac. 735, 736, 42 Wash. 226, 114 Am. St. Rep. 110, 7 Ann. Cas. 536.

"A 'lease' is a contract for the possession of profits of land and tenements on the one side and the recompense or rents on the other, or, in other words, a conveyance to a person for life, years, or at will in consideration of a rent or other recompense." Headley v. Hoopengartner, 55 S. E. 744, 748, 60 W. Va. 828.

Grant of easement

Ky. St. 1903, § 2031, authorizes a guardian to lease any real estate of his ward until the latter shall arrive at full age provided no such lease is made for a longer term than seven years. Held that, where a guardian granted an easement for the laying of pipe line over his ward's land, a conveyance would be construed as a valid lease of the property for the purpose intended during the minority of the ward but not for a longer term than seven years. Cumberland Pipe Line Co. v. Howard (Ky.) 100 S. W. 270.

License distinguished

The difference between a license and a lease is that a lease gives to the tenant the right of possession against the world, while a license creates no interest in the land, but is simply the authority or power to use it in some specific way. Joplin Supply Co. v. West, 130 S. W. 156, 161, 149 Mo. App. 78.

A license in respect to real estate is an authority to do a particular act or series of acts on the land of another without possessing an estate therein. The test to determine whether an agreement for the use of real estate is a license or a lease is whether the contract gives exclusive use of the premises against all the world, including the owner, in which case it is a lease, or whether it merely confers a privilege to occupy under the owner, in which case it is a license, the question to be determined by a construction of the instrument. Shaw v. Caldwell, 115 Pac. 941, 943, 16 Cal. App. 1.

The test to determine whether an agreement for the use of real estate is a "lease" or a license is whether the contract gives exclusive possession of the premises against the world, including the owner, in which case it is a lease, or whether it merely confers a license to occupy under the owner. An instrument by which the owner of premises let to defendant "his ice business and privileges in * * * with the use and benefit of his icehouses," for a term ending on a certain date, gave defendant the exclusive possession of, and the entire beneficial interest in, the icehouses and the land under them, so as to constitute a lease of the premises, instead of a mere contract for their use as licensee under the owner. Roberts v. Lynn Ice Co., 73 N. E. 523, 524, 187 Mass. 402.

A contract, whereby it was agreed that plaintiff should have the exclusive privilege of the public stenographer's office in a certain hotel, plaintiff agreeing to pay the rent promptly each month in advance for the exclusive privilege of the public stenographer's office, and to do private correspondence for the hotel management, and to furnish competent stenographers for this service, was not a "lease," but a mere agreement to allow plaintiff to carry on business in the hotel. Hess v. Roberts, 108 N. Y. Supp. 894, 895, 124 App. Div. 328.

An agreement whereby tenants of a store building, leased for a plumbing business, allowed a third person to occupy part of it in conducting an electrical supply business, was a "lease," though called a "license" by them. Denecke v. Henry F. Miller & Son, 119 N. W. 380, 384, 142 Iowa, 486, 19 Ann. Cas. 949.

An instrument by which defendant contracted to "let," and plaintiff to "take," the right to maintain, at a race park, three stands for sale of candies, said right being exclusive for said business within said park, also the storeroom under the tracks, and one of said stands, not to exceed a certain size, to be in the main pavillion, and providing the period of "letting," and the amount and times of payment of the "rent," instead of being a "license," is a "lease," affecting defendant in the exclusive use of the land, so that plaintiff, having paid the rent, can recover no part of it, though the park is destroyed by fire before the end of the period of letting. Mehlman v. Atlantic Amusement Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 222, 223, 65 Misc. Rep. 25.

A contract to let to plaintiffs the exclusive news, confectionery, view, and checking privileges on defendant's steamers for certain specified seasons, though denominated a "lease," was not a "lease," but a "license." Nash v. Thousand Islands Steamboat Co., 108 N. Y. Supp. 336, 342, 123 App. Div. 148.

An instrument granting, demising, and leasing certain land for the purpose solely of mining and operating for oil, gas, and other minerals, laying pipe lines, building tanks, and structures to take care of the products is a lease conveying an interest in the land, and not merely a license to enter and operate for oil or gas. Barnsdall v. Bradford Gas Co., 74 Atl. 207, 225 Pa. 338.

An instrument by which the owner of land therein described grants to another all the gas and oil under it, with the exclusive right to enter thereon at all times to drill and operate for oil or gas, etc., and provides for the time within which the various wells shall be completed, with a stipulated monthly rental for each well not finished on time, and that each location shall consist of ten acres more or less, and that no well shall occupy more than one acre, is not a "lease," as leases are usually understood, but a mere grant of an exclusive right to enter and explore for oil and gas, and prosecute such business, occupying no more land than is needed for that purpose, not more than one acre to a well. Stahl v. Illinois Oil Co., 90 N. E. 632, 633, 45 Ind. App. 211.

Mining license

A contract simply giving a right to take ore from a mine, no estate being granted, confers a mere "license," and licensee acquires no right to the ore until separated from the freehold; but an instrument devising lands for mining purposes, for a designated term of years, at a fixed rent, and giving the right to erect all necessary buildings, is a "lease," not merely a mining license. Barnsdall v. Bradford Gas Co., 74 Atl. 207, 208, 225 Pa. 338, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 614.

Implied covenant for quiet enjoyment

The words "grant," "demise," or "lease," in a lease for years, creates a covenant in law for good title and quiet enjoyment of the lands demised during the term. Headley v. Hoopengartner, 55 S. E. 744, 747, 60 W. Va. 626.

Sale and contract of sale distinguished

A conveyance of standing timber for sawmill purposes is a sale of land and not a "lease" within Civ. Code 1895, § 3613, declaring that on a sale of land there is no implied warranty of title, and hence a vendee of standing timber cannot defend against a suit on purchase-money notes in any plea predicated on the breach of an implied covenant of quiet enjoyment. McLendon Bros. v. Finch, 58 S. E. 690, 692, 2 Ga. App. 421.

A contract binding the party of the first part to rent certain land to the party of the second part, providing for the payment of three installments of rent, and agreeing that if these are paid the party of the first part will convey the land to the party of the second part, was a "lease" and not a contract of sale. Thomas v. Johnson, 95 S. W. 468, 469, 78 Ark. 574 (citing Quertermous v. Hatfield, 14 S. W. 1096, 54 Ark. 16; Ish v. Morgan, 3 S. W. 440, 48 Ark. 413; Watson v. Pugh, 10 S. W. 493, 51 Ark. 218; Cheney v. Libby, 10 Sup. Ct. 498, 134 U. S. 68, 33 L. Ed. 818; Blanchard v. Raines, 20 Fla. 467; Houston v. Smythe, 5 South. 520, 66 Miss. 118).

per month, with interest, until a certain sum was paid, after which the leased personality was to become the property of the lessee, was a conditional sale. Pringle v. Canfield, 104 N. W. 223, 19 S. D. 506.

A contract provided that plaintiff leased from the owner of certain land a tract containing 250 acres and agreed to pay $205 for the year 1905, with the privilege of rerenting the property on the same terms for seven successive years, and that in case of such renewals, on full payment of the rent, the owner on completion of the period would convey the property to plaintiff in consideration of $1, and the amount, with legal interest, of taxes paid pending the contract. Held, that such contract operated as a "lease," and the annual payments as rent, so long as it was executory, and on completion of the payments it became a sale, at plaintiff's option, on his paying $1, taxes, and interest pending the contract. Heard v. Heard & Lee, 41 South. 827, 828, 148 Ala. 673 (citing Davis v. Robert, 8 South. 114, 89 Ala. 404, 18 Am. St. Rep. 126; Wilkinson v. Roper, 74 Ala. 140).

The owner of land on which there were dumps of slag and smelter products entered into a contract denominated a "lease," by which he purported to lease the land for a stated term, with the right to remove the dumps on payment of a series of notes maturing at intervals through a portion of the term. The contract provided, in effect, that removal of the dumps should proceed only in proportion as payments were made, that when all the dumps were removed the lease should terminate, and that on payment of all the notes on or before maturity the lessee should be entitled to a bill of sale of the dumps, with the right to remove the same within a specified term. It further provided that: "It is mutually agreed that all work on the said above-described slag, slag dumps and materials and smelter products shall be performed in a thoroughly workmanlike manner, and that any failure of the said party of the first part to do or keep any of the agreements herein, * * * or any failure to pay immediately when due any one or more of said 100 promissory notes, * * * shall work a forfeiture of all rights of the said party of the first part under this agreement, and the said party of the second part shall have the right * * * to declare each and every one and all of the said 100 promissory notes, or whatever number of the said notes may remain unpaid, * * * immediately due and payable, and * * * to collect the same, * * * and in case of forfeiture as aforesaid all work done and money expended by the said party of the first part shall inure to the party of the second part as liquidated damages, * * * and the said party * * * may thereupon * * * enter upon said premises and dispossess all persons occupying the same." Held, that such transaction was not a lease, but a conditional sale of the material in the dumps, which gave the owner alternative remedies for breach of the contract, and that, where he declared a forfeiture and took possession because of default in payment of notes, he could not also collect the notes maturing thereafter. Manson v. Dayton, 153 Fed. 258, 259, 265, 82 C. C. A. 588.

An agreement to sell a machine for a certain price, installments to be paid on acceptance of the proposition and shipment of the machine, with an option of returning it within a certain time in lieu of the last payment, and giving no claim on the part paid, is a "lease" for experimental purposes with the privilege of completing the purchase, and not a sale within Civ. Code, § 1770, providing that one who manufactures an article under an order for a particular purpose warrants it reasonably fit therefor. Kullman, Salz & Co. v. Sugar Apparatus Mfg. Co., 96 Pac. 369, 372, 153 Cal. 725.

A contract recited that S. desired to have the "use" of plaintiff's building and saloon fixtures, to become "the owner of said fixtures when fully paid for," and provided that S. could use the premises for a specified term; that he should make specified monthly payments to plaintiff, until the total payments, after deducting monthly ground rent, should equal the cost of the building, fixtures, etc., and 8 per cent. per annum interest thereon, when S. should be deemed the owner of the fixtures, thereafter paying plaintiff $55 per month until the expiration of his ground lease, and that S.'s failure to make the monthly payments should evidence a relinquishment of his rights under the contract. Held, that the contract evidenced a conditional sale of the fixtures, etc., and not a "lease" thereof; S. becoming the owner thereof on reimbursing plaintiff his original investment, with interest, etc. Coors v. Reagan, 96 Pac. 966, 967, 44 Colo. 126.

A contract, after reciting that the vendors had "rented" certain furniture, provided that the title should remain in the vendors until the purchase money was paid in specified installments, and on default in any payment the vendors reserved the right to take possession without legal process. There was further provision that all payments should be placed to the credit of the vendee as payments on the "lease," or any other goods for which he might owe the vendors on open account on any other "lease," and that the vendee was to have no title to the "lease" until his account should be settled in full. Held, that the contract was one of conditional sale, entitling the vendors to the protection afforded by Code 1907, § 7342, making it a crime to remove or sell personal property to hinder or defraud any person who has a valid claim thereto, with knowledge of the existence of such claim. Steele v. State, 48 South. 673, 674, 159 Ala. 9.

A contract, though in the form of a lease and called a "lease," by which the vendor reserves title until final payment should be made, and the right of rescission in case the purchaser should fail to pay any installments of the so-called rent, is a conditional sale. Unitype Co. v. Long, 143 Fed. 815, 817, 74 C. C. A. 453.

A "lease" of property under an agreement that, on payment of a specified sum in installments, title shall pass to the lessee, amounts to a conditional sale, valid as to third parties as well as the parties to the transaction. Kidder v. Wittler-Corbin Machinery Co., 80 Pac. 301, 302, 38 Wash. 179.

Sharing contract

An owner of a farm and milk route let it to one on condition that he furnish horses, etc., and divide the proceeds as follows: Eggs, dally; crops, when sold; milk, monthly. Held, that the contract did not create the relation of landlord and tenant and is not a "lease," and hence did not create the relation necessary to allow the application of the law relating to the right of distress for rent. Olden v. Mather, 67 Atl. 435, 73 N. J. Eq. 217 (citing Gray v. Reynolds, 50 Atl. 670, 67 N. J. Law, 169).

LEASE AT WILL

A lease of real property for more than three years, signed by an agent whose authority is not in writing, has against the principal no other force or effect, either in law or in equity, than a "lease at will," because of the first section of the statute of frauds. Clement v. Young-McShea Amusement Co., 67 Atl. 82, 84, 70 N. J. Eq. 677, 118 Am. St. Rep. 747 (citing Gen. St. p. 1602).

LEASE FOR YEARS

A lease for any definite period is a "lease for years," and a lease for one year and a lease for 99 years create an estate of equal dignity. Moss Point Lumber Co. v. Board of Sup'rs of Harrison County, 42 South. 290, 298, 89 Miss. 448.

"A 'lease for years' is a contract between lessor and lessee for the possession and profits of lands and tenements on the one hand and a recompense by rent or other consideration on the other." City of New York v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co., 104 N. Y. Supp. 157, 160, 53 Misc. Rep. 126 (quoting and adopting definition in McAdam, Landl. & T. 127).

LEASE FROM YEAR TO YEAR

A lease for one year to continue thereafter from year to year so long as mutually agreeable to the parties is a "lease from year to year" after the first year, and entitles the tenant to possession for at least two years and to sixty days' notice before the end of a year to terminate the lease. McQuinn v. Logue, 128 S. W. 516, 517, 143 Mo. App. 232.

LEASE OF CONVICTS

"The attempt is made to construe the expression 'leasing or hiring of convicts,' as used in the Constitution, as being synonymous with 'leasing of farms to be worked by the convicts.' How futile such an effort is will be apparent when we recall that at the adoption of the Constitution there was no system of leasing farms, and hence it was impossible that the constitutional convention could have dealt with a situation which had never arisen." Henry v. State, 39 South. 856, 876, 87 Miss. 1.

LEASEHOLD

A "leasehold" is defined to be "an estate in realty held under a lease." Hayes v. City of Atlanta, 57 S. E. 1087, 1089, 1 Ga. App. 25 (quoting and adopting definition in Black, Law Dict.).

"A 'leasehold interest' is not real estate, but merely a chattel real, which is personal property." Townsend v. Boyd, 66 Atl. 1099, 1101, 217 Pa. 386, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1148.

A "leasehold" is an intangible chattel real; it is an entity per se, distinguished from the fee ownership out of which it issues. "Whether the distinction seems refined or not, it is real in legal thought, for a leasehold is not the wheat or corn produced under the right conferred by the lease. The lease is a thing apart from the commodities produced under the right conferred by it." A sealed writing demising and leasing for coal mining and coke manufacturing purposes for thirty years a tract of land, and granting unto the lessee the sole right of mining, shipping, and selling coal from the leased premises, with an extension to remove coal which can be profitably mined, providing for a rent or royalty to the lessor of ten cents a ton for all coal mined, containing a forfeiture clause for breach of covenant, created a leasehold or chattel real, taxable to the lessee under Acts 1905, p. 285, c. 35. Harvey Coal, etc., Co. v. Dillon, 53 S. E. 928, 936, 59 W. Va. 605.

A "leasehold" is the right to use property upon which a lease is held for the purposes of the lease. It is intangible property, which the law recognizes as having value, but which is incorporeal in its nature. It is not the property upon which the lease is held nor the property used in its exercise. In determining the taxable value of the leasehold, the pecuniary value of the property used in connection therewith or the use of which constitutes the leasehold estate may not be taken into consideration. The land which constitutes the subject of the leasehold is taxed, not as a leasehold, nor in the name of the lessee, but as land, in the name of the owner, and is not to be taxed over again in the name of the lessee, on the theory that it constitutes part of the leasehold. Nor are the improvements on the land, whether they belong to the landowner or the lessee, to be taxed under the designation of "leasehold." If they belong to the owner of the land, they are charged to him, either as land or as personal property. Their value is not to be included in, or taken to make up, the value of the intangible thing, the leasehold. State v. Bare, 56 S. E. 390, 393, 60 W. Va. 483.

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, §§ 8395, 8396, giving a mechanic's lien on buildings and land to the extent of the title of the owner for whose immediate benefit the labor was done, or materials furnished, and where the owner has only a leasehold, the lien is not impaired by a forfeiture of the lease for rent, one furnishing materials under a contract with a purchaser in possession does not obtain a lien on the building as against the vendor after a surrender of the possession and rights of the purchaser; the term "leasehold" not including such purchaser. Toner v. Whybrew, 98 N. E. 450, 453, 50 Ind. App. 387.

LEAVE—LEAVING

See Die Leaving Children; Die Leaving No Children; Die Leaving No Issue; Loss Through His Leaving; Should They Leave Issue.

Going away from a horse, beyond sight, hearing, and reasonably immediate reach, is "leaving" it, within a city ordinance declaring leaving any horse unhitched within a street a nuisance. Monroe v. Hartford St. Ry. Co., 56 Atl. 498, 500, 76 Conn. 201.

The word "leaving," as used in an ordinance forbidding the leaving of a horse, etc., unattended in the street, means to desert, to abandon, to forsake; hence to give up, to relinquish. Southern Hardware & Supply Co. v. Standard Equipment Co., 48 South. 357, 358, 158 Ala. 596.

The word "leave," in a letter written by testator to plaintiff, reciting "Delos, if there is not any change in my family, I shall leave one-half of what I have for you, but have willed you $1,000—now I want to say to you—you get me up a cane that will be good enough for you when I get through with, and I will 'leave' the cane and $1,000 with it when I get through," means prima facie will. The testator accepted the cane furnished by plaintiff, and used it for many years, but did not leave $1,000 to plaintiff, but substantially all of his property to an adopted daughter, who was amply provided for without the $1,000. Plaintiff was entitled to specific performance of the contract created by the letter. Bush v. Whitaker, 91 N. Y. Supp. 616, 618, 45 Misc. Rep. 74.

Defendant's dray driver finished loading his dray from a car, drove away from the car from four to six feet and stopped the team, and was tying the load on the dray without having hold of the lines, when another team frightened his horses and they backed against the car, crushing plaintiff. Held, that the driver was not negligent as having left his team, within an ordinance making it unlawful to leave an animal attached to a dray upon a public street without locking the wheels of the vehicle; to "leave," within the ordinance, meaning to depart or abandon for the time, to go away from the immediate charge and supervision of the animals. While the driver of M.'s team had gotten down to fasten his load, B.'s team was negligently driven so as to frighten M.'s team, which backed up and crushed plaintiff's intestate. Held, that the fact that the accident would not have happened if the wheels of M.'s dray had been locked was no excuse for the negligent driving of B.'s team, where the act of M.'s driver in getting down did not amount to a leaving of his team within an ordinance requiring wheels to be locked in such cases, the condition and equipment of M.'s dray being immaterial on the question of B.'s liability, unless M.'s driver violated the ordinance and by the fact of so doing was negligent. Sullivan v. Morton Draying & Warehouse Co., 108 Pac. 895, 896, 13 Cal. App. 85.

Laws N. C. 1899, p. 175, c. 54, § 62, authorizes service on certain insurance companies by "leaving" the summons in the office of the commissioner of insurance. Held that, where a return recited that service was made by reading the summons to the commissioner of insurance and "delivering" a copy thereof to him, it would be presumed that a copy of the summons was left with the commissioner; the court in which the action was brought being one of general jurisdiction. Johnston v. Mutual Reserve Life Ins. Co., 93 N. Y. Supp. 1052, 1059, 104 App. Div. 550.

LEAVENED

Edible wafers, raised in the making by the use of baking powder or bicarbonate of soda, are "leavened," although such agents do not produce fermentation. F. H. Leggett & Co. v. United States, 131 Fed. 817, 818.

LEDGER

See Stock Ledger.

As book of original entries, see Book of Original Entries.

A ledger is a book of accounts in which are collected and arranged, each under its appropriate head, the various transactions scattered throughout the journal or daybook. First Nat. Bldg. Co. v. Vandenberg, 119 Pac. 224, 227, 29 Okl. 588.

"Left," in a devise of all the testatrix's estate to two grandchildren equally to be their estate, not subject to the debts or control of their husbands, and providing that on the death of either of them without descendants the survivor should have the share of the one so dying, and on the death of the survivor without descendants what was left should go to the others, shows that testatrix did not intend to devise to others the entire fund, but only so much of it as should vest at the death of the surviving issue. Irvine v. Putnam (Ky.) 89 S. W. 520, 521.

LEFT SECURED ON MY REAL ESTATE

In a will giving testator's wife the interest on a sum of money so long as she lives and remains unmarried, to be "left secured on my real estate," the phrase quoted did not require the legacy to the wife to be secured by a mortgage on testator's real estate, but created a charge on such real estate without the aid of a mortgage. Plum v. Smith, 62 Atl. 763, 764, 70 N. J. Eq. 602.

LEFT WITH

A person being in charge of an office must be understood to have been in charge of the whole of it, and a paper placed before his eyes in a conspicuous place on the office desk therein is, in contemplation of Code Civ. Proc. § 1011, "left with a person having charge" of the office. People v. Perris Irr. Dist., 76 Pac. 381, 142 Cal. 601.

LEG

See Breaking of a Leg.

A policy insuring against an accidental breaking of a "leg or arm" covers fractures of bones of the limbs whether in the hands or feet or in the upper or central divisions of the limbs, including a fracture of the heel bone (os calcis). Rogers v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 111 S. W. 518, 131 Mo. App. 353.

LEGACY

See Beneficial Legacy; Contingent Legacy; Cumulative Legacy; Demonstrative Legacy; Entitled to Legacy; General Legacy; Modal Legacy; Specific Legacy; Vested Legacy.

Legacies are parcels of the distributable estate. Their amount may be expressed in precise figures, or they may be determinable upon an established basis of computation. Blakeslee v. Pardee, 56 Atl. 503, 505, 78 Conn. 283.

Testamentary trustees are entitled to pay the income from trust funds to the guardian of an infant beneficiary pending proceedings for settlement of their accounts without requiring a bond; such income being neither a "legacy" nor "distributive share," within Code Civ. Proc. § 2746. In re Williams, 123 N. Y. Supp. 383, 384, 66 Misc. Rep. 417.

Testator gave his sister a specified amount and also one-half of his residuary estate. By a codicil he gave to two nieces and a nephew "the legacy which I have left to my sister," share and share alike. Held, that the word "legacy" will be construed to include, not only the money legacy in the will, but the gift of half of the residuary estate. In re Norris' Estate, 66 Atl. 1000, 1001, 217 Pa. 560.

"No particular words are essential to create a 'legacy' or devise; the essential thing is that the intention of the testator to thereby make the gift from property of the estate is shown." A clause of a will providing that "the residue of my real estate, after my son H. has been paid what he has paid for me at various times, I will and bequeath," etc., creates a "legacy" to H. of the amounts paid by him for the testator. In re Barclay's Estate, 93 Pac. 1012, 1014, 152 Cal. 753.

The right given to a beneficiary by a will to receive a stated share of the net income from the entire residuary estate of the testator, left in trust until the time fixed for its distribution, is not a "legacy" or "distributive share," within the meaning of such terms as used in War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, c. 448, § 29, 30 Stat. 464; and, under Act June 27, 1902, c. 1160, § 3, 32 Stat. 406, which provides that no tax shall be assessed under said section 29 in respect of any contingent beneficial interest which shall not become absolutely vested in possession or enjoyment prior to July 1, 1902, the only interest of the legatee in such income which was subject to taxation was the amount thereof actually received by him prior to said July 1, 1902, provided such amount was $10,000 or more. Lynch v. Union Trust Co. of San Francisco, 164 Fed. 161, 163, 90 C. C. A. 147.

Shares of stock in a New Jersey corporation belonging to a testatrix, resident of Rhode Island, and passing under a bequest in her will, are subject to the inheritance tax imposed by P. L. 1906, p. 432, c. 223, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to tax intestates' estates, legacies,' etc., which by section 1, subd. 2, imposes a tax when the transfer is by will of property within the state, and decedent was a non-resident of the state at death; the stock being embraced by the term "legacies" as used in the title. Dixon v. Russell, 73 Atl. 51, 52, 78 N. J. Law, 296.

Gift causa mortis distinguished

See Gift Causa Mortis.

Payment of debt

A legacy implies a bounty, and not a payment. In re Dailey's Estate, 89 N. Y. Supp. 538, 542, 43 Misc. Rep. 552.

The word "legacy," as used in the War Revenue Act June 13, 1898, imposing a tax on "legacies" in the hands of administrators, executors, or trustees, is a definite gift by will of personal property either general and pecuniary, or specific. It is of specific article of personal property or of ascertained and definite pecuniary amount which may be readily valued by the executor or trustee having it in charge. Disston v. McClain, 147 Fed. 114, 117, 77 C. C. A. 340.

Personalty or realty

A "legacy" is a gift by will of personal property. Harding's Adm'r v. Harding, 116 S. W. 305, 307, 132 Ky. 133.

A "legacy" is defined as "a bequest or gift of personal property by last will and testament." Desloge v. Tucker, 94 S. W. 283, 286, 196 Mo. 587 (quoting Black, Law Dict.).

The terms "legacy" and "legatee" have different meanings in the French Code and Civil Law, from what they usually have under the English system; but even in the United States they may be used to refer to a devise of real property. Lindsay v. Wil- son, 63 Atl. 566, 570, 103 Md. 252, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 408.

A "legacy" is a disposition of personal property by will. Under a will creating a trust, the beneficiary was empowered to dispose of the property by will and give the same to various charitable institutions and directed her executors after the payment of numerous bequests, to pay out of the residue any inheritance taxes due on any of the legacies whether to the state or federal authorities. Held, that the various dispositions of the trust estate constituted "legacies" and are entitled to have the transfer taxes paid out of the residuary estate. Is-ham v. New York Ass'n for Improving the Condition of the Poor, 69 N. E. 367, 369, 177 N. Y. 218.

Strictly speaking, the term "legacies" refers to personal property, but it may be, and often is, used in a more extended sense by persons unacquainted with the precise meaning of legal terms, and, when so used, may embrace real estate. Russell v. Elden, 15 Me. 193, 196.

Although the words "devise" and "devisee" properly and technically apply only to real estate, and the words "legacy," "legatee," "bequest," and "bequeath" only to personal property, they have been made interchangeable by Ky. St. 1903, § 467, which provides that "the words 'legatee' and 'devisee' shall each be held to convey the same idea; and the words 'bequeath' and 'devise' to mean the same thing; and the words 'bequest' and 'legacy' shall each be held to mean the same thing and to embrace and include either real or personal property or both." Roberts v. Chenoweth, 112 S. W. 625, 627.

In common acceptation, "bequest" and "legacy" are synonymous terms, but "bequeath" is the term generally by which a gift of personalty is made in a will, and a legacy is the money or personal property bequeathed. The words "devise," "bequest," and "legacy" are not infrequently used in wills in a sense different from their strict legal meaning. It is stated, in a recent work on wills, that: "Of the verbs used to denote the act of making a will, 'devise' is properly used of realty, and 'bequeath' of personalty. Of the nouns used to name the various forms of gift, 'devise' is used of a gift of realty. 'Legacy' is used of a gift of personalty in general. None of these words have so fixed a legal meaning, however, that a gift will fail because testator does not use the words descriptive of the gift or the act of giving with technical accuracy. A devise is often miscalled a 'bequest,' or 'bequest' is often used to include both realty and personalty, or is used of a gift of money alone. So the verb 'devise' is often used to refer to personalty alone." In re

"Legacy and devise" and "legatee and devisee" are often used as interchangeable phrases in wills and everyday conversation, and therefore courts would not feel fettered to any nice construction where the subject-matter or context shows the words were used interchangeably and as of the same import. But such popular and loose construction is hardly permissible in view of the statutory rule of hermeneutics. Desloge v. Tucker, 94 S. W. 283, 286, 196 Mo. 587.

While the word "devise" is the appropriate term to pass title to real estate, and "bequeath" the term applicable to gifts of personal property, a strict adherence to technical words is not necessary to give effect to a testator's intent, and the fact that the word "devise" is not used does not prevent the title to real estate passing by the use of the word "bequeath." Mills v. Tompkins, 97 N. Y. Supp. 9, 10, 110 App. Div. 212.

LEGACY TAX

See Inheritance Tax.

A tax on an interest in personal property passing by will is a "legacy tax." In re Mack's Estate, 102 Pac. 1075, 1078, 48 Colo. 79, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1207.

The inheritance tax is variously termed "succession tax," "legacy tax," and "probate duties"; but, whatever it may be termed, it is not a tax upon property, but upon the right of succession thereto. State ex rel. Foot v. Bazille, 106 N. W. 93, 96, 97 Minn. 11, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 732, 7 Ann. Cas. 1056.

A tax may be laid upon property immediately after it has devolved upon any person by will or inheritance so as to be not easily distinguishable from a form of taxation sometimes called "legacy tax." Appeal of Hopkins, 60 Atl. 657, 659, 77 Conn. 644.

The tax variously called an "inheritance tax," a "legacy tax," a "transfer tax," and a "succession tax," is a "burden imposed by government on all gifts, legacies, and successions, whether of real or personal property or both, or any interest therein, passing to certain persons (other than those specially excepted), by will, by intestate law, or by deed or assignment made inter vivos, intended to take effect at or after the death of the grantor." In re Morris' Estate, 50 S. E. 682, 138 N. C. 259 (quoting and adopting definition in Dos Passos [2d Ed.] § 2).

The words "an act to tax . . . legacies," in the title of Act May 15, 1906 (P. L. p. 432) do not express that the object of the act, so far as it relates to legacies, is the imposition of a tax upon the transfer of property which is the subject of a bequest, and as Const. art. 4, § 7, par. 4, requires that the object of every law shall be expressed in the title thereof, the statute is unconstitutional so far as it seeks to tax the transfer of property which is the subject of a bequest. Dixon v. Russell, 76 Atl. 982, 983, 79 N. J. Law, 490.

LEGAL

See, also, Lawful.

The term "legal" means that which is according to law. Vaughn v. National Council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, 117 S. W. 115, 116, 136 Mo. App. 362.

"Legal" is defined as according to the principle of law; according to the method required by statute; by means of judicial proceedings. In re Folwell's Estate, 62 Atl. 414, 415, 68 N. J. Eq. 728, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1193.

Lawful, adequate, and reasonable, synonymous

"'Legal,' 'lawful,' 'adequate,' and 'reasonable,' when used as adjectives qualifying 'provocation,' are synonymous, and, as a general rule, with few exceptions, it takes an assault or personal violence to constitute this provocation." State v. McKenzie, 76 S. W. 1015, 1019, 177 Mo. 699 (quoting with approval from State v. Bulling, 15 S. W. 367, 16 S. W. 830, 105 Mo. 204); State v. Heath, 121 S. W. 149, 154, 221 Mo. 565 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Bulling, 15 S. W. 367, 16 S. W. 830, 105 Mo. 204).

LEGAL ADVICE AND SERVICES

The services of an attorney for an administratrix, consisting of giving her advice, drawing leases and other legal instruments, ejecting nonpaying tenants, collecting doubtful demands due the estate, discovering assets, and in investigating and adjusting disputed claims, are such as the estate is liable for, under Rev. St. 1899, § 223, providing for allowances for "legal advice and services." Hill v. Evans, 91 S. W. 1022, 1024, 114 Mo. App. 715.

LEGAL AND SUFFICIENT FENCE

The phrase "legal and sufficient fence," as used in Rev. St. 1883, c. 51, §§ 36, 37, requiring a railroad company to erect and maintain along the line of its road a legal and sufficient fence, means a fence sufficient to restrain and exclude any of the ordinary domestic animals from straying on that part of its track which passes through and is contiguous to the inclosure where such animals are pastured or kept; and a fence abutting a railroad, four feet in height and otherwise complying with the statute, and that will restrain horses, cows, and oxen, but will not restrain sheep, is not a legal and sufficient fence. Cotton v. Wiscasset, W. & F. R. Co., 57 Atl. 785, 786, 98 Me. 511.

LEGAL AVOIDANCE

See Matter of Legal Avoidance.

LEGAL CAPACITY

See, also, Legal Disability.

The "capacity to sue" is the right to come into court, and differs from a "cause of action," which is the right to relief in court. Howell v. Iola Portland Cement Co., 121 Pac. 346, 347, 86 Kan. 450.

"Incapacity to sue exists where there is some legal disability, such as infancy, or lunacy, or a want of title in the plaintiff to the character in which he sues." That plaintiff was appointed administrator as alleged, accepted the office, and qualified therefor, and letters of administration de bonis non are issued to him, and the validity of his appointment was not questioned, gives him "capacity to sue," though he may not be the real party in interest, and though the admitted facts may not authorize a recovery by him. Homans v. New York Life Ins. Co., 106 N. Y. Supp. 929, 930, 55 Misc. Rep. 574 (quoting and adopting Ward v. Petrie, 51 N. E. 1002, 157 N. Y. 301, 68 Am. St. Rep. 790).

"Want of legal capacity," within the meaning of Rev. St. 1898, § 2649, specifying the grounds for demurrer to a complaint, refers to personal disability, such as infancy, idiocy, coverture, and the like, or to want of title to the character in which the plaintiff sues; a defect going to the cause of action itself as regards the plaintiff. One showing that in no event, under no circumstances, and in no capacity does plaintiff own or represent the cause of action sought to be enforced, does not fall within the statute. McKenney v. Minahan, 97 N. W. 489, 491, 119 Wis. 651.

Under the express provisions of Rev. St. 1899, § 3535, it is only when the plaintiff has no legal capacity to sue that a demurrer will lie on the ground that he has no capacity to sue; the words "legal capacity to sue" referring to infancy, want of authority, or any personal disability to maintain the action. Littleton v. Burgess, 91 Pac. 832, 836, 16 Wyo. 58, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49.

A demurrer on the ground of want of "legal capacity to sue" must relate to some legal disability on the part of the plaintiff to prosecute and maintain his action. This disability must be "such as infancy, coverture, idiocy, and the like, and not the absence of facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." Pratt v. Northern Pac. Exp. Co., 90 Pac. 341, 342, 13 Idaho, 373, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 499, 121 Am. St. Rep. 268 (quoting and adopting definition in Pomeroy Code Remedies [4th Ed.] p. 180).

LEGAL CAUSE

"Legal cause" is necessarily the deduction from some act, event, or circumstance. Wells, Fargo & Co. v. McCarthy, 90 Pac. 203, 206, 5 Cal. App. 301 (citing Marsh v. Superior Court, 26 Pac. 962, 88 Cal. 596).

"Legal cause," as used in an instruction in an action for abuse of process authorizing recovery if defendant issued an attachment against plaintiffs without legal cause, was not synonymous with "probable cause." Sehon, Blake & Stevenson v. White (Ky.) 92 S. W. 280, 281.

An entry, under statutes authorizing an entry on land under the directions of a railroad company solely for the purpose of making a preliminary survey of a proposed railway line subject to liability for all damages done to the land, constitutes a "legal cause and good excuse" within the statute providing that any person who without legal cause and good excuse enters the premises of another after warning shall be punished. State v. Simons, 40 South. 662, 145 Ala. 95.

LEGAL CHARGE OF CRIME

A "legal charge of crime," as contemplated by extradition statutes, means one made in that state having jurisdiction to try the offense, and from which the fugitive fled. The word "charged," in 2 Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 7017, declaring that, when any person shall be found within the state charged with an offense committed in another state, the court or magistrate may on complaint issue a warrant for his arrest, contemplates that the person arrested and delivered up committed the offense in another state and is in such state legally charged with crime. State ex rel. Grass v. White, 82 Pac. 907, 908, 909, 40 Wash. 560, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 563.

LEGAL COUNTY ROAD

In Sess. Laws 1893, p. 380, making a county liable for injuries from defects in a "legal county road," it is apparent that the Legislature only intended to provide a remedy for injuries received by a traveler on a county road or highway. Schroeder v. Multnomah County, 76 Pac. 772, 773, 45 Or. 92.

LEGAL DEPENDENT

A member of a fraternal insurance order, who dies leaving only brothers and sisters and nieces and nephews not living with him, dies without "legal dependents," within the certificate of membership, providing for payment to legal dependents, and his administrator is entitled to the fund for the payment of debts and distribution in due course of administration; the words "legal dependents" meaning those relying on the member for support. Little v. Colwell, 74 S. E. 10, 158 N. C. 351, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 450 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, pp. 1991, 1992).

There being no legal duty imposed by law on insured to support his mother, as is the case with his wife and minor children, she is not a "legal dependent" within the meaning of a policy payable to his "legal dependent." Vaughn v. National Council, Junior Order United American Mechanics, 117 S. W. 115, 116, 136 Mo. App. 362.

LEGAL DISABILITY

A petition by adult heirs and on behalf of minor heirs to open a decree of the county court approving the final report of the executor and distributing the estate, to correct an error resulting from an erroneous allowance to the executor and his attorney, which purports to be a petition of persons interested in the estate, and which sets forth facts showing that the allowance is erroneous as a matter of law, and which avers the fact of the minority of heirs and presentation of the petition on their behalf, is, as to such heirs, a sufficient petition within Prob. Code, § 287, authorizing persons laboring under any legal disability, to move to reopen the account of executor before final distribution; the term "legal disability" including minority, though the minors have a guardian. In re Nelson's Estate, 129 N. W. 113, 116, 26 S. D. 615.

Rev. St. 1898, § 3068, provides that no action can be maintained against the sureties on any bond given by a guardian unless it be commenced within four years from the time when the guardian shall have been discharged, excepting that if, at the time of such discharge, the person entitled to bring the action shall be under any "legal disability to sue," the action may be commenced at any time. Held, that the words "legal disability to sue," as used therein, referred to some characteristic of the person disqualifying him from acting freely for the protection of his rights, and not to an impediment to the suability of the particular cause of action, and so inability of the plaintiff to sue during the period of accounting and until the settlement of the guardian's account was not within the exception of persons "under [any] legal disability to sue." Wescott v. Upham, 107 N. W. 2, 3, 127 Wis. 590 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4060).

LEGAL EVIDENCE

It was unnecessary to advise the jury of the meaning of "legal evidence" in an instruction that the law demanded conviction where there was sufficient legal evidence to show guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, as any man competent to serve as a juror would understand that it meant any evidence the jury had a right to consider. People v. Anderson, 87 N. E. 917, 918, 923, 239 Ill. 168.

LEGAL FRAUD

Promissory representation, looking to the future, as to what the vendee can do with the property, how much he can make on it, and how much he can save by the use of it, are on a par with false affirmations and opinions as to the value of property, and do not generally constitute "legal fraud." National Cash Register Co. v. Townsend Grocery Store, 50 S. E. 306, 307, 137 N. C. 652, 70 L. R. A. 349.

A bill of sale intended as an absolute transfer of title, but made with a secret agreement that the grantee, after selling enough goods to pay the grantor's indebtedness to him, should turn back to the grantor the remainder, or their proceeds, presents a case of "constructive fraud," sometimes called "legal fraud." Walklin v. Horswill, 123 N. W. 668, 672, 24 S. D. 191.

Misrepresentations of a material fact, made willfully to deceive, or recklessly without knowledge, or if made by mistake and innocently, and acted on by the opposite party, constitute legal "fraud," under Code 1907, § 4298, authorizing the rescission of a contract of sale of stock of a corporation. Southern States Fire & Casualty Ins. Co. v. Wilmer Store Co. (Ala.) 60 South. 98, 99.

"Misrepresentation of a material fact made willfully to deceive, or recklessly without knowledge, and acted upon by the opposite party, or if made by mistake and innocently and acted upon by the opposite party, constitutes 'legal fraud.'" Camp v. Carithers, 65 S. E. 583, 585, 6 Ga. App. 608 (quoting definition in Civ. Code, § 4026).

LEGAL GROUND FOR NEW TRIAL AS MATTER OF LAW

The words "legal ground for granting a new trial as matter of law," in a request for a ruling that if plaintiff after testifying was arrested in court during the trial of the case, and the jury noticed some of the acts connected with her arrest, and were thereby made suspicious that plaintiff was arrested for perjury, there was a "legal ground for granting a new trial as a matter of law," mean that the conditions referred to called for a new trial as a matter of law, and as so construed the request is erroneous. Kelley v. City of Boston, 87 N. E. 493, 494, 201 Mass. 86.

LEGAL HEIRS

See Lawful Heirs.

My legal heirs, see My.

The term "legal heirs," in its technical sense, as used in the common law, includes all persons born in lawful matrimony who succeed to the estate in real property of an ancestor. Thomas v. Supreme Lodge Knights of Honor, 105 N. W. 922, 923, 126 Wis. 593, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 904, 5 Ann. Cas. 456.

The term "legal heirs," in legal strictness signifies those entitled to inherit real estate; it is also used to indicate those who would take under the statute of distribution. Dickerman v. Alling, 76 Atl. 362, 363, 83 Conn. 342 (citing Ruggles v. Randall, 38 Atl. 885, 70 Conn. 44; Tingler v. Chamberlin, 42 Atl. 718, 71 Conn. 469).

In construing a will using the words "legal heirs" and "lawful heirs," the words "legal" and "lawful" do not modify or change the legal effect of the word "heirs." Stisser v. Stisser, 85 N. E. 240, 242, 235 Ill. 207.

As used in a will making a bequest to testator's wife and the legal heirs of his son, and, in case his son should die without wife or heirs, then to the heirs of another, the words "heirs" and "legal heirs" meant "children." Knowles v. Knowles, 65 S. E. 128, 130, 132 Ga. 806.

Where testator, by a codicil to his will, provided that the income derived from certain property should go to "my legal heirs," the term "legal heirs" means next of kin and legal heirs of testator, and does not include next of kin or legal heirs of his wife. Miller v. Metcalf, 58 Atl. 743, 744, 77 Conn. 176.

Under a limitation in a will to the "legal heirs" of a person, they were to be determined as of the date of his decease, and are the persons who under the laws then in force would have been entitled to inherit his real estate if he had died intestate. Holmes v. Holmes, 80 N. E. 614, 617, 194 Mass. 552.

The words "legal heirs," in a will which bequeathed a feather bed to testator's son and devised to his "wife and legal heirs of J. my youngest son" all the household furniture, meant "children." Knowles v. Knowles, 65 S. E. 128, 130, 132 Ga. 806.

Testator bequeathed certain personality to "the legal heirs" of his housekeeper. Held, that her husband was excluded. In re Schnitzler, 114 N. Y. Supp. 934, 935, 61 Misc. Rep. 218.

Where a testator left to trustees an estate for his grandchild, the trust to continue three years during which the trustees were to possess and manage the property and its income and provide for and pay over to the grandchild at their discretion, and at the end of the three years the estate to pass to the possession of the grandchild, if then alive, and "if the grandchild die before the trust ceases her legal heirs to be substituted in place of deceased in every respect," the granddaughter's husband is not one of her "legal heirs" in the sense of the devise over to her legal heirs. Buck v. Paine, 75 Me. 582, 589.

Testator gave half of his residuary estate of which his homestead formed a part to a niece for life, and provided, on her death without issue, the homestead should pass to the children of an uncle, and such children should participate equally with testator's "legal heirs" in whatever balance there might be over and above the homestead. Held, that his legal heirs were those who, in absence of a will, were entitled by law to inherit by descent ascertained at the time of testator's death, excluding the widow. Perry v. Bulkley, 72 Atl. 1014, 1019, 82 Conn. 158.

A deed of gift by parents to a son, which designates the son and his legal heirs as parties of the second part, and which conveys the property to the legal heirs, and which recites that the son shall have full control of it for life to maintain his family, and declares that he shall not sell, mortgage, or transfer his life interest, and that at his death his wife surviving shall, for life or until her remarriage, have equal shares with the heirs of the son, she not to sell or incumber her interest, gives the son no interest in the property except the power to control it for life, and in the absence of any showing that there is a surplus of income above what is necessary for the family, the son has no interest subject to execution, within Ky. St. § 1691, subjecting equitable interests to the payment of the debt of an execution creditor; the words "legal heirs" meaning children. Mt. Sterling Nat. Bank v. Duff, 140 S. W. 60, 61, 145 Ky. 67.

A testator bequeathed corporate stock to a trustee, to pay the income thereof to a grandson and granddaughter for life, and at their death the same to be distributed to their respective "legal heirs," except that, if the "legal heirs" of the grandson should be the granddaughter, the trusteeship should continue and the income be paid to the granddaughter for life. Held, that the words "legal heirs" were used in their primary sense. Grant v. Stimpson, 66 Atl. 166, 167, 79 Conn. 617.

The "legal heirs" intended by a will were those who answered the description at the time of testator's death, where no contrary intention was indicated. The term "legal heirs" meant those who answered that description under the laws of the state; and a provision for equally dividing each of four certain parts of the estate among the legal heirs of the persons named required such a division as is provided by the laws of the state for the distribution of the estate of a deceased person among his descendants. Harris v. Ingalls, 68 Atl. 34, 37, 74 N. H. 339.

Where testator devises land to his wife for life, and after her death to his daughter, and, if she shall not outlive her mother "and leave no legal heirs," then to the son, the words "leave no legal heirs" are equivalent to "leave no lawful issue." Church v. Baer, 84 Atl. 1099, 1100, 236 Pa. 605.

LEGAL HOLIDAYS

The words "legal holidays," as used in Comp. Laws 1897, § 5395, requiring saloons to be closed on all "legal holidays," not only includes legal holidays existing at the time of the adoption of the section, but includes holidays subsequently created by the Legislature, such as Labor Day, made a holiday by the act of 1893. People v. Kriesel, 98 N. W. 850, 851, 136 Mich. 80, 4 Ann. Cas. 5.

Code, § 2448, par. 9, provides that saloons shall not be open nor shall any sales be made on Sunday, or any election day, "or legal holiday." Section 3053, headed "Holidays," directs that certain days, including July 4th, shall be legal holidays for purposes relating to bills of exchange. Section 3541 provides that no person shall be held to answer in any court on the days enumerated in the preceding section. Section 4688, headed "Not on election days or holidays," declares that no party shall be required to take depositions on any days on which appearance cannot be required. Held, that the term "legal holiday," as used in section 2448, relates to the days designated in section 3053 as "holidays." Brennan v. Roberts, 101 N. W. 460, 462, 125 Iowa, 615.

The meaning of the phrase "days of public rest and legal holidays" is the opposite of "secular or business day," and excludes entirely and absolutely the idea of holding court. The words "legal holiday" and "dies non" are convertible terms. That they are so in the legislation of Louisiana "is demonstrated by the fact that they are so used in Act No. 110 of 1896, p. 158, making Decoration Day a legal holiday." State v. Duncan, 43 South. 283, 287, 118 La. 702, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 791, 11 Ann. Cas. 557.

Act March 4, 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 196, c. 118), is entitled "An act concerning legal holidays, the maturity of negotiable instruments, creating a Saturday half-holiday for banking institutions in certain cities, repealing all laws," etc. Section 1 designates certain days, including Labor Day, as "legal holidays," without restriction or limitation. Section 2 (page 197) declares that every Saturday after 12 o'clock noon in cities of more than 35,000 inhabitants shall, in addition to the legal holidays mentioned in section 1, be a legal holiday for banks, etc., and section 3 provides for the presentation, payment, etc., of negotiable instruments which mature on Sunday or a legal holiday. Held, that the holidays created by section 1 were legal holidays for all purposes, and hence the sale of liquor on Labor Day constituted a violation of Act March 10, 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 721, c. 169, § 579), prohibiting the sale of liquor on certain specified days "or any legal holiday." State v. Shelton, 77 N. E. 1052-1054, 38 Ind. App. 80.

In view of Const. art. 6, § 5, providing that courts shall be always open, legal holidays excepted, and Code Civ. Proc. § 10, as amended by St. 1907, p. 561, c. 287, making every Saturday from 12 o'clock noon until 12 o'clock midnight a holiday, and sections 134, 135, as amended by St. 1907, pp. 681, 682, c. 358, authorizing courts to be open on holidays for specified purposes, trial courts ought to treat Saturday afternoon as a legal holiday. People v. Heacock, 102 Pac. 543, 546, 10 Cal. App. 450.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 2939, declaring February 22d a legal holiday, and article 1180, inhibiting the issuance of process on any legal holiday excepting in cases of injunction, distress proceedings, etc., a citation, in a divorce proceeding, whether original or an alias, issued on February 22, is invalid, and will not confer jurisdiction upon the court nor support a judgment. Michael v. Michael (Tex.) 100 S. W. 1018.

LEGAL INJURY

Whatever invades a person's rightful dominion over his property is a "legal injury," whether damage ensues or not. Such dominion is a right, for the violation of which the law imports damage, and courts of equity have always interposed, in a proper case, to protect the right without any reference to the question of actual damage, the motive which instigated the party to invoke its aid, or the benefits it derives from the act. Allen v. Stowell, 79 Pac. 371, 372, 145 Cal. 666, 68 L. R. A. 223, 104 Am. St. Rep. 80.

A contract or combination in restraint of interstate commerce, prohibited by Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 210, is not merely illegal in the sense that it is not enforceable, but is per se unlawful, and one who is harmed in his business or property by such a contract or combination has suffered a "legal injury," within the meaning of section 7 of the act, and is by such section given a right of action therefor. Wheeler-Stenzel Co. v. National Window Glass Jobbers' Ass'n, 152 Fed. 864, 865, 871, 81 C. C. A. 658, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 972.

LEGAL INSANITY

"Legal insanity" excusing the commission of a criminal act is a disease of the brain, rendering a person incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong with respect to the offense charged. State v. Privitt, 75 S. W. 457, 459, 175 Mo. 207.

LEGAL INTENT

The words "legal intent," when applied to the intention of a testator, mean that where a testator has used in his will technical terms to which the courts of his domicile have attached a settled judicial meaning constituting a rule of property in that state, then the courts of other states construing the will give to such words the same meaning. Ball v. Phelan, 49 South. 956, 968, 94 Miss. 293, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 895.

LEGAL INTEREST

See Direct Legal Interest.

As interest, see Interest (In Property); Interest (On Money).

Under Revision 1902, § 56, providing for a rebate of legal interest on the payment of that portion not yet due of a mortgage payable at a future date without interest, such "legal interest" is the rate used by the parties in fixing the amount of the mortgage payable in monthly installments without interest. Greenville Building & Loan Ass'n v. Wholey, 59 Atl. 341, 346, 68 N. J. Eq. 92.

LEGAL ISSUE

Legal heirs as including, see Legal Heirs.

The words "legal issue," when used in a will and unexplained by the context, have the meaning of descendants, and gift to the "legal issue" of testator's daughter, after a life estate to her, is a gift to her descendants, and is not limited to her children. Under a gift to the "legal issue" of testator's daughter, after a life estate to her, the trust fund held for her life will vest on her death absolutely in interest in all her descendants who are living in equal portions per capita. Schmidt v. Jewett, 88 N. E. 1110, 1111, 195 N. Y. 486, 133 Am. St. Rep. 815.

LEGAL KNOWLEDGE

See Presumption of Legal Knowledge.

LEGAL LIFE ESTATE

"Legal life estates" are those made by operation of law. Disley v. Disley, 75 Atl. 481, 483, 30 R. I. 366.

LEGAL MALICE

See Implied Malice; Malice.

LEGAL MEASURE OF DUTY

The rule of law now generally recognized is that the "legal measure of duty," except that made absolute by law, is better expressed by the phrases "due care," "reasonable care," or "ordinary care," used interchangeably. Raymond v. Portland R. Co., 62 Atl. 602, 604, 100 Me. 529, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 94.

LEGAL MEETING

In the statute providing that no alienation, or mortgage, of the real estate of any mining corporation shall have any force or effect, unless authorized at some meeting of stockholders, and that no meeting of stockholders shall be held to be "legal or valid," unless notice of the time, place, and object of holding the same be published, etc., the words "legal or valid" are not to be given a literal interpretation. The statute does not give strangers the right to raise questions as to the regularity of a mortgage which the stockholders elect to waive. Thus where the notice for a stockholders' meeting of a corporation stated that the purpose of such meeting was to authorize the issue of bonds to the extent of $100,000, to be secured by mortgage, etc., and the issue authorized was $150,000, one not a stockholder, but a purchaser, at execution sale, of the corporation's equity of redemption in the property mortgaged, could not raise the question of the irregularity. Beecher v. Marquette & Pacific Rolling Mill Co., 7 N. W. 695, 696, 697, 45 Mich. 103.

LEGAL NAME

For the purpose of giving constructive notice to a defendant in a suit to foreclose a mortgage, where he has not sued on a written instrument signed by himself, his "legal name" includes his first Christian name and surname. Hence foreclosure of a mortgage did not divest the title of a non-resident defendant who was sued by the initial letters of his name, there being no personal service of summons upon him, or appearance in his behalf, and the record showing that he did not sign the mortgage or the note secured thereby. Butler v. Smith, 120 N. W. 1106, 1107, 84 Neb. 78, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 436.

LEGAL NEGLIGENCE

"Legal negligence" is the omission of such care as persons of ordinary prudence exercise and deem adequate to the circumstances of the case. Dooling v. City of New York, 132 N. Y. Supp. 1012, 1014, 148 App. Div. 713.

LEGAL NOTICE

See Implied Notice.

"Legal" or "implied notice" is the same as "constructive notice," which, according to Wilson's Rev. St. Ann. 1903, c. 16, § 12, is notice imputed by the law to a person not having actual notice. Implied notice does not include either positive knowledge or information so direct as to necessarily carry conviction to the mind of the person notified, and neither does it belong to that class which depends on legal presumption, but it is substantial evidence from which the jury after estimating its value may infer notice. Cooper v. Flesner, 103 Pac. 1016, 1020, 1021, 24 Okl. 47, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1180, 20 Ann. Cas. 29 (quoting Wilson v. Brown, 15 N. Y. 354; Wade, Law of Notice, §§ 3, 4, 5).

Rules of the Mississippi Railroad Commission provide that railroad companies shall give prompt notice by mail or otherwise to the consignee of the arrival of goods and that no storage or demurrage charges shall be allowed unless legal notice of the arrival of the goods has been given, and defines "legal notice" in this connection as either actual or constructive notice, and provides that, where the consignee is personally served with notice, free time begins at 7 o'clock the following morning. New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. A. H. George & Co., 35 South. 193, 195, 82 Miss. 710.

Notice of appointment of two executors, one residing within the state and the other without, the state, which failed to include the name and address of the agent or attorney of the latter, was not a "legal notice" within the meaning of Rev. St. c. 87, § 18, providing that, when an executor or administrator does not give "legal notice" of his appointment, he cannot avail himself of the statute of limitations against claims against the estate, Id. § 12, providing that executors or administrators residing out of the state at the time of giving notice of their appointment shall appoint an agent or attorney in the state, and insert his name and address in such notice. Dyer v. Walls, 24 Atl. 801, 802, 84 Me. 143.

Where it appeared from the report of viewers for the laying out of a lot that they had given "legal notice" of the fact, presumably they had given the notice required by law. Crescent Tp. v. Pittsburg & L. E. R. Co., 59 Atl. 1103, 1105, 210 Pa. 334.

Whatever is sufficient to put a subsequent purchaser on inquiry must be considered "legal notice" to him of the facts inquiry would have disclosed by the exercise of reasonable diligence. Jennings v. Lentz, 93 Pac. 327, 329, 50 Or. 483, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 584.

LEGAL OBLIGATION

Debt as legal obligation, see Debt.

LEGAL PERSONALITY

The Roman Catholic Church in the Philippine Islands is a legal personality, with capacity to hold property acquired by gift. Santos v. Holy Roman Catholic and Apostolic Church, 29 Sup. Ct. 338, 339, 212 U. S. 463, 53 L. Ed. 599.

LEGAL PLAINTIFF

The "legal plaintiff" is the person in whom the legal title or right of action is vested, while the "equitable plaintiff" is the person who does not have the legal title to the right of action but is in equity entitled to the thing sued for. Burrell v. United States, 147 Fed. 44, 46, 77 C. C. A. 308.

LEGAL POSSESSION

As possession, see Possession.

When a delivery of goods is made for a specific purpose, the possession is still supposed to reside in the first proprietor, and, where any person has the bare charge of another's effects, legal possession remains in the owner; and therefore where the finder of the purse told defendant's wife thereof, and she stated that the purse looked like her husband's and took the same, telling the finder that if it did not belong to her husband she would return it, and afterwards possession was given to him on his claim of ownership, when in fact it belonged to another, the "legal possession" remained in the finder, and defendant's claim thereto constituted larceny. Williams v. State, 75 N. E. 875, 877, 165 Ind. 472, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 248 (citing Smith v. People, 53 N. Y. 111, 13 Am. Rep. 474; Bish. New Cr. Law, § 824).

To be "legal," possession taken by a mortgagee must have been taken in good faith, free from fraud or wrong, and without violation of any contract relation with the mortgagor. Jaggar v. Plunkett, 106 Pac. 280, 281, 81 Kan. 565, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 935.

The term "legal possessor," as used in Civ. Code Cal. § 3052, providing that a person who makes, alters, or repairs any article of personal property at the request of the owner or legal possessor of the property has a lien upon the same for his reasonable charges, means one who has the right by virtue of his possession to originally contract with reference to the manufacture, alteration, or repair thereof, such as, for example, a lessee or pledgee of the property: some one having a possession coupled with a right of property so that he can contract with reference to it respecting any of the matters enumerated in the section. Where defendants engaged another to peel tanbark from trees on their land and deliver it at a certain place, and the latter hired plaintiffs to do the work, and no contractual relationship existed between defendants and plaintiffs, plaintiffs were not entitled to a lien for their wages on bark peeled by them remaining on defendants' land. Quist v. Sandman, 99 Pac. 204, 209, 154 Cal. 748.

LEGAL PRESUMPTION

"The French Civil Code, calls all 'presumptions' consequences that the law or the judge draws from a known fact to an unknown fact, and a 'legal presumption' one that a special law applies to certain facts. Cachard's Translation, arts. 1349, 1350." In re Cowdry's Will, 60 Atl. 141, 142, 77 Vt. 359, 3 Ann. Cas. 70.

As said by Doe, J., in Lisbon v. Lyman, 49 N. H. 553, 563: "A 'legal presumption' is not evidence. In civil cases it is the finding of a fact or the decision of a point, when there is no testimony, and no inference of fact from the absence of testimony, on the subject or when the evidence is balanced. And often the fact is also found, or the decision made, by the rule of law which imposes the burden of proof on the party having the affirmative." In his Treatise on Evidence, Prof. Thayer says (page 314): "Presumptions are aids to reasoning and argumentation, which assume the truth of certain matters for the purpose of some given inquiry. They may be grounded on the general experience or probability of any kind, or merely on policy and convenience. On whatever basis they rest, they operate in advance of argument or evidence, or irrespective of it, by taking something for granted; by assuming its existence." And on page 337 this language occurs: "While it is obvious, then, that a presumption—i. e., the assumption, intentment, taking for granted—which we call by that name, accomplishes, for the moment at any rate, the work of reasoning and evidence it should be remarked, as I have said before, that neither this result, nor the rule which requires it, constitutes in itself either evidence or reasoning. This might seem too plain to require mention if it were not for the loose phraseology in which courts sometimes charge the jury, leaving to it in a lump 'all the evidence and the presumptions' as if they were capable of being weighed together as one mass of probative matter." If there is a legal presumption that the ordinary man performs his duty and is not negligent, it is no more competent as evidence to prove the fact in a particular case, in the absence of other proof, than are other rules of law, including the presumption of innocence of criminal cases. Wright v. Boston & M. R. Co., 65 Atl. 687, 691, 74 N. H. 128, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 832, 124 Am. St. Rep. 949.

A "legal presumption" is one which the law will recognize. Thus where testator retained custody of his will or had ready access to it, and it could not be found after his death, a "legal presumption" would be raised that the will and codicil were destroyed by him animo revocandi. Hutson v. Hartley, 74 N. E. 197, 199, 200, 72 Ohio St. 262.

In an action against a physician for malpractice, there is no presumption of the physician's negligence, and the burden of showing it is upon plaintiff. A true "legal presumption" is in the nature of evidence, and is to be weighed as such. The rules which impose the burden of proof upon certain parties, when designated as presumptions, are dry presumptions, having only a technical existence, and barren of all probative character when the case goes to the jury on conflicting evidence. Sheldon v. Wright, 67 Atl. 807, 814, 815, 80 Vt. 298.

LEGAL PROCEEDINGS

Expenses of legal proceedings, see Expenses.

Attachment proceedings are "legal proceedings" within Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 3a (3), 30 Stat. 546, which makes it an act of bankruptcy for an insolvent person to permit a creditor to obtain a preference through legal proceedings. In re Putman, 193 Fed. 464, 473.

A landlord within four months before the filing of a petition in bankruptcy may levy his distress and thereby acquire a lien which a subsequent bankruptcy adjudication would not render void or voidable, the lien thereby secured not being under the law of Maryland a lien secured "by legal proceedings" within Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67c, 30 Stat. 564. In re Potee Brick Co. of Baltimore City, 179 Fed. 525, 530.

All goods on demised premises, by the common law, or the statutory law of Pennsylvania, may be considered as under a quasi pledge to the landlord, which gives superiority to the specific lien acquired by a distraint. Such a lien is not one obtained through legal proceedings within Bankr. Act. July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67f, 30 Stat. 565, and is not divested by the bankruptcy of the tenant within four months thereafter, and the same rule applies where the bankrupt was a subtenant, admitted to the premises by the lessee without the landlord's consent. In re West Side Paper Co., 162 Fed. 110, 112, 89 C. C. A. 110, 15 Ann. Cas. 384.

The general lien of a landlord for rent, given by Code Ga. § 2795, to "date from the time of the levy of a distress warrant to enforce the same," is not created by judgment, nor obtained through legal proceedings, within the meaning of the bankrupt act of July 1, 1898 (30 Stat. 565, c. 541), § 67f, and is therefore not defeated by the provisions of that section, although the levy was made within four months of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy against the tenant. Henderson v. Mayer, 32 Sup. Ct. 699, 700, 225 U. S. 631, 56 L. Ed. 1233.

A lien on a bankrupt's assets secured by filing a creditor's bill within four months of the filing of a bankruptcy petition is one secured "by legal proceedings," which by Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67c, 30 Stat. 541, is avoided by the adjudication. In re Potee Brick Co. of Baltimore City, 179 Fed. 525, 530.

LEGAL PROCESS

The term "legal process" means a process fair on its face, and one charged with resisting an officer in the levying of an execution issued by a justice of peace on a judgment rendered by him may show that the judgment was void and that the officer had knowledge thereof, though the state to make out a case need not show that the execution had behind it a legal judgment. State v. Knapf, 96 Pac. 1076, 50 Wash. 229, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 66.

The phrase "legal process" means valid legal process. Where a policy provided that, if any change take place in the possession of the property by legal process, it shall avoid the policy, an illegal assessment and a seizure and sale of the insured property thereunder were not a change in the possession by "legal process." Runkle v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 6 Fed. 143, 145.

LEGAL RATE

See Contract Rate.

The expression "legal rate," used in Rev. St. 1890, § 1092, requiring railroads to furnish double-deck cars for the shipment of sheep, and declaring that it shall not be lawful for any railroad to charge for transportation of a double-deck car more than the legal rate of freight allowed for the shipment of stock, means that, as a maximum rate has been fixed for stock of all kinds, the charge for a double-deck car of sheep should not exceed that rate. Wynn v. Wabash R. Co., 86 S. W. 562, 564, 111 Mo. App. 642.

LEGAL RELATION

"Legal relation," as used in the rule that the measure of a succession tax under a will is the "legal relation" borne by the legatee to the testator, is the relation established by the law, and, while it usually follows the natural relation, it does not in all cases. In re Cook's Estate, 79 N. E. 991, 993, 187 N. Y. 253.

LEGAL REMEDY

A "personal remedy" is where the injured party seeks redress of the party who inflicted the wrong and thus obtains a remedy for the wrong committed, while a "legal remedy" is where the injured party seeks his remedy by and through the intervention of the courts. People ex rel. Stidger v. Horan, 86 Pac. 263, 34 Colo. 336, 114 Am. St. Rep. 163.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVE

The phrase "legal representatives" usually means executors or administrators, but it cannot, of course, mean executors and administrators only, in whatever instrument it may appear, and with reference to all the different subject-matters treated of in the multitude of varying instruments, and no matter what the plain purpose of the maker of the instrument using the phrase may be in using it. It may, in various circumstances, mean executors, administrators, heirs, legatees, assignees, and devisees, even while legatees or devisees are strangers; in short, it may mean any person or corporation taking the beneficial interest in property, real or personal. Allen v. Alliance Trust Co., 36 South. 285, 286, 84 Miss. 319.

The terms "legal representatives," "personal representatives," etc., are often used in statutes and instruments of writing so as to include all persons who stand in place or represent the interests of another, either by his act or by operation of law. In re Harton's Estate, 62 Atl. 1058, 1059, 213 Pa. 499, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 939.

maining half be distributed among his legal heirs and legal representatives according to the laws of distribution. Held, that the term "legal representatives" was without precise determinate meaning, and was used merely to indicate that testator intended that all who would take under the statute of distribution were entitled to share under the term "legal heirs," and hence did not include children of testator's first cousins who died before testator, they not being entitled to distribution in intestacy, as provided by Gen. St. 1902, § 398. Dickerman v. Alling, 76 Atl. 362, 363, 83 Conn. 342.

A certificate issued by a fraternal insurance association payable to the estate of a member is payable to his "legal representative" within the by-laws of the association authorizing certificates to be made payable to legal representatives of members. Vaughan's Adm'r v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 149 S. W. 937, 938, 149 Ky. 587.

As administrators or executors

The phrase "legal representatives" ordinarily means executors or administrators where not qualified by context. An act of Congress (Act April 28, 1904, c. 1759, 33 Stat. 436) provided a pension of $1,000 which should be exempt from payment of debts of decedent, to be paid to the legal representatives of any railway clerk killed while on duty. Held, that the words, "legal representatives," were used in their ordinary sense; the intent being that the money should be paid to the administrator to be distributed according to the laws of the state of decedent's domicile, saving the payment of debts. Wolfe v. Wolfe, 134 S. W. 33, 34, 154 Mo. App. 218.

The phrase "legal representatives," in its ordinary acceptation, means executors and administrators, though it may mean next of kin or descendants. Kelsay v. Eaton, 76 Pac. 770, 772, 45 Or. 70, 106 Am. St. Rep. 662.

"The words 'legal representatives' or 'personal representatives' have also been used as designating executors or administrators, and not next of kin, in acts of Congress giving actions for wrongs or injuries causing death." Briggs v. Walker, 19 Sup. Ct. 1, 3, 171 U. S. 466, 43 L. Ed. 243.

The words "legal representatives" have a well-recognized meaning in law that are equivalent to executor or administrator, and are technical words, and when used in any legal instrument, and there is nothing in the context or otherwise to explain their meaning, they should be understood in their technical sense. Page v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 135 S. W. 911, 912, 98 Ark. 340.

It may be conceded that the words "legal representatives" frequently mean executors and administrators as used in a policy of insurance payable to insured's wife and children if living at the time of his death, otherwise to the legal representatives or assigns of said member. Hall v. Ayers' Guardian (Ky.) 105 S. W. 911, 913, 914.

Where a will provided that any real property of testatrix that had not been disposed of by her husband at his death should be equally divided between her heirs and legal representatives and his legal representatives, one who was executrix of the husband's will and a devisee thereunder was a "legal representative," of the husband, within the will of testatrix. Gruenewald v. Neu, 74 N. E. 101-103, 215 Ill. 132.

The use of the expression, "heirs and legal representatives" instead of "heirs, executors, and administrators," may, under some circumstances, raise the presumption that those who are beneficially interested and succeed to the property and rights of the decedent are intended. Marsh v. Marsh, 137 N. W. 1122, 1124, 92 Neb. 189.

"The ordinary meaning of the words 'legal representatives' is 'executors and administrators,' and they are to be given that meaning unless there is something in the will properly construed to show that they should have some other meaning." Alexander v. McPeck, 75 N. E. 88, 91, 189 Mass. 34.

"Personal representatives" and "legal representatives" are sometimes used interchangeably, as signifying not only executors or administrators, but also those who legally stand in place of, or represent the interests of, another. Lowry v. City of Duluth, 101 N. W. 1059, 1060, 94 Minn. 95.

Under a life policy in which the insurer agreed with the "insured, his executors, administrators, and assigns," to pay the amount of the policy to insured's "legal representatives," the amount is payable to insured's executors or administrators, and not to his next of kin. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Kansas City Nat. Bank, 97 S. W. 195, 196, 121 Mo. App. 479.

The words "legal representative" are presumed to mean executors and administrators, and that meaning will be attributed to them in any instance, unless by the context or surrounding circumstances it be shown that the words were not so used, but denote some other and different idea. Rockland-Rockport Lime Co. v. Leary, 97 N. E. 43, 47, 203 N. Y. 469, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 62.

The term "legal representatives" of a deceased person will mean the executor or administrator if the subject-matter is personalty, and heirs or devisees if it is realty, within the rule that all the necessary parties to a judgment sought to be reviewed must be the parties to the bill of review, and, if they are dead, their "legal representatives" must be parties. State Fair Ass'n v. Terry, 85 S. W. 87, 89, 74 Ark. 149 (citing Cochran v. Cochran, 17 Atl. 981, 127 Pa. 486; Ralston v. Sharon, 51 Fed. 702; Johnson v.

Van Epps, 110 Ill. 557; Turner v. Berry, 8 Ill. 541).

In wills and other written instruments, the words "legal representatives" are frequently used to mean the persons who succeed beneficially to the property or interest of the deceased. Whether in any given case they are so used, or the executor or administrator is intended, must be determined from a consideration of all of the provisions of the will. Marsh v. Marsh, 137 N. W. 1122, 1124, 92 Neb. 189.

Within an order of a probate court that money be paid to a legatee of testatrix or his "legal representative," his executor or administrator, and not his heirs, is such representative, as that court could not properly undertake to distribute his estate as part of the settlement of testatrix's estate; the ascertainment of his legal heirs being, under Gen. St. 1902, § 394, for that court in the settlement of his estate. Cooley v. Pigott, 80 Atl. 92, 93, 84 Conn. 323.

The words "legal representatives," in a certificate issued by a foreign corporation authorized to issue benefit certificates, which recites that the amount thereof shall be paid to "legal representatives, related to the member as" do not include any of the persons specified in Rev. St. 1909, § 7109, providing that death benefits shall be paid to the families, heirs, blood relatives, affianced husband or wife of, or to persons dependent on, the member, but mean the executor or administrator of the member, and the liability of the corporation is that of a life insurance company, under section 6945, making the defense of suicide unavailable to life insurance companies. Ordelheide v. Modern Brotherhood of America, 139 S. W. 269, 270, 158 Mo. App. 677.

The words "representative" and "legal representative" of a person do not necessarily exclude the administrator or executor, but such words employed in a policy of a benefit association in view of the purposes of the association to benefit the family and heirs of deceased members were not intended to include the administrator of the member referred to in a policy. Tucker v. Knights of Pythias of North and South America, 68 S. E. 796, 797, 135 Ga. 56.

A claim against a city for the instantaneous death of plaintiff's intestate, through the city's negligence, stated that the claim was for damages sustained by his estate, legal representatives, and heirs, and that his estate, legal representatives, and heirs claimed a specified sum as damages. Held, that the words "legal representatives" were not used in their strictly technical sense as executors or administrators, nor was the word "heir" used in its primary and technical sense as one who, by reason of birth in lawful wedlock, inherits real property, but that the expression, "estate, legal representatives, and heirs," was used with the idea of using words broad enough in their significance to include all persons having claims against the city on account of the death, and hence the claim was sufficient as a basis for an action for the benefit of the widow under the statute. Moyer v. City of Oshkosh, 139 N. W. 378, 380, 151 Wis. 586 (citing 4 Words and Phrases, pp. 3241-3264; 5 Words and Phrases, pp. 4070-4079).

Gen. St. 1906, § 3147, provides that, where the death of a minor child is caused by the wrongful act or negligence of a corporation or its agents, the father, as the legal representative of such minor child, may sue for the loss of services of the child and for the mental pain and suffering of the parent or parents. Held, that the damages authorized are personal to the parents, and an action therefor should be by the parent personally, and an administrator of the minor child has no interest in or right to such recovery; the term "legal representative" having reference to the parties benefited by the rights conferred, and not to the administrator or executor of a decedent. Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. Moseley, 53 South. 718, 719, 60 Fla. 186.

Testator devised the residue of his estate to trustees, and directed that, if his wife survived him, they should set apart a third thereof and pay the income to her for life, and at her death the fund should be divided into three parts, one of which should be paid to his son, if surviving testator's wife, otherwise to his issue living at the time of her death, and in default of issue to his legal representatives. He directed the trustees, if the son survived him, to set apart and invest a specified sum and pay the income thereof to the son for life, and at his death to pay the principal to his issue, and in default of issue to his legal representatives. Held, that the words "legal representatives" meant executors and administrators, so that the son took one-third of the trust fund created for the use of the widow if he survived her, and the right to have it administered as a part of his estate by his own executors or administrators, if he died before the widow without issue, and the trust fund created for his own use was also to be turned over to his executors or administrators, if he died without issue. Alexander v. McPeck, 75 N. E. 88, 91, 189 Mass. 34.

Where two beneficiary certificates were payable to testator's mother, who died before he did, and provided that in such case they should be payable to the "legal representatives" of the member, and the articles of incorporation declared the object of the association to be the equitable distribution of the fund among the "families or beneficiaries" of deceased members, and declared that each certificate entitled "the heirs or legal representatives or designated benefi-aries" to $2,000, and testator's will gave each of his two sisters such of his property as they might have in charge at his death, and all the "residue of which I may die seised, real, personal and mixed," absolutely to his affianced, it was held that, while the words "legal representatives" might sometimes be interpreted as "legal heirs," here they must be given their usual meaning and carried the certificates to the executor, and they went to the affianced by the residuary clause. Walker v. Peters, 124 S. W. 35, 36, 139 Mo. App. 681.

The word "heirs" properly means those on whom the law casts the real estate immediately on the death of the ancestor, and the words "legal representatives" mean executors and administrators. These words are to be construed unless from the context of a will it may be seen that testator intended to use them with another meaning. Where a share of an estate consisting of both real estate and personalty was to go to the "heirs or legal representatives" of a deceased legatee, the "heirs," according to the plain meaning of the term, would take the real estate. Where a share of an estate consisting of both real estate and personalty was to go to the "heirs" or "legal representatives" of a deceased legatee, the personalty would go to the next of kin, since to construe "legal representatives" in its primary meaning would make the personalty subject to the testamentary disposition and the debts of the deceased legatee, while the real estate was not. Howell v. Gifford, 53 Atl. 1074, 1077, 64 N. J. Eq. 180 (citing Williams' Ex'rs, 1013).

Testator bequeathed to his wife the balance due on a policy of insurance issued by a company which was neither a fraternal nor a mutual benefit association. The policy provided for payment to the beneficiary, his "legal representatives" or assigns. The application directed that the insurance should be paid "to whom I may direct in my will." Held, that the title vested in the widow, after the satisfaction of a debt to secure which it had been assigned, as executrix, and not as a beneficiary under the policy. Leonard v. Harney, 66 N. E. 2, 173 N. Y. 352.

A fraternal insurance association issued a certificate of membership to a man who named his wife as beneficiary. It provided that if his wife died before he did, he might name another beneficiary, but if he failed to do so, the insurance should be paid to his legal representative. The wife died; he died later; an administrator was appointed to whom the association paid the money. The insured left three children who sued the administrator to recover the money. Held, that the administrator was the legal representative of the deceased within the meaning of that term and was entitled to the money.

Agent

A provision of an insurance policy that the term insured, as used therein, shall include his "legal representatives," does not include his agents. Boston Marine Ins. Co. v. Scales, 49 S. W. 743, 745, 101 Tenn. 628.

Assignees, purchasers, and grantees

The words "legal representative," as used in a statute relating to settlement on public lands, included not only heirs, executors, or administrators of a settler, but his legal assigns. Lapish v. Wells, 6 Greenl. (6 Me.) 175, 185.

An assignment of a patent to two persons named, "and to their legal representatives," to be held and enjoyed by them for their own use and behoof "and for the use and behoof of their legal representatives," is not a mere personal license to the persons named, but the words "legal representatives" mean "assigns" as well as "executors and administrators." Hamilton v. Kingsburg, 11 Fed. Cas. 346, 347, 15 Blatchf. 64.

On the death of a party to an action involving real estate, the heir of the deceased party must be brought in as successor, and hence a contention that the provisions of the Code of Public General Laws, providing that if a party to a suit in equity shall die before final decree, leaving heirs at law or representatives who should be made parties, it shall not be necessary to file an amended bill, do not contemplate that such proceedings should be revived by summoning in the heir, but that they mean, by using the term "legal representative," that the purchaser, and none other, in case of a sale of the land by the fraudulent vendee, should be brought in, is untenable. Sinclair v. Auxillary Realty Co., 57 Atl. 664, 668, 99 Md. 223.

The term "legal representative," as used in a land patent, embraced a representative by contract, a grantee, or assignee, as well as a representative by operation of law. The purchaser of a land claim sold by a Louisiana parish court in administration proceedings is a "legal representative" of the claimant, within the meaning of Act Cong. June 2, 1858, requiring the surveyor general of the district in which a land claimed is located, on satisfactory proof that such claim had been confirmed and is unsatisfied, to issue to the claimant or his "legal representative" a certificate of location of a quantity of land equal to that so confirmed and unsatisfied. Bradley v. Dells Lumber Co., 81 N. W. 394, 396, 105 Wis. 245.

Code Civ. Proc. Cal. § 473, provides that an assignee or grantee is a "legal representative" of the assignor or grantor in regard to the things assigned or granted. Abb. Law Dictionary says that "to represent a person" is to stand in his place, to act his part, exercise his right, or take his share. Brown v. Massey, 76 Pac. 226, 228, 13 Okl. 670.

While in common parlance the expression "legal representatives" means administrators or executors, legally it is not always so exclusive. Under a lease giving the lessor the right to cancel the lease and providing that the covenant and agreements contained therein were binding on the parties and their legal representatives, a grantee of the lessor had a right to cancel the lease. Adler v. Lowenstein, 102 N. Y. Supp. 492, 493, 52 Misc. Rep. 556 (citing Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 6 Sup. Ct. 877, 879, 117 U. S. 591, 597, 29 L. Ed. 999; Warnecke v. Lembca, 71 Ill. 91, 93, 12 Am. Rep. 85).

As assigns

See Assigns.

Descendants

While the term "legal representatives" in its ordinary acceptation means executors and administrators, it may also mean descendants. Kelsay v. Eaton, 76 Pac. 770, 772, 45 Or. 70, 106 Am. St. Rep. 662.

Under a will giving legacies to relatives who shall be living or whose legal representatives shall be living at a certain time, the words "legal representatives" mean children or lineal descendants. Miller v. Metcalf, 58 Atl. 743, 745, 77 Conn. 176.

Testator created a testamentary trust, and provided that the income thereof should be applied to the use of daughters named and a son named, and declared that on the death of the daughters, respectively, the principal held in trust for the daughter dying should be transferred to the children of the deceased daughter, and, in default of children, the property should go to the other children named in the will and to their legal representatives. Held, that the words "legal representatives" meant lineal descendants, though the daughters were illegitimate children of testator. Dwight v. Gibb, 129 N. Y. Supp. 961, 964, 145 App. Div. 223.

The words "legal representatives," as used in a contract for preferential rates between a railroad company and a shipper, which provided that the railroad agreed to transfer logs for such shipper and his assigns at a prescribed rate, and defined the word "assigns" as limited to the shipper's legal representatives in case of death, to his successors in the timber and lumber business in case of his retirement, and to any mill that he might build or purchase, does not include a legatee of the shipper's lumber business under his will. Sullivan v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 35 South. 694, 697, 138 Ala. 650.

In Rev. Civ. St. art. 2248, providing that in actions against executors, etc., neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with the testator, etc., unless called by the opposite party, and providing that the provision shall extend to all actions by or against the heirs or "legal representatives" of a decedent arising out of transactions with the decedent, the reference to heirs and "legal representatives" does not include devisees and legatees, and in an action to cancel a deed given to one since deceased, where it appeared that by a settlement among the defendants certain churches were entitled to an interest in the estate as legatees and other defendants were entitled to an interest as heirs, plaintiff's testimony that the deed to the decedent had been given to secure a debt which had been released by decedent's will was admissible, as against the churches as legatees, but not as against the other defendants as heirs. Emerson v. Scott, 87 S. W. 369, 370, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 65.

The term "legal representatives" of a deceased person will mean the executor or administrator if the subject-matter is personality, and heirs or devisees if it is realty, within the rule that all the necessary parties to a judgment sought to be reviewed must be the parties to the bill of review, and, if they are dead, their "legal representatives" must be parties. State Fair Ass'n v. Terry, 85 S. W. 87, 89, 74 Ark. 149 (citing Cochran v. Cochran, 17 Atl. 981, 127 Pa. 486; Ralston v. Sharon, 51 Fed. 702; Johnson v. Van Epps, 110 Ill. 557; Turner v. Berry, 8 Ill. 541).

Under Laws 1885, p. 698, c. 405, § 6, providing for the delivery of a tax deed to the purchaser, his "legal representatives" or assigns, a deed is properly delivered to the sole devisee of the purchaser's estate, the quoted term not being necessarily confined to executors, administrators, etc. Rosenblum v. Eisenberg, 108 N. Y. Supp. 350, 353, 123 App. Div. 896 (citing Griswold v. Sawyer, 26 N. E. 464, 125 N. Y. 411; Rice's Lessee v. White, 8 Ohio, 216; 2 Blackw. Tax Titles, § 963, and note 1, citing cases; Black, Tax Titles, p. 312; Morehouse v. Phelps, 18 Ill. 472; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Armstrong, 6 Sup. Ct. 877, 117 U. S. 591, 29 L. Ed. 997; Duncan's Lessee v. Walker [Pa.] 1 Yeates, 213; Commonwealth ex rel. Kreber v. Bryan [Pa.] 6 Serg. & R. 81; Wamsley v. Crook, 3 Neb. 344; Lee v. Dill [N. Y.] 39 Barb. 521).

Heirs, next of kin, and distributees

Heirs as including, see Heirs.

Lineal heir as including, see Lineal Heirs.

While the term "legal representatives" ordinarily means executors or administrators, it may be shown to mean next of kin. Wolfe v. Wolfe, 134 S. W. 33, 34, 154 Mo. App. 218; Kelsay v. Eaton, 76 Pac. 770, 772, 45 Or. 70, 106 Am. St. Rep. 662.

P. L. 1898, p. 778, § 168, provides that the orphans' court shall make distribution "to the next of kindred to the intestate in equal degrees, or legally representing their stocks," and section 169 provides that, "in case there be no child, then to the next of kindred of equal degree of or unto the intestate and their legal representatives as aforesaid." Held that the words "legal representatives," as used in section 169, mean legal representatives of their stocks, and, having found a common ancestor of the intestate and the living next of kin, the logical conclusion is that the nearest class of kinsman descending from that ancestor, together from the stock to which representation is limited. Smith v. McDonald, 61 Atl. 453, 454, 69 N. J. Eq. 765.

The term "legal representatives" of a deceased person will mean the executor or administrator if the subject-matter is personality, and heirs or devisees if it is realty, within the rule that all the necessary parties to a judgment sought to be reviewed must be the parties to the bill of review, and, if they are dead, their "legal representatives" must be parties. State Fair Ass'n v. Terry, 85 S. W. 87, 89, 74 Ark. 149 (citing Cochran v. Cochran, 17 Atl. 981, 127 Pa. 486; Ralston v. Sharon, 51 Fed. 702; Johnson v. Van Epps, 110 Ill. 557; Turner v. Berry, 8 Ill. 541).

While it may be conceded that the words "legal representatives" mean executors and administrators, as used in Ky. St. 1904, § 655, providing that when a policy of insurance is effected on one's own life, in favor of some person other than himself, having an insurable interest therein, the lawful beneficiary, other than himself or his "legal representatives," shall be entitled to its proceeds as against creditors and representatives of insured, yet in an assessment insurance policy that the amount should go on his death to his wife (naming her) and his two daughters, if living, otherwise his "legal representatives" should be entitled to the insurance in equal parts, the words mean heirs and distributees. Hall v. Ayer's Guardian (Ky.) 105 S. W. 911, 913, 914.

That the heirs at law of a lessor, who dies intestate, were the only persons who could execute a good and sufficient deed to premises leased with an option to the lessee to purchase, will not make them the "legal representative" contemplated by the lease, to whom notice of a desire to exercise the option was to be given, where, by its terms, the legal representative provided for was not required to execute the deed, but only to deliver it or cause it to be delivered. Rockland-Rockport Lime Co. v. Leary, 97 N. E. 43, 47, 203 N. Y. 469, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 62.

"While technically the words 'legal representatives' mean administrators or executors, they may refer to heirs or next of kin. A 'representative' is one who stands in the place of an owner of real estate as heir, of personality as next of kin. He is one, also, who takes by representation, and in wills and settlements the terms 'representatives' and 'legal representatives' are frequently held to mean heirs and next of kin, and not executors and administrators." Davidson v. Jones, 98 N. Y. Supp. 265, 266, 112 App. Div. 254 (citing Griswold v. Sawyer, 26 N. E. 464, 125 N. Y. 411).

In Davidson v. Jones, 98 N. Y. Supp. 265, 112 App. Div. 253, it was held that though the words "legal representative" in a will devising property to the testator's wife and on her decease, to her children, or to their legal representative, refer technically to executors or administrators, yet they may also mean heirs at law or next of kin, and where used in reference to real estate, they mean heirs of testator's deceased children. In re Allison, 102 N. Y. Supp. 887, 895, 53 Misc. Rep. 222.

Where a testator makes a bequest to his sister, or, in case of her death before his own, to her heirs and legal representatives, the expression "legal representatives" is equivalent to "heirs," and may be regarded as mere surplusage. In re Riesenbergs Estate, 90 S. W. 1170, 1171, 116 Mo. App. 308.

Where there was nothing in the contract of insurance nor in any statute or provision in the charter of the company to indicate that the words "legal representatives" were used in their broader sense to mean heirs at law, and the policy was an endowment payable to the insured if he was alive at the end of 15 years, and to his legal representative if he died before that time, his heirs had no vested interest in the policy by the use of such phrase, which would prevent the insured from assigning the policy. Page v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 135 S. W. 911, 912, 98 Ark. 340.

Gen. St. 1902, § 398, provides that ancestral real estate shall be distributed to the brothers and sisters, and those who legally represent them, of the blood of the ancestor from whom such estate came; that, if there are none such, then to the children of the ancestor, and those who legally represent them; that, if there be none such, then to the brothers and sisters of the ancestor, and those who legally represent them; and that, if there be none such, then it shall be divided in the same manner as other real estate. Held that "legal representatives" means those who inherit property per stirpes as the representatives of a deceased ancestor, in whose place, for the purpose of succession to such property, they stand, and so, where a son as the sole issue of his father died without issue, his mother surviving, ancestral estate which he had inherited from his father did not pass to her as the "legal representative" of the son's children, and hence on the death of the mother the nearest of kin to the son on his father's side were entitled to the property as against the nearest of kin on his mother's side. In re Tuttle's Estate, 59 Atl. 44, 45, 77 Conn. 310 (citing Ketchum v. Corse, 31 Atl. 486, 65 Conn. 89).

In Const. § 193, the phrase "legal or personal representatives," embraces not only the executor or administrator, but the heirs or next of kin, as the case may be, and action for death may be brought by the executor, administrator, heirs, or next of kin, and the widow, children, and administrator may join in an action. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Washington, 45 South. 614, 92 Miss. 129.

By "legal representatives" in a bequest in trust to pay the income to H., nephew of testatrix, and, at his death, the principal to such of his legal representatives "as are related to me by blood," is meant his heirs at law. Hartford Trust Co. v. Wolcott, 81 Atl. 1057, 85 Conn. 134.

A life policy stipulated that the insurer agreed with the "insured, his executors, administrators and assigns," to pay the amount of the policy to the insured's "legal representatives" within a specified time after proof of the death of the insured. The insured, at the time the policy was issued, was unmarried. Held, that the words "legal representatives" meant the insured's executors or administrators, and not his next of kin. New York Life Ins. Co. v. Kansas City Nat. Bank, 97 S. W. 195, 196, 121 Mo. App. 479.

Receiver

A provision in an insurance policy that, where the expression "insured" is used therein it shall include the "legal representatives" of the insured, does not entitle a receiver to take the place of the insured in answer to a demand by the company that the insured shall appear for examination under oath respecting a loss, as required by the policy, although the receiver was appointed for the express purpose of collecting the insurance; the insured having absconded and having been adjudged a bankrupt. Sims v. Union Assur. Soc., 129 Fed. 804, 805, 808.

Spouse

The fact that the statute authorizes proof to be made by the heirs or "legal representatives" does not give the widow, claiming only a dower interest, any title in the land, since the quoted phrase, in its ordinary acceptance, means executor or administrator. Braun v. Mathieson, 116 N. W. 789, 791, 139 Iowa, 409.

Surviving partner

Under the statute prohibiting a party to testify against the opposite party in actions by or against the heirs or legal representatives of a decedent arising out of any transaction with such decedent, etc., a surviving partner, suing for the benefit of the firm, is not a "legal representative" of the deceased partner. Shivel & Stewart v. Greer Bros. (Tex.) 123 S. W. 207, 208.

Trustee in bankruptcy

"The terms 'legal representative' and 'personal representative,' in their commonly accepted sense, mean administrator or executor, though this is not their only definition. They may mean heirs, next of kin, or descendants, and sometimes assignees or grantees. The sense in which the term is to be understood depends somewhat on the intention of the party using it, and is to be gathered, not altogether from its use, but by the surrounding circumstances." Whether a trustee in bankruptcy is a "legal representative" within Act June 3, 1864, § 30, 1:1 Stat. 108, c. 106 (Rev. Stat. §§ 5197, 5198), providing that, where a greater rate of interest has been paid a bank than that allowed by that section, the person paying the same or his "legal representative" may recover back twice the amount of interest so paid, might admit of doubt. Reed v. American-German Nat. Bank, 155 Fed. 233, 236 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, p. 5358; Griswold v. Sawyer, 26 N. E. 464, 125 N. Y. 411).

LEGAL RESIDENCE

As residence, see Residence.

Inhabitant synonymous, see Inhabitan-cy—Inhabitant.

Resident importing, see Resident.

The "legal residence" of a corporation, within a statute providing that actions shall be tried in the county in which defendant resides, etc., is the county designated in its articles of incorporation as the county in which its principal office shall be kept. Woods Gold Min. Co. v. Royston, 103 Pac. 291, 292, 293, 46 Colo. 191.

"There is a broad distinction between a legal and actual residence. A 'legal residence' (domicile) cannot, in the nature of things, coexist in the same person in two states or countries. He must have a legal residence somewhere. He cannot be a cosmopolitan. The succession to movable property, whether testamentary or in case of intestacy, except as regulated by statute, the jurisdiction of the probate of wills, the right to vote, the liability to poll tax, and to military duty, and other things, all depend upon the party's legal residence or domicile. For these purposes, he must have a legal residence. The law will, from facts and circumstances, fix a legal residence for him, unless he voluntarily fixes it himself. His legal residence consists of fact and intention. Both must concur. And when his legal residence is once fixed, it requires both fact and intention to change it. As contradistinguished from his legal residence, he may have an actual residence in another state or country. He may abide in the latter without surrendering his legal residence in the former, provided he so intends. His legal residence, for the purposes above indicated, may be merely ideal, but his actual residence must be substantive. He may not actually abide at his legal residence at all, but his actual residence must be his abiding place." Pickering v. Winch, 87 Pac. 763, 766, 48 Or. 500, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1159 (quoting and adopting definition in Tipton v. Tipton, 8 S. W. 440, 87 Ky. 245; Michael v. Michael, 79 S. W. 74, 75, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 630).

The actual residence is not always the "legal residence" or inhabitancy of a man. The foreign minister actually resides and is personally present at the court to which he is accredited, but his "legal residence" or inhabitancy or domicile are in his own country. Under Code Iowa, § 2906, which requires a chattel mortgage to be recorded in the county where the holder of the property resides, a mortgagor may be a resident of a county, within the meaning of the statute, although his legal domicile is elsewhere; and a mortgage given by a railroad contractor on property in his possession, in a county where he is at work, and in which he actually resides with his family, while engaged in performing his contract, is properly recorded in such county, although his residence there may be only temporary. In re Brannock, 131 Fed. 819, 822, 823.

LEGAL RIGHT

See Mutuality of Legal Right.

A "legal right" is a claim recognizable and enforceable at law. In re Folwell's Estate, 62 Atl. 414, 415, 68 N. J. Eq. 728, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1193.

By "legal rights" are meant rights which have been firmly established, and are undisputed or indisputable. Tacoma R. & Power Co. v. Pacific Traction Co., 155 Fed. 259, 261.

The words "legal right," within the rule relating to uttering forged writings to the effect that the writing forged or counterfeited must be apparently such as will deprive a person of property, estate, or a "legal right," evidently mean a right that may be enforced in a civil action. Commonwealth v. Tabor (Ky.) 104 S. W. 261, 262.

A cause of action is inconceivable separately from the rights which it invades, and a legal right is inconceivable separately from possible infractions of that right. A "legal right" or title in this aspect is the privilege found in law against certain acts or omissions on the part of others. Telulah Paper Co. v. Patten Paper Co., 112 N. W. 522, 524, 132 Wis. 364, 425.

The order of deportation of a Chinese person, who has plainly violated the exclusion act, made by a court of the United States, pursuant to the acts of Congress, is not made in an ordinary justiciable case, and does not deal with "legal rights," as that expression is generally understood. It merely involves the pretended claim to remain in this country of an individual who, against settled American policy and against the positive command of our statutes, has surreptitiously and fraudulently obtruded his unacceptable presence among our people. United States v. Fah Chung, 132 Fed. 109, 110.

LEGAL SEPARATION

The provision of Code, § 906, that "legal separation from bed and board may be granted for drunkenness, cruelty, and desertion," read in connection with the other sections of the Code relating to divorce, and their index or head lines, which plainly contemplate and provide for the two kinds of divorce known to the law before the adoption of the Code, namely, divorce a vinculo and divorce a mensa et thoro, has no application to voluntary deeds of separation, nor does it apply to divorce a vinculo, but means that a divorce a mensa et thoro may be granted for the causes mentioned; the prefixing of the adjective "legal" to the words "separation from bed and board" being only an inartificial mode of expressing the meaning of what would have been better expressed by the use of the word "divorce," instead of the term "legal separation." Maschaur v. Maschaur, 23 App. D. C. 87, 89.

LEGAL SERVICES

"Legal services" are "extraordinary services" within Rev. St. 1898, § 3929, providing that an allowance may be made to administrators for all extraordinary services. In re Ryan's Estate, 94 N. W. 342, 344, 117 Wis. 480.

LEGAL SETTLEMENT

Rev. Pol. Code 1903, §§ 2810, 2812, charge the care of an insane person to a county where he has acquired a "legal settlement," without defining what shall constitute such a settlement. Held, that it must be deemed to have been used with the same meaning as in section 2764, relating to poor and indigent persons, and providing that they acquire a "legal settlement" charging a county with their support by a residence therein, for 90 days which they lose by acquiring a new one or by willful absence from the county for 90 days; it not appearing that a legal supplement was otherwise defined by any statute. In re Bigelow, 96 N. W. 698, 17 S. D. 331.

LEGAL SHARE

The words "legal share," standing alone and unqualified by other expressions in a will whereby testator gave to his wife the legal share of his real estate and personal property, indicate an intention that she shall take one-half of the personal property absolutely and the income of one-half of the real estate for life, in the absence of any children of the parties, and a will whereby testator gave to his wife described property for use as long as she desired, after which the same should be sold by his executors and become a part of his estate, and whereby he declared that the legal share of his real estate and personal property should be paid to his wife as her share, and whereby he gave a legacy in money and the balance of his estate to enumerated relatives, and whereby he directed his executors to dispose of all his estate within a specified time, used the term in such sense. In re Dull's Estate, 71 Atl. 9, 10, 222 Pa. 208, 128 Am. St. Rep. 796.

LEGAL SUBDIVISION

"Legal subdivision," as used in Gen. St. 1901, § 6339, requiring each "legal subdivision of school land to be appraised separately prior to its being exposed to sale, refers to the smallest subdivision under the congressional system of surveying, namely (except where for special reasons lots are platted in more or less irregular shape as in the case of fractional sections), quarter-quarter sections, or 40-acre tracts. Hopper v. Nation, 96 Pac. 77, 78, 78 Kan. 198.

LEGAL SURVEY

Act March 30, 1872 (St. 1871-72, p. 766, c. 531), for the survey of a line dividing particular counties, declaring that the line so surveyed should be conclusive until the Legislature should change it or order another survey, did not repeal Pol. Code, §§ 3969-3972, providing that any county lines not adequately marked should be run and marked by the Surveyor General; and hence a survey under the special act was a "legal survey." Trinity County v. Mendocino County, 90 Pac. 685, 686, 151 Cal. 279.

LEGAL TENDER

As money, see Money.

To constitute a "legal tender" it is essential to prove an actual offer of the sum due, unless the actual production and offer of the money be dispensed with by the express declaration of the creditor that he will not accept it, or by some equivalent act. Greenwood v. Watson, 171 Fed. 619, 621, 96 C. C. A. 421 (citing Buchenau v. Horney, 12 Ill. 336).

A decree requiring payment at a certain time is not complied with by a tender of the amount in "national bank notes." Lawrence v. Staigg, 10 R. I. 581, 598.

A bill of exchange is not "legal tender." United States Health & Accident Ins. Co. v. Clark, 83 N. E. 760, 762, 41 Ind. App. 345.

LEGAL TITLE

See Inchoate Legal Title.

Selsin importing, see Selsin.

A purchaser's interest in land by virtue of a contract of sale is "legal title" within the one-year limitation (Code Supp. 1907, § 3447b), barring the claim of a spouse not joining in a conveyance by the holder of the legal title. Hutchinson v. Olberding, 130 N. W. 139, 140, 150 Iowa, 604.

The phrase "legal title" in Code Civ. Proc. § 368, providing that in an action to recover real property he who establishes a legal title to the premises is presumed to have been possessed thereof within the time required by law, is not necessarily a mere paper title, but such a title as undisputed will sustain an action of ejectment. Aubuchon v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 122 N. Y. Supp. 581, 583, 137 App. Div. 834.

The Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia, referring to a statement in Adams v. Alkire, 20 W. Va. 480, in regard to adverse possession, that "It is entirely immaterial whether this color or claim of title be under a good or bad, a legal or equitable title," say that they "do not think the judge meant to say that an equitable title is color of title. In his statement he includes both color and claim, two distinct things. This is followed by the terms 'legal title' and 'equitable title.' We think that he meant that the terms 'legal' and 'equitable' should be used distributively; 'legal' referring to color of title and 'equitable' to claim." Lewis v. Yates, 59 S. E. 1073, 1075, 62 W. Va. 575.

LEGAL VOTER

Nonregistered electors who may exercise the right to vote at an election by the production of the proof required by L. O. L. § 3463, prescribing the manner in which non-registered electors may establish their right to vote, are "legal voters" within Const. art. 11, § 2, and article 4, § 1a, granting to legal voters the right to amend their municipal charter, and such electors may sign an initiative petition proposing an amendment to the charter. Woodward v. Barbur, 116 Pac. 101, 104, 59 Or. 70.

A county court, in considering a petition for an election to determine whether the sale of liquors shall be prohibited, recited in their order that the matter came before them on the petition of "legal voters" of the county, and that, "it appearing to the court that said petition is signed by more than 10 per cent. of the qualified electors, * * * and has been properly compared and certified to be genuine and is in all respects in due form of law, it is therefore considered and ordered by the court that the prayer of said petition be and the same is hereby granted." Held, that the terms "legal voters" and "qualified electors" as used in the order are not equivalent to "registered voters" as used in Laws 1905, p. 41, providing for the calling of an election to determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited on petition of 10 per cent. of the "registered voters." Roesch v. Henry, 103 Pac. 439-441, 54 Or. 230.

Laws 1905, p. 41, provides that whenever a petition therefor, signed by not less than 10 per cent. of the "registered voters" of any county, shall be filed with the county clerk, the county court shall order an election to determine whether the sale of liquors shall be prohibited, and that, in determining whether any such petition contains the requisite percentage of "legal voters," said percentage shall be based on the total vote in such county for Justice of the Supreme Court at the last preceding general election, provided that in no event shall more than 500 petitioners who are legal voters be necessary upon any such petition, and "the county clerk shall, upon receipt of such petition, immediately file the same, and shall compare the signatures of the electors signing the same with their signatures on the registration books of the election then pending, or, if none pending, with the signatures on the registration books and blanks on file in his office for the preceding general election." Held, that the phrase "legal voters" is a synonym for "registered voters," and that no qualified elector is a competent petitioner for a local option election unless his signature appears on the registration books, the privilege of signing such a petition not being a right of franchise in which all the electors enumerated in Const. art. 2, § 2, may participate, but whether there is a sufficient number of signers is to be determined by comparing such number with the number who last voted for justice, and the number of registered voters in a district is only important for the purpose of comparing the signatures of the petitioners with the signatures on the registration books. Roesch v. Henry, 103 Pac. 439-441, 54 Or. 230.

A nonregistered voter may sign a petition for the nomination of a candidate for a public office, though the statute uses the words "voter" and "legally qualified voter or elector." In re Herman, 96 N. Y. Supp. 144, 145, 108 App. Div. 335.

The General Election Law (P. L. 1898, p. 319) defines the phrase "legal voters" as persons entitled to vote and who do vote at the time and in the manner prescribed in and by the statute on the question or proposition submitted. Murphy v. City of Long Branch (N. J.) 61 Atl. 593, 594.

Revision 1898, Act April 4, 1898, § 185 (P. L. p. 319), declares the meaning of the words "legal voters" to be persons entitled to vote and who do vote at the time and in the manner prescribed in and by the statute upon the question or proposition submitted. Nugent v. City of Newark, 72 Atl. 11, 12, 77 N. J. Law, 425.

A finding by the county court in an order calling the election that a petition for a local option election was signed by "legal" voters, when L. O. L. § 4920, requires such petition to be signed by "registered" voters, would not invalidate the election; "legal" voters being synonymous with "registered" voters as used in the statute. State v. Bilups, 127 Pac. 686, 689, 63 Or. 277.

Article 4, §§ 2 and 3, of the state Constitution, provides that senators and members of assembly shall be elected by the legal voters. "Legal voters" are the male citizens who, by article 2, are given a vote for officers elected by the people. Carpenter v. Cornish, 85 Atl. 240, 243, 83 N. J. Law, 696.

LEGAL WRONG

It is the general rule of law that "a 'legal wrong' is committed whenever a man is dispossessed of his property against his will." De Vries v. Crofoot, 111 N. W. 775-777, 148 Mich. 183.

LEGALITY

Where plaintiffs recovered against a county for taxes paid on an alleged erroneous assessment of a section of land which by mistake of the taxing officers was assessed as containing more land than it in fact contained, the action did not involve the "legality of a tax or assessment," within provisions permitting an appeal to the Supreme Court in certain cases involving the legality of a tax or assessment. Thomas v. Lincoln County, 83 Pac. 18, 24, 41 Wash. 150.

LEGALLY

The conclusion of the court in an action involving the dedication of a street, tried to the court without a jury, that the street was never "legally" dedicated to the public, was properly designated as a conclusion of law, and was reviewable on appeal; the word "legally" clearly indicating that the court referred to a statutory dedication. Sweatman v. Bathrick, 95 N. W. 422, 424, 17 S. D. 138.

LEGALLY ASSESSED

Under Rev. Code Civ. Proc. § 54, making 10 years' possession under color of title, and payment of all taxes "legally assessed," ground for an adjudication of ownership, actual possession and payment of taxes under color of title, and in good faith, for the required period, entitles one to be deemed the legal owner, although the assessment of taxes for one or more of the years may be technically illegal; the term "legally assessed" meaning merely assessed under color of legal authority. Murphy v. Nelson, 102 N. W. 691, 694, 19 S. D. 197.

Mills' Ann. St. § 3807, requires the state board of equalization to make assessments upon railways, and include therein its rights of way, etc., and the revenue act (Laws 1902, c. 2) requires such board to assess all property used or controlled by railroad companies with certain exceptions. Held, that a railroad company in possession of and using land as its right of way was "legally assessed" thereon by the state board of equalization, within the meaning of Sess. Laws 1893, c. 118, § 6 (Rev. St. 1908, § 4089), making every person the legal owner of land who is in the actual possession thereof as stated, for seven successive years, and during such time pays all taxes legally assessed thereon. Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Doelz, 111 Pac. 595, 596, 49 Colo. 48.

LEGALLY AUTHORIZED

See Lawfully Authorized.

LEGALLY CAUGHT

See Fish Legally Caught.

LEGALLY CHARGED

Under policies issued to employers and railroad companies insuring them against damages with which they might be "legally charged" by reason of injuries to employees or to persons or property while being transported, the liability of the insurer arose on the happening of the injury, and not at the time judgment was recovered against the insured for such injury. Ross v. American Employers' Liability Ins. Co., 38 Atl. 22, 23, 56 N. J. Eq. 41.

LEGALLY COMPETENT

The words "legally competent" mean that the person named as executor must be of legal age, of sound mind and memory, and untainted by conviction for a crime which renders the convicted person infamous. Clark v. Patterson, 114 Ill. App. 312, 316.

LEGALLY CONSTITUTED COURT

A de facto court is a "legally constituted court" within a habeas corpus statute. State ex rel. Bales v. Bailey, 118 N. W. 676, 678, 106 Minn. 138, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 775, 130 Am. St. Rep. 592, 16 Ann. Cas. 338.

LEGALLY DISCHARGED

The phrase "legally discharged," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 2972, providing that every guardian of an incompetent person shall have the custody of the person of his ward and his estate until such guardian is "legally discharged," does not mean until he is discharged by an order of the court, but his authority is terminated under section 2973 ipso facto by an adjudication of restitution to capacity. In re Scheuer's Estate, 79 Pac. 244, 246, 31 Mont. 606.

LEGALLY DUE

Where a city tax was assessed against a bankrupt's property on May 1, 1899, prior to his being adjudged a bankrupt on August 8th, such taxes became "legally due and owing" on the day they were assessed, within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, § 64, c. 541, 30 Stat. 563, making such taxes a preferred claim against the bankrupt's estate, though the taxes were not payable until after the adjudication. In re Flynn, 134 Fed. 145.

The franchise tax assessed under Gen. St. N. J. 1895, §§ 251, 252, 257, 258, 260, on the basis of the capital stock of a corporation, issued and outstanding on the 1st of January preceding the making of the return, is "legally due and owing" within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, § 64a, providing that taxes must be paid in advance of the payment of dividends to creditors, although such tax may not have been collectible until after the corporation was adjudged a bankrupt. State of New Jersey v. Anderson, 27 Sup. Ct. 137, 141, 203 U. S. 483, 51 L. Ed. 294.

LEGALLY LIABLE

Where a bill of lading contained a provision that neither the company nor any connecting carrier shall be liable for damages to or the destruction of the cotton by fire, and the consignor of the cotton gave up insurance thereon in his favor and took out a policy in favor of the carrier, fully protecting it from loss or destruction by fire, such insurance was a valid consideration for the promise not to insist on recovery of damage on account of the destruction by fire contained in the bill of lading, for it fully protected the carrier from loss or damage by fire for which it was "legally liable," and this included liability resulting from the negligence of its own employees, and for which it was unquestionably liable to the consignor, notwithstanding the exemption in the bill of lading. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cau, 120 Fed. 15, 16, 57 C. C. A. 35.

LEGALLY REQUIRED

Code Civ. Proc. § 1989, provides that a witness is not obliged to attend as witness before any court out of the county in which he resides, unless the distance be less than 30 miles from his residence to the place of trial, and by Pol. Code, § 4300g, witnesses, when "legally required" to attend the superior court in civil cases, are entitled to mileage actually traveled. Witnesses for the plaintiff residing 200 miles from the place of trial, without subpoena, and on the request of the plaintiff, voluntarily went from their residence to the place of trial and testified. Held, that they were not "legally required" to attend, and hence were not entitled to the mileage allowed by section 4300g, and that an allowance for mileage could not be taxed in plaintiff's cost bill. Naylor v. Adams, 114 Pac. 997, 998, 15 Cal. App. 353.

A witness may waive the manner of service and accept service in some other form though not in strict compliance with the statute, and he will be required to obey a subpoena so served, so that such witnesses were "legally required to attend," within Comp. Laws 1907, § 994, so as to be entitled to mileage fees from their home to the place of trial. Holt v. Nielson, 109 Pac. 470, 475, 37 Utah, 566.

LEGALLY SUFFICIENT

Under L. O. L. § 3474, providing that the court, on a showing that any petition for a referendum is not legally sufficient, may enjoin the Secretary of State and all other officers from certifying or printing the title and number of the measure on the official ballot, the petition, to be "legally sufficient," must be a valid petition, signed by legal voters, and complying substantially with the requirements of the law; and, although a petition appears regular on its face, the court may inquire into its legal sufficiency. State v. Olcott, 125 Pac. 303, 304, 62 Or. 277.

LEGATEE

See General Legatee; Residuary Legatee; Sole Legatee; Specific Legatee.

Societies and corporations to whom legacies are given by a will are "legatees," within the meaning of a clause of the will providing that property of testatrix, not otherwise disposed of, shall be sold, and the money "paid to the legatees hereinbefore named." So, also, where the will provided that the property of testatrix otherwise undisposed of shall be sold, and proceeds paid to the "legatees hereinbefore named" in specified proportions, trustees previously named in the will and who are thereby given the legal title to the trust fund during the period of trust are "legatees," and as such take the legal title to whatever share of the property not otherwise disposed of the trust fund is entitled. Crawford v. Mound Grove Cemetery Ass'n, 75 N. E. 998, 1001, 218 Ill. 399.

Testator by olographic will, after having bequeathed to his wife the homestead with furniture, etc., together with a one-fourth interest in the residue after paying all bequests made, bequeathed the remaining three-fourths of the residue to his three other children, and provided that, if any of the "legatees" died before testator's death, then the legacy provided for him or her should be divided equally among the residuary legatees. Held, that the word "legatees" was used in an ordinary nontechnical sense to include bequests of both real and personal property, and that, under the rule that the testator's intention, as disclosed by the language used, must control, such term included the bequest to the wife, and that on her predeceasing the testator her share became a part of the residue within the substitutionary clause. In re Henderson's Estate, 119 Pac. 496, 498, 161 Cal. 353.

A will provided that upon the death of the life tenant the remainder should be divided pro rata among the legatees named in the will. If the word "legatees" was intended to indicate the five persons named as such in the will, the entire estate could not be disposed of, and, if testator had so intended, he could easily have called them by name. In another clause providing for abatement of legacies, a certain process of proportion was ordained necessarily applicable only to the beneficiaries who survived testator. Held, that "legatees" should be construed to mean only those who survived testator, and thus became legatees in the proper import of the term. In re Hoffman, 124 N. Y. Supp. 680, 681, 67 Misc. Rep. 334.

Children

Where testator devises stock in trust for his daughter, one of the trustees being also an executor, and by another item directs that the executors shall hold it, together with other stock, the dividends of which are disposed of by the will, until a designated time, in the meantime paying the dividends and profits to each of said "legatees," and provides that, if any of the legatees die before such time without children, the dividends so bequeathed to each legatee, as well as the stock, shall be distributed among his surviving children, the words "legatees" and "children" are used interchangeably, and, as to that item of the will, synonymously, so that the dividends are payable directly to the beneficiary of the trust, and not to the executors as trustees. Lamar v. Harris, 48 S. E. 932, 933, 121 Ga. 285.

As creditor

See Creditor.

Devisee

Devisee as including, see Devisee.

The terms "legatee" and "devisee" are more strictly interpreted as referring the one to personalty and the other to realty, in the construction of statutes than in the construction of wills and deeds, and, where a deed describes the grantor as the only heir and legatee of a certain person, the word "legatee" may be regarded as meaning devisee of land as well as donee of personalty. Weigel v. Green, 75 N. E. 913, 918, 218 Ill. 227.

"Legacy and devise" and "legatee and devisee" are often used as interchangeable phrases in wills and everyday conversation, and therefore courts would not feel fettered to any nice construction, where subject-matter or context shows the words were used interchangeably and as of the same import. But such popular and loose construction is hardly permissible in view of the statutory rule of hermeneutics. Desloge v. Tucker, 94 S. W. 283, 286, 196 Mo. 587.

Although the words "devise" and "devisee" properly and technically apply only to real estate, and the words "legacy" and "legatee" only to personal property, they have been made interchangeable by Ky. St. 1903, § 467, which provides that "the words 'legatee' and 'devisee' shall each be held to convey the same idea." Roberts v. Chenoweth (Ky.) 112 S. W. 625, 627.

LEGION

"League" and "legion" are of entirely different meanings; "league" being defined as "an alliance of persons," and "legion" as "a military body or organization." People ex rel. Felter v. Rose, 80 N. E. 293, 295, 225 Ill. 496.

LEGISLATION

See Class Legislation; Exclusive Legislation; Expository Legislation; Municipal Legislation; Specially Named Legislation.

See, also, General Law; Special Law.

The Legislature at a special session has all the power it has at a regular session, except so far as restrained by the Constitution, and the limitation by article 3, § 40, providing that at such sessions there shall be no "legislation" on subjects not designated by the Governor, does not preclude the appointment of an investigating committee to obtain information for future use, even on a subject not submitted by the Governor; the word "legislation" having a well-defined meaning, and including only the enactment, repeal, and amendment of laws. Ex parte Wolters, 144 S. W. 531, 538, 64 Tex. Cr. R. 238 (Davidson, P. J., dissenting).

The word "legislation," as used in Const. §§ 76, 246, providing, respectively, that at a special session of the Legislature there shall be no legislation upon subjects other than those designated in the call for the session except by vote of two-thirds of each House, and that no railroad shall have the benefit of any future legislation by general or special laws, refers to the enactment of statutes and is not descriptive of the processes by or through which laws are perfected by constituted authority, and hence such sections do not forbid the introduction of bills not within the subjects specially designated in the proclamation, unless the named proportion of the respective Houses sanction it. State ex rel. Woodward v. Skeggs, 46 South. 268, 271, 154 Ala. 249.

Const. art. 14, declares that the General Assembly may propose constitutional amendments, each amendment being embraced in a separate bill, by three-fifths of all members elected to each of the two houses, which bill shall be published by order of the Governor for a specified time before the election at which the amendment shall be submitted to the voters in a form to be prescribed by the General Assembly. Many provisions of the Constitution refer to the "General Assembly" in a manner indicating that the Governor is not included within the term. By the Constitutions of 1776, 1851, and 1864 the Governor was given no authority to veto a proposed constitutional amendment. Const. 1867, art. 2, § 17, declares that, to guard against hasty and partial legislation, every "bill" which shall have passed the House of Delegates and the Senate shall be presented to the Governor before it becomes a "law." Only a majority of both houses is required to adopt legislative measures. Held, that a proposal to amend the Constitution is not "legislation," and the term "General Assembly" in article 14 does not include the Governor; and hence a bill proposing a constitutional amendment, and having appended to it no measures essentially legislative, need not be submitted to the Governor for his approval. Warfield v. Vandiver, 60 Atl. 538-543, 101 Md. 78, 4 Ann. Cas. 692.

When an incumbent of an office is removed by the action of the Legislature by abolishing the office or terminating his term, the officer is popularly said to be "legislated out of office." This colloquial term expresses with the precision of the logician the character of the removal. It is "legislation." People ex rel. Devery v. Coler, 65 N. E. 956, 959, 173 N. Y. 103.

LEGISLATIVE

The word "legislative" is applied to the organ or organs of government which makes the law. People v. Salsbury, 96 N. W. 936, 938-941, 134 Mich. 537 (citing Webst. Dict.).

LEGISLATIVE ACT

The filling of vacancies in a city council by the council is not a "legislative act," and therefore no aye and nay vote is necessary; Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8652, requiring the clerk of the common council to enter ayes and nays on the passage of every ordinance and resolution applying only to legislative acts. Wagner v. State ex rel. Walker, 91 N. E. 1, 2, 173 Ind. 603.

The creation of reclamation districts and the setting off of lands and the fixing of the boundaries of such districts are legislative acts, within the power of the Legislature, and the Legislature can neither be compelled to act or to refrain from acting, or controlled by any other power of government when it has acted within constitutional limitations. Inglin v. Hoppin, 105 Pac. 582, 583, 156 Cal. 483.

Judicial act distinguished

An act is a "judicial" one where it undertakes to determine a question of right or obligation or of property as the foundation on which it proceeds. A "judicial act" determines what the law is and what the rights of parties are in reference to transactions already had; a "legislative act" determines what the law shall be in future cases. Newell v. Franklin, 74 Atl. 1009, 1011, 80 R. I. 258; In re County Commissioners of Counties Comprising Seventh Judicial Dist., 98 Pac. 557, 560, 22 Okl. 435 (quoting and adopting definition in Sinking Fund Cases).

"A 'legislative act' is one which prescribes a general rule of conduct." A municipal ordinance providing for the paving of a street at the cost of the property benefited thereby to the extent of the benefit, being a judicial and not a legislative act, is invalid because passed without notice to the property owners affected thereby. Sears v. Atlantic City, 84 Atl. 1062, 1063, 73 N. J. Law, 710, 118 Am. St. Rep. 724.

The official action of a legal body which is the result of judgment and discretion is a "judicial act" rather than a "legislative act," and so too an act which determines the rights and duties of parties under existing law, with relations to existing facts, is said to be judicial rather than legislative. Gulnac v. Board of Chosen Freeholders, 84 Atl. 998, 1000, 74 N. J. Law, 548, 122 Am. St. Rep. 405.

State courts, in reviewing orders of the public service commission, act judicially and not "legislatively." Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Stevens, 172 Fed. 595, 600.

When the public service commission, on complaint after hearing and the taking of evidence, entered an order requiring that complainants stop its interstate trains at a station, the commission's act was "legislative" and not judicial. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Stevens, 172 Fed. 595, 606.

The passage of a city ordinance granting a franchise to a public service corporation involves "legislative action" only, and such action cannot be reviewed by a writ of certiorari. Tenny v. City of Columbia, 92 Pac. 895, 896, 48 Wash. 150.

That which distinguishes a "judicial" from a "legislative" act is that the one is a determination of what the law is in relation to some existing thing already done or happened, while the other is a predetermination of what the law shall be for the regulation of future cases falling under its provisions. Tyson v. Washington County, 110 N. W. 634, 636, 78 Neb. 211, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 350 (citing and adopting definition in Cooley. Const. Lim.).

Establishment of rates as legislative or judicial act

The fixing of water rates by a city, when not a matter of contract, is a "legislative function" rather than a judicial function. City of Pocatello v. Murray, 173 Fed. 382, 385 (citing Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 14 Sup. Ct. 1047, 154 U. S. 397, 38 L. Ed. 1014; Southern Pac. Co. v. Colorado Fuel & Iron Co., 101 Fed. 779, 42 C. C. A. 12).

The function of fixing railroad rates is a "legislative function." Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Campbell, 173 Fed. 957, 973, 974.

The establishment of railway passenger rates by the Virginia Corporation Commission is not res judicata in a suit which seeks injunctive relief on the ground that the rates are confiscatory, although such commission for some purposes is a court, and acted only after hearing and investigation, since proceedings to establish rates are legislative, and not judicial, in their nature. Prentiss v.

Atlantic Coast Line Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 67, 69, 211 U. S. 210, 53 L. Ed. 150.

Injunctive relief against railway passenger rates as fixed by the Virginia State Corporation Commission may be granted by a federal court if such rates are confiscatory, although, for some purposes, the commission is a court, since proceedings to establish rates are legislative, and therefore are not comprehended by the provision of Rev. St. § 720, forbidding federal courts from enjoining proceedings in state courts, which provision looks to the character of the proceedings, not the character of the body. Prentiss v. Atlantic Coast Line Co., 29 Sup. Ct. 67, 69, 211 U. S. 210, 53 L. Ed. 150.

LEGISLATIVE AUTHORITY

The words "legislative authority," as used in Const. art. 11, § 8, have no greater significance than such words as "common council or other legislative body" would have had. They were simply intended to designate the particular body, which it was recognized would exist under some name or other in every municipality, as the proper official agency to submit propositions for amendments to charters, and were not intended to define the powers of that body or place it in a position where it would be beyond restrictions by the organic act of the city. Hence the "initiative" provision of the charter of Los Angeles, giving power to the electors to adopt ordinances, is not shown to be unconstitutional because of the words "legislative authority" being used by the Constitution to designate the ordinary legislative body of a city, in providing for submission by legislative authority of the city of a proposed charter amendment to the voters of the city. In re Pfahler, 88 Pac. 270, 278, 150 Cal. 71, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1092, 11 Ann. Cas. 911.

The term "legislative authority of a city," as used in Laws 1903, p. 364, c. 175, as amended by Laws 1907, p. 192, c. 99, providing that the legislative authority of a city having control of any public street shall have power to grant authority for the construction of street railways thereon of which the motive power is other than steam, and to prescribe the terms and conditions, and in Const. art. 11, § 10, providing that city charters may be amended by proposals therefor, submitted by legislative authority of the city to the electors thereof, etc., and in numerous statutes, means the mayor and council, and hence the mayor and council had the sole power to prescribe the terms on granting a street railway franchise; and an ordinance passed by the city council, and approved by the mayor, granting such a franchise is valid, notwithstanding an amendment to the city charter requiring the council to submit street railway franchises to the voters for their approval. Benton v. Seattle Electric Co., 96 Pac. 1033, 1035, 50 Wash. 156.

LEGISLATIVE BOARD

Acts 1906, pt. 1, c. 1, empowering cities of the first class to construct a system sewerage, authorizing the mayor to appoint a commission who may appoint an engineer, secretary, and treasurer, and determine what system of sewerage is most expedient, and report the same to the council, etc., is not in conflict with Const. § 160, providing that the mayor, police judges, members of legislative boards, etc., shall be elected by qualified voters; the commission not being a "legislative board." Miller v. City of Louisville (Ky.) 99 S. W. 284, 285.

LEGISLATIVE BODY

A "legislative body" is any body of persons authorized to make laws or rules for the community represented by them. It is one capable of or pertaining to the enactment of laws. The common council of a city or town is the local legislature of that city or town. Burke v. Wood, 162 Fed. 533, 538.

Bourlier defines "legislative officers" as "those whose duties relate mainly to the enactment of laws." The board of aldermen of the city of New York is a "legislative body," within the Civil Service Law, providing that the unclassified service shall comprise officers and employés of a legislative body. As the services rendered by the appointees in the office of the city clerk and clerk of the board of aldermen are in the main legislative, such appointees are in the unclassified service, though such appointees are not directly appointed by the board of aldermen, but by the city clerk himself elected by the board. Such employés are in the unclassified service, though they may also aid the clerk in the discharge of other duties not legislative. O'Grady v. Polk, 116 N. Y. Supp. 290, 291, 132 App. Div. 47.

Under N. Y. Const. art. 3, § 26, providing that the powers and duties of a board of supervisors may be devolved upon the municipal assembly, etc., or other "legislative body," the words "or other legislative body" mean the legislative body of the city by whatever name it may be designated. Willcox v. McClennan, 95 N. Y. Supp. 941, 942, 47 Misc. Rep. 465.

LEGISLATIVE BUSINESS

Under Const. art. 4, § 8, relating to extra sessions of the Legislature, and providing that it shall transact no "legislative business" other than that for which it is especially convened, or which is called to its attention by the Governor, except by a two-thirds vote of each house, the confirmation by the Senate of executive appointments to office cannot be regarded as "legislative business," since such confirmation is not essentially legislative in its nature, and does not require the co-operation of the House of Representatives. In re Advisory Opinion to the Governor, 59 South. 782, 786, 64 Fla. 16.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT

The "legislative department" within Const. art. 3, dividing the powers of government into the legislative, executive, and judicial departments, is composed of the body enacting laws for the state or, by delegation, for minor subdivisions and municipalities. Witter v. Cook County Com'rs, 100 N. E. 148, 149, 256 Ill. 616.

LEGISLATIVE FUNCTION

Const. art. 3, dividing the powers of government into the legislative, executive, and judicial departments, and prohibiting the exercise of any power belonging to any department by any person belonging to another department, does not mean that the legislative, executive, and judicial powers shall be kept so entirely separate and distinct as to have no connection with or dependence on each other, and it is a "legislative function" to provide places for holding courts and for the expenses of the judicial system and the compensation of judicial officers, and the Legislature may invest the board of county commissioners with the custody of property of the county, though the property is used in the exercise of judicial power by the judicial department; and, though a sheriff and clerk are essential to a court and to the exercise of judicial power, the former performs executive and the latter clerical duties only. Witter v. Cook County Com'rs, 100 N. E. 148, 149, 256 Ill. 616.

The function exercised by voters or a representative body upon whose approval the inception of a franchise grant by the Legislature is made conditional is not the exercise of a "legislative function." It is the exercise of the function of "referendum," which is not legislative. Duffield v. Ashurst, 100 Pac. 820, 825, 12 Ariz. 360.

LEGISLATIVE OFFICER

"Legislative officers" are those whose duties relate mainly to the enactment of laws. State v. Kelly, 77 S. W. 996, 997, 103 Mo. App. 711 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.); O'Grady v. Polk, 116 N. Y. Supp. 290, 291, 132 App. Div. 47 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict.).

LEGISLATIVE POWER

See Full Legislative Powers.

See, also, Public Power.

The "legislative power" of government is that which makes the laws. In re Appointment of Revisor of Statutes, 124 N. W. 670, 671, 141 Wis. 592, 18 Ann. Cas. 1176.

"Legislative power" is the power to prescribe the rules of civil conduct. Schaake v. Dolley, 118 Pac. 80, 82, 85 Kan. 598, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 877, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 254.

"Legislative power," within Const. art. 4, § 1, providing that the legislative power shall be vested in the General Assembly, is the power to make laws. Merchants' Ex- change of St. Louis v. Knott, 111 S. W. 565, 571, 212 Mo. 616.

The words "legislative power," used in Const. § 29, providing that the legislative power shall be vested in a House of Representatives, etc., is a comprehensive phrase, meaning all powers that appertain to or are usually exercised by a legislative body. Booth's Ex'r v. Commonwealth ex rel. Jefferson County Attorney, 113 S. W. 61, 62, 130 Ky. 88, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 592.

The term "legislative power," as used in section 1 of article 4 of the Constitution, declaring that legislative power shall be vested in the General Assembly, elected by the people, means the power to enact laws, or to declare what the law shall be. It is the power to enact new rules for the regulation of future conduct, rights, and controversies. It does not mean that every act of officers created by the Legislature must be expressly prescribed by the lawmaking power. People v. Roth, 94 N. E. 953, 954, 249 Ill. 532, Ann. Cas., 1912A, 100.

Theoretically the "legislative power" is the authority to make, order, and repeal laws. Richardson v. Young, 125 S. W. 664, 668, 122 Tenn. 471.

The power to carry into effect Const. U. S. art. 4, § 4, providing that the United States shall guarantee to every state in the Union a republican form of government, is a "legislative power" and resides in Congress; and Congress may delegate to the President the power to determine whether the Constitution of a new state is republican in form. Frantz v. Autry, 91 Pac. 193, 214, 18 Okl. 561.

Whether or not a state has ceased to be republican in form within the meaning of the guaranty in Const. art. 4, § 4, because of its adoption of the Initiative and referendum, is not a judicial question, but a political one, which is solely for Congress to determine. Pacific States Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. State of Oregon, 32 Sup. Ct. 224, 228, 223 U. S. 118, 36 L. Ed. 377.

The words "legislative power," as used in Const. art. 4, § 1, conferring legislative power on the General Assembly, mean the power or authority, under the Constitution or form of government, to make, alter, and repeal laws and to pass any law within the ordinary functions of legislation not delegated to the federal government or prohibited by the state Constitution, not transferring, however, from the people fundamental legislative power. Ellingham v. Dye, 99 N. E. 1, 4, 178 Ind. 336.

The granting to a municipal corporation of power to pass all necessary ordinances for the protection of the safety of citizens is not an infringement of the maxim that "legislative power" may not be delegated.

Sluder v. St. Louis Transit Co., 88 S. W. 648, 850, 189 Mo. 107, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 186.

By the provision in the federal Constitution that all "legislative powers" herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States is meant that Congress keeping within the limits of its power and observing the restrictions imposed by the Constitution may in its discretion enact any statute appropriate to accomplish the objects for which the national government was established. The powers of the federal government were not exceeded by the enactment of Rev. St. § 1782, making it a misdemeanor for a United States senator to receive or agree to receive compensation for services rendered before any department, in relation to any proceeding in which the United States is interested. Burton v. United States, 26 Sup. Ct. 688, 693, 202 U. S. 344, 50 L. Ed. 1057, 6 Ann. Cas. 392.

The authority granted to a city council to grade and pave streets and sidewalks is "legislative" in character, so that the amount of the improvement, its kind and character, must first be ascertained by the city council and cannot be delegated to any other official or committee. Harton v. Town of Avondale, 41 South. 934, 939, 147 Ala. 458.

Act May 29, 1908 (Sess. Laws 1907-08, p. 453, c. 46, § 1), providing that upon the recommendation of the Supreme Court the Governor shall appoint an additional judge "for the time recommended by the court" for a district which has such an unusual number of cases awaiting trial that a thorough and effective administration of justice cannot be secured, is, at least as to the fixing of the term of office of such additional judge by the Supreme Court, a delegation of legislative power to the judicial branch of the government, in violation of Const. art. 4, § 1 (Bunn's Ed. § 50), dividing the powers of government into three separate departments, the legislative, executive, and judicial, and providing that neither shall exercise the powers properly belonging to either of the others. In re County Com'rs of Counties Comprising Seventh Judicial Dist., 98 Pac. 557, 559, 22 Okl. 435.

Acts 1905, p. 873, c. 410, providing that it shall be unlawful for any person, other than the authorized agent of a common carrier, to sell nontransferable tickets, issued and sold below the standard schedule rate, etc., and providing a penalty for its violation, is not unconstitutional as a delegation to the common carrier of legislative authority to create a penal offense or not, by the issuance or nonissuance of nontransferable tickets to the original purchaser below the standard schedule rate. There is a distinction between a "delegation of legislative power" involving discretion and conferring of authority or discretion as to the execution of the law to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The former cannot be done, while to the latter no valid objection can be made. The Legislature cannot delegate its power to make a law, but it can make a law to delegate a power to determine some fact, or state of things, upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend. Samuelson v. State, 95 S. W. 1012, 1016, 116 Tenn. 470, 115 Am. St. Rep. 805 (citing appeal of Locke, 72 Pa. 491, 13 Am. Rep. 716; Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. v. Clinton County Com'rs, 1 Ohio St. 88; State v. Barringer, 14 S. E. 781, 110 N. C. 525; Commonwealth v. Abrahams, 30 N. E. 79, 156 Mass. 57; Commonwealth v. Davis, 4 N. E. 577, 140 Mass. 485; In re Nightingale, 11 Pick. [28 Mass.] 168; Commissioners of Easton v. Covey, 22 Atl. 266, 74 Md. 262; In re Flaherty, 38 Pac. 981, 105 Cal. 558, 27 L. R. A. 529; Debardelaben v. State, 42 S. W. 684, 99 Tenn. 649).

"To declare what a law is or has been is a 'judicial power'; to declare what it shall be is 'legislative.'" Act July 6, 1905 (Pub. Acts 1905, p. 413, c. 217), which limits the recovery in a suit against an administrator for the statutory penalty for failing to file an inventory does not invade the judicial province nor interfere with, dictate to or coerce the judicial department. Atwood v. Buckingham, 62 Atl. 616, 618, 78 Conn. 423 (citing Dash v. Van Kleeck [N. Y.] 7 Johns, 477, 498, 5 Am. Dec. 291).

A statute authorized a city to enlarge or contract its boundaries by ordinance defining the territory, and provided that any person interested might by certain procedure apply to the district court, which should determine the reasonableness of the alteration. Held, that the statute was not objectionable on the ground that it conferred "legislative power" on the court. "To legislate is to make or enact a law or laws." Webster's Dict. "Legislative power" is, therefore, the power to make laws, and incidentally to repeal them. But the power to determine, in a given case, presented by parties having property or other rights at stake, and independent of the exercise of any enacting power, whether a municipal corporation, professing to legislate under incidental or general authority, has exercised such authority in accordance with the condition of the grant, relates, not to the power of legislation, but to the manner of its exercise, and is itself judicial. New Orleans & N. W. R. Co. v. Town of Vidalia, 42 South. 139, 143, 117 La. 561 (citing Callen v. City of Junction City, 23 Pac. 652, 43 Kan. 627, 7 L. R. A. 736; Forsythe v. Hammond, 40 N. E. 267, 41 N. E. 950, 142 Ind. 505, 30 L. R. A. 576; Territory ex rel. Kelly v. Stewart, 23 Pac. 405, 1 Wash. 98, 8 L. R. A. 106; In re Incorporation of Village of North Milwaukee, 67 N. W. 1033, 93 Wis. 616, 33 L. R. A. 638; Wahoo v. Dickinson, 36 N. W. 813, 23 Neb. 426; Forsythe v. City of Hammond, 58 Fed. 774).

The board of supervisors of a county, in passing a resolution reviving the distinction between town and county poor, pursuant to Laws 1896, p. 176, c. 225, § 134, and apportioning among the town the taxes for the support of poor, pursuant to sections 9, 10 (page 139), discharges "legislative functions," so that its acts cannot be reviewed by certiorari. People ex rel. Allen v. Board of Sup'rs of Westchester County, 99 N. Y. Supp. 348, 349, 113 App. Div. 773 (citing People v. Board of Sup'rs of Queens County, 30 N. E. 488, 131 N. Y. 468; People ex rel. O'Connor v. Board of Sup'rs of Queens County, 47 N. E. 790, 153 N. Y. 370).

The power to determine what persons and property shall be taxed belongs exclusively to the legislative branch of the government, and, whether exercised by the Legislature itself or delegated to a municipal corporation, is strictly a "legislative power." Risley v. Utica, 173 Fed. 502, 507 (citing New Orleans Water-Works Co. v. Louisiana Sugar Refining Co., 8 Sup. Ct. 741, 125 U. S. 18, 31 L. Ed. 607; United States ex rel. Ranger v. New Orleans, 98 U. S. 381, 392, 25 L. Ed. 225; Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472, 26 L. Ed. 197).

The "legislative power" of the territory of Oklahoma extended to all rightful subjects or legislation pertaining to local self-government when not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States, and when the exercise of such power did not in any way interfere with the supreme right of Congress to control its governmental affairs. Territory v. Long Bell Lumber Co., 99 Pac. 911, 914, 22 Okl. 890.

St. 1889, p. 358, c. 247, providing that new territory may be annexed to any town by the filing of a petition describing the territory desired to be annexed and a favorable vote at the election called pursuant to the petition, thus leaving the determination of the boundaries of the annexed territory to the inhabitants, is not for this reason invalid as a delegation of "legislative authority," since, under Const. art. 11, § 6, forbidding the Legislature to create or provide for the organization of municipal corporations by any other than general laws, fixing the boundaries of towns is not a legislative function. People v. Town of Ontario, 84 Pac. 205, 207, 148 Cal. 625.

While it is one of the settled maxims in constitutional law that the "power conferred upon the Legislature to make laws cannot be delegated" by that department to any other body or authority, this does not prevent legislative functions, which are merely ministerial or executive in their character, from being delegated by that branch of the government to other departments or to bodies created by it for that purpose. Laws 1905, p. 275, c. 163, creating a board for the purpose of procuring the erection of a capitol building and authorizing such board to procure the erection of a building adopt plans and specifications, etc., is not unconstitutional as a delegation of "legislative power." Davenport v. Elrod, 107 N. W. 833, 835, 20 S. D. 567.

LEGISLATURE

See House of Legislature.

Member of Legislature, see Member.

The word "Legislature," as used in Const. U. S. art. 1, § 4, providing that the time, place, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each state by the Legislature thereof, but that Congress may make or alter such regulations does not mean simply the members who compose the Legislature, but refers to the lawmaking body or power of the state, as established by the state Constitution, and which in this state, under the referendum Const. art. 3, § 1, includes the people, and hence Sess. Laws 1909, c. 223, dividing the state into congressional districts, is subject to the referendum vote of the people the same as any other law passed by the Legislature. State ex rel. Schrader v. Polley, 127 N. W. 848, 849, 26 S. D. 5.

A "legislator" is one who makes laws for a state or community. Burke v. Wood, 162 Fed. 533, 538.

LEGITIMACY

LEGITIMATE

"Legitimate" means lawful; lawfully begotten; born in wedlock; of lawful birth; a legitimate heir. Lamb v. Medsker, 74 N. E. 1012, 1013, 35 Ind. App. 662 (quoting and adopting definitions in Webst. Dict.; Cent. Dict.).

The term "legitimate," in Laws 1895, c. 570, providing for the incorporation of associations for the improvement of the breed of horses and for the establishment of a state racing commission, and authorizing the commission to issue licenses for running races and for the revocation of licenses, if for any reason the continuance thereof shall not be conducive to the interests of "legitimate" racing, is used in its broad and not technical sense, and means good or proper and not merely unlawful. People ex rel. Empire City Trotting Club v. State Racing Commission, 103 N. Y. Supp. 955, 961, 57 Misc. Rep. 331.

LEGITIMATE CHILD

Child as including, see Child—Children (In Statutes).

"A legitimate child" is he that is born in lawful wedlock or within a competent time afterward." A child born 20 days after its mother was divorced from one husband, whose whereabouts were not shown, and 15 days after her marriage to another man, who recognized the child as his offspring, will be presumed to be his legitimate child. Zach- mann v. Zachmann, 66 N. E. 256, 257, 201 Ill. 380, 94 Am. St. Rep. 180 (citing 5 Cyc. p. 626; Coke, Litt. 344a; Dennison v. Page, 29 Pa. 420, 72 Am. Dec. 644; quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bl. Comm. 446).

A child born after marriage, during wedlock, and within the usual period of gestation, after the husband has had opportunity to have begotten it, is conclusively presumed to be "legitimate." Buckner's Adm'r v. Buckner, 87 S. W. 776, 777, 120 Ky. 596.

LEGITIMATE ISSUE

Under Act Cong. Feb. 28, 1891, c. 383, 26 Stat. 794, § 5, in amendment of Act Cong. Feb. 8, 1887, c. 119, 24 Stat. 388, providing that for the purpose of determining the descent of land to the heirs of any deceased Indian allottee of land, whenever any male and female Indian shall have cohabited together as husband and wife according to the custom of Indian life, the issue of such cohabitation shall be, for the purpose aforesaid, taken to be the legitimate issue of the Indians so living together, and that every Indian child, otherwise illegitimate, shall for that purpose be taken to be the legitimate issue of the father, the illegitimate children of an allottee are entitled to inherit and share in the lands allotted to their father the same as though they were legitimate children, and the children of a deceased illegitimate child are entitled to the share of their deceased parent. In re House's Heirs, 112 N. W. 27, 29, 132 Wis. 212.

LEGITIMATE PURPOSE

The term "legitimate purpose," as applied to the acts of a municipal corporation, means such a purpose as is authorized by the municipal charter. Vaughn v. Village of Greencastle, 78 S. W. 50, 51, 104 Mo. App. 206.

The creation of so-called treasury stock and disposition of it upon the representation that it was fully paid and nonassessable, and at a price inferentially below par, for the purpose of providing working capital for a corporation, is not a "legitimate corporate purpose," within the act concerning corporations (revision of 1896), granting power to corporations to purchase shares of their own capital stock, if such purchase is for a legitimate corporate purpose, but not otherwise. Knickerbocker Importation Co. v. State Board of Assessors, 65 Atl. 913, 914, 74 N. J. Law, 583, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 885.

LEGITIMATE TITLE

In the provision of the protocol of the treaty of the Guadalupe Hidalgo that Mexican "grants" in the ceded territory shall preserve their legal value, and that the grantees may cause "their legitimate titles" to be acknowledged, the terms "grants" and "legitimate titles" are not restricted to absolute perfect grants made prior to the treaty, but include also equitable titles which, if there had been no change of sovereignty, would have become perfect or could have been made perfect if the proper steps had been taken. The words "legitimate titles" mean titles that are comprehended in the term "grants," and since the term "grants," as employed in treaties, embraces all character of titles, equitable or legal, it reflects the sense and meaning in which the term "legitimate titles" was intended to be employed. State v. Russell, 85 S. W. 288, 293, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 13; Haynes v. State (Tex.) 85 S. W. 1029, 1039.

LEGITIMATION

While "adoption," properly considered, refers to persons who are strangers in blood, "legitimation" refers to persons where the blood relation exists. The verb "adopts," in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, c. 59, art. 2, § 36, providing that the father of an illegitimate child, by acknowledging it as his own, etc., thereby "adopts" it as such, is used in the sense of "legitimizes." Allison v. Bryan, 97 Pac. 282, 283, 21 Okl. 557, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 931, 17 Ann. Cas. 468 (quoting Blythe v. Ayres, 31 Pac. 915, 96 Cal. 532, 19 L. R. A. 40, and citing Bouvier, Black, Anderson, and Rapalje Law Dictionaries).

LEND—LENT

See Money Lent; Money Loaned and Invested.

Rev. St. c. 48, § 64, providing that premiums for building association loans shall consist of a percentage charged on the amount lent in addition to interest, and section 65, providing that the monthly interest shall not be at a greater rate than 6 per cent. per annum, mean by the words "loan" and "lent" the whole sum contracted for, not the sum actually advanced. Tibbetts v. Deering Loan & Building Ass'n, 72 Atl. 162, 165, 104 Me. 404.

As give

Under Revisal 1905, § 1578, converting estates tail into estates in fee simple, a will whereby the testator "lends" land to his grandson and his lawful heirs of the body forever conveys an estate in fee simple. Sessoms v. Sessoms, 56 S. E. 687, 688, 144 N. C. 121 (citing Cox v. Marks, 27 N. C. 361; Kling v. Utley, 85 N. C. 59; Edgerton v. Aycock, 31 S. E. 382, 123 N. C. 134; Hinson v. Pickett [S. C.] 1 Hill Eq. 85).

A clause of a will bequeathed two separate parcels of land to the daughter of the testator, and, on her death, to her heirs and to her issue if living in fee simple, otherwise, "all the real estate loaned her to be divided between" certain persons. There was no punctuation or anything to indicate that the testator intended to differentiate the two parcels of property in reference to the quantity of the estate. Held, that as "lend" may be construed as synonymous with give, devise, or bequeath, unless it is manifest that a different meaning was intended, the testator must be held to have referred to all the property devised his daughter in the residuary clause. Faison v. Moore, 75 S. E. 993, 160 N. C. 148.

LENSE

It is necessary that "lenses" should be both ground and polished in order to be brought within the provision of the Tariff Act for "lenses * * * ground and polished to a spherical, cylindrical or prismatic form"; and, where they have been brought to such form by molding, they are not within that provision. United States v. Robinson, 140 Fed. 968, 969.

LESS

See More or Less; Not Less Than.

In an action under Laws 1907, p. 495, c. 254, defining the liabilities of railroads for injuries to employes, for the death of a brakeman, the use of the words "less or greater," instead of the statutory words "slighter or greater," in determining decedent's negligence as a contributing cause in comparison with that attributable to the railroad, was not erroneous, as the word "less" conveyed the idea conveyed by the word "slighter" as used in the statute. Boucher v. Wisconsin Cent. Ry. Co., 123 N. W. 918, 914, 141 Wis. 160.

LESS NOTE

Where a will gave a legacy, less a note held by the testator against the legatee, interest was properly charged on the note up to the time of the probate of the will, Rev. Codes, § 4770, requiring the language of a will to be given its ordinary meaning, and the words "less a note" would, in ordinary business transactions, refer to the debt as a whole, and not the sum mentioned as the principal only. In re Beck's Estate, 121 Pac. 784, 789, 44 Mont. 561.

LESSENERED CAPACITY

In a personal injury action, an instruction that the jury, in assessing damages, might consider the bodily and mental pain endured by the injured party, loss of time, and inability to work and earn money, and her diminished capacity for labor, etc., was not erroneous as permitting double damages for the same cause; "inability to work" meaning the total suspension of the power to work, and "diminished capacity to labor" meaning lessening, without totally destroying, the power to labor, and "inability" meaning without ability, and "lessened capacity" meaning that partial ability remains. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Maxwell (Tex.) 128 S. W. 160, 166.

LESSER OFFENSE

Under a count of a presentment for selling liquor without a license, in violation of Acts 1899, c. 161, § 1, to constitute which offense a single sale is sufficient, defendant cannot, there being no evidence of any specific sale, so as to authorize a conviction of the offense charged, be convicted of violation of Acts 1909, c. 479, § 16, making it an offense to exercise the privilege of retail liquor dealer without first paying the taxes prescribed for exercise thereof, though he has a United States revenue license to retail liquor, made by the act (page 1743) prima facie evidence that he is in the retail liquor business; the offense denounced by the act of 1909, though having a lighter punishment prescribed, not being a lesser offense than, and included in, the offense denounced by the act of 1899, within Shannon's Code, §§ 7085, 7195, permitting, on an indictment for an offense admitting, or consisting, of different degrees, a conviction of a lower degree of the offense than that charged, or of any offense necessarily included in that charged. Brinkley v. State, 145 S. W. 161, 162, 125 Tenn. 445.

LESSEE

A petition in summary proceedings for the possession of land, alleging that the petitioner is the "lessee" and landlord thereof, is not a sufficient compliance with Code Civ. Proc. § 2235, requiring the petition to state the interest of the petitioner in the premises. The statement that the petitioner was the "lessee" and "landlord" is the assertion merely of an interest and not a description of such interest. Ferber v. Apfel, 99 N. Y. Supp. 215, 216, 113 App. Div. 720 (citing Kazis v. Loft, 80 N. Y. Supp. 1015, 81 App. Div. 636; Loft v. Kazis, 84 N. Y. Supp. 228; Engle, Heller Co. v. Henry Elias Brewing Co., 75 N. Y. Supp. 1080, 37 Misc. Rep. 480; Potter v. New York Baptist Mission Society, 52 N. Y. Supp. 294, 23 Misc. Rep. 671; Ross v. Same, 52 N. Y. Supp. 303, 23 Misc. Rep. 683; Cram v. Dietrich, 78 N. Y. Supp. 948, 38 Misc. Rep. 790).

A covenant to pay to the lessees and their assigns, on the termination of the lease, a compensation for buildings and improvements put on the demised land during the term of the lease was not to be restricted to buildings put on the land by the lessees, but would include buildings put on it by subtenants or assigns of the lessees. If the opposite were the true construction of the word "lessees" in this covenant, the covenant in the earlier part of the lease that the said "lessees" shall have a right of way, and the covenant to "warrant and defend," would have to be restricted in the same way. Hollywood v. First Parish in Brockton, 78 N. E. 124, 125, 192 Mass. 269.

A "lessee" of a store building, who assumes entire control of a room connected therewith, is the "lessee and occupant" of such room within the law forbidding gaming. Ford v. State, 38 South. 229, 230, 86 Miss. 123.

See Agree to Let.

The term "let" is usually applied to leases and conveyances of real estate and contains the idea of a grant, and when the parties have used it as the operative word applied to a transfer of timber rights and contracts passing such interest for 91 years and more, by fair interpretation and considering the nature of the interest, the parties could only have intended an assignment. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co. v. Atlantic & N. C. Co., 61 S. E. 185, 190, 147 N. C. 368, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 223, 125 Am. St. Rep. 550, 15 Ann. Cas. 363.

As allow or permit

Where defendant, who had an option to purchase certain property, represented to plaintiff that they were to be "let in on the ground floor" with certain specified exceptions, it meant that they were to come into the purchase upon the same terms and conditions that he had made with the holder of the property, save as particularly specified. Kroll v. Coach, 78 Pac. 397, 399, 45 Or. 459.

As demise, grant, or lease

The term "let" contemplates the relation of landlord and tenant. It is defined as "to give leave to; to permit; to grant the use of realty for a compensation correlative to hire; to lease or hire out for compensation." Land, into possession of which one enters under a contract to purchase, is not "let" to him, within a statute making it forcible detainer to willfully hold over without force after the termination of the time for which the property was "let" after demand for possession. Francis v. Holmes, 118 S. W. 881, 883, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 608.

"The mere use of the words 'lease' and 'let,' in a contract of letting, does not necessarily create a lease as distinguished from a license;" but an instrument by which one contracted to let and another to take the exclusive right to maintain stands for the sale of candies at a race park, also a storeroom under the tracks providing the period of "letting" and the amount and times of payment of rent, is a lease and not a license. Mehlman v. Atlantic Amusement Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 222, 223, 65 Misc. Rep. 25.

LET FOR HIRE

As used in an ordinance providing for the payment of a license by owners of vehicles used or let for hire, the term "letting for hire" was intended to apply to cases where persons, the hirers, took temporary possession of the wagon and team. Swetman v. City of Covington (Ky.) 82 S. W. 386.

LETTERS OF CREDIT

A "letter of credit" is a letter containing a general or special request to pay the bearer or person named money, or sell him some commodity on credit, or give him something of value, and look to the writer of the letter for recompense, and which partakes of the nature of a negotiable instrument. Liggett v. Levy, 136 S. W. 299, 301, 233 Mo. 590, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 70.

LETTERS PATENT

"Letters patent" are not to be regarded as monopolies, created by the executive authority at the expense and to the prejudice of all the community except the persons therein named as patentees, but as public franchises granted to the inventors of new and useful improvements for the purpose of securing to them as such inventors, for the limited term therein mentioned, the exclusive right to make and use, and vend to others to be used, their own inventions, as tending to promote the progress of science and the useful arts, and as matter of compensation to the inventors for their labor, toil, and expense in making the inventions and reducing the same to practice for the public benefit, as contemplated by the Constitution and sanctioned by the laws of Congress." Monaghan v. City of Indianapolis, 76 N. E. 424, 425, 37 Ind. App. 280 (quoting and adopting definition in Seymour v. Osborne, 11 Wall. [78 U. S.] 516, 20 L. Ed. 33).

A license to keep a dramshop is not a "letter patent," which can be tested or vacated by quo warranto. Hargett v. Bell, 48 S. E. 749, 750, 134 N. C. 394.

LETTERS TESTAMENTARY

See Entitled to Letters Testamentary.

"Letters testamentary" are of two kinds, "domiciliary letters" and "ancillary letters"; the first being issued at the place of the testator's domicile, and the latter at some place, other than domicile, where personality of the testator is found. Such letters depend upon the situs of such personality, and do not authorize the administrator or representative to perform any act or to reduce to possession personality not within territorial authority of the court where issued. Lockwood v. United States Steel Corporation, 138 N. Y. Supp. 725, 727, 153 App. Div. 655.

LEVEE

"Levees" keep out the water. Mound City Land & Stock Co. v. Miller, 70 S. W. 721, 724, 170 Mo. 240, 60 L. R. A. 190, 94 Am. St. Rep. 727.

"A 'levee' is a space adjacent to a navigable water where vessels may approach and land to unload and receive passengers and freight, and where articles of freight may be left for loading on the vessels, or after they have been unloaded until they can be taken away." Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. People ex rel. Dailey, 78 N. E. 790, 793, 222 Ill. 427 (quoting and adopting definition in Farnham, Water & Water Rights, § 145a).

The word "levee," as used in the West and South, means a landing place for vessels for the delivery of merchandise, and, as incident thereto, for the temporary storage of the merchandise. In other words, a public landing. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. City of Cincinnati, 81 N. E. 983, 989, 76 Ohio St. 481.

That a tract of land bordering a river was designated as a steamboat landing on a plat and was dedicated to public use shows it to be a "levee." Betcher v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 124 N. W. 1096, 1097, 110 Minn. 228.

Where a strip of land lying along the margin of a navigable stream was included in the plat of a city and dedicated to the public by the use of the word "levee" written thereon, and several streets opened upon this tract, and many lots had no other means of ingress and egress, except over and along it, its dedication included its use as a street, as well as a landing place for boats. McAlpine v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., 75 Pac. 73, 74, 68 Kan. 207, 64 L. R. A. 85, 1 Ann. Cas. 452.

A "levee" is a landing place for vessels, or a dyke or breakwater. Sanborn v. Van Duyn, 96 N. W. 41, 44, 90 Minn. 215.

LEEVE TAX

A tax levied by a sanitary district organized under Act July 1, 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 289), is not a "levee tax" within Act July 1, 1909 (Laws 1909, p. 323), providing for a reduction in taxes, excepting "levee taxes," etc. People ex rel. Sanders v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 94 N. E. 14, 15, 248 Ill. 417; Same v. Toledo, St. L. & W. R. Co., 94 N. E. 16, 249 Ill. 175.

LEVEL

There is a distinction between the words "aim," "point," and "level." "Aim" expresses more than the other two words inasmuch as it denotes a direction towards some minute point in an object, and the others imply direction towards the whole objects themselves. We aim at a bird; we point a cannon against a wall; we level a cannon at a wall. Pointing is of course used with most propriety with reference to instruments that have points. It is likewise a less decisive action than either aiming or leveling. A stick or finger may be pointed at a person merely out of derision; but a blow is "leveled" or aimed with an expressed intent of committing an act of violence. Livingston v. State, 65 S. E. 812, 6 Ga. App. 805 (quoting Crabbe's English Synonyms).

LEVEL RATE PREMIUM

A "level rate premium policy" is a policy on which the regular annual renewal premiums provided are to be kept down to a level, or are to be brought down to the level of the premiums charged for the first year's insurance by the application of the profits earned on the policy. Ijams v. Providential Sav. Life Assur. Soc. of New York, 84 S. W. 51, 60, 185 Mo. 466.

LEVER

LEVY (Of Taxes)

"Levy" is defined as "the amount accruing from a tax or execution." State ex rel. Ledwith v. Brian, 120 N. W. 916, 917, 84 Neb. 30.

"Levy" is used variously, but, as applied to the determination of the amount or rate to be charged, it is a legislative function, to be exercised only by the state, or some inferior political division to which the power has been delegated. School Dist. No. 127 of Reno County v. School Dist. No. 45 of Reno County, 103 Pac. 126, 127, 80 Kan. 641.

The word "levy," as applied to taxation, is given a variety of meanings, among which are: "To impose or assess"; "to impose, assess and collect under authority of law"; "to raise or collect by assessment"; "to charge a sum of money already ascertained against a person or property subject to the charge"; "to determine by vote the amount of tax to be raised"; "to fix the rate at which property is to be taxed." Gray v. Board of Sch. Inspectors of Peoria, 83 N. E. 95, 98, 231 Ill. 63.

The word "levy," as used in constitutional and statutory provisions that the county commissioners shall levy a tax in their respective counties for the support of public schools, and that county boards shall levy an annual tax on all the property in their respective counties, to be collected at the same time and by the same officers as other taxes, excludes from the act of levying any signification of creation. The duty to levy imposed on the board is therefore purely ministerial, and only imports that it should take such action as would result in the tax being placed on the auditor's books. The boards have no power to do anything more or less than require that the tax be entered. Dickson v. Burckmyer, 46 S. E. 343, 346, 67 S. C. 526.

"Levied," with reference to taxes, means the extension of a tax against taxable property, since a tax cannot be said to be levied until it has been so extended. Pettibone v. West Chicago Park Com'rs, 74 N. E. 387, 392, 215 Ill. 304.

A tax cannot be said to be "levied" when it is only estimated, and the time for levying it has not arrived. The limitation on the power of the county board to contract for bridge building to cost a sum not greater than the amount of money on hand in the county bridge fund derived from a levy of previous years and two-thirds of the levy of the current year gives no authority to the board to take into account the levy of the current calendar year prior to the making of such levy. Until this is made, there is no levy of the current year. Clark v. Lancaster County, 96 N. W. 593, 599, 69 Neb. 717.

tion: First, the ascertainment of a sum certain, or that can be rendered certain, to be imposed on the collective body of taxpayers; second, a legal imposition of that sum as an obligation on the collective body of taxpayers; third, an apportionment of such sum among individual taxpayers so as to ascertain the part or share that each should bear. * * * The first two acts above described, namely, the ascertainment of a sum to be imposed on the collective body of taxpayers and its imposition by a legislative declaration to that effect, are essentially legislative acts or acts proper directly to the lawmaking function of the government. * * * The third act, namely, the apportionment of the whole sum imposed by way of tax on the collective body of taxpayers upon the separate individuals composing that body, is usually an administrative act performed under specific statutory directions, ascertaining the mode and time of its performance. * * * The word 'levy' is indifferently employed, as commonly used, to express either one of these processes separately or both collectively. A tax is said to be levied when the amount or rate to be imposed is fixed by law, for what is wanting to complete such levy is supplied by the standing tax laws, and consists in a course of administrative action. When the levying of a tax is spoken of as a legislative act, it is commonly understood to describe such action on the part of the Legislature as would, with standing tax laws, complete the legislative authority requisite to enable the administrative department to distribute and collect the tax. * * * In other words, the tax directed to be levied must be so far imposed, in order to comply with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, that no further legislation will be necessary to enable its collection." Rice v. Shealy, 50 S. E. 888, 870, 71 S. C. 161 (quoting and adopting definition in Morton v. Comptroller General, 4 S. C. 430, 453).

The power of the state tax commissioner conferred by Code Pub. Gen. Laws 1904, art. 81, § 150, requiring the commissioner to levy taxes on shares of corporate stock and to place a valuation on corporate stock for purposes of assessment, is not affected by Laws 1906, c. 404, amending article 81, § 22, and fixing a tax for each $100 for a specified purpose, and directing the Comptroller to levy the taxes on corporate stock, since the function of the Comptroller, under the act of 1906, is a purely ministerial act fully performed when he enters on his books the number of shares of stock liable to taxation, the corporation the stock of which is taxed, the rate of taxation, and extends the amount of the tax, and since the word "levy" as applied to taxes means in some cases to raise and exact by authority of government the amount of a tax to be raised, and in other cases the word is used with reference to the mere ministerial act of entering the taxes on the tax

By section 16 of P. L. 1903, p. 789, the commissioners are required each year to cause a tax to be "levied and assessed," etc., and to certify to the tax assessor, taxing board, or taxing officer the amount of tax required to be levied, assessed, and raised, and the said assessors, etc., shall assess said sums so directed to be assessed and certified upon all the persons and property liable, and the said tax shall be levied, assessed, and collected by the same officers, etc., and the tax so levied upon real estate shall be a lien thereon. Held, that throughout the section the word "levy" is used as referring to the administrative functions of taxation and not to the legislative function, the differences between which are pointed out in the case of Township of Bernards v. Allen, 61 N. J. Law, 228, at page 238, 39 Atl. 716, at page 719, also referred to in the dissenting opinion, 61 N. J. Law, 692, 41 Atl. 250; one of the judges using the phrase "levying taxes" as descriptive of the legislative function, while the other used it as referring to the administrative process of collecting the taxes. Van Cleave v. Passaic Valley Sewerage Com'rs, 58 Atl. 571, 586, 71 N. J. Law, 183.

Provisions in the body of an act conferring on parochial and municipal corporations power to levy license taxes was within the title of the act "to levy, enforce, and collect a license tax." Mayor and Council of Alexandria v. White, 15 South. 15, 16, 46 La. Ann. 449.

As all necessary proceedings

A city ordinance authorizing the issuance of bonds dated in 1910 and payable in 1930, which provides that "there is hereby levied" on the taxable property of the city a specified sum, of which a certain amount is to pay the principal of the bonds and the balance to pay interest, of which sum a specified amount shall be collected each year to and including 1930, the amount collected each year over that required for interest to constitute a sinking fund to the principal, complies with Laws 1907, c. 235, and Const. art. 11, § 3, requiring cities issuing bonds, to provide before, or at the time of doing so, for the collection of a direct annual tax sufficient to pay the interest as it falls due and to discharge the principal within 20 years, since "levy" in tax matters has various meanings dependent on the context, and in this instance includes everything necessary to the collection of the tax. Borner v. City of Prescott, 136 N. W. 552, 554, 150 Wis. 197.

Assess distinguished

Assessment as including, see Assess.

To "assess" a tax is to adjudge and determine what proportion of his property the taxpayer shall contribute to the public. To "levy" a tax is to make a record of this determination, and to extend the assessment against the taxpayer's property. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Klein, 71 N. W. 1069, 1071, 52 Neb. 258.

As used in Code Civ. Proc. § 325, requiring an adverse occupant to pay all the taxes which have been levied and assessed upon the land, the word "levied" refers to the act of the board of supervisors in making the "levy," and the word "assessed" refers to the act of the assessor in making the assessment. The statute does not require the payment of taxes assessed before the occupancy, and levied afterwards, but only such taxes as were both levied and assessed during the occupancy. Allen v. McKay, 52 Pac. 828, 829, 831, 120 Cal. 332.

As collection

In our revenue laws the word "levy" is sometimes used in the sense of "raising" or "imposing," and not in the sense of "collecting" a tax by execution. In different places in these laws the boards of county commissioners are authorized to "levy," or lay, taxes, while the word "collect" is used to define the power of the county treasurers to gather in or receive money for taxes theretofore assessed by county assessors and levied by the boards. Parsons v. People, 76 Pac. 666, 669, 32 Colo. 221.

The tonnage tax imposed on the use of foreign built yachts owned by citizens of the United States by Tariff Act Aug. 5, 1909, c. 6, § 37, 36 Stat. 112, being a tax upon the privilege of use, is assessable to and collectible from the personal user, and the provision of the statute that such tax shall be levied and collected by the "collector of customs of the district nearest the residence of the managing owner" requires that, where the owner resides in one district, the collector of that district shall levy and collect the tax, and the attempted action of the collector of another district to that end is not a "levy" and will not support an action to recover the tax. United States v. Blair, 190 Fed. 372, 375 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, pp. 4101-4104).

Special assessments

The "levy" of special assessments for street improvements is the exercise of a species of the taxing power of the state, and not of the right of eminent domain. New York, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. City of Hammond, 83 N. E. 244, 245, 170 Ind. 493.

LEVY (Of Writs)

See Equitable Levy.

As a sheriff's deed to land sold under execution need recite only the names of the parties to the execution, the date when issued, and of the judgment, and other particulars recited in the execution, which necessarily includes the fact that notice was given, and as a "levy," is under Rev. St. 1909, §

2195, defined as a "taking," which means to gain control or possession of, in any way, a sheriff's deed, need not recite that a levy was made, for the recital of notice and other formality shows that the land was taken, and hence a deed is prima facie correct although reciting an invalid levy, for that recital will be rejected as surplusage. Butler v. Imhoff, 142 S. W. 287, 288, 238 Mo. 584.

In a notice of sale, reciting that the land was levied under a judgment rendered before a judge named, and that the levy mentioned was made by virtue of an order of sale, the contention that the words "levy" and "judgment" indicate an execution sale is not tenable, as under the Code judgment is the apt word in proceedings of an equitable nature, as well as in those which are strictly legal. Gray v. Eurich, 96 N. W. 343, 2 Neb. (Unof.) 194.

Seizure under garnishment

The word "levied," as used in Civ. Code 1895, § 2913, providing that a "thing hired is not subject to sale under judgment obtained subsequent to the contract of hire against the owner, but may be levied on, and a bond for its forthcoming at the expiration of the time for which it is hired may be demanded of the person hiring," is to be given its technical meaning (that is, an actual seizure of the property by a levying officer under a process); and the latter part of the section in relation to a forthcoming bond would have no application to a case where the property is seized under a garnishment which is not a technical "levy," within the meaning of the statute, though for some purposes a garnishment is treated as in effect a levy upon the property. Southern Flour & Grain Co. v. Northern Pacific R. Co., 56 S. E. 742, 743, 127 Ga. 626, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 853, 119 Am. St. Rep. 356, 9 Ann. Cas. 437.

Seizure under writ of replevin

"The strict meaning of the word 'levy' is usually a seizure of the defendant's property." By the word "levy," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67f, 30 Stat. 565, making void all levies, judgments, attachments, or other liens obtained through legal proceedings within four months prior to the bankruptcy of an insolvent defendant, seems to include any seizure of property in the bankrupt's possession and which he claims to own, and seems to cover a seizure on a writ of replevin in a suit to recover property sold and delivered on credit under a contract which the plaintiff claims a right to rescind for fraud. In re Weinger, Bergman & Co., 126 Fed. 875, 877.

Constructive seizure

As used in Rev. St. 1899, § 4043, providing that if a constable levy an execution, and a third party claim the property, he may take a bond of indemnity, the word "levy" means such levy, either actual or constructive, as the situation of the property permits.

If it is already in the custody of the law, because previously seized under a writ of attachment, a levy or seizure under a subsequent execution in a mode adjudged to be sufficient to give a lien on the property and enable the officer to sell it is also sufficient to bring into operation the statutory provisions in regard to a demand for indemnity by the officer if notice is given of outside ownership. Smith ex rel. McElhaney v. Rogers, 73 S. W. 243, 244, 99 Mo. App. 252.

In Georgia, a levy on land is made by the official entry thereof on the execution, and not by seizure. Keaton v. Farkas, 70 S. E. 1110, 1111, 136 Ga. 188.

The object of a levy of execution is to bring the property within the custody of the law and prevent the judgment debtor from disposing of it to the prejudice of the creditor before sale can be made, and in case of real estate, on which the judgment is already a lien by docketing, the ordinary meaning of the word "levy" as used in section 6827 and elsewhere is inapplicable. Britannia Min. Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 115 Pac. 46, 48, 43 Mont. 93.

Seizure required

"A 'levy' under an execution upon personal property is made by the officer having the writ seizing the property and taking it into his possession." People, to Use of Kenfield, v. Finch, 76 Pac. 1120, 1123, 19 Colo. App. 512.

To constitute a levy there must be an actual or constructive seizure of property, and the property must be so far brought under the subjection of the officer that he can exercise control, and does assume to exercise control, by virtue of the writ; and the mere declaration of an intent to seize does not constitute a levy, but the officer must do some act for which he could be prosecuted as a trespasser, if it were not for the protection afforded by the writ. Dean v. State, 71 S. E. 597, 598, 9 Ga. App. 303.

LEWD

See, also, Lascivious.

"'Lewd' is defined to mean given to the unlawful indulgence of lust; eager for sexual indulgence." Jamison v. State, 94 S. W. 675-678, 117 Tenn. 58 (quoting and adopting definition in United States v. Bebout, 28 Fed. 522).

As used in Rev. St. § 3893, declaring every obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet, print, or other publication of an indecent character, or notices giving information for obtaining such publications, to be nonmailable matter, the words "obscene," "lewd," and "lascivious" signify that form of immorality which has relation to sexual impurity, having the same meaning as is given them at common law in prosecutions for obscene libel. Hanson v. United States, 157 Fed. 749, 750, 85 C. C. A. 325.

The words "lewd and lascivious," as used in a statute providing that any person who shall unlawfully and feloniously commit any lewd and lascivious act, other than those constituting other crimes, on or with the body, or any part or member thereof, of a child under the age of 14 years, with the intent of arousing the passions or sexual desires of such child, shall be guilty of a felony, do not limit the application of the section to an act attempted or committed between persons of opposite sexes. People v. Zuell, 82 Pac. 1128, 1129, 2 Cal. App. 59.

LEWD HOUSE

The words "ill fame" are synonymous with the word "lewd," as used in the statute, making it an offense to keep a lewd house, and the reputation of a house being kept and maintained as a lewd house is admissible evidence on a trial of a person charged with the offense. McConnell v. State, 58 S. E. 546, 547, 2 Ga. App. 445.

A house may be a lewd house, within Pen. Code 1910, § 382, making it criminal for any person to maintain a lewd house or place for the practice of fornication and adultery, though the house may be devoted chiefly to the carrying on of some other vocation (such as boarding house or hotel), if lewd women are accustomed to frequent there and to carry on their practices. Fitzgerald v. State, 72 S. E. 541, 542, 10 Ga. App. 70.

There is no difference in meaning between the two expressions "house of ill fame" and "lewd house or place for the practice of fornication or adultery." Cotton v. City of Atlanta, 73 S. E. 683, 684, 10 Ga. App. 397.

LEWDNESS

See Leading Life of Prostitution and Lewdness.

"Lewdness is lustfulness and lascivious behavior; a synonym of unchastity, sensuality, and debauchery." On a prosecution for keeping a house of ill fame, instructions that a house resorted to for the purpose of prostitution and lewdness was a house visited by persons of both sexes for the purpose of having sexual intercourse, or some other lewd purpose, and that lewdness was the unlawful indulgence of the animal desires, were correct. State v. Wilson, 99 N. W. 1060, 1061, 124 Iowa, 264.

The Century Dictionary makes "lewdness" synonymous with "impurity," "unchastity," "licentiousness," "sensuality." In Commonwealth v. Wardell, 128 Mass. 54, 35 Am. Rep. 357, it was held that "lewdness" is the irregular indulgence of lust, whether public or private. "Lewdness," as used in the age of consent law (Acts 1901, p. 29, c. 19), which, after prohibiting carnal knowledge of a female over 12 and under 18 years of age, declares that nothing contained in the act shall authorize a conviction when the female is at the time or before the carnal knowledge a bawd, lewd, or kept female, includes private as well as public unchastity. Jamison v. State, 94 S. W. 675, 678, 117 Tenn. 58.

The term "lewdness," as used in Code, § 4939, prohibiting the keeping of a house of ill fame resorted to for the purpose of prostitution or lewdness, means lustfulness, lecherous, lascivious, or libidinous conduct. As used in section 4938, declaring that if any man or woman not being married to each other lewdly and lasciviously associate and cohabit together, or if any man or woman married or unmarried is guilty of open and gross lewdness, and designedly makes an open and indecent or obscene exposure of his or her person, or of the person of another, every such person shall be imprisoned, etc., the term "lewdness" means open and public indecency tending to corrupt public morals, and not mere unlawful indulgence of the animal desires, so that where accused was indicted for conspiracy to induce certain females to commit the crime of lewdness, and no act was shown indicating illicit intercourse or anything more than a conspiracy to procure the girls' willing assent to a single act of intercourse, an instruction defining "lewdness" as the unlawful indulgence of the animal desires was misleading and erroneous. State v. Mitchell, 128 N. W. 378, 379, 149 Iowa, 362.

A statute declaring that whoever commits an unnatural and lascivious act with another person shall be punished, etc., makes criminal any and all unnatural and lascivious acts with another person; and it is no defense that the act was not an act of copulation, since copulation is not within the statute. Commonwealth v. Delano, 83 N. E. 406, 197 Mass. 166.

Prostitution is the common "lewdness" of a woman for gain, or the offering of her person to indiscriminate intercourse with man, while "lewdness" is unlawful indulgence of the animal desire. State v. Porter, 107 N. W. 923, 924, 130 Iowa, 690.

To convict of the crime of "lewd and lascivious cohabitation," denounced by section 2596, Rev. St. 1892, there must be proved both lewd and lascivious intercourse, and a living or dwelling together as though the conjugal relation existed between the parties. Where the proofs show a residing together of the parties, but are silent as to any lewd and lascivious intercourse between them, there can be no conviction of the crime. Whitehead v. State, 37 South. 302, 48 Fla. 64.

"Lewd and lascivious association and cohabitation," as used in Code 1900, § 4358, means the living and cohabiting together of a man and a woman, not married to each other, in the same house, as husband and wife. State v. White, 66 S. E. 20, 66 W. Va. 45.

Under a statute providing that, if any man or woman "cohabit together as husband and wife without being married," each of them shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, proof of sexual intercourse between persons not married, though living in the same house, is insufficient to constitute the offense defined, without evidence that they cohabited and dwelled together and deported themselves toward each other as husband and wife. McNeely v. State, 106 S. W. 674, 84 Ark. 484.

LEX LOCI CONTRACTUS

"The phrase 'lex loci contractus' is used, in a double sense, to mean, sometimes, the law of a place where a contract is entered into; sometimes, that of the place of its performance. And when it is employed to describe the law of the seat of the obligation, it is, on that account, confusing." Pritchard v. Norton, 1 Sup. Ct. 102, 111, 106 U. S. 124, 27 L. Ed. 104.

LIABLE

See Party Liable; Primarily Liable; Secondly Liable; Usually Liable.

The word "liable" in a plea of contributory negligence, that plaintiff attempted to cross the road in front of the approaching automobile, when she knew that by so doing she was "liable" to be struck by the machine, does not mean "probably," but no more than "possibly." Terrill v. Walker, 59 South. 775, 776, 5 Ala. App. 535 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4110).

The words "probable," "likely," and "liable" are synonymous when applied to the effects of a personal injury, each dealing with reasonable probability, not with possibility, and what may probably, or is likely or liable to, be the future result of a personal injury, is competent evidence to prove what is reasonably certain in the matter. Hallum v. Village of Omro, 99 N. W. 1051, 1054, 122 Wis. 337.

In Webster's Dictionary, the word "liable" is said to refer to a possible or probable happening which may not actually occur, as horses are liable to slip; even the sagacious are liable to make mistakes. The word, as used in an insurance policy, does not signify a perfected or fixed legal liability, but rather a condition out of which a legal liability may arise. The word as most frequently used does not necessarily exclude the idea of a contingency. State ex rel. Breeden v. Sheets, 72 Pac. 334, 335, 26 Utah, 105 (quoting and adopting definition in Home Ins. Co. of New York v. Peoria & P. U. R. Co., 52 N. E. 862, 178 Ill. 64).

"The word 'liable' denotes something external which may befall us; 'subject' refers to evils which arise chiefly from internal necessity, and are likely to do so. Hence the former applies more to what is accidental; the latter to things from which we often or inevitably suffer." Webster. Therefore the provision of the general drain law that an application for the establishment of a drain shall be signed by not less than ten freeholders, five or more of whom shall be owners of land "liable" to assessment for benefits in the construction of such drain, means that at least five of the signers must be persons who may properly be assessed for benefits, and, as so construed, is not subject to the objection of being impossible of enforcement. Albert v. Gibson, 105 N. W. 19, 21, 141 Mich. 698 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4110).

"A party 'liable' is one who may be held responsible either directly or conditionally. Liability is predicable of a contingent obligation as well as one matured and fixed." Code Civ. Proc. § 1627, subd. 1, providing that any person who is liable to the plaintiff for the payment of a debt secured by a mortgage may be made a defendant in the foreclosure suit, applies to an assignor of a bond and mortgage who has guaranteed the collection thereof. Robert v. Kidansky, 97 N. Y. Supp. 918, 916, 111 App. Div. 475.

The qualifying phrase "and against the property liable for assessment for such improvement at the time of the making thereof," in section 129, c. 122, p. 207, Laws 1903, means the property which would have been liable for the special assessment had no infirmity existed therein or in the steps leading thereto, which infirmity this section was enacted to cure by the terms thereof. To construe the word "liable" to mean legally liable would take away the entire force of the curative act. Shepherd v. Kansas City, 105 Pac. 531, 533, 81 Kan. 369.

The word "liable," in an instruction, in an action for personal injuries, that if the jury find for plaintiff they can take into consideration as elements of damages plaintiff's physical and mental pain and suffering, and that which he is "liable" to endure in the future by reason of his injury signifies something that may happen without importing reasonable certainty that it will happen, and the charge indicates that the jury may enter into full conjecture as to the possible future suffering and injury, and the charge should be that the verdict may include not future damages which plaintiff is liable to suffer (that is, may suffer), but such damages as it is reasonably certain will of necessity result from the injury. Green v. Catawba Power Co., 55 S. E. 125, 126, 75 S. C. 102 (citing Ayers v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 53 N. E. 22, 158 N. Y. 254; Stutz v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 40 N. W. 653, 73 Wis. 147, 9 Am. St. Rep. 769; Louisville S. R. Co. v. Minogue, 14 S. W. 357, 90 Ky. 369, 29 Am. St. Rep. 378, and note; Ford v. City of Des Moines, 75 N. W. 630, 106 Iowa, 94; McBride v. St. Paul

The word "liable," in an instruction, in an action for injuries to a pedestrian tripping over a brick thrown on the sidewalk from a pile of brick between the curb and the sidewalk, that the municipality was responsible if the brick was placed on the sidewalk so that it was "liable" to fall upon or be thrown thereupon, has the effect of imposing on the municipality the highest degree of possible care, and makes that which was possible negligence on the part of the municipality and is erroneous. Sutter v. Kansas City, 119 S. W. 1084, 1086, 138 Mo. App. 105.

As used, an instruction that it was the duty of a railroad company to exercise ordinary care to keep its right of way free from dry and combustible matter which would be "liable" to take fire and communicate it to a trestle, etc., had a meaning sufficiently wide to admit of a gloss rendering its meaning "within the range of possibility," which made the instruction erroneous as imposing too high a degree of care. Root v. Kansas City Southern R. Co., 92 S. W. 621, 631, 195 Mo. 348, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 212.

The expression "liable to catch and hold vehicles" is indeterminate and of a wide meaning, and the fact that a street railway switch was so constructed that it was liable to "catch and hold vehicles" does not of itself show that the switch was such a structure as to render the railroad liable for injuries to a traveler in a buggy, the wheels of which were caught by the switch, and who was thereby thrown to the ground and injured. Morie v. St. Louis Transit Co., 91 S. W. 962, 967, 116 Mo. App. 12.

LIABLE AS CARRIER

The phrase "liable as carrier," as used in Rev. St. § 4281, providing that if any shipper of certain designated merchandise shall lade it as freight or baggage on any vessel without then giving to its master or agent a written notice of the true character and value thereof, having the same entered on the bill of lading therefor, the master and owner shall not be "liable as carriers" thereof in any form or manner, means only the liability attached by law to the carrier's public employment, and does not attach to its liability as bailee. La Bourgogne, 144 Fed. 781, 786, 75 C. C. A. 647.

LIABLE TO FORFEITURE

Webster defines "liable" thus, "Obliged in law or equity, subject," and says it "denotes something external which may befall us." Rev. St. § 4189, declaring that for the commission of a certain act a vessel "shall be liable to forfeiture," does not effect a present absolute forfeiture, but only gives a right to have the vessel forfeited upon due process of law, and the property in the same remains in the owner until seizure and condemnation, which relates back to the time of seizure and invalidates intermediate sales. The Kate Heron, 14 Fed. Cas. 139, 141, 6 Sawy. 106.

Where a certificate of a mutual benefit society provided that all the benefits accruing should be "liable to forfeiture" if the member did not comply with the association's constitution and by-laws one of which declared that, in case of omission to pay dues and assessments on the first of each month, the member should stand suspended, the phrase "liable to forfeiture," when construed in connection with the by-laws, part of the contract making the default itself operate as a forfeiture did not require affirmative action on the part of the association before a member's rights could be barred. Brown v. Knights of the Protected Ark, 96 Pac. 450, 453, 43 Colo. 289.

LIABILITY

See Contingent Liability; Contract Liability; Existing Liability; Fixed Liability; Original Liability; Prima Facie Liability; Statutory Liability.

Any and all liability, see Any.

Any other liability, see Any Other.

Other liabilities, see Other.

"Liability" in its broadest and most comprehensive use includes any obligation one is bound in law or justice to perform, and is synonymous with "responsibility"; in a more restricted and perhaps in its popular sense, it means that which one is under obligation to pay to another. State ex rel. City of Milwaukee v. Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co., 129 N. W. 623, 630, 144 Wis. 386, 140 Am. St. Rep. 1025.

The words "debt" and "liability," as used in Const. art. 8, § 1, forbidding the Legislature to create any debt or liability, singly or in the aggregate, exceeding 1½ per cent. of the assessed value of taxable property in the state, are not employed in a technical sense, but have special reference to the basic legislative authority on which a state contract must rest, and in which alone a state debt must find its sanction. Lewis v. Brady, 104 Pac. 900, 901, 17 Idaho, 251, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 149.

A "liability" on an insurance policy as affecting deductions in assessing insurer's property for taxation is an obligation by insurer to pay the moneys which the policy calls for, on compliance by insured with binding conditions, regardless of whether the sum to be paid under the contract is a fixed amount or a stated sum plus profits. Supplement to the general tax act, approved May 11, 1906 (P. L. p. 418), provides for taxation of certain property of life insurance companies after deducting "liabilities," and requires "liabilities on policies" to be determined as of the date of taxation on a basis adopted by the insurance commissioner. Held, that an amount apportioned to deferred dividend policies as required by Laws 1907, p. 132, is not properly deducted from an assessment as constituting a "liability"; such amount being a "liability on the policies" comprehended in valuing the policies. City of Newark v. State Board of Equalization of Taxes, 79 Atl. 343, 345, 81 N. J. Law, 416; Same v. Board of Equalization of Taxes of New Jersey, 77 Atl. 795, 80 N. J. Law, 258.

The term "liability" is commonly used to denote the indebtedness or claim of a mutual insurance order against its members for dues or assessments, though it may not be a technical "liability" for the reason that the whole matter is optional with the member. The term is not used in the sense that an absolute personal obligation to pay exists, but rather in the sense that, if he would continue the liability of the insurer, the member himself is obligated to pay. The use of the term is not fatal to a pleading. Logsdon v. Supreme Lodge of Fraternal Union of America, 76 Pac. 292, 294, 84 Wash. 666.

The charter of a corporation, which declares that it shall have a first lien on all stock registered in the names of each member for his liabilities to the corporation, and that the lien shall extend to all dividends, embraces a demand for damages for breach of contract by a stockholder receiving the stock in consideration that the corporation may purchase at a fixed low price machines to be made by the stockholder; the word "liability" meaning responsibility, or the state of one who is bound in law and justice to do something which may be enforced by action. United Cigarette Mach. Co. v. Winston Cigarette Mach. Co., 194 Fed. 947, 960, 114 C. C. A. 583; United States v. General Inspection & Loading Co., 192 Fed. 223 (quoting 5 Words and Phrases, pp. 4111, 4114, 4115).

As used in a policy of indemnity insurance providing that the policy should only cover losses sustained by, and liability for, any claims against the assured as a result of the risk specified in the attached contract or contracts, the word "liability" referred to a liability other than one strictly in the nature of indemnity, and included liability incurred in calling a physician in case of an emergency. Kelly v. Maryland Casualty Co., 94 N. W. 889, 890, 89 Minn. 337.

Decedent executed a demand note to defendant, agreeing that the proceeds of certain policies of life insurance, which he had deposited with defendant as collateral to secure the note, should be applied to the payment thereof, and that, if he should come under any other liability or enter into any other agreement with defendant while it was the holder of such obligation, then any excess of collaterals should be applied to such other note or claim, and, in case of any exchange of the collaterals, the provisions of the note should extend to the new collaterals. Decedent thereafter executed a new note to defendant's cashier for a debt owing to defendant, which note was, in fact, for defendant's benefit. When decedent died, he was also a member of a firm which was indebted to defendant for insurance premiums collected and unpaid. At this time all but $181.50 of the original debt had been paid, for which amount a renewal note had been given which was due and unpaid. Held, that the words "liability," "agreement" and "claim," used in the collateral agreement, were sufficient to cover every conceivable obligation, and that the surplus due on the policies was therefore liable, not only for the balance of the original debt, but also for the note made payable to defendant's cashier, and for the firm's liability for the unpaid premiums. Nordfleet v. Pamlico Ins. & Banking Co., 75 S. E. 937, 939, 160 N. C. 327.

Bond

A bond is not a "liability" but is only the evidence or representation of an indebtedness. City of Los Angeles v. Teed, 44 Pac. 590, 582, 112 Cal. 319.

Contingent future liability

When we speak of "liabilities," we mean those obligations which are contingent, as well as those which are absolute. Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Maryland v. Commonwealth Trust Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 598, 599, 65 Misc. Rep. 88.

"There is a distinction made by the authorities between a contract of 'indemnity against liability for damages' and a simple contract of 'indemnity against damages.' In the former case it has very generally been held that an action may be brought and a recovery had as soon as the liability is legally imposed, while in the latter there is no cause of action until there is actual damage." Agreements, in an employer's liability policy, that if suit is brought against the assured he shall immediately forward the process to the insurer, which will defend or settle the claim, do not, when considered with a provision of the policy declaring its purpose to be indemnity to the assured "against loss from liability for damages," and another agreement that no action shall lie against the insurer in reference to any loss under the policy unless brought by the insured himself to reimburse him for payment by him in satisfaction of a judgment, render the policy one of "indemnity against liability," but it is a policy against loss or damage by reason of liability. Finley v. United States Casualty Co., 83 S. W. 2, 3, 113 Tenn. 592, 3 Ann. Cas. 962 (quoting Fenton v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 56 Pac. 1096, 36 Or. 283, 48 L. R. A. 770, and citing Jones v. Childs, 8 Nev.

As used in the statute of limitations which provides that an action on a contract or "liability," express or implied, which is not in writing and does not arise out of any instrument, etc., the term "liability" was evidently intended to refer to a contractual liability. Suter v. Wenatchee Water Power Co., 76 Pac. 298, 299, 85 Wash. 1, 102 Am. St. Rep. 881.

The word "liability," as used in Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. Wash. § 4800, subd. 3, providing a limitation for an "action upon a contract or 'liability,' expressed or implied, which is not in writing and does not arise out of any written instrument," is applicable only to contracts. The personal "liability" of shareholders in a national bank, under Rev. St. U. S. § 5151, for the contracts, debts, and engagements of the bank, cannot be regarded as a contract "liability," for the purpose of making applicable the limitation prescribed by Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. Wash. § 4800, subd. 3, for an "action upon a contract or 'liability,' expressed or implied, which is not in writing, and does not arise out of any written instrument." McClaine v. Rankin, 25 Sup. Ct. 410, 411, 197 U. S. 154, 49 L. Ed. 702, 8 Ann. Cas. 500.

The liability of a corporation for rent accruing from August 1, 1902, to June 11th following, under a lease executed in 1899, and fixing a monthly rental, is a liability within Membership Corporation Law, Laws 1895, p. 335, c. 559, § 11, making the directors of a membership corporation liable for any debt of the corporation contracted while they are directors and payable within one year or less from the date when contracted. Thistle v. Jones, 107 N. Y. Supp. 840, 841, 123 App. Div. 40.

Costs

As between the parties to a pending proceeding to establish a public drain, unadjudged costs do not constitute a liability within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 248, providing that repeal of a statute shall not extinguish any liability incurred under it; so that as between such parties repeal of the statute for the proceeding by Act March 6, 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 456, c. 157), and its consequent dismissal, did not affect any vested or contractual right. Kunkalman v. Gibson, 84 N. E. 985, 86 N. E. 850, 851, 171 Ind. 503.

Covenant

A covenant of warranty in a deed creates a liability as of the date of the deed and not as of the date of an eviction thereunder, and hence persons who have assumed the liabilities of a national bank on its voluntary liqvalidation cannot escape liability for breach of the bank's warranty in a deed because the warranty was not broken when the liabilities were assumed. McLean v. Moore (Tex.) 145 S. W. 1074, 1075 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4112).

Debt

The word "liability" is much more comprehensive than the term "debt"; "liability" meaning the state or condition of one who is under obligation to do at once or at some future time something which may be enforced by action. Hyatt v. Anderson's Trustee (Ky.) 74 S. W. 1094, 1096 (citing White v. Green, 74 N. W. 929, 105 Iowa, 181).

The provisions of Pub. St. N. H. c. 140, relative to the execution and record of chattel mortgages, must be fully complied with to render them valid against any one except the parties thereto. Under section 6 requiring the parties to swear that the mortgage is made for the purpose of securing the debt specified in the condition and for no other purpose, and section 9 providing that if the mortgage is executed to secure the mortgagee for a liability other than a debt due from the mortgagor, the form of the oath shall be so varied as truly to describe the "liability"; if the mortgage is given to secure a debt, the condition and oath must describe it as a debt; if to secure a liability, it must be described as such, and a liability is not covered by the term "debt." Sherman v. Estey Organ Co., 38 Atl. 70; 71, 69 Vt. 355.

Franchise

The relation between a city and the owner of an existing telephone franchise being quasi contractual for the performance of a service, an ordinance modifying the terms of the franchise for the purpose of securing more effective service in competition with the owner of another franchise is not invalid as releasing an "indebtedness" or "liability" to the municipality in violation of Const. § 52. Louisville Home Tel. Co. v. City of Louisville, 113 S. W. 855, 856, 860, 130 Ky. 611.

Judgment

The term "liability" generally includes every kind of legal obligation and is used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, 30 Stat. 550, as amended in 1903 (Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, 32 Stat. 798), providing that a discharge in bankruptcy releases a bankrupt from his debts, except such as are liabilities for obtaining property by false pretenses or representations as including every obligation to pay money whether evidenced by judgment or not, and every unsatisfied judgment is a liability. Woehrlie v. Canciani, 109 Pac. 888, 889, 158 Cal. 107; In re United Button Co., 140 Fed. 495, 505.

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 17, 32 Stat. 800, excepting certain "liabilities" from those released by a discharge in bankruptcy, an excepted liability need not be reduced to judgment. Bever v. Swecker, 116 N. W. 704, 706, 138 Iowa, 721.

The character of the "liability," as that word is used in Bankr. Act (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 550) § 17, subd. 2, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 5, 32 Stat. 798, specifying certain debts of a bankrupt not affected by a discharge, is not changed by the fact that the liability has been reduced to judgment. Peters v. United States, 177 Fed. 885, 887, 101 C. C. A. 99.

The change made in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17a (2), 30 Stat. 550, which as originally enacted provided that a discharge should release a bankrupt from all of his provable debts except such as "are judgments in actions * * * for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another," and which was amended Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 5, 32 Stat. 798, by substituting for the words "judgments in actions" the word "liabilities," did not have the effect of removing judgments for such causes from the excepted class, but of including such liability, whether judgment has been rendered upon it or not. Thompson v. Judy, 169 Fed. 553, 554, 95 C. C. A. 51.

As obligation

See Obligation.

As all obligations

An order of the federal court directing its receiver of a railroad to restore to the railroad its property in his hands on the agreement of the railroad to assume "all lawful liabilities and obligations of" the receiver existing on a designated date and save the receiver harmless against the payment of liabilities incurred by him, imposes on the railroad the payment of liabilities incidental to the receiver's operation of the road, including that for injuries to a passenger through the negligence of the receiver's servants; the word "obligations" meaning duties arising out of a contract or from an actionable tort, and the word "liabilities" including any form of legal obligation measured by money valuation, whether arising from contract, express or implied, from duty imposed by law or judgment of court, or in consequence of a tort. Vandalia Ry. Co. v. Keys, 91 N. E. 173, 175, 46 Ind. App. 353 (quoting 6 Words and Phrases, p. 4878).

Ordinance

"Liability," within Milwaukee Charter, c. 4, §§ 2, 4, requiring the vote on ordinances creating "liability" against the city or any fund thereof to be taken by ayes and noes, means more than a naked undertaking in volving no expense, covering a claim or obligation presented to the council for audit and allowance against some fund, and hence the section does not apply to an ordinance requiring street railway companies to sprinkle the part of streets occupied by their tracks on the city furnishing the necessary water. State ex rel. City of Milwaukee v. Milwaukee Electric Ry. & Light Co., 129 N. W. 623, 629, 144 Wis. 386, 140 Am. St. Rep. 1025.

Tax

The word "liability" is of large significance, but, as used in the statute limiting the time for bringing actions founded on contracts or liabilities, express or implied, it refers plainly to liabilities of a contractual nature, and not to taxes. Bradford v. Storey, 75 N. E. 256, 257, 189 Mass. 104.

Liability for tort

The word "liability," in the absence of anything limiting its scope, includes obligations arising out of torts as well as out of contracts. Thus where, on the dissolution of a firm engaged in the insurance and brokerage business, the continuing partner gave a bond to the outgoing partner, conditioned to pay all "liabilities" of the firm, it embraced a claim against the firm for damages caused by false representations made in a sale by the firm of certain securities. Price v. Parker, 83 N. E. 323, 197 Mass. 1, 125 Am. St. Rep. 326.

The limitation of a shipowner's liability for maritime torts not the result of his own fault, provided by Rev. St. §§ 4288-4285, was extended to nonmaritime torts by Act June 26, 1884, 23 Stat. 57, c. 121, § 18, limiting the individual liability of a shipowner for "any or all debts and liabilities" except wages and liabilities incurred prior to such enactment, to his share in the vessel, and the aggregate liabilities of all the owner of a vessel on account of the same to the value of the vessel and freight pending. Richardson v. Harmon, 32 Sup. Ct. 27, 29, 222 U. S. 96, 56 L. Ed. 110.

The exemption of lands, acquired under the homestead laws, from "liability" for any debt contracted by the parties does not exempt them from liabilities for torts. Brun v. Mann, 151 Fed. 145, 155, 80 C. C. A. 513, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 154.

Const. art. 12, § 7, declares that "no corporation shall lease or alienate any franchise so as to relieve the franchise or property held thereunder from the liabilities of the lessor or grantor, lessee or grantee, contracted or incurred in the operation, use, or enjoyment of such franchise or any of its privileges." Held, that a corporation exercising the right to occupy and use the streets and public places for the operation of an electric light and power plant, and a street railway, under a franchise granted by the city, cannot convey such franchise so as to relieve the property used in the exercise thereof from liability for a judgment obtained for personal injuries to an employé in the operation of such property. Cooper v. Utah Light & R. Co., 102 Pac. 202, 206, 85 Utah, 570, 136 Am. St. Rep. 1075.

Temporarily unenforceable obligation

"Liability," in a legal sense, is the state or condition of one who is under obligation to do at once, or at some future time, something which may be enforced by action. It may exist without the right of immediate enforcement." Hyatt v. Anderson's Trustee (Ky.) 74 S. W. 1094, 1096 (quoting and adopting definition in White v. Green, 74 N. W. 929, 105 Iowa, 181, and citing Fisse v. Einstein, 5 Mo. App. 78; Home Ins. Co. of New York v. Peoria & P. U. Ry. Co., 52 N. E. 862, 178 Ill. 64; Pittsburgh & C. R. Co. v. Clarke, 29 Pa. 146; Cochran v. United States, 15 Sup. Ct. 628, 157 U. S. 296, 39 L. Ed. 704).

LIABILITY CREATED BY LAW

See also, Legally Liable.

The liability of a stockholder for his proportion of a corporate debt is a "liability created by law," as that term is used in the statute of limitations. O'Neill v. Quarnstrom, 92 Pac. 391, 392, 6 Cal. App. 469.

An action against a railroad company to recover for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the violation by defendant of Safety Appliance Act, is one "upon a liability created by statute" within the meaning of Ky. St. § 2515, limiting the time for bringing such actions to five years, and, in absence of any federal statute of limitations, is governed by that section where the action is in that state. Nichols v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., 195 Fed. 913, 916, 115 C. C. A. 601.

Though the master's liability for injury to an employé in a mine through negligence of a fellow servant did not exist prior to Rev. Codes, § 5248, yet such statute is to be regarded not as creating a new cause of action, but as merely carrying forward the right of the injured party, and removing a defense theretofore available in such class of cases; so that as regards the statute of limitations, the action for personal injuries is founded on actionable negligence, and not on a "liability created by statute" within section 6449, subd. 1; which phrase has come to have a fixed application to a class of cases quite distinct from those elsewhere mentioned or referred to in the chapter on limitations. Beeler v. Butte & London Copper Development Co., 110 Pac. 528, 530, 41 Mont. 465.

City taxes on omitted property are a "liability imposed by statute," within the meaning of that term as used in the statute of limitations, and are barred in five years. Muir's Adm'r v. City of Bardstown, 87 S. W. 1096, 1100, 120 Ky. 739.

Taxes are a "liability created by statute," within Ky. St. § 2515, limiting an action on a liability created by statute. Chatterton v. City of Louisville, 140 S. W. 647, 145 Ky. 485.

LIABILITY OF COUNTY

The state may authorize drainage districts to incur indebtedness for which they alone are liable and to issue evidence of indebtedness for which lands within the districts are alone liable, and where such bonds are issued they are not a "liability of the county," within Const. art. 12, § 5, prohibiting the loan of credit by any county to any corporation or association. Lee Wilson & Co. v. Wm. R. Compton Bond & Mortgage Co., 146 S. W. 110, 113, 103 Ark. 452.

LIBEL

See Criminal Libel.

Malice in libel and slander, see Malice.

See, also, Actionable Per Se; Jactitation; Privileged Communication.

"Libel" is the invasion of the reputation of private persons. State ex inf. Crow v. Shepherd, 76 S. W. 79, 92, 177 Mo. 205, 99 Am. St. Rep. 624. See, also, Brown v. Publishers: George Knapp & Co., 112 S. W. 474, 485, 213 Mo. 655.

A "libel" is a malicious defamation expressed in printing or writing, or by signs, pictures, etc., tending to injure the reputation of another, thereby exposing such person to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule. Henry v. Cherry & Webb, 73 Atl. 97, 99, 30 R. I. 13, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, 136 Am. St. Rep. 928, 18 Ann. Cas. 1006; State v. O'Hagan, 63 Atl. 95, 73 N. J. Law, 209 (quoting 4 Black. Com. 150; Ogders on Libel and Slander); Horton v. Binghamton Press Co., 106 N. Y. Supp. 875, 876, 122 App. Div. 332; Hughes v. New York Evening Post Co., 100 N. Y. Supp. 982, 984, 115 App. Div. 611.

A "libel" is a malicious publication, expressed either in printing or in writing, or by signs and pictures, tending either to blacken the memory of one dead, or the reputation of one who is alive, and expose him to public hatred, contempt, and ridicule. Watson v. Detroit Journal Co., 107 N. W. 81, 84, 143 Mich. 430, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 480, 8 Ann. Cas. 131 (quoting and adopting definition of Chief Justice Parsons in Commonwealth v. Clap, 4 Mass. 168, 3 Am. Dec. 212); Vassar College v. Loose-Wiles Biscuit Co., 197 Fed. 982, 985.

"A 'libel' is malicious defamation, expressed either by writing or printing, or by signs, pictures, effigies, or the like, tending to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or to impeach the honesty or integrity or reputation, or publish the natural or alleged defects, of one who is alive, and thereby to expose him to public hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, or to cause him to be shunned or avoided, or to injure him in his office, business, or occupation." Hubbard v. Furman University, 57 S. E. 478, 76 S. C. 510 (quoting and adopting the definition in Smith

"Libel," in the criminal law, is "a malicious defamation, expressed either in printing or writing, or by signs or pictures, tending to blacken the memory of one who is dead, with intent to provoke the living; or the reputation of one who is alive and to expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule." State v. Kiernan, 41 South. 55, 116 La. 739 (quoting and adopting the definition in Bouv. Law Dict. and Black, Law Dict.).

"A 'libel' is the malicious defamation of a person, made public by any printing or writing which tends to provoke him to wrath or expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or to deprive him of the benefits of public confidence and social intercourse. A 'libel' is a tort, and, generally speaking, neither the intention with which a tortfeasor acted, nor the state of his feelings toward the person injured or mankind at large, lessens his responsibility for injuries actually caused by his wrongful act. He must make recompense, although he was free from moral delinquency. Any false or defamatory publication which is not privileged gives rise to a case for damages sustained from it. This is true of libel, notwithstanding the formula so often reiterated that malice is the gist of the action. The essential facts are the falsity of the charge, and its publication and libelous nature. If true, no degree of malice in the publisher will make it libel, nor, if false, will rectitude of purpose exonerate him." Farley v. Evening Chronicle Pub. Co., 87 S. W. 565, 567, 113 Mo. App. 216.

A "libel" is a malicious publication, expressed either in printing or writing, or by signs or pictures, tending either to injure the memory of one dead or the reputation of one living, and exposes him to public ridicule or contempt; the injury to reputation in the case of one living being the gist of the action. Cohen v. New York Times Co., 138 N. Y. Supp. 206, 209, 153 App. Div. 242.

A "libel" is a malicious publication expressed either in printing or writing or by signs or pictures, tending to blacken the memory of the dead, or the reputation of one who is alive, and expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule. As the falsity of the publication is essential to render a publication a libel, which may be defined as any publication injurious to the reputation of another, an instruction in an action upon a libel which, in purporting to define a libel, failed to mention the element of falsity, is erroneous. Words written of a person's trade or business may be libelous when they might not be so if spoken of the individual personally, for every publication, written or printed, which as a necessary or natural consequence will occasion pecuniary loss to a business man, is a libel. Dobbin v. Chicago,

R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 138 S. W. 682, 685, 157 Mo. App. 659 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4116).

Since, under the statute, the truth of an alleged libelous article may be shown in justification, the word "false" must be added to the definition of libel as any publication injurious to the reputation of another. Julian v. Kansas City Star Co., 107 S. W. 496, 500, 209 Mo. 35.

"A 'libel' is anything written or printed which from its terms is calculated to injure the character of another by bringing him into hatred, contempt, or ridicule, and which is published without lawful justification or excuse." "Scandalous matter is not necessary to make a libel. It is enough if the defendant induces an ill opinion to be had of the plaintiff or to make him contemptible and ridiculous." Cranfill v. Hayden, 80 S. W. 609, 612, 97 Tex. 544.

"Libel" is that which is written and published to injure the reputation of another, by bringing him into ridicule, hatred, or contempt. Petitioners, as members of a society, published an article charging a majority of their fellow members with unjust and stupid attacks and low and vile insinuations against petitioners, causing them to resign from a celebration committee. It was also alleged that the "new brave committee" were inefficient to conduct a contemplated celebration by reason of illiteracy, etc., and charged the president with being "more unreasonable still and childishly ambitious," bringing to the society dishonor, and that petitioners, representing a minority, did not recognize the celebration of the majority as a celebration of the society, for the purpose of safeguarding the dignity of its members. Held, that such article was defamatory, and warranted petitioners' expulsion from the society under a by-law authorizing such expulsion for defamation of the association. Del Ponte v. Societa Italiana Di M. S. Guglielmo Marconi, 60 Atl. 237, 240, 27 R. I. 1, 70 L. R. A. 188, 114 Am. St. Rep. 17.

"Any false and malicious writing published of another is 'libelous per se' when its tendency is to render him contemptible or ridiculous in public estimation, or expose him to public hatred or contempt, or hinder virtuous men from associating with him." Williams v. Fuller, 94 N. W. 118, 119, 68 Neb. 354 (citing Cooley, Torts, 206; World Pub. Co. v. Mullen, 61 N. W. 108, 43 Neb. 128, 47 Am. St. Rep. 737).

Any written words which directly or indirectly charge a person with crime, or which tend to injure his reputation in any other way, or to expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, if published without legal excuse or justification, constitute a "libel," and the person in respect to whom they are written may sue therefor, without alleging or proving special damages. Rich- ardson v. Thorpe, 68 Atl. 580, 73 N. H. 532 (citing Giles v. John B. Clarke Co., 36 Atl. 876, 69 N. H. 92; Palmer v. City of Concord, 48 N. H. 211, 97 Am. Dec. 605; Newell, Slander & Libel [2d Ed.] 43-45).

Any publication in writing which holds one up to ridicule, contempt, hatred, or obloquy is "libelous," even though it charge no criminal offense. Gordon v. New York Evening Journal Pub. Co., 111 N. Y. Supp. 574, 575, 127 App. Div. 353.

It is not necessary, to constitute a libel, that the publication charge one with the commission of a crime or with having a contagious disease, but any words which impute to him conduct or qualities tending to injure his character, or to degrade him or which expose him to contempt, ridicule, or public hatred, are libelous per se. Weeks v. News Pub. Co., 83 Atl. 162, 164, 117 Md. 128.

A letter, to be libelous, must be defamatory, and communicated to bring another into contempt, ridicule, or hatred. Dickinson v. Hathaway, 48 South. 136, 137, 122 La. 644, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 33.

To make a writing actionable as being libelous, it must impute something which tends to disgrace a man, lower him in or exclude him from society, or bring him into contempt or ridicule. It is not intended by this that to make a publication libelous it must contain a direct and open charge. The publication must be judged by its general tenor, and if, taking the terms in their ordinary acceptation, it conveys a degrading imputation, however indirectly, it is a "libel." If the article complained of represents a person as a dishonest or dishonorable man, it would be a libel. Todd v. Every Evening Printing Co. (Del.) 66 Atl. 97, 99, 6 Pennewill, 233 (citing Rice v. Simmons [Del.] 2 Har. 429, 31 Am. Dec. 766).

A false and malicious printed or written publication, which imputes conduct or qualities tending to disparage or degrade the plaintiff, or exposes him to contempt, ridicule, or public hatred, or prejudice his private character, or credit, is "libelous per se." A publication stating that the vestryman of a church "relentlessly turned his back on moral and legal obligations to the detriment of a rector, who had suffered himself to become debilitated while plodding along the path of duty to the congregation," or that the vestryman had violated a promise he had made to the members of the church whereby objections to his election as vestryman were prevented, was libelous per se. Goldborough v. Orem & Johnson, 64 Atl. 36, 40, 103 Md. 671.

Any language written of another that tends to degrade him or to bring him into ill repute or to destroy the confidence of his neighbors in his integrity, or to cause other like injury, is libelous per se. Stewart v. Codrington, 45 South. 809, 812, 55 Fla. 327.

To constitute a publication respecting a person libelous per se, it must reflect on the character of such person by bringing him into ridicule, hatred, or contempt, or affect him injuriously in his trade or profession, and a statement in a newspaper concerning a woman that she had hysterics, the same not containing any imputation upon her as an individual or in respect to her profession, is not, though untrue, per se libelous, and cannot be ground of recovery of damages in the absence of proof of special damage. Cleveland Leader Printing Co. v. Nethersole, 95 N. E. 735, 737, 84 Ohio St. 118, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 978.

A publication is "libelous per se" where it has a tendency to injure a person in his business or occupation or exposes him to public hatred, contempt, ridicule, or disgrace. Bergstrom v. Ridgway-Thayer Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 1093, 1094, 53 Misc. Rep. 95.

A written or printed publication, false, defamatory, and tending to expose one to ridicule or contempt, or to render him odious, or injure him in his business or calling or in his social standing, is a libel. Register Newspaper Co. v. Worten, 111 S. W. 693, 697.

A writing is libelous if it subjects the person referred to to odium or ridicule, or tends to subject him to obloquy. Kentucky Journal Pub. Co. v. Brock, 131 S. W. 1, 140 Ky. 373.

The test whether a newspaper article is "libelous per se" is whether to the mind of an intelligent man, the tenor of the article and the language used naturally import a criminal or disgraceful charge. It is libelous per se to charge a person with but a single commission of an act, if the act itself amounts to or imports moral delinquency or disreputable conduct. Church v. Tribune Ass'n, 119 N. Y. Supp. 885, 886, 135 App. Div. 30.

An article designed and calculated to exhibit plaintiff as a shallow, ridiculous, and contemptible person, dishonest and undeserving of confidence, is libelous per se. Morse v. Times-Republican Printing Co., 100 N. W. 867, 869, 124 Iowa, 707.

A written or printed statement or article published of or concerning another, which is false, and tends to injure his reputation and thereby expose him to public hatred, contempt, scorn, obloquy, or shame, is "libelous per se." Woolworth v. Star Co., 90 N. Y. Supp. 147, 148, 97 App. Div. 525 (citing Triggs v. Sun Printing & Publishing Co., 71 N. E. 739, 742, 179 N. Y. 144, 153, 66 L. R. A. 612, 103 Am. St. Rep. 841, 1 Ann. Cas. 328).

Statutory definitions

The California statute (Civ. Code, § 45) defines "libel" which may be the subject of a civil action for damages as a false and unprivileged publication by writing, printing, picture, effigy, or other fixed representation to the eye, which exposes any person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, or which causes him to be shunned or avoided, or has a tendency to injure him in his occupation. Under this definition, malice is not an ingredient of a cause of action for a civil libel, and a recovery of full and compensatory damages may be had, though absence of malice is proved. Another provision (Pen. Code, § 248) defines "libel," the basis of a criminal prosecution, to consist of a malicious defamation, expressed either by writing, printing, signs, pictures, or the like, tending to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or to impeach the honesty, integrity, virtue, or reputation, or publish the natural or alleged defects of one who is alive, and thereby expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule. While malice is an essential element of the offense of libel so defined, prima facie proof of such malice is made by evidence that an injurious publication concerning another has been made without justifiable motive, whereupon the law presumes malice sufficient to support a criminal charge, as provided by section 250. Davis v. Hearst, 116 Pac. 530, 531, 160 Cal. 143.

The Idaho statute (Rev. St. 1887, § 6737) defines "libel" as a malicious defamation, expressed either by writing, printing, or by signs or pictures, or the like, tending to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or to impeach the honesty, integrity, virtue, or reputation, or publish the natural or alleged defects, of one who is alive, and thereby to expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule. It is sufficient that the defamation tends to impeach the honesty, integrity, virtue, or reputation, and thereby to expose such person to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule. To constitute libel, it is not necessary that the alleged libelous matter charge the person named with a crime. State v. Sheridan, 93 Pac. 656, 657, 14 Idaho, 222, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 497.

Under the Colorado Statute (Mills' Ann. St. § 1313), defining "libel" as a malicious defamation expressed either by printing, or by signs, or pictures, or the like, tending to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or to impeach the honesty, integrity, virtue, or reputation, or publish the natural defects of one who is alive, and thereby to expose him or her to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, a publication to be libelous must be malicious. Rocky Mountain News Printing Co. v. Fridborn, 104 Pac. 956, 958, 46 Colo. 440, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 891.

expressed in print or writing, or pictures, or signs, tending to injure the reputation of an individual and exposing him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule. To falsely publish of another that there are criminal cases pending against him is libelous per se. Witham v. Atlanta Journal, 53 S. E. 105, 107, 124 Ga. 688, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 977.

Cr. Code, § 177 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 38), defines libel as a malicious defamation, expressed either by printing or by signs or pictures, tending to impeach the honesty, integrity, virtue, or reputation, or publish the natural defects of one who is alive and thereby expose him to public hatred, contempt, ridicule, or financial injury. A newspaper article published by accused charging prosecutor with improper and dishonest actions as state's attorney, and with having prostituted his office for private interests and political purposes, and that he was in collusion with violators of the liquor law, that he was actuated by improper motives with reference to an alleged bridge trust, and that there was no doubt but that such trust had "proven a fat goose to some one," that there was also good ground to suspect something dishonest and crooked in the matter, and that it was not prosecutor's purpose to enforce the law, was libelous per se. People v. Strauch, 93 N. E. 126, 130, 247 Ill. 220.

At common law any publication is a "libel" which degrades and injures another person, or brings him into contempt, hatred, or ridicule, or which accuses him of a crime, punishable by law, or of an act odious and disgraceful in society. It is defined by the Penal Code of Indiana to be a malicious publication of any false charge of and concerning another, accusing such other of any degrading or infamous act. Cronin v. Zimmerman, 88 N. E. 718, 719, 44 Ind. App. 118; Id., 90 N. E. 339, 45 Ind. App. 712.

The Iowa statute (Code, § 5086), defines libel as the malicious defamation of a person, made public by any printing, etc., tending to provoke hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or to deprive him of the benefit of public confidence and social intercourse. In a criminal prosecution for libel, the information alleged that defendant charged the prosecutor with scheming to disbar certain attorneys, because they acted as attorneys for a temperance organization, and that he was guilty of grossly unprofessional conduct by testifying as a witness while acting as prosecutor in the disbarment cases, and that the prosecution was an attempt to cover the record of prosecutor as county attorney for unprofessional conduct before the grand jury, and that he attempted to falsify the court record in the disbarment proceedings, and suppressed certain affidavits in the investigation, which charges defendant published in a temperance paper edited by him. Held, that the publication charged was libelous per se, and it was error to leave to the jury the question whether it was libelous, as there was no ambiguity in the language. State v. Cooper, 116 N. W. 691, 692, 138 Iowa, 516.

The Kansas statute (section 2271, Gen. St. 1901) defines a "libel" as a malicious defamation of a person made public by any printing, writing, sign, picture, representation, or effigy, tending to provoke him to wrath or expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or to deprive him of the benefits of public confidence and social intercourse, or any malicious defamation made public as aforesaid, designed to blacken and vilify the memory of one who is dead, and tending to scandalize or provoke his surviving relatives and friends. To say of a man that he is a eunuch is actionable per se. Eckert v. Van Pelt, 76 Pac. 909, 910, 69 Kan. 357, 66 L. R. A. 266.

It is libelous per se to write of a clergyman, an applicant for a pulpit, "I would not have anything to do with him or touch him with a ten-foot pole," if the words would expose the person written of to hatred or contempt, or injury to his business or occupation within the definition of "libel" in the Minnesota statute (Rev. Laws 1905, § 4918). Cole v. Millsbaugh, 126 N. W. 626, 111 Minn. 159, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 152, 137 Am. St. Rep. 546, 20 Ann. Cas. 717.

The Missouri statute (Rev. St. 1899, § 2259) defining libel as a malicious defamation of a person made public by any printing, writing, sign, picture, etc., tending to provoke him to wrath, or expose him to public hatred, contempt, and ridicule, etc., and section 2260 making the circulation of a libel a misdemeanor, made all classes of libels misdemeanors and actionable per se, but did not make publications libelous that were not so at common law. Kenworthy v. Journal Co., 93 S. W. 882, 885, 117 Mo. App. 327. Under the statute of this state (Rev. St. 1899, §§ 2260, 2263; Ann. St. 1906, pp. 1426, 1637), declaring that one publishing a libel shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and providing that it is actionable to publish falsely that any person has been guilty of adultery, it is libel to allege in a circular printed and published that one has committed adultery. State v. Sant Huff, 110 S. W. 624, 626, 131 Mo. App. 620. The statute of this state (Rev. St. 1909, § 4818) defining a libel as the malicious defamation of a person by printing so as to expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, though a part of the Criminal Code, is applicable to civil actions, and, under it, a newspaper article stating that plaintiff was served with a summons in an alleged fraudulent cattle transaction, and that he had taken advantage of the bankruptcy law to escape liability, is libelous per se. Sotham v. Drovers' Telegram Co., 144 S. W. 428, 431, 239 Mo. 606. Under this statute the publication, without consent, of the picture of a child five years old, with the false statement that "Papa is going to buy mamma an Elgin watch for a present, and some one (I must not tell who) is going to buy my big sister a diamond ring, so don't you think you ought to buy me something?" as an advertisement in aid to business, is libelous, as exposing the child to ridicule. Munden v. Harris, 134 S. W. 1076, 1081, 153 Mo. App. 652.

Under the Montana statute defining "libel" as a false and unprivileged publication in writing, printing, picture, effigy, or other fixed representation to the eye which exposes any person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, or which causes him to be shunned or avoided, or which has a tendency to injure him in his occupation, the existence of malice is not a necessary ingredient to entitle plaintiff to recover. Paxton v. Woodward, 78 Pac. 215, 217, 31 Mont. 195, 107 Am. St. Rep. 416, 3 Ann. Cas. 546.

The Penal Law of New York (Consol. Laws, c. 40) § 1346, provides that an indictment for a libel contained in a newspaper published in the state against a resident thereof may be found in the county where the paper was published or in the county where the person libeled resided when the offense was committed, and section 1347 provides that in libel against a nonresident the indictment shall be found and the trial had at the place where the paper containing the libel purports on its face to be published, or, if no county is indicated thereon, in any county where the paper is circulated. Code Cr. Proc. § 138, contained substantially similar provisions relating to the place of indictment and trial where the person libeled is a resident and nonresident. Penal Law, § 1340, defines libel as a malicious publication by writing, printing, etc., which exposes any living person to contempt, etc. Held, that the purpose of sections 1346 and 1347 was to designate the place of indictment and trial, and not to define libel; and hence do not limit the operation of section 1340 by excluding books or writings other than newspapers, and, under the latter section, as well as at common law, one could be prosecuted for a libel published in a book in this state, though committed against a nonresident. People v. Fornaro, 119 N. Y. Supp. 746, 748, 65 Misc. Rep. 457.

The North Dakota statute (Rev. Codes 1899, § 2715) defines "libel" as "a false and unprivileged publication by writing, printing, picture, effigy, or other fixed representation to the eye, which exposes any person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, or which causes him to be shunned or avoided, or which has a tendency to injure him in his occupation." If the language of an alleged libel is fairly susceptible of a construction which renders it defamatory, the complaint states a cause of action. It is not necessary to render the words defamatory and actionable that they shall make the charge in direct terms. Lauder v. Jones, 101 N. W. 907, 911, 13 N. D. 525.

The statute (Rev. Codes 1905, § 8877) defines "criminal libel" as "the malicious defamation of a person made public by any printing, writing, sign, picture, reputation or effigy tending to expose him to public hatred, contempt or ridicule, or to deprive him of the benefits of public confidence or social intercourse. * * *" And the following section provides that: "Every person who makes or composes, dictates or procures the same to be done or who willfully publishes or circulates such libel or in any way knowingly or willfully aids or assists in making, publishing or circulating the same is guilty of a felony." The gist of the crime is the malicious defamation of a person made public in one or more of the modes prescribed and tending to expose such person to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, etc. State v. Tolley, 136 N. W. 784, 785, 23 N. D. 284.

It is not necessary, in order to render a publication libelous, that it should charge any crime or public offense, inasmuch as the South Dakota statute (Civ. Code, § 29) defines "libel" as a false and unprivileged publication, by writing, printing, picture, effigy, or other fixed representation to the eye, which exposes any person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, or which causes him to be shunned or avoided, or which has a tendency to injure him in his occupation. Barron v. Smith, 101 N. W. 1105, 1106, 19 S. D. 50; Nichols v. Smith, 102 N. W. 1135, 19 S. D. 159.

The Texas statute (Acts 1901, p. 30, c. 26) defining a "libel" as a defamation tending to blacken the memory of the dead or to injure the living, or expose him to public hatred, contempt, ridicule, or financial injury, or to impeach his honesty and integrity, etc., includes any case which, in the absence of statute, was libelous at common law, and a publication directly impeaching one's integrity and truthfulness is libelous per se. Fleming v. Mattinson, 114 S. W. 650, 652, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 476. In view of this statute, words libelous per se and from the publication of which damages are implied as a matter of law are such words as tend to expose one to public hatred or disgrace or vilify him or injure his character. Allen v. Earnest (Tex.) 145 S. W. 1101, 1103.

Under Pen. Code, art. 721, declaring that he is guilty of "libel" who, with intent to injure, makes, publishes, or circulates any malicious statement affecting the reputation of another as to any matter or thing pointed out in the chapter, and article 727 declaring that the written, printed, or published statement, to come within the definition of "libel," must convey the idea that the person to whom it refers has been guilty of some penal offense, etc., it was held that an indictment for libel, alleging that defendant published a malicious statement concerning complainant, reciting that he was a United States federal guard, that he was a highwayman and cowardly assassin, and the murderer of a certain person who on the morning of March 19, 1906, was cowardly assassinated on a public highway, etc., sufficiently charged complainant with a penal offense, and was therefore sufficient. Gonzalez v. State, 124 S. W. 937, 938, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 141.

The Texas statute (Rev. Civ. St. 1911, art. 5595), defining a libel as a defamation expressed in printing or writing tending to injure the reputation of a person and expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or to impeach his honesty, integrity, or virtue, modifies the common-law rule as to libel and slander, and a publication is libelous whether it is libelous per se or not; it being sufficient if it can be shown by innuendo that the matter imputed had the tendency described in the statute and had reference to the plaintiff. Guisti v. Galveston Tribune, 150 S. W. 874, 876, 105 Tex. 497.

A "libel," as defined by the Washington statute, is the defamation of a person made public by any words, printing, writing, sign, picture, representation, or effigy tending to provoke him to wrath, or expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or to deprive him of the benefits of public confidence and social intercourse, or any defamation, made public as aforesaid, designed to blacken and vilify the memory of one who is dead, and tending to scandalize or provoke his surviving relatives or friends. Reynolds v. Holland, 90 Pac. 648, 650, 46 Wash. 537; Chambers v. Leiser, 86 Pac. 627, 628, 43 Wash. 285, 10 Ann. Cas. 270; State v. Mays, 107 Pac. 368, 365, 57 Wash. 540. And where a newspaper published an article stating that plaintiff's father had been charged with using the mails to defraud in selling land, and would be arrested, giving the details of the fraudulent operations, and published a photograph of the members of his family, including plaintiff, his young daughter, the publication of plaintiff's photograph in connection with the article concerning her father was not a "libel," within this statute. Hillman v. Star Pub. Co., 117 Pac. 594, 596, 64 Wash. 691, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 595. As this statute does not expressly make malice an ingredient of libel, a publication which tends to expose a person to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule is libelous, without regard to the existence of actual malice. Byrne v. Funk, 80 Pac. 772, 774, 38 Wash. 506, 3 Ann. Cas. 647. And so, where there has been an unwarranted publication in a newspaper of a list of conditional sales made by a retail dealer taken from memoranda legally filed by him with the county auditor, the dealer to charge a criminal libel under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 2424, defining libel as a malicious publication exposing any person to hatred, contempt, or ridicule, or injuring him in his business, must allege facts to show that the publication produced such results. State v. Darwin, 115 Pac. 309, 311, 63 Wash. 303, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1026.

Injury to business or trade

To be libelous, as tending to injure one in his business or profession, the words must have a direct tendency to hurt, as in the case of a charge of incapacity, dishonesty or insolvency. To publish concerning a lawyer that he was thrown into jail by a magistrate without a chance to tell his side of the case on the complaint of a woman for whom he had collected a debt, and from which amount of money collected he had deducted only the legal percentage for collection, was not "libelous," since the only fair import was that the lawyer was wrongfully thrown into jail which could not reflect upon his previous conduct, capacity, or character and did not tend to injure him in his profession. Hughes v. New York Evening Post, 100 N. Y. Supp. 982, 984, 115 App. Div. 611.

Any written words are "libelous" which in any manner are prejudicial to another in the way of his employment or trade. In a publication referring to plaintiff twice as a detective, and stating that, when plaintiff was attacked by robbers, he showed great cowardice and attempted to hide under the seat of the vehicle, the tendency of the words was to hold him up to scorn as a detective, and was "libelous." Holland v. Flick, 61 Atl. 828, 829, 212 Pa. 201.

Construction of language

The fact that an alleged libelous article uses a slang word upon which its libelous character depends does not render the article any the less libelous, provided the word used has a well-recognized meaning, or by the article itself is given a meaning which conveys to the reader the understanding that the word is used so as to impeach the honesty or reputation of the person named and expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule. State v. Sheridan, 93 Pac. 656, 657, 14 Idaho, 222, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 497.

In a published statement, referring to plaintiff, a candidate for public office, that "no man in the community has any interest in seeing the county disgraced by sending a 'social leper' to speak and act for her in public councils," the term "social leper" may mean that his moral traits of character are such as to require his banishment from society, and, if there is an inducement and innuendo, which, fairly interpreted, would give this meaning, may be "libelous." Sweeney v. Baker, 13 W. Va. 158, 193, 31 Am. Rep. 757.

Defendant wrote and published a letter to the mayor of New York, stating that defendant had written a letter to the Governor to get redress "for the scoundrellism" herein-after mentioned through the power of removal of city officials, but on second thought concluded to seek redress from the mayor. He then proceeded to make complaint against plaintiff as police commissioner for alleged incompetency and lawlessness in the administration of the police force of New York; the scoundrellism referred to being plaintiff's refusal as police commissioner to remove the photograph and record of a certain boy from the Rogues' Gallery; plaintiff being the only one defendant was complaining of, and his removal from office being the only redress sought. Held, that the word "scoundrellism" referred to plaintiff with sufficient certainty, and was libelous per se. Bingham v. Gaynor, 126 N. Y. Supp. 353, 360, 141 App. Div. 301.

Imputation of crime

When a newspaper published a news article stating that, within 15 minutes after the discovery of the body of plaintiff's wife, plaintiff had a quarrel with the undertaker, who had been called by her sister, and threatened to kill the undertaker unless he left the house, since the publication represented, in effect, that plaintiff threatened to kill another in a passion, without just cause, it would necessarily bring him into contempt and hatred so as to make the publication actionable libel. Gordon v. New York Evening Journal Pub. Co., 111 N. Y. Supp. 574, 575, 127 App. Div. 353.

Imputation of death

It is libelous per se to publish of a living person that he is dead, because, exposing him to ridicule; a libel being a malicious publication tending to expose one to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule. Cohen v. New York Times Co., 132 N. Y. Supp. 1, 74 Misc. Rep. 618.

Malice

A publication tending to expose one to contempt, ridicule, hatred, and derogation of character, if malicious, is "libelous." Mulderig v. Wilkes-Barre Times, 64 Atl. 636, 637, 215 Pa. 470, 114 Am. St. Rep. 967.

Slander distinguished

Included in slander by writing or speaking, see Slander by Writing or Speaking.

A "libel" differs from a "slander" in that a publication may be libelous when, if spoken orally, it would not be slanderous. This distinction is said by the books to be based upon the grounds that a vocal utterance does not import the same quality of deliberation, and is more prone to be the ebullition of mere effervescence or lack of mental equipoise, and to be accepted as indicative of feeling, rather than of conviction, and therefore not so much gravity is allowed to it as to words deliberately written down and published; the latter justifying the inference that they are the expression of settled conviction and affect the public mind correspondingly. So, too, an oral charge merely falls upon the ear, and the agency of the wrongdoer in inflicting injury comes to an end when his utterance has died on the ear, but not so with the written or printed charge, which may pass from hand to hand indefinitely, and may renew its youth, so to speak, as a defamation as long as the libel itself remains in existence, and hatch a new crop of slanders, to be blown hither and yon like thistledown at every sight of the libel, so that a printed slander, when published, takes a wider and more mischievous range than mere oral defamation, and is more reprehensible in the eye of the law. Cooley, Torts (2d Ed.) 240; Odgers, L. & Sland. (2d Ed.) 3; Dexter v. Spear, 7 Fed. Cas. 624, 4 Mason, 115. Thus, for instance, to publish of a man that he is a "skunk" (Massuere v. Dickens, 35 N. W. 349, 70 Wis. 83), a "swine" (Solverson v. Peterson, 25 N. W. 14, 64 Wis. 198, 54 Am. Rep. 607), a "drunkard," a "cuckold," a "tory" (Giles v. State, 6 Ga. 276), "I look on him as a rascal" (Williams v. Karnes, 4 Humph. [23 Tenn.] 9), "an imp of the devil and a cowardly snail" (Price v. Whitely, 50 Mo. 439), or that he has been "in collusion with ruffians" (Snyder v. Fulton, 34 Md. 128, 6 Am. Rep. 314), are each and all libelous. Ukman v. Daily Record Co., 88 S. W. 60, 64, 189 Mo. 378 (citing Nelson v. Musgrave, 10 Mo. 648; Hermann v. Bradstreet Co., 19 Mo. App. 227; Manget v. O'Neill, 51 Mo. App. 35).

"Libel" is a published writing, picture, or similar production of such a nature as to immediately tend to do mischief to a party, or injure the character of an individual. Slander of title is a false and malicious statement, whether by word of mouth or in writing, in reference to a person's title to some right or property belonging to him, as where a person alleges that the plaintiff has a defective title to land. A written slander of title is sometimes called a libel in the nature of slander of title. Words, though not slanderous in themselves, yet if published in writing, tending in any way to the discredit of a man, are "libel." Macurda v. Globe Newspaper Co., 165 Fed. 104, 107 (citing Bacon's Abridgement and Rapalje).

Written or printed matter which is communicated to third persons stands on a different footing from spoken words, and is often actionable when it would not be if spoken, and if it is of a character conducive to blacken the reputation of the person referred to, or excite ridicule or wrath against him, or destroy public confidence in him, it is actionable without proof of special damages, because written or printed injurious statements about a person imply a deliberate purpose to do harm, whereas detrimental words are often spoken thoughtlessly or in a passion. Weight is allowed, also, to the more enduring character and wider vogue of published statements. Farley v. Evening Chronicle Pub. Co., 87 S. W. 565, 568, 113 Mo. App. 216 (citing Odgers, L. & Sland. [4th Ed.] p. 4).

Restrained of Liberty, see Restrain.

The term "liberty" includes the individual rights of citizenship and its privileges. State ex rel. Gulon v. Miles, 109 S. W. 595, 610, 210 Mo. 127.

One definition of "liberties" is privileges or licenses taken in violation of the laws or propriety. Dekelt v. People, 99 Pac. 330, 331, 44 Colo. 525 (adopting definition in Webst. Dict.).

"Liberty," in its broad sense, means the right, not only of freedom from servitude, imprisonment, or restraint, but the right of one to use his faculties in all lawful ways, to live and work where he will, to earn his livelihood in any lawful calling, and to pursue any lawful trade or avocation. Wyatt v. James McCreery Co., 111 N. Y. S. 86, 88, 126 App. Div. 650 (quoting and adopting definition in Fisher Co. v. Woods, 79 N. E. 838, 187 N. Y. 90, 12 L. R. A. [N. S.] 707); Health Department of City of New York v. Rector, etc., of Trinity Church, 39 N. E. 833, 145 N. Y. 32, 27 L. R. A. 710, 45 Am. St. Rep. 579; People v. Gillson, 17 N. E. 343, 109 N. 763; Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 182, 30 Am. Rep. 289; Gilman v. Tucker, 28 N. E. 1040, 128 N. Y. 190, 200, 13 L. R. A. 304, 26 Am. St. Rep. 464; Frank L. Fisher Co. v. Woods, 79 N. E. 837, 187 N. Y. 90, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 707.

"Liberty," in its broad sense, means the right not only of freedom from actual restraint of the person but the right of such use of his faculties in all lawful ways to live and work where he will, to earn his livelihood in any lawful calling, and to pursue any lawful trade or avocation. All laws, therefore, which impair or trammel those rights or restrict his freedom of action or his choice of methods in the transaction of his lawful business are infringement upon his fundamental right of "liberty" and are void. People v. Lochner, 69 N. E. 373, 386, 177 N. Y. 145, 101 Am. St. Rep. 773.

The "liberty" guaranteed by the fourteenth amendment of the federal Constitution against deprivation without due process of law is a liberty of natural, not artificial, persons. Western Turf Ass'n v. Greenberg, 27 Sup. Ct. 384, 386, 204 U. S. 359, 51 L. Ed. 520.

"Liberty" includes not only the right to be out of prison, free to come and go, if the law is not violated in so doing, but to engage in all lawful pursuits, earn a livelihood, and own and enjoy property. To exclude from entry into the United States, or to deport therefrom, a citizen of the United States deprives him of liberty in the constitutional sense. In re Sing Tuck, 126 Fed. 386, 394.

Const. U. S. Amend. 14, and Const. R. I. art. 1, § 10, providing that no person shall be deprived of "liberty" without due process of law, were borrowed from the thirty-ninth article of the Great Charter, declaring that no free man shall be taken or imprisoned, or dissembled, or outlawed or punished or in any ways destroyed, nor "will we pass upon him, or send upon him, unless by legal judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land"; the words corresponding to "liberty" in the first pronouncement being "taken," "imprisoned," "outlawed," and "punished," which are not confined to mere freedom from incarceration or imprisonment. Henry v. Cherry & Webb, 73 Atl. 97, 107, 30 R. I. 13, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, 136 Am. St. Rep. 928, 18 Ann. Cas. 1006.

The word "liberty," as used in Const. art. 2, providing that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property except by due process of law, means not only the right to freedom from actual servitude, imprisonment, or restraint, but the right of one to use his faculties in all lawful ways, to live and work where he will, to earn his livelihood in any lawful calling, and to pursue any lawful trade or vocation. State ex rel. Galle v. City of New Orleans, 36 South. 999, 1001, 113 La. 371, 67 L. R. A. 70, 2 Ann. Cas. 92 (citing in re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636).

"By the term 'liberty,' as used in the provision [Fourteenth Amendment], something more is meant than mere freedom from physical restraint or the bounds of a prison. It means freedom to go where one may choose, and to act in such manner, not inconsistent with the equal rights of others, as his judgment may dictate for the promotion of his happiness; that is, to pursue such callings and avocations as may be most suitable to develop his capacities, and give to them their highest enjoyment." Powell v. Pennsylvania, 8 Sup. Ct. 992, 1259, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. Ed. 253 (Field, J., dissenting).

"The liberty of which the fourteenth amendment forbids a state from depriving any one without due process of law is something more than freedom from the enslavement of the body or from physical restraint. In my judgment the words 'life, liberty or property' in the fourteenth amendment should be interpreted as embracing every right that may be brought within judicial cognizance, and therefore no right of that kind can be taken in violation of 'due process of law.'" Taylor v. Beckham, 20 Sup. Ct. 890, 1016, 178 U. S. 548, 44 L. Ed. 1187 (Harlan, J., dissenting).

"The term 'liberty,' as protected by the Constitution, is not cramped into a mere freedom from physical restraint of the person of the citizen, as by incarceration, but it is deemed to embrace the right of man to be free in the enjoyment of the faculties with which he has been endowed by his Creator, subject only to such restraints as are necessary for the common welfare." MacMullen v. City of Middletown, 98 N. Y. Supp. 145, 149, 112 App. Div. 81 (quoting Rapallo, J., in People v. Marx, 2 N. E. 29, 99 N. Y. 377, 52 Am. Rep. 34).

"'Liberty,' in the sense in which the term is employed in the Constitution, is not restricted to mere freedom from imprisonment, but it embraces the right of a person to use his God-given powers, employ his faculties, exercise his judgment in the affairs of life, and to be free in the enjoyment and disposal of his acquisitions, subject only to such restraints as are imposed by the law of the land for the public welfare. The word 'liberty,' as thus employed in the Constitution and understood in the United States, is a term of comprehensive scope. It embraces not only freedom from servitude and from imprisonment and arbitrary restraint of person, but also all our religious, civil, political, and personal rights, including the right in each subject to purchase, hold, and sell or dispose of property in the same way that his neighbor may; and of such liberties no one can be deprived except by due process of law." Block v. Schwartz, 76 Pac. 22, 25, 27

The word "liberty," as used in the constitutional guaranty against deprivation of liberty, means the right, not only to freedom from actual servitude, imprisonment, or restraint, but the right of one to use his faculties in all lawful ways, to live and work where he will, to earn his livelihood in any lawful calling, and to pursue any lawful trade or vocation. City of New Orleans v. Smythe, 41 South, 33, 36, 116 La. 685, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 722, 144 Am. St. Rep. 566 (citing In re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Marx, 2 N. E. 29, 52 Am. Rep. 34, 99 N. Y. 386; Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. Ed. 676).

By the term "liberty," as used in the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution, something more is meant than mere freedom from physical restraint or the bounds of a prison. It means freedom to go where one may choose, and to act in such manner, not inconsistent with the equal rights of others, as his judgment may dictate for the promotion of his happiness; that is, to pursue such callings and avocations as may be most suitable to develop his capacities and give to them their highest enjoyment. Kansas Natural Gas Co. v. Haskell, 172 Fed. 545, 566 (citing Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77).

The "liberty" mentioned in the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States means not only the right of the citizen to be free from the mere physical restraint of his person, as by incarceration, but the term is deemed to embrace the right of the citizen to be free in the employment of all his faculties; to be free to use them in all lawful ways; to live and work where he will; to earn his livelihood by any lawful calling. It is a part of every man's civil right that he be left at liberty to refuse business relations with any person whomsoever, whether the refusal rests upon reason, or is the result of whim, caprice, prejudice, or malice. Ex parte Drayton, 153 Fed. 986, 989 (quoting and adopting definition in Allgeyer v. State of Louisiana, 17 Sup. Ct. 431, 165 U. S. 589, 41 L. Ed. 832; Cooley, Torts, p. 278).

"The term 'liberty,' as used in the Constitution, is not dwarfed into mere freedom from physical restraint of the person of the citizen, as by incarceration, but is deemed to embrace the right of man to be free in the enjoyment of the faculties with which he has been endowed by his Creator, subject only to such restraints as are necessary for the common welfare." It is not every equal law which is a just law, but, within limits, it may be said that equality is an attribute of liberty. McKinster v. Sager, 72 N. E. 854, 857, 163 Ind. 671, 68 L. R. A. 273, 106 Am. St. Rep. 268 (quoting and adopting definition in People v. Gillson, 17 N. E. 843, 845, 109 N. Y. 389, 398, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465).

The state may decline to confer official power on residents of other states without depriving such nonresidents of "liberty" or "property," within the meaning of those words as used in the Constitution. "Liberty," as the term is used in the constitutional provision, includes freedom from servitude and unlawful restraint, the right to pursue any ordinary calling, trade, or employment, and acquire property thereby, but does not include any supposed right of a nonresident to receive an appointment to a position created by the general laws of the state for the purpose of carrying into effect legislation affecting the state and its people. No nonresident enjoys the right of "liberty" or property in the fees or emoluments of the office of the executor or administrator. In re Mulford, 75 N. E. 845, 846, 217 Ill. 242, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 341, 108 Am. St. Rep. 249, 3 Ann. Cas. 986.

Right to contract

The privilege of contracting is both a "liberty" and a property right, and is protected by the Constitution. People v. Steele, 83 N. E. 236, 237, 231 Ill. 840, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 361, 121 Am. St. Rep. 321.

"It has been held that the word 'liberty,' as used in the Constitution, was not to be confined to the mere liberty of person, but included, among others, a right to enter into certain classes of contracts for the purpose of enabling the citizen to carry on its business." Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. v. United States, 20 Sup. Ct. 96, 102, 175 U. S. 211, 44 L. Ed. 136.

"Congress may restrain individuals from making contracts under certain circumstances and upon certain subjects." United States v. Joint Traffic Ass'n, 19 Sup. Ct. 25, 33, 171 U. S. 505, 43 L. Ed. 259.

"The word 'liberty,' as used in the constitutional declarations, means more than freedom of locomotion. It includes and comprehends, among other things, freedom of speech, the right to self-defense against unlawful violence, and the right to buy and sell as others may." Rev. St. 1899, § 8142, prohibiting any person or corporation from issuing, in payment of wages, any order or evidence of indebtedness not negotiable and redeemable at its face value in lawful money of the United States by the person issuing it, section 8143, requiring all persons issuing such orders during business hours to be ready to redeem the same in lawful money of the United States at the option of the holder, and section 8144, providing that a violation of the preceding sections shall constitute a misdemeanor subject to fine or imprisonment or both, are unconstitutional as depriving persons or corporations issuing such orders of their property without due process of law, in that they restricted their freedom, or "liberty," to contract. State v. Missouri Tie & Timber Co., 80 S. W. 933, 941, 181 Mo. 536, 65 L. R. A. 588, 103 Am. St. 614, 2 Ann. Cas. 119 (citing 2 Story, Const. [5th Ed.] § 1950).

The "liberty" guaranteed by the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution means, not only the right of the citizen to be free from mere physical restraint of his person, but the term embraces the right of the citizen to be free in the enjoyment of his faculties in lawful ways, to earn his livelihood by any lawful calling, to pursue any livelihood, and for that purpose to enter into contracts which may be proper, but the freedom of contract is a qualified right, and the freedom of contract is not unconstitutionally infringed by Code Iowa, § 2071, defining the liability of railway corporations for injuries from negligence, so that a railway company, when sued on such liability, is precluded from making the defense that a recovery is barred by the acceptance of benefits under a contract of membership in its relief department. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire, 31 Sup. Ct. 259, 262, 219 U. S. 549, 55 L. Ed. 328 (quoting and adopting definition in Allgeyer v. State of Louisiana, 17 Sup. Ct. 427, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. Ed. 832).

"The fourteenth amendment, however, does not guarantee the citizen the right to make within his state, either directly or indirectly, a contract, the making whereof is constitutionally forbidden by the state. The proposition that, because a citizen might make such a contract for himself beyond the confines of his state, therefore he might authorize an agent to violate in his behalf the laws of his state, within her own limits, involves a clear non sequitur, and ignores the vital distinction between acts done within and acts done beyond a state's jurisdiction." Hooper v. California, 15 Sup. Ct. 207, 211, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. Ed. 297.

Right to choose employment

"Privileges and immunities" of a citizen, as well as his "liberty," within the guarantees of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, involve the right, not only to be free from physical restraint, but the right to follow any lawful business or avocation in life and to make all proper contracts in furtherance thereof. Ex parte Hollman, 60 S. E. 19, 30, 79 S. C. 9, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242, 14 Ann. Cas. 1105.

"Liberty," as guaranteed by the Constitution, is the right of a citizen to use his faculties in all lawful ways, to live and work where he will, to earn his livelihood in any lawful calling, and to pursue any lawful trade or avocation. Ives v. South Buffalo Ry. Co., 94 N. E. 431, 439, 201 N. Y. 271, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 162, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 156.

"Liberty," in the constitutional sense, means, not only freedom from servitude and restraint, but embraces the right of every man to be free in the use of his faculties and to adopt such avocation as he may choose, subject only to the restraints necessary to secure the common welfare, and the right of every man to choose his own occupation is included in the constitutional right to the pursuit of happiness. People v. Steele, 83 N. E. 236, 237, 231 Ill. 340, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 361, 121 Am. St. Rep. 321; City of Chicago v. Powers, 83 N. E. 240, 231 Ill. 500.

The word "liberty," as used in the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution, means not only the right of the citizen to be free from mere physical restraint of his person, as by incarceration, but the term is deemed to embrace the right of the citizens to be free in the enjoyment of all his faculties; to be free to use them in all lawful ways; to live and work where he will; to earn his livelihood by any lawful calling; to pursue any livelihood or vocation and for the purpose to enter into all contracts which may be proper, necessary, and essential to his carrying out to a successful conclusion the purposes above mentioned. Toney v. State, 37 South. 332, 333, 141 Ala. 120, 67 L. R. A. 286, 109 Am. St. Rep. 29, 3 Ann. Cas. 319 (quoting Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 17 Sup. Ct. 427, 165 U. S. 578, 41 L. Ed. 832); Hodges v. United States, 27 Sup. Ct. 6, 16, 203 U. S. 1, 35, 36, 51 L. Ed. 65; Crescent Liquor Co. v. Platt, 148 Fed. 894, 902 (quoting and adopting definition in Allgeyer v. State of Louisiana, 17 Sup. Ct. 427, 431, 165 U. S. 578, 589, 41 L. Ed. 832).

"Liberty," in its broad sense, as understood in this country, means the right, not only of freedom from actual servitude, imprisonment or restraint, but the right of one to use his faculties in all lawful ways, to live and work when he will, to earn his livelihood in any lawful calling, and to pursue any lawful trade or avocation. All laws, therefore, which impair or trammel these rights, or which limit him in his choice of a trade or profession, are infringements upon his fundamental rights of liberty which are under constitutional protection. State ex rel. Richey v. Smith, 84 Pac. 851, 42 Wash. 237, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 674, 114 Am. St. Rep. 114, 7 Ann. Cas. 577 (quoting In re Aubry, 78 Pac. 900, 36 Wash. 308, 104 Am. St. Rep. 952, 1 Ann. Cas. 927).

"The word 'liberty,' as used in the Constitution of the United States and the several states, has frequently been construed, and means more than mere freedom from restraint. It means, not merely the right to go where one chooses, but to do such acts as he may judge best for his interest, not inconsistent with the equal rights of others; that is, to follow such pursuits as may be best adapted to his faculties, and which will give him the highest enjoyment. The liberty mentioned is deemed to embrace the right of the citizen to be free in the enjoyment of all his faculties, to be free to use them in all lawful ways, to live and work where he will, to earn his livelihood by any lawful calling, and for that purpose to enter into all contracts which may be proper, necessary, and essential to his carrying out to a successful conclusion the purpose above mentioned. These are individual rights, formulated as such under the phrase 'pursuit of happiness,' in the Declaration of Independence, which begins with the fundamental proposition that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Ex parte Drexel, 82 Pac. 429, 430, 147 Cal. 763, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 588, 3 Ann. Cas. 878 (quoting and adopting definition in Young v. Commonwealth, 45 S. E. 327, 101 Va. 853).

In its broad sense, as used in this country, "liberty" means the right, not only to freedom from actual servitude, imprisonment, or restraint, but the right of one to use his faculties in all lawful ways, to live and work when he will, to earn his livelihood in any lawful calling, and to pursue any lawful trade or avocation. An act requiring examination by and a license from a dental board before one may own, run, or manage a dental office, as distinguished from the actual practice of dentistry, is not a proper exercise of the police power, but is unconstitutional. State v. Brown, 79 Pac. 635, 637, 37 Wash. 97, 68 L. R. A. 889, 107 Am. St. Rep. 798 (quoting and adopting definition in Re Aubry, 78 Pac. 900, 36 Wash. 308, 104 Am. St. Rep. 952, 1 Ann. Cas. 927).

Sess. Laws 1901, p. 116, c. 67, providing for the examination and registration of horseshoers, is unconstitutional, as depriving citizens of their liberty and property without due process of law. "One may be deprived of his liberty, and his constitutional rights thereto may be violated, without the actual imprisonment or restraint of his person. 'Liberty,' in its broad sense, as understood in this country, means the right not only of freedom from actual servitude, imprisonment, or restraint, but the right of one to use his faculties in all lawful ways, to live and work when he will, to earn his livelihood in a lawful calling, and to pursue any lawful trade or avocation. All laws, therefore, which impair or trammel these rights, which limit him in his choice of a trade or profession, are infringements of his fundamental rights of liberty, which are under constitutional protection." In re Au- bry, 78 Pac. 900, 902, 36 Wash. 808, 104 Am. St. Rep. 952, 1 Ann. Cas. 927 (citing People ex rel. Nechamcus v. Warden of City Prison, 39 N. E. 686, 144 N. Y. 529, 27 L. R. A. 718).

"The term 'liberty,' as used in the fourteenth amendment to the federal Constitution, is not dwarfed into mere freedom from physical restraint of the person of the citizen, as by incarceration, but is deemed to embrace the right of a man to be free in the employment of the faculties with which he has been endowed by his Creator, subject only to such restraints as are necessary for the common welfare. Liberty, in its broad sense, as understood in this country, means the right not only of freedom from servitude, imprisonment, or restraint, but the right of one to use his faculties in all lawful ways, live and work where he will, to earn his livelihood in any lawful calling, and to pursue any lawful trade or avocation," so that Laws 1901, c. 128, amending Pen. Code, § 640, by making it an offense, in cities of the first and second classes, for any person to offer real property for sale without the written authority of the owner, or his attorney in fact, appointed in writing, or of the holder of a written contract with the owner for the purchase of such property, is unconstitutional. Grossman v. Caminez, 79 N. Y. Supp. 900, 902, 79 App. Div. 15 (quoting and applying People v. Gillson, 17 N. E. 343, 345, 109 N. Y. 389, 399, 4 Am. St. Rep. 465).

Right to labor

St. 1903, p. 33, c. 10, providing an eight-hour day for workmen in mines, smelters, and mills, does not contravene the constitutional provision relating to deprivation of "liberty." Belknap, C. J., dissenting, quotes to the effect that the term "liberty," in the Constitution, is not dwarfed into mere freedom from physical restraint of the person, but embraces the right to be free in the enjoyment of the faculties with which the citizen has been endowed by his Creator, and that "liberty," in its broad sense, as understood in this country, means the right not only of freedom from servitude or restraint, but the right of one to use his faculties in all lawful ways, to live and work where he will, to earn his livelihood in any lawful calling, and to pursue any lawful trade or avocation. In re Boyce, 75 Pac. 1, 17, 27 Nev. 299, 65 L. R. A. 47, 1 Ann. Cas. 66.

Restraint by law implied

"Even 'liberty' itself, the greatest of all rights, is not unrestricted license to act according to one's own will. It is only freedom from restraint under conditions essential to the equal enjoyment of the same right by others. It is, then, 'liberty' regulated by law." McLaury v. Watelsky, 87 S. W. 1045, 1047, 39 Tex. Civ. App. 394 (quoting and approving Crowley v. Christensen, 11 Sup. Ct. 13, 137 U. S. 86, 34 L. Ed. 620).

"Liberty," as understood in this country, is not license but liberty regulated by law. The personal liberty of every man is subject to such reasonable regulations as in the wisdom of the Legislature are regarded as necessary to promote, not only the peace and good order of society, but its well-being. Rev. St. § 4234, prohibiting generally the keeping open on Sunday of any place of business for the purpose of transacting business therein, is not, as applied to a barber's shop, unconstitutional, as being an undue restraint of personal liberty, and depriving a person of life, liberty, and property without due process of law, but is a proper exercise of the police power of the state. State v. Sopher, 71 Pac. 482, 484, 25 Utah, 318, 60 L. R. A. 468, 95 Am. St. Rep. 845 (quoting and adopting State v. Powell, 50 N. E. 900, 58 Ohio St. 324, 41 L. R. A. 854).

The industrial insurance law (Laws 1911, c. 74), which undertakes, by requiring contributions from employers to an accident or insurance fund, to provide fixed and certain relief for workmen injured in extrahazardous work, and for families and dependents, regardless of questions of fault or negligence, to the exclusion of every other remedy or compensation, and which, by section 11, provides that no employer shall exempt himself from the burden or waive the benefits of the act by any contract, agreement, or regulation, and that any such contract or regulation shall be pro tanto void, is not an interference with the right to contract, since there is no absolute right to do as one wills, pursue any calling one desires, or contract as one chooses, and since the term "liberty" means absence of arbitrary restraint, and not immunity from reasonable regulations and provisions imposed in the interests of the community. State ex rel. Davis-Smith Co. v. Clausen, 117 Pac. 1101, 1112, 65 Wash. 156, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 466.

LIBERTY OF CONTRACT

Liberty of contract does not imply liberty in a corporation or individuals to defy the national will when legally expressed; nor does it involve a right to deprive the public of the advantages of free competition in trade and commerce. The enforcement of Anti-Trust Act July 2, 1890, c. 647, 26 Stat. 209, declaring illegal every combination or conspiracy in restraint of interstate or foreign commerce, and forbidding attempts to monopolize such commerce, or any part of it, does not infringe on liberty of contract. Northern Securities Co. v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 436, 462, 193 U. S. 197, 48 L. Ed. 679.

"While it may be conceded that, generally speaking, among the inalienable rights of the citizen is that of the liberty of contract, yet such liberty is not absolute and universal. It is within the undoubted power of government to restrain some individuals from all contracts, as well as all individuals from some contracts. It may deny to all the right to contract for the purchase or sale of lottery tickets, to the minor the right to assume any obligations, except for the necessities of existence; to the common carrier the power to make any contract releasing himself from negligence, and, indeed, may restrain all engaged in any employment from any contract in the course of that employment which is against public policy." Frisbie v. United States, 15 Sup. Ct. 586, 588, 157 U. S. 160, 39 L. Ed. 657.

"Liberty to contract" is one of the inalienable rights of man, guaranteed to every citizen by the Bill of Rights (Const. art. 1, § 1), subject only to such restrictions as clearly appear to be for the general welfare. The mere fact that the General Assembly has enacted a law which narrows the liberty of contract as to the whole people or to a class of citizens is not decisive. Where an act relating to the giving of surety bonds makes security by surety companies exclusive and compulsory, it is not promoted by consideration of the public necessity or public welfare, and hence it follows that it is an unconstitutional restriction on the liberty to contract, guaranteed by the Constitution. State v. Robins, 73 N. E. 470, 471, 71 Ohio St. 273, 69 L. R. A. 427, 2 Ann. Cas. 485.

Act Dec. 10, 1906, No. 117, requiring certain corporations to pay their employes each week in lawful money, is not invalid as restricting the rights of employes to contract with their employer; such restriction not being direct, but resulting from the employer's right, and that restriction being valid as to the employer. Lawrence v. Rutland R. Co., 80 Vt. 370, 67 Atl. 1091, 1096, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 350, 13 Ann. Cas. 475.

LIBERTY OF SPEECH AND THE PRESS

The "freedom of the press" consists in a right to print what he chooses without previous license, but subject to be held responsible therefor. Levert v. Daily States Pub. Co., 49 South. 206, 211, 123 La. 594, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 726, 131 Am. St. Rep. 356.

The phrase "liberty of the press" means, in the language of the Bill of Rights, that any citizen may write or publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible only for the abuse of that right. Williams Printing Co. v. Saunders, 73 S. E. 472, 477, 113 Va. 156, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 578.

The press has only the same privilege as to publications as private individuals; the phrase "liberty of the press" merely meaning that newspaper publications shall not be subject to censorship. Williams Printing Co. v. Saunders, 73 S. E. 472, 477, 113 Va. 156, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 578.

The "liberty of the press" is not guaranteed by the Constitution against the publication of deliberate falsehood and misrepresentation in regard to decisions of courts, even though the publishers may think that public and political interests would be subserved by such falsehood and misrepresentation. McDougall v. Sheridan, 128 Pac. 954, 963, 23 Idaho, 191.

"Liberty of speech and of the press" implies not only liberty to publish but complete immunity from legal censure and punishment for the publication, so long as it is not harmful in its character, when tested by such standards as the law affords. People ex rel. Attorney General v. News-Times Pub. Co., 84 Pac. 912, 948, 35 Colo. 253 (adopting definition in Cooper v. People ex rel. Wyatt, 22 Pac. 790, 13 Colo. 837, 373, 6 L. R. A. 430).

"Liberty of the press" is not synonymous with license, nor does it give a newspaper any greater license to publish libelous matter than the ordinary citizen may have. Lowe v. News Pub. Co., 70 S. E. 607, 9 Ga. App. 108.

The "liberty of the press," as the law now stands, is only a more extensive and improved use of the liberty of speech which prevailed before printing became general, and is the right belonging to every one, whether the conductor of a newspaper or not, to publish whatever he pleases without the license, interference, or control of the government; the publisher being responsible only for the abuse of the privilege. Williams v. Black, 124 N. W. 728, 732, 24 S. D. 501 (citing 25 Cyc. pp. 406, 407).

Liberty and freedom of speech guaranteed by the Constitution does not mean the unrestricted right to do and say what one pleases at all times and under all circumstances. Act Cong. Sept. 26, 1888, c. 1039, 25 Stat. 496, forbidding deposit in the mails of anything upon the exposed surface of which appears language scurrilous, defamatory, threatening, or calculated and obviously intended to reflect injuriously on the character or conduct of others, is not objectionable as denying or abridging freedom of speech. Warren v. United States, 183 Fed. 718, 721, 106 C. C. A. 156, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 800.

"'Liberty of the press' consists in the right to publish, with impunity, truth with good motives and for justifiable ends, whether it respects the government, magistracies, or individuals." Laws 1889, p. 66, c. 20, forbidding the publication by newspapers of detailed accounts of the execution of criminals convicted of murder, is not in conflict with Const. art. 1, § 3, which preserves the liberty of the press. State v. Pioneer Press Co., 110 N. W. 867, 868, 100 Minn. 173, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 480, 117 Am. St. Rep. 684, 10 Ann. Cas. 351 (quoting and adopting definition of Chancellor Kent).

"Liberty of the press" is still an undefined term, and, like some other familiar phrases of constitutional law, must remain undefined. Certain boundaries are fairly discernible within which the liberty must be displayed, but precise rules cannot be formulated in advance to govern its exercise on particular occasions. In the decision of controversies, the character, the organization, the needs, and the will of society at the present time must be given due consideration. The press, as we know it to-day, is almost as modern as the telephone and the phonograph. The functions which it performs at the present stage of our social development, if not substantially different in kind from what they have been, are magnified many fold, and the opportunities for its influence are multiplied many times. Generally publication should be no wider than the moral or social duty to publish. If it be designedly or unnecessarily or negligently excessive, privilege is lost. But, if a state newspaper, published primarily for a state constituency, have a small circulation elsewhere, it is not deprived of its privilege in the discussion of subjects of state-wide concern because of that fact. Coleman v. MacLennan, 98 Pac. 281, 283, 78 Kan. 711, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 361, 180 Am. St. Rep. 390.

The "liberty of the press," guaranteed by Const. art. 1, § 7, guaranteeing to every person the liberty to speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, but holding him responsible for the abuse of that right, has never been held to mean that the publisher of a newspaper shall be any less responsible than any other person would be for publishing otherwise the same libelous matter. The contrary rule has been affirmed by the courts of this country and England with great uniformity. Morse v. Times-Republican Printing Co., 100 N. W. 867, 873, 124 Iowa, 707 (citing Jones v. Townsend's Adm'r, 21 Fla. 431, 58 Am. Rep. 676; Sheckell v. Jackson, 10 Cush. [64 Mass.] 25; Aldrich v. Press Printing Co., 9 Minn. 138 [Gil. 129] 86 Am. Dec. 84; Root v. King [N. Y.] 7 Cow. 628; Tillson v. Robbins, 68 Me. 295, 28 Am. Rep. 50; Smart v. Blanchard, 42 N. H. 137; Foster v. Scripps, 39 Mich. 376, 33 Am. Rep. 403; Barr v. Moore, 87 Pa. 385, 30 Am. Rep. 367; Eviston v. Cramer, 3 N. W. 392, 47 Wis. 659; Edwards v. San Jose Printing & Pub. Soc., 34 Pac. 128, 99 Cal. 431, 37 Am. St. Rep. 70; McAllister v. Detroit Free Press, 43 N. W. 431, 76 Mich. 338, 15 Am. St. Rep. 318; Upton v. Hume, 33 Pac. 810, 24 Or. 420, 21 L. R. A. 493, 41 Am. St. Rep. 863; Smith v. Tribune Co., 22 Fed. Cas. 689; Davis v. Sladden, 21 Pac. 140, 17 Or. 259; Barnes v. Campbell, 59 N. H. 128, 47 Am. Rep. 183; Mallory v. Pioneer Press Co., 26 N. W. 904, 34 Minn. 521; Delaware State Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Croasdale [Del.] 6 Houst. 181; Palmer v. City of Concord, 48 N. H. 216, 97 Am. Dec. 605).

"The Constitution of this state declares what is meant by 'liberty of speech' and 'liberty of the press' in the following words: 'Any person may speak, write, and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that liberty.' Civ. Code 1895, § 5712. The right preserved and guaranteed against invasion by the Constitution is therefore the right to utter, to write, and to print one's sentiments, subject only to the limitation that in so doing he shall not be guilty of an abuse of this privilege, by invading the legal rights of others. The Constitution uses the word 'sentiments,' but it is used in the sense of thoughts, ideas, opinions. To make intelligent, forceful, and effective an expression of opinion, it may be necessary to refer to the life, conduct, and character of a person; and, so long as the truth is adhered to, the right of privacy of another cannot be said to have been invaded by one who speaks or writes or prints, provided the reference to such person, and the manner in which he is referred to, is reasonably and legitimately proper in an expression of opinion on the subject that is under investigation. It will therefore be seen that the right of privacy must in some particulars yield to the right of speech and of the press. It is well recognized that slander is an abuse of the liberty of speech, and that a libel is an abuse of the liberty to write and print, but it is nowhere expressly declared in the law that these are the only abuses of such rights. And that the law makes the truth in suits for slander and in prosecutions and suits for libel a complete defense may not necessarily make the publication of the truth the legal right of every person, nor prevent it from being in some cases a legal wrong. The truth may be spoken, written, or printed about all matters of a public nature, as well as matters of a private nature in which the public has a legitimate interest. The truth may be uttered and printed in reference to the life, character, and conduct of individuals whenever it is necessary to the full exercise of the right to express one's sentiments on any and all subjects that may be proper matter for discussion. But there may arise cases where the speaking or printing of the truth may be considered an abuse of the 'liberty of speech and of the press,' as in a case where matters of purely private concern, wholly foreign to a legitimate expression of opinion on the subject under discussion, are injected into the discussion for no other purpose and with no other motive than to annoy and harass the individual referred to. Such cases might be of rare occurrence, but, if such should arise, the party aggrieved may not be without a remedy. The right of privacy is unquestionably limited by the right to speak and print. It may be said that to give liberty of speech and of the press such wide scope as has been indicated would impose a very serious limitation upon the right of privacy, but, if it does, it is due to the fact that the law considers that the welfare of the public is better subserved by maintaining the liberty of speech and of the press than by allowing an individual to assert his right of privacy in such a way as to interfere with the free expression of one's sentiments, and the publication of every matter in which the public may be legitimately interested. In many cases the law required the individual to surrender some of his natural and private rights for the benefit of the public, and this is true in reference to some phases of the right of privacy as well as other legal rights. Those to whom the right to speak and write and print is guaranteed must not abuse this right, nor must one in whom the right of privacy exists abuse this right. The law will no more permit an abuse by one than by the other. Liberty of the speech and of the press is and has been a useful instrument to keep the individual within limits of lawful, decent, and proper conduct; and the right of privacy may be well used within its proper limits to keep those who speak and write and print within the legitimate bounds of the constitutional guaranties of such rights. One may be used as a check upon the other, but neither can be lawfully used for the other's destruction." Pavesich v. New England Life Ins. Co., 50 S. E. 68, 73, 74, 122 Ga. 190, 69 L. R. A. 101, 106 Am. St. Rep. 104, 2 Ann. Cas. 561.

LIBERUM TENEMENTUM

The plea of "liberum tenementum" was at one time used only where plaintiff's declaration was very general in its description of the land, not specifying it, and this plea performed the office of compelling a new assignment or more definite description, but the plea has long since performed a wider function, and its office is to confess that the plaintiff had possession of the land at the time the act complained of was committed, and that such act was in fact committed by defendant, as set forth, but avoiding the allegation by the averment of a right to enter and do the act as alleged. In legal effect the plea admits possession in the plaintiff sufficient to enable him to maintain the action against the wrongdoer and asserts a freehold in the defendant, with right to immediate possession as against plaintiff. On the filing of this plea, defendant must prove his title either by deed or other documentary evidence, or by an actual adverse and exclusive possession for 20 years, since by the issue he undertakes to show a title in himself by which the presumption arising from plaintiff's possession will be avoided. Since the plea raises the question of title and boundary, a judgment on the plea is conclusive on the question of title to land, and therefore a writ of error will lie to review the judgment. Dickinson v. Mankin, 56 S. E. 824, 825, 61 W. Va. 429.

LIBRARY

St. 1909, § 4260, obligates a county revenue agent to cause to be listed for taxation all property omitted by the assessor and other taxing officer, and provides that he shall file a statement of property omitted, and that such statement shall contain "a description and value of the property proposed to be assessed." A revenue agent acting under such statute filed a statement of property belonging to a person named omitted from taxation, and such statement specified, among other things, a "library" of a value specified. Held, that the statement was sufficient as to the library, as "library" means such books or works of literature, science, art, or business as one may have in his residence or office. Commonwealth v. Glover, 116 S. W. 769, 774, 132 Ky. 588.

LICENSE

See Exclusive License; Implied License; Irrevocable License; Life License; Mining License; Resident License; Simple License.

A "license" is a permission to do something. People ex rel. Moses v. Gaynor, 137 N. Y. Supp. 196, 198, 77 Misc. Rep. 576.

A mere "license" is but an authority to do a particular act or series of acts upon another's land without possessing any estate therein. Dawson v. Western M. R. Co., 68 Atl. 301, 305, 107 Md. 70, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 809, 126 Am. St. Rep. 337, 15 Ann. Cas. 678.

"A 'license' is technically an authority given to do some one act or series of acts on the land of another without passing any estate in the land." Where an owner orally offered to give land to another, providing the latter would not construct a building in such a way as to cut off the light of a window in the owner's house, and the offer was accepted, and a building erected according to the plans agreed on, the owner merely gave a parol license for the erection of the building. Shipley v. Fink, 62 Atl. 360, 362, 102 Md. 219, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1002.

A "license" merely—a verbal license—is the right to do a particular act or series of acts, without any interest in the land. Such a license will exempt a party from an action of trespass for entering the land of another to dig ore and will give him the property in the ore which is actually dug under it, but it is revocable at the pleasure of him who gives it. Clark v. Wall, 79 Pac. 1052, 1053, 32 Mont. 219.

"A 'license' is a personal revocable and nonassignable privilege conferred either by writing or parol to do one or more acts on land without possessing any interest therein." Rodefer v. Pittsburg, O. V. & O. R. Co., 74 N. E. 183, 186, 72 Ohio St. 272, 70 L. R. A. 844 (quoting and adopting definition in Greenwood Lake & P. J. R. Co. v. New York & G. L. R. Co., 81 N. E. 874, 875, 134 N. Y. 435, 439); Yeager v. Tuning, 86 N. E. 657, 658, 79 Ohio St. 121, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 700, 128 Am. St. Rep. 679; Reeve v. Duryee, 129 N. Y. Supp. 748, 750, 144 App. Div. 647.

A "license" is a mere personal or revocable privilege to do an act or series of acts upon lands of another without possessing any interest or estate in the lands. City of Berwyn v. Berglund, 99 N. E. 705, 706, 255 Ill. 498.

A "license" is a personal privilege to do certain acts upon the lands of another, but creates no estate therein, is revocable at will, and may rest in parol. Howes v. Barmore, 81 Pac. 48, 49, 11 Idaho, 64, 69 L. R. A. 568, 114 Am. St. Rep. 255.

A "license" contemplates not a denial of a right or power, but the regulation of such right or power. A license is a permission to do something under regulations, and not a prohibition. People ex rel. Empire City Trotting Club v. State Racing Commission, 105 N. Y. Supp. 528, 530, 120 App. Div. 484.

A "license" implies that the licensee shall not be evicted from its enjoyment, and such an eviction is a defense to a suit for royalties accruing after it occurred. American Street Car Advertising Co. v. Jones, 142 Fed. 974, 977, 74 C. C. A. 236.

A "license" is simply a permission or authority to do something, and a license to take timber would be an authority or permission to go on the land and cut and remove the timber specified in the license. Snyder v. East Bay Lumber Co., 97 N. W. 49, 50, 135 Mich. 31.

A "license" is defined to be: "An authority to do some act, or a series of acts, on the land of another, without passing an estate in the land. It amounts to nothing more than an excuse for the act which would otherwise be a trespass. Being a personal privilege, it can be enjoyed only by the licensee. It is not assignable, so that an undertenant can claim the benefit of the license to the licensee." Plaintiffs conveyed to defendant by deed all the timber and trees on the tract of land described; the deed providing that the grantee should have all the rights of way and privileges over and upon the land usually extended to lumbermen, provided that the timber should be removed within three years, and that all refuse, timber, barns, houses, cabins, sheds, etc., remaining on the premises at that time, should revert to and become the property of plaintiffs. Held, that such deed was not a mere "license," but was sufficient to create the relation of landlord and tenant. Alexander v. Gardner, 96 S. W. 818, 819, 123 Ky. 552, 124 Am. St. Rep. 378 (citing Tayl. Land. & Ten. § 237; Wood, Land. & Ten. § 227; Haywood v. Fulmer, 32 N. E. 574, 158 Ind. 658, 18 L. R. A. 491).

A ticket of admission to a race track, a theater, a concert, or any such entertainment is a mere revocable "license." Buenzle v. Newport Amusement Ass'n, 68 Atl. 721, 722, 723, 29 R. I. 23, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1242.

An instrument leasing the side wall of defendant's property to plaintiff for advertising purposes, "until said wall is obstructed so it is not available for advertising purposes," grants a mere "license" revocable at the owner's option. Manheimer v. Gudat, 106 N. Y. Supp. 461, 462, 55 Misc. Rep. 330.

Where the owner of a building executed a written contract granting defendant the right to use one of the walls thereof for advertising purposes for a specified consideration and for a definite period, and providing that, in case of an obstruction of the wall by other buildings, defendant should have an abatement of the land, together with necessary access through and upon the premises, and warranting title to the leasehold for the term mentioned, the contract was to be regarded as a "license." A license may, if executed in proper form, take effect as a grant as to some things and as a mere license as to others. Levy v. Louisville Gunning System, 80 S. W. 528, 530, 121 Ky. 510, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359.

A contract for a right to erect advertising matter was described as a "wall or fence permit," and provided that, in consideration of $50 cash payable yearly in advance, the owner leased to the R. Sign Company the entire side wall of a certain building for advertising purposes for one year with privilege of renewal at the same rate, and that, in case the sign was obstructed or the house sold, the money would be returned for the unexpired term. Held, that the instrument constituted a mere "license" revocable by the owner at will on returning a pro rata amount of the license fee for the unexpired term. Reeve v. Duryee, 129 N. Y. Supp. 748, 749, 144 App. Div. 647.

"A siding or switch constructed by a railroad company from its road to a manufactory at the expense and over the land of the latter, solely for its benefit, and for the sole purpose of affording it facilities for receiving and shipping freight, and under a written agreement silent as to the length of time it is to remain, may not be maintained by the railroad company against the objection of the owner of the manufactory; the agreement, so far as the right of the railroad company is concerned, being merely a 'license' revocable at the option of the licensor or his grantee." Rodefer v. Pittsburg, O. V. & C. R. Co., 74 N. E. 183-186, 72 Ohio St. 272, 70 L. R. A. 844.

The interest conveyed by an oil and gas lease is a mere "license" to explore, an incorporeal hereditament, a profit à prendre. A mechanic's lien will not attach to the interest acquired in lands by the lessee under an ordinary oil or gas lease, notwithstanding oil or gas is discovered. Phillips v. Springfield Crude Oil Co., 92 Pac. 1119, 76 Kan. 783.

Where the president of a corporation by a verbal agreement grants permission to another to box and gather the turpentine from the pine trees growing upon the land of the corporation, such permit amounts to nothing more than a "license," which terminates and becomes void on the appointment of a receiver for the corporation. McKinnon-Young Co. v. Stockton, 44 South. 237, 247, 53 Fla. 734.

Where the right of way on which plaintiff's decedent was killed was not on or parallel to an adjoining street, but was entirely inclosed to prevent its use by the public, its use by the public in sometimes passing that way did not amount to a "license." Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Redmon's Adm'r, 91 S. W. 722, 724, 122 Ky. 385.

A paper, entitled "Application for Sewer Attachment," executed by a property owner and a sewer company, allowing the owner to attach his property to the main sewer pipe, sewer to be used at named rates per year, and reciting that the owner applies for sewer attachment as above, and agrees to comply with all the company's present and future rules relative to the use of sewer, is a "license" to connect. Fogg v. Ocean City Sewer Co., 66 Atl. 609, 610, 72 N. J. Eq. 736.

Covenant running with land distinguished

An instrument giving a person the right to construct a drainage ditch through the land of the person executing the instrument, without consideration and not acknowledged and recorded, was a mere "license," revocable at the will of the licensor and his grantee, and not "a covenant running with the land." Williams v. Beatty, 122 S. W. 323, 326, 139 Mo. App. 167.

Dedication distinguished

Mere user by the public of a supposed street, though long continued, will be regarded as a mere "license," revocable at the pleasure of the owner of the land, and not to constitute a dedication, where it does not appear that any public or private interests have been acquired on the faith of the supposed dedication of the land for a street. Town of West Point v. Bland, 56 S. E. 802, 805, 106 Va. 792 (quoting Harris' Case, 20 Grat. [60 Va.] 840; Talbott v. Richmond & D. R. Co., 31 Grat. [72 Va.] 688, 689).

Easement distinguished

Irrevocable license as easement, see Easement.

With reference to real estate, "license" is a permission or authority to do a particular act or series of acts on the land of another without possessing any estate therein. So, with reference to personal property, "license" implies and carries the power to do some act upon or in reference to or to do something with the property of another. Herein it differs from an easement. The word "easement" always implies an interest in the land. Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, 139 Fed. 155, 188 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4133).

A "license" is an authority given to do some act or acts on the land of another without giving any estate in the land itself. It differs from an easement in that the latter is a permanent interest with a right at all times to enter and enjoy it, while the continuance of the former depends on the will of the person who has created it. There is a distinction between an easement and a license, although in some cases it is difficult to see a substantial difference between them. An easement is a privilege in land founded upon a deed or other writing or upon prescription. It is a permanent interest in another's land with the right to enjoy it fully and without objection. It may attach to the land and pass with the dominant tenement as an appurtenant thereto. Asher v. Johnson, 82 S. W. 300, 301, 118 Ky. 702 (quoting 5 Lawson, Rights, Rem. & Pr. § 2668).

A "license" is a permission to do some act or series of acts on the land of the licensor, without having a permanent interest in the land, and is distinguished from an "easement" in that an easement is a right with reference to certain land conferring on the owner of the easement a permanent interest in the land; the word "permanent," being used not in the sense of perpetual, but as relating to a specific period. Borough Bill Posting Co. v. Levy, 129 N. Y. Supp. 740, 742, 144 App. Div. 784.

A "license" is distinguished from an easement in that a license is an authority to enter on land, but confers no interest in the estate; it is generally granted by parol, and may be revoked by the licensor at pleasure, and, being a personal privilege, is not assignable, and usually amounts to an excuse for what would otherwise be a trespass, while an easement confers an interest in the land and invests the owner with privileges that he cannot be deprived of at the mere will or wish of the proprietor of the servient estate. Rittenhouse v. Swango (Ky.) 97 S. W. 743, 744 (citing Wilkins v. Irvine, 33 Ohio St. 138).

A "license" in respect of real property is authority to do a particular act or series of acts on the land of another without possessing an estate or interest therein, while an easement always implies an interest in the land involving two distinct elements, a dominant tenement to which the right is appurtenant, and a servient tenement upon which the servitude is imposed; but a license is in the nature of a personal privilege, which may be revoked before any rights have been asserted under it, or money expended on the faith thereof. Where an easement is granted specifically or by language from which such an interest is implied under settled rules of construction, the covenant will be enforced accordingly, but, where the language used is of doubtful meaning, it is for the court to construe the grant and determine whether it is of a permanent interest running with the land, or only a personal privilege affecting the rights of the parties. Lehigh & N. E. R. Co. v. Bangor & P. Ry. Co., 77 Atl. 552, 553, 228 Pa. 350.

A permission, given without consideration by an owner for the use by a township of his land for the discharge across his land of the surplus water of an artesian well sunk by the township on its land for irrigation purposes for the inhabitants of the township, and not given in the form of a grant or conveyance in writing, is a mere license, subject to revocation by the owner or his grantee; a "license," in real estate, being an authority to do a particular act on the land of another without possessing any estate therein, and being founded in personal confidence, revocable at will; and an "easement" being a privilege in land, without profit, existing distinct from the ownership of the land, founded on a grant in writing, within the statute of frauds (Civ. Code, § 1238). Butz v. Richland Tp., 134 N. W. 895, 898, 28 S. D. 442.

See Incumbrance.

Invitation distinguished

There is a clear distinction between a "license" and an "invitation" to enter premises, and an equally clear distinction as to the duty of the owner in the two cases. An owner owes to a licensee no duty as to the condition of the premises, unless imposed by statute, save that he should not knowingly let him run upon a hidden peril or willfully cause him harm, while to one invited he is under obligation for reasonable security for the purposes of the invitation. Mere permission to enter creates the relation of licensee. Mandeville Mills v. Dale, 58 S. E. 1060-1062, 2 Ga. App. 607 (quoting and adopting Beehler v. Daniels, 29 Atl. 6, 18 R. I.

568, 565, 27 L. R. A. 512, 49 Am. St. Rep. 790).

As respects the question whether a person is on premises as a licensee or by invitation, "invitation is inferred where there is a common interest or mutual advantage, while 'license' is inferred where the object is the mere pleasure or benefit of the person using it." Southern R. in Kentucky v. Goddard, 89 S. W. 675, 676, 121 Ky. 567, 12 Ann. Cas. 116 (quoting and adopting distinction stated in 1 Whart. Neg. § 349).

A "licensee" who goes on the premises of another by that other's invitation and for that other's purposes is an "invitee," and the duty to take ordinary care to prevent injury is at once raised, and the word "invitation," in the rule, covers and includes in it, enticement, allurement, and inducement if the case holds such features, and the invitation may also be implied by a dedication, or it may arise from known customary use, or it may be implied by any state of facts on which it naturally and reasonably arises. Where a proprietor of a store invited plaintiff to come to the store to advise him in a business transaction, and plaintiff, on reaching the store, found the proprietor busy, and while waiting, as he was required to do, he asked permission to go to the basement to a closet, and permission was granted, and while going he fell into an unguarded pit in the basement, plaintiff was on the premises in response to the proprietor's invitation and was not a bare licensee at the time, and the proprietor owed him the duty of exercising ordinary care for his protection. Glaser v. Rothschild, 120 S. W. 1, 3, 221 Mo. 180, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045, 17 Ann. Cas. 576.

"It is sometimes difficult to determine whether the circumstances make a case of 'invitation,' in the technical sense of that word, as used in a large number of adjudged cases, or only a case of mere license. 'The principle,' says Mr. Campbell, in his treatise on Negligence, 'appears to be that invitation is inferred where there is a common interest or mutual advantage, while a 'license' is inferred where the object is the mutual pleasure or benefit of the person using it.'" Defendant operated a railroad to the summit of Pikes Peak and leased certain buildings to H. for a hotel for 25 per cent. of H.'s gross receipts. The hotel was higher than the station platform, and a retaining wall protected the platform from loose stones which might roll down the side of the mountain. The wall was ascended by a flight of steps, and the buildings were located 16 feet from the top thereof. Plaintiff arrived at the hotel at about 10 o'clock p. m., and, after being informed that the beds were all full, he obtained an employe's bed. Later in the night he went out of doors for a private purpose and, not keeping within the light reflection from the house, stepped off the retaining wall and was injured. Held, that plaintiff was not an invited guest of the railroad company, but was at most a mere licensee thereof, as to whom it owed no active duty to light or rail the wall. Watson v. Manitou & Pikes Peak Ry. Co., 92 Pac. 17, 19, 41 Colo. 138, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 916.

An implied "invitation" to use dangerous premises, as distinguished from a mere "license," arises when a benefit accrues to the owner from such use, or when the use is in the interest of both parties, or is connected with the owner's business. Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Powers, 88 N. E. 1073, 1077, 173 Ind. 105.

Lease distinguished

The difference between a license and a lease is that a lease gives to the tenant the right of possession against the world, while a license creates no interest in the land, but is simply the authority or power to use it in some specific way. Joplin Supply Co. v. West, 130 S. W. 156, 161, 149 Mo. App. 78.

A license in respect to real estate is an authority to do a particular act or series of acts on the land of another without possessing an estate therein. The test to determine whether an agreement for the use of real estate is a license or a lease is whether the contract gives exclusive use of the premises against all the world, including the owner, in which case it is a lease, or whether it merely confers a privilege to occupy under the owner, in which case it is a license, the question to be determined by a construction of the instrument. Shaw v. Caldwell, 115 Pac. 941, 943, 16 Cal. App. 1.

The test to determine whether an agreement for the use of real estate is a "lease" or a "license" is whether the contract gives exclusive possession of the premises against the world, including the owner, in which case it is a lease, or whether it merely confers a license to occupy under the owner. An instrument by which the owner of premises let to defendant "his ice business and privileges in * * * with the use and benefit of his icehouses," for a term ending on a certain date, gave defendant the exclusive possession of, and the entire beneficial interest in, the icehouses and the land under them, so as to constitute a lease of the premises, instead of a mere contract for their use as licensee under the owner. Roberts v. Lynn Ice Co., 73 N. E. 523, 524, 187 Mass. 402.

A contract whereby it was agreed that plaintiff should have the exclusive privilege of the public stenographer's office in a certain hotel, plaintiff agreeing to pay the rent promptly each month in advance for the exclusive privilege of the public stenographer's office, and to do private correspondence for the hotel management, and to furnish competent stenographers for this service, was not a lease, but a mere agreement to allow plaintiff to carry on business in the hotel. Hess

v. Roberts, 108 N. Y. Supp. 894, 895, 124 App. Div. 328.

An agreement whereby tenants of a store building, leased for a plumbing business, allowed a third person to occupy part of it in conducting an electrical supply business, was a "lease," though called a "license" by them. Denecke v. Henry F. Miller & Son, 119 N. W. 380, 384, 142 Iowa, 486, 19 Ann. Cas. 949.

An instrument by which defendant contracted to "let," and plaintiff to "take," the right to maintain, at a race park, three stands for sale of candies, said right being exclusive for said business within said park, also the storeroom under the tracks, and one of said stands, not to exceed a certain size, to be in the main pavilion, and providing the period of "letting," and the amount and times of payment of the "rent," instead of being a "license," is a "lease," affecting defendant in the exclusive use of the land, so that plaintiff, having paid the rent, can recover no part of it, though the park is destroyed by fire before the end of the period of letting. Mehlman v. Atlantic Amusement Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 222, 223, 65 Misc. Rep. 25.

A contract to let to plaintiffs the exclusive news, confectionery, view, and checking privileges on defendant's steamers for certain specified seasons, though denominated a lease, was not a "lease," but a "license." Nash v. Thousand Island Steamboat Co., 108 N. Y. Supp. 336, 342, 123 App. Div. 148.

An instrument granting, demising, and leasing certain land for the purpose solely of mining and operating for oil, gas, and other minerals, laying pipe lines, building tanks, and structures to take care of the products is a lease conveying an interest in the land, and not merely a "license" to enter and operate for oil or gas. Barnsdall v. Bradford Gas Co., 74 Atl. 207, 225 Pa. 338, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 614.

An instrument by which the owner of land therein described grants to another all the gas and oil under it, with the exclusive right to enter thereon at all times to drill and operate for oil or gas, etc., and provides for the time within which the various wells shall be completed, with a stipulated monthly rental for each well not finished on time, and that each location shall consist of ten acres more or less, and that no well shall occupy more than one acre is not a "lease," as leases are usually understood, but a mere grant of an exclusive right to enter and explore for oil and gas, and prosecute such business, occupying no more land than is needed for that purpose, not more than one acre to a well. Stahl v. Illinois Oil Co., 90 N. E. 632, 633, 45 Ind. App. 211.

quires no right to the ore until separated from the freehold; but an instrument demising land for mining purposes, for a designated term of years, at a fixed rent, and giving the right to erect all necessary buildings, is a "lease," not merely a mining "license." Barnsdall v. Bradford Gas Co., 74 Atl. 207, 208, 225 Pa. 338, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 614.

As a revocable authority

A "license" is a mere authority to use real property, and hence is revocable. United Merchants' Realty & Improvement Co. v. American Billposting Co., 128 N. Y. Supp. 666, 667, 71 Misc. Rep. 457.

A deed whereby, for value, one grants the right to lay pipes to convey petroleum, together with all rights and privileges necessary to the enjoyment of the grant and to the removal of the pipes, the pipes to be laid within ten feet of the line of the grantor's property, does not grant a "license" which may be revoked at the grantor's will. Standard Oil Co. v. Buchl, 66 Atl. 427, 429, 72 N. J. Eq. 492.

Patents

A grant of any interest in or right under a patent, less than the exclusive rights as to making, using, and vending the same, is a "license." Paulus v. M. M. Buck Mfg. Co., 129 Fed. 594-596, 64 C. C. A. 162.

Same—Assignment distinguished

A conveyance by a patentee to another of the sole and exclusive right and license to use and to build for use within territory described the machines of the patent, with certain express exceptions, and also reserving to the patentee the right to build machines in said territory for use outside thereof, is a mere "license," and not an "assignment." Bowers v. Atlantic, Gulf & Pacific Co., 162 Fed. 895, 902.

A patent secures the exclusive right to make, use, and vend the invention it protects. A grant of all these exclusive rights throughout the United States or a specified part thereof is an assignment of an interest in the patent by whatever name it is designated. A grant of any interest in or right under a patent, less than these, is a "license." Paulus v. M. M. Buck Mfg. Co., 129 Fed. 594, 596, 64 C. C. A. 162.

"The popular understanding of the word 'license' undoubtedly is a permission to do something which, without the license, would not be allowable. The object of the license is to confer a right that does not exist without the license." Commonwealth v. Central Hotel Co., 90 S. W. 565, 121 Ky. 846, 12 Ann. Cas. 172 (quoting and adopting definition in Standard Oil Co. v. Commonwealth, 82 S. W. 1021, 119 Ky. 75).

A "license" is a mere permit to do something that without it would be unlawful. Littleton v. Burgess, 82 Pac. 864, 866, 14 Wyo. 173, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 631.

A "license" confers the right to do that which, without the license, would be unlawful. Board of Com'rs of Jefferson County v. Mayr, 74 Pac. 458, 31 Colo. 173 (citing People v. Ralms, 39 Pac. 341, 20 Colo. 489); Schwartz v. People, 104 Pac. 92, 103, 46 Colo. 239 (quoting and adopting definition in People v. Ralms, 39 Pac. 341, 20 Colo. 489).

"The word 'license' means permission or authority, and a license to do any particular thing is a permission or authority to do that thing, and, if granted by a person having power to grant it, transfers to the grantee the right to do whatever it purports to authorize. It certainly transfers to him all rights which the grantor can transfer to do what is in the terms of the license." Ryman Steamboat Line v. Commonwealth, 101 S. W. 408, 404, 125 Ky. 253, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1187 (citing Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. [22 U. S.] 1, 6 L. Ed. 23).

The law dictionary and lexicographers concur in saying that a "license" is a "permit" to do a certain thing, and it is clear that these words are used synonymously in the act in Sess. Laws 1895, p. 221, c. 96, giving municipal corporations power to "license" the sale of liquor and grant "permits" to druggists for the sale of liquor for medicinal uses, and the contention that the license to sell liquors and the permit were distinct things was untenable. Parsons v. People, 76 Pac. 666, 668, 32 Colo. 221.

A "license" is a privilege granted by the state directly or indirectly through the municipality usually upon payment of the consideration, and confers authority to do something which would be illegal if done without a license. License fees may be imposed for regulation, revenue, or prohibition. Metropolis Theater Co. v. City of Chicago, 92 N. E. 597, 599, 246 Ill. 20.

"Power to 'license,' conferred on a municipality, is generally understood to mean power to regulate by prescribing the conditions or compliance with which the thing shall be permitted." Village of St. Anthony v. Brandon, 77 Pac. 322, 325, 10 Idaho, 205 (quoting Cent. Dict.).

"A 'license' is a permit to do business paid for in advance, and, in the nature of things, all questions pertaining to its issuance should be determined before the privilege is exercised and as early in the current tax year as is practicable. Like an assessment, a license apportionment once made and returned cannot be changed without express legislative authority." A social club is not subject to license taxation, except in so far as it engages in the sale of intoxicating liquors to its members. Where such club has for five successive years paid license taxes based on sworn returns, which were accepted as correct by the taxing officers, no action will lie in behalf of the state to recover additional license taxes for the same year. State v. New Orleans Chess, Checkers & Whist Club, 40 South. 526, 528, 116 La. 46.

A tax on the net receipts of an insurance company is not a "license" to do business. People v. Cosmopolitan Fire Ins. Co., 92 N. E. 922, 927, 246 Ill. 442.

A "license to practice medicine" is a privilege or franchise granted by the government, and a refusal to grant such franchise, whatever the reason may be for such refusal, does not constitute a penalty. Morse v. State Board of Medical Examiners, 122 S. W. 446, 448, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 93.

A "license" to sell intoxicating liquors is the authority of the state to carry on the business, and Act March 21, 1906, making it unlawful for any person to bring into any county, etc., where the sale of intoxicating liquors is prohibited, or may be prohibited, any intoxicating liquors, does not apply to liquor destined for one whose "license" to sell liquor has not expired. Sheehan v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 101 S. W. 380, 381, 125 Ky. 478.

Act March 12, 1909 (100 Ohio Laws, p. 89), providing that no person shall engage in the sale of intoxicating liquors without having properly answered certain specified questions, was not objectionable as thereby licensing those who answered the questions correctly in violation of Const. Schedule, § 18, providing that no license to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall be granted in the state, but that the General Assembly may by law provide against the evils resulting therefrom; the term "license" as so used meaning permission to do something which without the license would not be allowed, to confer a right that did not exist without it, the granting of a special privilege to one or more persons not enjoyed by citizens generally, or the class to which the license belongs. Bloomfield v. State, 99 N. E. 309, 310, 86 Ohio St. 253, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 726, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 629 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4133).

The word "license," as used in an ordinance requiring every person and corporation erecting and using poles on the public streets of a city to pay as a license therefor a certain sum for each pole, means the sum paid for permission to erect or maintain poles in the streets and alleys of the city, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of regulating and controlling the use of the same under the police power of the city. City of Ft. Smith v. Hunt, 82 S. W. 163, 165, 72 Ark. 556, 66 L. R. A. 238, 105 Am. St. Rep. 51.

An ordinance, requiring a fee to be paid by milk and meat dealers to the inspector of milk and meats solely to defray the cost of inspection, is not in the nature of a "license" as that word is used in Acts 1911, p. 347, § 1, making it unlawful for any city council to impose a tax or license upon any person in the selling of any farm products including meats; the statute being intended to prohibit the issuance of a license as a condition to carrying on the business. Carpenter v. City of Little Rock, 142 S. W. 162, 164, 101 Ark. 238.

Acts 1905, p. 258, c. 129, authorizing any city to tax, license, or regulate junk stores, etc., authorizes the enactment of ordinances regulating the general business of junk dealers, and not merely the places where junk is dealt in, in view of the purposes of the act and the granting of authority to license; a "license" being a privilege granted to a person, and not to an inanimate object, to pursue some occupation or exercise some right declared unlawful, except upon compliance with such conditions. Grossman v. City of Indianapolis, 88 N. E. 945, 947, 173 Ind. 157.

The $2 on each $100 of premiums paid by foreign insurance companies doing business in the state, which is required to be paid into the state treasury, is no part of the 22 cents on each $100 valuation of property or corporate franchises directed to be assessed for taxation for the school fund by Ky. St. 1903, § 4370, subd. 5, nor is it a "fine," "forfeiture," or "license," within subdivision 6, providing that a portion of such revenues be paid into the school fund. Fuqua v. Hager, 84 S. W. 325, 119 Ky. 407.

The word "licenses," as used in the Illinois act relating to the Chicago City Railways, and providing that any deeds of transfers of rights, privileges, or franchises between railway corporations, or any two of them, and all contracts, stipulations, licenses, and undertakings made, entered into, or given, and as made or amended by and between the common council of the city and any one or more of the railway corporations respecting the location, use, or exclusion of railways in or upon the streets, or any of them, of the city, etc., refers to the designation by the council of the streets to be occupied by the companies. Govin v. City of Chicago, 132 Fed. 848, 857.

Where a city ordinance regulating automobiles required registration and numbering thereof at a cost to the owner of $1 to cover the value of figures furnished by the city to form the number, such provisions are not objectionable as a "license"; it being at most a mere means of regulation and not a license for revenue. The court said: "If the provision for registration and numbering, which involved no discrimination, and requires the payment of nothing more than is necessary to pay for the number which the municipality furnishes, can be regarded as a license (for conflicting definitions of 'license,' see Cooley, Tax, [3d Ed.] p. 1137; Adler v. Whitbeck, 9 N. E. 672, 44 Ohio St. 539) it is not a license for the purpose of raising revenue. If it were, it might well be contended that it did not pass as an incident to the power to regulate. See Cooley, Tax, (3d Ed.) p. 1141; The Laundry License Case, 22 Fed. 703. It is a license (if a license at all) as a mere means of regulation; indeed, we might say, as already shown, as a necessary means of regulation. This proposition is self-evident, viz., that the grant of authority to accomplish a certain purpose carries with it authority to use any proper and lawful means without which that purpose cannot be accomplished. If, therefore, the speed of automobiles cannot be effectually regulated without licensing them, the grant of the power to regulate confers upon the city power to license, unless some other provision of law forbids the exercise of that power." People v. Schneider, 103 N. W. 172, 173, 139 Mich. 673, 69 L. R. A. 345, 5 Ann. Cas. 790.

Buffalo City Charter (Laws 1891, p. 137, c. 105, § 17, subd. 6, as amended by Laws 1904, p. 83, c. 31), empowering the city to enact an ordinance imposing a "tax" on automobiles "for the privilege" of operating the same on its streets, and to prohibit such use in case of nonpayment of the tax, and to provide a penalty for violation of the ordinance, is repealed by a later act, the Motor Vehicle Law (Laws 1904, p. 1316, c. 538, § 4, subd. 4), providing that the city shall have no power to pass, maintain, or enforce ordinances requiring from owners of automobiles "licenses" or permits to use the streets, or prohibiting them from the free use thereof; a tax for the privilege of operating automobiles on the streets being but a license. City of Buffalo v. Lewis, 108 N. Y. Supp. 450, 123 App. Div. 163.

A city ordinance provided that it should be unlawful for any person to keep any saloon where intoxicating liquors were sold or drunk as a beverage without first paying a license fee of $300 per annum, and that the city treasurer, on payment of the fee, should give a receipt for the amount paid, which should constitute a license for the keeping of a saloon. Held, that the ordinance applied only to saloons where intoxicating liquors were sold, and hence was an attempt to "license" the sale of such liquors contrary to Comp. Laws 1897, § 3107, giving such city authority to license all taverns and houses of public entertainment, saloons, restaurants, and eating houses, but providing that such act should not authorize the licensing of the sale of intoxicating liquors. Fitzpatrick v. Weaver, 111 N. W. 163, 164, 147 Mich. 382.

As written document

The word "license," in Gen. St. 1902, tit. 16, entitled "Intoxicating Liquors," providing for the issuance of liquor licenses, and prohibiting the sale of liquor without a license, etc., signifies an intangible right granted to the licensee and signifies the writing signed by the county commissioners, which is the instrument, and evidence of that grant, but the grant of such right can only be had by writing signed by the county commissioners in which the town and the particular building in which the sales licensed are to be made and person who is licensed to make them, as provided by sections 2669, 2672, 2675. Connecticut Breweries Co. v. Murphy, 70 Atl. 450, 452, 81 Conn. 145.

The word "license," as used in Act March 11, 1903, relating to the appropriation of public waters, and regulating the issuance of a certificate and license after inspection by the state engineer, applies to the paper to be issued on proof of application to beneficial use of the waters. Idaho Power & Transportation Co. v. Stephenson, 101 Pac. 821, 823, 16 Idaho, 418.

The word "license," in Acts 1905, p. 492, § 1, providing that no person shall be eligible to the office of county superintendent of schools unless he shall hold a 36 months' license, a 60 months' license, a life or professional license to teach in the schools of the state, means the written document by which permission or authority has been granted to the holder thereof to teach in the common schools for the period of time required by the act, and such a document, in the absence of fraud affecting it, is conclusive evidence that the person to whom it is issued has the legal qualifications of a teacher. State ex rel. Benham v. Bradt, 84 N. E. 1084, 1087, 170 Ind. 480 (citing Elmore v. Overton, 4 N. E. 197, 104 Ind. 548, 54 Am. St. Rep. 343).

As lawful act

A "license" to carry on a business or trade has been defined to be an official permit to carry on the same, or perform other acts forbidden by law except to persons obtaining such permit. Bouvier's Law Dictionary. City of Savannah v. Cooper, 63 S. E. 138, 140, 131 Ga. 670.

Franchise distinguished

Permission given by a city ordinance for the exercise of a corporate franchise within the city is a "license" and not a franchise. People ex rel. Fitzhenry v. Union Gas & Electric Co., 96 N. E. 768, 771, 254 Ill. 395.

The right to construct a street railway within any municipality comes from the state as a "franchise," while the power to consent and designate the streets to be occupied comes from the municipality as a "license" or contract right. Potter v. Calumet Electric St. R. Co., 158 Fed. 521, 527 (citing Chicago City Ry. Co. v. People ex rel. Story, 73 Ill. 541).

A gas "franchise" is property, a vested right protected by the Constitution, while a "license" is a mere personal privilege, and revocable, except in rare instances and under peculiar conditions. Elizabeth City v. Banks, 64 S. E. 189, 192, 150 N. C. 407, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 925.

A "franchise" is a privilege which emanates from the sovereign power of the state or government. A power conferred upon a railroad company by ordinance to locate and maintain a railroad in the streets of a city is a "license," which, after the road is built, may be irrevocable, but such ordinance does not create or confer on the railroad company constructing the railroad in the street a "franchise." The "license" granted by the ordinance is no more a "franchise" than would be a grant of right of way by a private citizen to the company to construct its road over his lands, and it is as competent for the city as for a private owner to extend the time of performance or to amend, modify, or annul the contract by mutual agreement. City of Chicago v. Rothschild & Co., 72 N. E. 698, 699, 212 Ill. 590 (citing Chicago City Ry. Co. v. People ex rel. Story, 73 Ill. 541, 547; Metropolitan City Ry. Co. v. Chicago, W. D. Ry. Co., 87 Ill. 317; Board of Trade of Chicago v. People ex rel. Sturges, 91 Ill. 80; Mills v. Parlin, 106 Ill. 60; Chicago Municipal Gas-light & Fuel Co. v. Town of Lake, 22 N. E. 616, 130 Ill. 42; City of Belleville v. Citizens' Horse Ry. Co., 38 N. E. 584, 152 Ill. 171, 26 L. R. A. 681; People ex rel. City of Pontiac v. Central Union Tel. Co., 61 N. E. 428, 192 Ill. 307, 85 Am. St. Rep. 338; Rostad v. Chicago Suburban Water & Light Co., 71 N. E. 978, 211 Ill. 248; Davis v. Mayor, etc., of City of New York, 14 N. Y. 506, 67 Am. Dec. 186; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. [38 U. S.] 579, 10 L. Ed. 274; City of Bridgeport v. New York & N. H. R. Co., 36 Conn. 255, 4 Am. Rep. 63; Morgan v. Louisiana, 93 U. S. 217, 23 L. Ed. 860).

A right not essential to the general purpose of a grantee, and such that a private party might grant over his property, such as a revocable permission to occupy a portion of some public ground, highway, or street, is a "license," and not a franchise. McPhee & McGinnity Co. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 158 Fed. 5, 10, 87 C. C. A. 619.

The grant by a municipality of a franchise to use its streets is the exercise by delegation of a power which resides in the state, and which is by its nature governmental; hence, if grounds for forfeiture arise, the state may alone enforce it, and may alone waive it; for a franchise may be said to be a grant from the state to a corporation of authority to occupy the city streets, "licenses" to be the designation by the city council of the streets to be occupied, and "contracts" the stipulated arrangements between the companies and the city as to the manner of occupancy. State on Inf. of Jones v. West End Light & Power Co., 152 S. W. 67, 75, 246 Mo. 618.

Invalid license

A dramshop license issued without compliance with an ordinance, requiring the application to be signed by a majority of the property owners according to frontage on both sides of the street in the block where the dramshop is to be kept, or by a majority of the bona fide householders and persons or firms living in or doing business on each side of the street in the block on which the dramshop has its entrance, is invalid, and a dramshop, operated under such a license is "operated without a license" within Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 43, § 7, providing that an unlicensed dramshop shall be a nuisance. Hoyt v. McLaughlin, 95 N. E. 464, 467, 250 Ill. 442.

As a personal trust or privilege

A license is a grant of special privilege to one or more persons, not enjoyed by citizens generally, or, at least, not enjoyed by a class of citizens to which the licensee belongs, and grants a permission to do something which, without a license, is not allowable. State v. Parker Distilling Co., 139 S. W. 453, 466, 236 Mo. 219, 237 Mo. 103 (quoting 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4137).

"A 'license' to deal in intoxicating liquors is in the nature of a personal trust, and the applicant for such privilege must be a person able, willing, and competent to carry out such trust, and not delegate it entirely to others, whose character may not be such as the law requires of the licensee." In re Krug, 101 N. W. 242, 244, 72 Neb. 576 (quoting and adopting definition in Watkins v. Grieser, 66 Pac. 332, 11 Okl. 802).

A "license" for the sale of liquor is but a personal privilege and not assignable except as authorized by the Legislature and in the mode therein prescribed. Though a trustee in bankruptcy cannot sell a retail liquor license issued to a bankrupt, he can sell the unexpired lease of a licensed saloon with the furniture and fixtures, on condition that the license shall be transferred to the purchaser by the license court, and, where the purchaser abandons his purchase without any attempt to secure a transfer of the license, he is liable for loss on resale. Snyder v. Bougher, 63 Atl. 893, 894, 214 Pa. 453 (citing in support of definition, Blumenthal's Petition, 18 Atl. 395, 125 Pa. 412).

A "license" to sell intoxicating liquor is a personal privilege, which may be valuable as property, in a certain sense, for the personal use of the holder, but which is not assignable or transferable by him in any way.

Tracy v. Ginzberg, 75 N. E. 637, 638, 189 Mass. 260, 285.

As a mere receipt

Under Pen. Code 1895, art. 112, penalizing the pursuit of a profession without a "license" therefore, a receipt for the occupation tax is, in the absence of a statutory provision as to what the license shall contain, a "license." Fouts v. State, 101 S. W. 223, 224, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 3.

The word "license," in the Chicago Wheel Tax Ordinance, which requires owners of automobiles to obtain a license or permit to use a vehicle in the city in addition to the license or permit obtained from the Secretary of State, as required by the Motor Vehicle Law, is used in the sense of tax, and the issuance of the license thereunder amounts to no more than the giving of a receipt showing that the annual tax imposed by the ordinance has been paid. Ayres v. City of Chicago, 87 N. E. 1073, 1076, 239 Ill. 237.

Under the statutes of Alabama all occupation taxes are evidenced by a receipt, which is called a "license," and the fact that an act imposing a tax on the occupation of an emigrant agent called the receipt evidencing the payment thereof a license did not render it any less a tax on the occupation for revenue. Kendrick v. State, 39 South. 203, 204, 142 Ala. 43.

Regulate distinguished

To "license" means to permit, to give authority, to conduct or carry on. It differs from "regulate" in that regulate means to prescribe the manner in which a thing may be conducted. Pacific University v. Johnson, 84 Pac. 704, 706, 47 Or. 448.

LICENSE FEE

A "license fee" is a sum demanded of an individual in return for the grant of a privilege which he did not previously possess, and is not a tax, as ordinarily understood, as a contribution demanded by a sovereign from his subjects in return for his protection. The power to enforce the terms of a treaty with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians that no person shall expose goods for sale without a permit is a duty imposed on the executive department of the government, and in the discharge of that duty it is not within the jurisdiction of the courts to enjoin such action. Zevely v. Welmer, 82 S. W. 941, 943, 5 Ind. T. 646.

"A 'license fee' is understood to be a charge for the privilege of carrying on a business or occupation, and is not the equivalent or in lieu of a property tax." The contract arrangements for the payment to a municipality of a "license fee" on each street car, modified as to the amount of such fees under the authority of a statute accepted by the street railway company, stating that such fees should be taken "in full satisfaction for the use of the streets or avenues," does not exempt the company from the tax imposed, under Laws N. Y. 1899, c. 712, on its franchise. People of State of New York ex rel. Brooklyn City R. Co. v. State Board of Tax Com'rs, 25 Sup. Ct. 713, 714, 199 U. S. 48, 50 L. Ed. 79.

The registration fee of $2, required by St. 1903, p. 507, c. 473, § 1, providing for the registration of automobiles, is a "license fee," and not a tax for revenue. Commonwealth v. Boyd, 74 N. E. 255, 256, 188 Mass. 79, 108 Am. St. Rep. 464.

A tax on the gross receipts of a street railroad company imposed as a condition to the exercise of the special privileges granted it is not a property tax but is a "license fee." North Jersey St. Ry. Co. v. Jersey City, 67 Atl. 33, 34, 74 N. J. Law, 761.

Under Tax Law, § 46, providing that where a city has assessed a tax upon the special franchise of a corporation, and it appears that the corporation has paid to the city any sum based on a percentage of gross earnings or other income or any license fee or any sum of money on account of such special franchise, which payment was in the nature of a tax, such payment shall be deducted from the franchise tax assessed, where a subway company, under the conditions of its franchise, was compelled to furnish free, to the city, space in its subways, the giving of this free space was not a "license fee"; the term "license fee" not meaning anything else than a payment in cash. Consolidated Telegraph & Electrical Subway Co. v. Metz, 104 N. Y. Supp. 922, 923, 119 App. Div. 835.

LICENSE, REGULATE, AND RESTRAIN

See, also, Regulate and Restrain.

The grant of power to "license, regulate, and restrain" shops for the sale of intoxicating liquors is sufficiently broad to warrant a city ordinance requiring applicants for such license to procure the written assent of a majority of the property owners in the immediate district. City of Baton Rouge v. Butler, 42 South. 650, 653, 118 La. 73.

LICENSE, REGULATE, AND TAX

The new charter of the city of Baltimore (section 6), authorizing the mayor and council "to license, tax, and regulate all businesses, trades, avocations or professions," conferred on the city the power to impose a charge on commission merchants for the privilege of selling in the city market; such charge being a tax for revenue, and not a license or regulation tax. Meushaw v. State, 71 Atl. 457, 459, 109 Md. 84.

LICENSE TAX

As tax, see Tax—Taxation.

A "license tax" is one imposed on the privilege of exercising certain callings, professions, and avocations, and, when collected, is a part of the general funds of a city. State ex rel. Smith v. Berryman, 127 S. W. 129, 132, 142 Mo. App. 373.

Every "license tax" is imposed for raising revenue or as a police regulation, or for both purposes. Johnson v. City of Great Falls, 99 Pac. 1059, 1060, 38 Mont. 369, 16 Ann. Cas. 974.

A "license tax" is "either a license, strictly so called, imposed in the exercise of ordinary police power of the state, or it is a tax laid in the exercise of the power of taxation. City Council of Montgomery v. Kelly, 38 South. 67, 68, 142 Ala. 552, 70 L. R. A. 209, 110 Am. St. Rep. 43 (citing Tied. Lim. Police Power).

The words "license tax," used with reference to corporations exclusively, mean no more necessarily than a charge of some kind imposed upon them solely for their corporate privilege. Kaiser Land & Fruit Co. v. Curry, 103 Pac. 341, 344, 349, 155 Cal. 638.

The tax authorized by Sess. Laws 1902, p. 73, c. 3, § 65, called a "license tax," is, in form of an excise, a tax on the business of foreign corporations levied for the purpose of state revenue, and is not a property tax, and so does not violate the uniformity clause of the Constitution. American Smelting & Refining Co. v. People ex rel. Lindsley, 82 Pac. 531, 533, 34 Colo. 240.

The tax imposed by Act Ky. March 28, 1906, upon persons engaged in compounding, rectifying, adulterating, or blending distilled spirits, is a "license or occupation tax," and not a property tax. Brown-Forman Co. v. Commonwealth of Kentucky, 30 Sup. Ct. 578, 580, 217 U. S. 563, 54 L. Ed. 883.

An ordinance enacted by the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco is entitled "An ordinance imposing a license for the purpose of regulation upon persons * * * selling * * * malt or fermented liquors * * * in quantities of one quart or more, less than five gallons, when the same is contained in sealed packages, and not to be drunk on the premises where sold, * * * requiring a permit therefor." The ordinance makes it unlawful to sell such liquors "without first having obtained a permit therefor from the board of police commissioners, and paying the license fee herein provided"; requires any person doing such act to procure a license, paying therefor "a license fee of $150 per annum"; requires application for renewals to be passed upon by the board of police commissioners, and declares that the ordinance and "the license herein imposed" are enacted to regulate the business described. The charter of the city and county of San Francisco (article 2, c. 2, § 1) authorizes the board of supervisors to make all necessary police regulations; and subdivision 15 authorizes it to impose "license taxes," but provides that no license taxes shall be imposed upon one who, at any fixed place of business, sells goods, etc., except such as require permits from the board of police commissioners, as provided in this charter. Held, that the ordinance was enacted solely for regulation, and not for revenue, and the license imposed was a "license tax" within subdivision 15, so that the board had no power to impose it, since, while a "tax," technically, only includes charges imposed for producing revenue, and not for purposes of regulation under the police power, the term "license tax," as used in the statutes and by the courts, includes license charges of every character, whether imposed for revenue or police regulations, or both. John Rapp & Son v. Kiel, 115 Pac. 651, 652, 159 Cal. 702.

LICENSED

See Duly Licensed.

LICENSEE

A "licensee" is one who goes onto the land of another for his own purposes only. Williams v. Belmont Coal & Coke Co., 46 S. E. 802, 806, 55 W. Va. 84.

The terms "mere licensee" or "bare licensee" are often used as synonymous with "trespasser." Pittsburgh, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Simons (Ind.) 76 N. E. 883, 886.

A "mere licensee" is one who is clothed with no right and to whom no invitation has been extended but who is upon the premises of another by permission or acquiescence. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co. v. Denny's Adm'r, 56 S. E. 321, 328, 106 Va. 383.

A person is a mere "licensee" where he was not on the premises by invitation expressed or implied, nor for any business connected with defendant nor in relation to any business for which the freight house in which he was injured was used, but went there of his own volition, uninvited, concerning a matter which was personal to himself in which the defendant had no interest. Means v. Southern Cal. R. Co., 77 Pac. 1001, 1002, 144 Cal. 473, 1 Ann. Cas. 206.

A person is a "licensee" when he is on the land of others with their consent, expressed or implied. If a person is a licensee, he is rightfully on the landowners' premises, and it cannot be found he is in fault when he shows he was exercising ordinary care. Consequently he may recover if it appears they failed to do what the ordinary man would have done to prevent an accident. Brown v. Boston & M. R. R., 64 Atl. 194, 199, 73 N. H. 568.

Where plaintiff went on defendant's premises to transact private business with the defendant's employes, in which defendant had no interest, he was a mere "licensee," though defendant directed him to use the elevator in which he was injured; and, no active negligence being shown, he was not entitled to recover for injuries sustained in using the elevator. Muench v. Heinemann, 96 N. W. 800-802, 119 Wis. 441.

"In a strict and legal sense there is a well-defined distinction between a mere 'licensee' and one who goes upon the premises of another by invitation, express or implied. In a general sense, one upon the premises of another by invitation is a licensee, and, if sued for trespass, his defense would be leave and license of the owner; but, in a strict and somewhat technical sense, to go upon premises upon an implied invitation means more than a mere license." Pauckner v. Wakem, 83 N. E. 202, 204, 231 Ill. 276, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1118.

The occupant of a stall in a public market is not necessarily a mere "licensee." Swayze v. City of Monroe, 40 South. 926, 928, 116 La. 643.

A newsboy who enters a stone quarry to sell papers, in his own interest or that of his employer, or who enters by permission to sell his papers, or to accommodate some workman who wishes to purchase a paper, is only a "licensee," as his business has no relation to the business of the proprietor, and it was not the duty of the proprietor to have the grounds reasonably safe for such licensee. Norris v. Hugh Nawn Contracting Co., 91 N. E. 886, 887, 206 Mass. 58, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 623, 19 Ann. Cas. 424.

Where a complaint for injuries to plaintiff alleged that he was employed by defendants, and that defendants by their agent offered to convey plaintiff in a sleigh to his place of employment, which offer plaintiff accepted, and was injured by the negligent driving of such agent, plaintiff was not precluded by the complaint from proving that, at the time of the injury, the relationship existing between him and defendants was that of "licensor and licensee," and not that of master and servant. Pigeon v. Lane, 67 Atl. 886, 887, 80 Conn. 237, 11 Ann. Cas. 371.

Unless mainly imposed for revenue a license fee is not a tax, but the price paid for the privilege of exercising a franchise. Sums imposed in the regulation of the business of running vehicles for hire are license fees and not occupation taxes. Ex parte Denny, 129 S. W. 1115, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 579.

"A 'bare licensee' is one who enters upon the land of another simply without objection of the owner or by sufferance of the owner or occupier, whether such land be inclosed or uninclosed. Such bare licensee enters the land at his own risk, and if, while on such land, such bare licensee be injured by the negligence of the owner or occupant of such land, he has no right to recover." Connell v. Keokuk Electric R. & Power Co., 109 N. W. 177, 178, 181 Iowa, 622.

A person accompanying passengers to assist them in entering a train, though not a passenger, is not a "bare licensee," as he has at least a tacit invitation of the carrier by virtue of the relation existing between the carrier and the passenger, and the carrier must exercise at least ordinary care to avoid injuring him by defective station facilities or approaches thereto. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Paris' Adm'r, 59 S. E. 398, 399, 107 Va. 408.

A bare "licensee," barring wantonness or some form of intentional wrong or active negligence by the owner or occupier, takes the premises as he finds them, and mere permission involves leave and license but bestows no right to care. Where a proprietor of a store invited plaintiff to come to the store to advise him in a business transaction, and plaintiff, on reaching the store, found the proprietor busy, and while waiting, as he was required to do, he asked permission to go to the basement to a closet, and permission was granted, and while going he fell into an unguarded pit in the basement, plaintiff was on the premises in response to the proprietor's invitation and was not a bare licensee at the time, and the proprietor owed him the duty of exercising ordinary care for his protection. Glaser v. Rothschild, 120 S. W. 1, 3, 221 Mo. 180, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045, 17 Ann. Cas. 576.

A "licensee" of a patent is one who is not the owner of an interest in the patent, but who has, by contract, acquired a right to make, or use, or sell machines embodying the invention. Hartman v. John D. Park & Sons Co., 145 Fed. 358, 368; Cortelyou v. Charles Eneu Johnson & Co., 138 Fed. 110, 117 (quoting and adopting definition in Heaton-Peninsular Button Fastener Co. v. Eureka Specialty Co., 77 Fed. 288, 25 C. C. A. 267, 35 L. R. A. 728, and citing Gayler v. Wilder, 10 How. [51 U. S.] 477, 13 L. Ed. 504; Oliver v. Rumford Chemical Works, 3 Sup. Ct. 61, 109 U. S. 75, 27 L. Ed. 862).

A club incorporated by Acts 1858, p. 121, c. 95, as amended as a social club, and maintaining a clubhouse in the city of Baltimore, and there furnishing to its members refreshment, including intoxicating liquors, and holding a license to sell liquors in the city of Baltimore, is a "licensee" under Pub. Loc. Laws Baltimore City, art. 4, relating to intoxicating liquors, and by virtue of Acts 1898, p. 778, c. 246, and Acts 1906, p. 474, c. 278, is liable to the penalty prescribed by Baltimore City Charter, § 685, for selling liquor on Sunday, though the sale is made to its members. State v. Maryland Club, 66 Atl. 667, 669, 105 Md. 585.

"Licensee," as that term is used in connection with railway property, and the operation of railway trains, is one who goes upon the station grounds or tracks for purposes other than transportation by permission, either express or implied. Where the wife of a station agent was accustomed to assist her husband with the work in the station office, which was known to the officers of the road in charge of the division, and not objected to by them, she was a licensee, and the road was liable for injuries to her while so in the office, owing to the derailment of a train caused by running it at a dangerous speed over a defective track. Croft v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 108 N. W. 1053, 1056, 132 Iowa, 687.

The relation of carrier and passenger is one of contract. There must be an agreement by the carrier and generally a consideration paid by or for the passenger to bring the relation into being. Where plaintiff, upon the invitation of his brother, a switch brakeman, attempted to ride upon a portion of a freight train being switched in railroad yards and was injured, he was neither a passenger nor a "licensee." Skirvin v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 100 S. W. 308.

Where the roadbed of a railroad had long been used with the knowledge and tacit consent of the railroad as a common passageway by the public generally at all times, a pedestrian on the roadbed was a "licensee," and the railroad owed him the duty of ordinary care to avoid injuring him. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Corbin's Adm'r, 67 S. E. 179, 181, 110 Va. 700.

A "licensee" is a person who is neither a passenger, servant, nor trespasser, and not standing in any contractual relation to the railroad, and permitted to come on its premises for his own interest, convenience, or gratification. Gainesville & Gulf R. Co. v. Peck, 46 South. 1019, 1022, 55 Fla. 402.

Mere failure to pay fare does not deprive one riding on a street car of his rights as a passenger, nor does it convert his relation to the owner into that of a mere "licensee." Gabbert v. Hackett, 115 N. W. 345, 347, 135 Wis. 86, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1070 (citing Cleveland, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Ketcham, 33 N. E. 116, 133 Ind. 346, 19 L. R. A. 339, 36 Am. St. Rep. 550; Hurt v. Southern R. Co., 40 Miss. 391; Muehlhausen v. St. Louis R. Co., 2 S. W. 315, 91 Mo. 332; Rose v. Des Moines Val. R. Co., 39 Iowa, 246; Shear. & R. Neg. § 491; Todd v. Old Colony & F. R. R. Co., 3 Allen [85 Mass.] 18, 80 Am. Dec. 49; Wilton v. Middlesex R. Co., 107 Mass. 108, 9 Am. Rep. 11; Jacobus v. St. Paul & C. Ry.

LICENSEE BY EXPRESS INVITATION

"A 'licensee by express invitation' is one who is directly invited by the owner of the land to enter upon it, and such person is rightfully upon such land." Connell v. Keokuk Electric R. & Power Co., 109 N. W. 177, 178, 131 Iowa, 622.

LICENSEE BY IMPLIED INVITATION

"A 'licensee by implied invitation' is one who has been invited to enter upon the land either by the owner or occupier of the same by some affirmative act done by such owner or occupant, or by appearances which justify persons generally in believing that such owner or occupant had given his consent to the public generally to enter upon or to cross over his premises; and, while such licensee is acting within the scope and limit of such implied invitation, he has the lawful right to be where he is so invited." Connell v. Keokuk Electric R. & Power Co., 109 N. W. 177, 178, 131 Iowa, 622.

LICENSEE WITH AN INTEREST

"One who, in the performance of his own interests or those of his master's, assists servants of another in the performance of their work, is not a 'fellow servant' of such servants, nor a 'volunteer,' but occupies a third position, viz., that of a 'licensee with an interest.'" Kelly v. Tyra, 114 N. W. 750, 753, 103 Minn. 176, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 334 (quoting and adopting definition in Ryan v. John O'Brien Boiler Works, 68 Mo. App. 148, 151).

"A 'lien' is said to be a qualified right which, in a given case, may be exercised over the property of another." Advance Thresher Co. v. Beck, 128 N. W. 315, 316, 21 N. D. 55, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 517 (quoting and citing a definition in Anderson v. State, 23 Miss. 459).

A "lien" is a right by which a person is entitled to obtain satisfaction of a debt by means of property belonging to the person indebted to him. Frick v. Hilliard, 95 N. C. 117, 122.

In the strict legal sense, a "lien" is a right in one person to detain that which is in his possession belonging to another until certain demands of such person in possession are satisfied. In re Ransford, 184 Fed. 658, 660, 115 C. C. A. 560.

A "lien" is a holding or claim which one person has on the property of another as security for a judgment or some charge or debt out of that property. United States Oxygen Co. v. Bernard A. Buge, 136 N. Y. Supp. 297, 301 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4144); Meanor v. Goldsmith, 65 Atl. 1084, 1086, 216 Pa. 489, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 342 (quoting definition in 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 226).

A "lien" is the right of the creditor to take his debt out of a specified res, which, though it may be a changing fund, must nevertheless be ascertained, since it is a property right, and could not be said to arise by a mere custom restricting a borrower's right to use the money loaned to release certain securities from a former pledge, nor by a promise to pay the creditor from a particular fund. Hotchkiss v. National City Bank of New York, 200 Fed. 287, 291.

The term "lien," in a narrow technical sense, signifies a right by which a person in possession of personal property holds and detains it against the owner in satisfaction of a demand. The term, however, has a more extensive meaning, being used to denote a legal claim or charge on property, real or personal, for the payment of a debt or duty; every such claim or charge being still a "lien," though the property be not in the possession of him to whom the debt or duty is due. It is a hold or claim which one has on the property of another as security for some debt or charge and may exist independent of possession. As in maritime law and in equity, the term is used as synonymous with a charge or incumbrance on the thing where there is neither jus in re nor ad rem, nor possession of the thing. In re Maher, 169 Fed. 997, 999 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4144 et seq.).

"The term 'lien,' in a narrow and more technical sense, signifies the right by which a person in possession of personal property holds and detains it against the owner in satisfaction of a demand; but it has a more extensive meaning, and in common acceptation is understood and used to denote a legal claim or charge on property, either real or personal, for the payment of any debt or duty. Every such claim or charge is still a lien on the property, although the property be not in the possession of him to whom the debt or duty is due. A 'lien' is defined to be a hold or claim as security for some debt or charge. At common law there could be no lien without possession. It is therein defined as a right in one man to retain that which is in possession and belonging to another. In maritime law, liens exist independently of possession, either actual or constructive; and in the courts of equity the term 'lien' is used as synonymous with a charge or incumbrance upon the thing, where there is neither jus in re nor ad rem, nor possession of the thing." Irrespective of whether the lien upon the funds impounded by the service of the summons of garnishment attaches before final judgment or not, the service of the summons of garnishment so far places the funds found in the hands of the garnishee (especially when the money is paid into court, or in lieu thereof a dissolving bond given) into the custody and control of the court administering the case that it will be entitled to hold and subject the fund, despite the subsequent bankruptcy of the defendant, if the petition in bankruptcy be filed more than four months after such custody is obtained. National Surety Co. of New York v. Medlock, 58 S. E. 1131, 2 Ga. App. 665 (quoting 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4144).

The "lien" given persons who have furnished material for the construction of a vessel has been defined as "a tie hold or security," or "a sort of proprietary interest springing from the nature of the transaction and beneficial service rendered to the ship," or as a "hold upon property specifically attaching thereto for the satisfaction of some claim." Wight v. Maxwell, 4 Mich. 45, 55.

A bank holding notes of a depositor which are due has the right to charge the same to the depositor's account. Such right is not strictly a lien, within the meaning of the bankruptcy law, but a right of set-off; but it can be exercised only as to notes which are due. Irish v. Citizens' Trust Co. of Utica, N. Y., 163 Fed. 880, 891.

The word "lien" is inaptly applied to a general deposit which is the property of the bank itself, but can be properly applied to special specific deposits of chattels, choses in action, valuables, etc. Wynn v. Tallapoosa County Bank, 53 South. 228, 236, 168 Ala. 469.

A right to a "lien" does not include the right to every onerous burden which may be thought to be advantageous to the favored creditors. The burden sought to be enforced must be something that can reasonably be considered as naturally a part of the thing granted—the lien. But a lien on real property is a thing entirely different and distinct from a personal obligation in the form of a bond. The latter is not included in the former, and is, indeed, a totally different kind of security. Shaughnessy v. American Surety Co., 71 Pac. 701, 128 Cal. 543.

Under Civil Damage Act (Code 1906, c. 82) § 26, providing that if a landlord's property be "seized or taken" for any fine, etc., by reason of his tenant's unlawful acts, such landlord may recover damages and costs, a "lien" upon a landlord's property, being defined as a hold or claim which one has upon the property of another as a security for some debt or charge, does not constitute a "seizure or taking" of his property within the meaning of the statute. Brown v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 74 S. E. 868, 869, 70 W. Va. 613.

The right of creditors of a mortgagor, dying without sufficient personal estate to pay his debts, to sell the real property for that purpose within three years after administration, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2749, 2750, is a mere statutory power, and not a "lien" on the lands, which would make them necessary parties to a foreclosure action. Heidgerd v. Reis, 119 N. Y. Supp. 921, 923, 135 App. Div. 414.

A contract with a subagent to solicit insurance for commissions, stipulating that the general agent will advance him $25 per week, and providing that all money collected by the subagent for premiums on policies must be turned over to the general agent, and that the subagent will repay the general agent all sums advanced, said advances to constitute a lien against all commissions, absolutely binds the subagent to repay all advances; the word "lien" meaning a claim which one has on the property of another as a security for a debt, contemplating that the advances constitute a debt. Straus v. Rosenthal, 121 N. Y. Supp. 267, 269.

Pub. St. 1901, c. 245, § 28, provides that, if a trustee is adjudged chargeable for any personal property subject to mortgage, pledge, or other lien, the court may appoint a receiver. Section 29 provides that, if a trustee is adjudged chargeable for any security for payment of money, or any chose in action upon which execution cannot be levied, the court may appoint a receiver. Section 30 provides that the trustee may be adjudged trustee for the value of any note, chose in action, etc., which he refuses to deliver to the receiver. The trustee held a check payable to himself and defendant, who transferred his interest to claimant, after service of the writ with claimant's knowledge. Held, that the check was a chose in action, the possession of which was a "lien" within the statute, though defendant did not indorse the check to him for collection, so that the trustee was chargeable therefor, and a receiver was properly appointed to collect it. Musgrove v. Goss, 72 Atl. 371, 373, 75 N. H. 208.

Under Civ. Code 1895, § 2801, subd. 2, as amended by the act of 1899 (Acts 1899, p. 33; Van Epps' Code Supp. § 6176), giving to mechanics, contractors, materialmen, and persons furnishing material for the improvement of real estate, special liens thereon, and when work done or material furnished for the improvement of real estate is done or may be furnished upon the employment of a contractor, or other persons than the owner, the lien shall attach to the real estate improved, for the amount of work done, or material furnished, unless the owner shows that such lien has been waived in writing, or produces the sworn statement of the contractor, or other person, at whose instance the work was done, or material was furnished, that the agreed price or reasonable value thereof has been paid, the word "liens" is to be construed to mean, not the perfected and recorded liens, but the inchoate or imperfect liens, or claims arising by the mere furnishing of material or the performance of labor. Green v. Farrar Lumber Co., 46 S. E. 62, 63, 119 Ga. 30.

Lien Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 33) § 17, providing that, if a lienor is made defendant to a suit to enforce another lien, and plaintiff or such defendant has filed notice of pendency of the suit, the lien of such defendant is continued, does not extend to municipal "liens." William Bradley & Son v. Henry Huber Co., 131 N. Y. Supp. 388, 390, 146 App. Div. 630.

The word "lien," in Comp. Laws, § 5031, giving a "lien" to warehousemen which shall extend to all legal demands for storage against the owner of the property, means a general "lien," and, where goods removed without payment of charges are subsequently stored, the warehouseman may retain them for payment of the first charges. Kaufman v. Leonard, 102 N. W. 632, 139 Mich. 104.

The "lien" given under Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, c. 3, §§ 108, 110, providing that any person employed in feeding or herding any domestic animals shall, for the amount due for such feeding or herding, have a "lien" on the animals, is similar to a lien under a chattel mortgage. It may be foreclosed, and the property sold to satisfy it. Crismon v. Barse Live Stock Commission Co., 87 Pac. 876, 877, 17 Okl. 117.

Where a deed provides that the grantee shall assume and pay existing mortgages, "liens," taxes, and claims of any and every description, the assumption clause making use of the general word "liens" includes not only mechanics' liens but all kinds of "liens." Gage v. Cameron, 72 N. E. 204, 209, 212 Ill. 146.

Assessment or tax

A lien is a hold or claim which one person has upon the property of another as a security for some debt or charge. In the nature of things, no tax or assessment can exist, so as to become a lien or incumbrance upon real estate, until the amount thereof is ascertained and determined. Gillmor v. Dale, 75 Pac. 932, 934, 27 Utah, 372.

Where the owners of a tenement house on November 1, 1906, contracted to convey the same free from all incumbrances and violations of the tenement house act (Laws 1901, p. 889, c. 334), and on May 25th had been served with notice to install a water meter, which was installed by the water department on October 8th, but the cost was not certified until November 1st, nor the bill certified to the comptroller until December 13, 1906, the assessment therefor was not a lien on the premises, when conveyed on December 11th, the words "lien or incumbrance" being used to cover only a charge against the property after it has been ascertained or determined. Feder v. Rosenthal, 116 N. Y. Supp. 2, 4, 62 Misc. Rep. 610.

Defendant vendors covenanted to pay any assessment of a kind mentioned therein for the payment of which any lien existed July, 1899, on the lot conveyed; there being then no power to lay any such assessments, and the land not being subject to any existing lien for such assessments. A valid assessment was thereafter laid under St. 1902, c. 527. Held, that the word "lien," in defendants' covenant, referred to the lien of an existing incumbrance, and was not to be extended to include the possibility of a future incumbrance being created by subsequent legislation, and hence that the defendants were not bound to pay such subsequent assessment. Campbell v. Haven, 97 N. E. 611, 612, 211 Mass. 121.

Tax liens held by the state of Minnesota are within the terms of Laws 1905, p. 459, c. 305, § 13, providing that it shall be joined as a party defendant whenever it has an interest in or "lien upon the land" in suit. In re National Bond & Security Co., 104 N. W. 678, 679, 96 Minn. 119.

Assignment

The right created by the assignment, as security, of one's expectancy in the estate of his living ancestor, being a present equitable charge, which, when the descent is cast, at once ripens into a "lien" on the property, is within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67, 30 Stat. 564, exempting from its operation and preserving all liens created by the bankrupt, and therefore enforceable against the bankrupt after his discharge, especially where the property did not come into the possession of the assignee in bankruptcy, because not then acquired by the bankrupt. Bridge v. Kedon, 126 Pac. 149, 152, 163 Cal. 493, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 404.

As claim or demand

A personal claim against a bankrupt's estate does not constitute a "lien." Eason v. Garrison & Kelly, 82 S. W. 800, 801, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 574.

Where a contract for the sale of land containing a mine limited the application of $60,000 of the price to the payment of "liens," a claim against the vendors was not a valid "lien" against the property, unless it appeared of record. Brown v. Gordon-Tiger Mining & Reduction Co., 97 Pac. 1042, 1045, 44 Colo. 311.

Under a provision, in a certificate of preferred stock in a corporation, that no mortgage or "lien of any nature" should be placed upon the property of the company without the unanimous consent of the preferred stockholders, the words "lien of any nature" did not include the claims of general creditors, since a "lien" is something distinct from a claim and in the nature of a security. Fryer v. Wiedemann, 146 S. W. 752, 755, 148 Ky. 379, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1011.

As contractual lien

Under Civ. Code Prac. § 62, subd. 8, requiring an action for the sale of real property under a mortgage lien, or other incumbrance or charge, etc., to be brought in the county in which the subject of the action, or some part thereof, is situated, the words "lien, or other incumbrance or charge," do not embrace an attachment lien, but refer to liens or charges created by contract or judgment. Hatton v. Rogers, 121 S. W. 698, 699, 134 Ky. 840.

Dower

Dower is not a "lien" of any kind, but an estate. The fact that it is an incumbrance does not constitute it a lien. An incumbrance is not always a lien, though a lien is always an incumbrance. Wilson v. Willson, 105 N. Y. Supp. 151, 153, 120 App. Div. 581.

Equitable lien

The term "lien" is used in equity in a broader sense than at law, and denotes any right of a special nature over a thing, which constitutes a charge or incumbrance upon it, and may be enforced by proceeding against it, and to the existence of such a lien possession is not essential. An equitable lien is distinct from the general title, and may exist separate from it, or both may be vested in the same person. In re National Cash Register Co., 174 Fed. 579, 581, 98 C. C. A. 425.

A "lien," from a legal standpoint, embodies the idea of a deed or bond, and necessarily implies that there is something in existence to which it attaches. In equity there may be an agreement that there shall be a lien upon a thing if and when it exists, but that agreement is not itself a "lien." On an equitable assignment of money to be earned in the future by the assignor, the assignee acquires no "lien" on the money unless the assignor has earned it. Cogan v. Conover Mfg. Co., 60 Atl. 408, 414, 69 N. J. Eq. 358.

As interest in land

See Interest (In Property).

Interest of plaintiff in garnishment

Service of a writ of garnishment gives plaintiff, at least before judgment against the garnishee, a specific right to have his claim satisfied out of the funds in the garnishee's hands, which is a "lien," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 67, subd. "f," 30 Stat. 564, 565, making void all attachments or other liens obtained through legal proceedings against the insolvent within four months after filing the petition in bankruptcy; the statute applying to voluntary as well as involuntary proceedings, in view of section 1, subd. 1, providing that the term "a person against whom a petition has been filed" shall include one filing a voluntary petition. Longley Bros. v. McCann, 119 S. W. 268, 269, 90 Ark. 252.

Judgment or attachment

An attachment on mesne process under the statute creates a lien. This lien does not depend upon possession. It is created by process of law, sometimes by a record of the doings of an officer, as in the case of attachments of real estate and of personal property that cannot easily be removed. Undoubtedly an attachment by trustee process gives a lien on property which will be good against bankruptcy, if more than four months old. Snyder v. Smith, 69 N. E. 1089, 1090, 185 Mass. 58.

A "lien," in its usual and ordinary signification, is a claim which one person has on the property of another as security for some debt or charge for the payment or satisfaction of which the property may be sold, and Comp. Laws Dak. 1887, § 4339, giving one who has a lien the right to redeem from a superior lien on the same property, does not give an attaching creditor, whose claim has not been reduced to judgment, the right to redeem from a purchaser of the attached property at an auction sale before the passing of the sheriff's deed, which, under other statutory provisions, is not issued until the expiration of a year after the sale; the interest of such purchaser not being a lien in a legal sense, but rather an inchoate ownership which may automatically ripen into a legal title without any further act on his part. Hardin v. Kelley, 144 Fed. 353, 354, 75 C. C. A. 355.

A judgment is a purely legal "lien" on land, and in an action in a court other than that in which the judgment was rendered, and in which the issue was as to whether one of the parties who had paid the judgment was entitled to subrogation, the land on which the judgment was a lien could not be made the subject of a direct order or decree, the proper mode of control being by directions as to the legal ownership or control of the judgment. Boice v. Conover, 61 Atl. 159, 163, 69 N. J. Eq. 580.

Mortgage or trust deed

A mortgage is a "lien," and a pledge is a lien, so that under Rev. Codes 1909, § 4303, subd. 1, providing that the clerk of the court must issue a writ of attachment upon receiving an affidavit by or on behalf of the plaintiff, setting forth inter alia that the payment of the debt sought to be collected has not been secured by any mortgage or lien upon real or personal property, or any pledge of personal property, etc., an affidavit partially following the language of the statute in regard to the debt not being secured, and fails to state that it is not secured by pledge of personal property, and contains no statement equivalent to that, is not sufficient as it does not contain the language of the statute or language equivalent to that required by the statute. Knutsen v. Phillips, 101 Pac. 596, 598, 16 Idaho, 267.

A deed of trust on a homestead is not a "lien," within Code Civ. Proc. § 1475, requiring the presentation of the claim against the estate as a condition precedent to enforcing a lien or incumbrance on the homestead, so that a trust deed executed by a husband and wife on the homestead was enforceable without presenting a claim to the husband's administrator for the debt secured thereby. Athearn v. Ryan, 98 Pac. 390, 391, 154 Cal. 554.

"A 'lien' is a charge imposed in some mode other than by a transfer in trust upon specific property by which it is made security for the performance of an act." Civ. Code, § 2872. Hence a deed of trust is not a lien, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1475, declaring that, if there are subsisting liens on the homestead of a decedent, the claims secured thereby must be presented and allowed as other claims against the estate. Weber v. McCleverty, 86 Pac. 706, 708, 149 Cal. 316.

Same—Power of sale

Civ. Code, §§ 858, 2932, provide that a power of sale in a mortgage shall be deemed a part of the security, and section 2872 declares that a lien is a charge imposed in some mode other than by a transfer in trust on specific property, by which it is made security for the performance of a particular act. Held, that a power of sale contained in a mortgage is a "lien," and can no longer be exercised after an action on the debt is barred. Goldwater v. Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, 126 Pac. 861, 862, 19 Cal. App. 511.

Possession required

The word "lien," at common law, signifies that a person who has bestowed labor upon an article of personal property shall be authorized to retain possession until his reasonable charges are paid; it must be so understood, as used in Rev. St. 1889, § 2843, giving a lien for cutting wood, so that there is no enforceable lien after the property has lawfully passed out of the debtor's posses-tion to a third person. Turner v. Horton, 106 Pac. 688, 691, 18 Wyo. 281.

As right of priority

"A 'lien' is a priority. It is that, and something more. That something more is that it is a hold on the property covered by it that fixes the priority so that it cannot be affected by subsequent events." In re Bennett, 153 Fed. 673, 690, 82 C. C. A. 531.

"A 'lien' is a right of one to retain property in his possession belonging to another until certain demands of him in possession are satisfied." A right to prior payment is not in itself a "lien." Weisel v. Old Dominion S. S. Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 140, 141, 99 App. Div. 568 (quoting and adopting definition in Jordan v. National Shoe & Leather Bank, 74 N. Y. 467, 30 Am. Rep. 319).

The creditors of a firm have the privilege, sometimes loosely denominated a "lien," to have debts due to them paid out of the assets of the firm in course of liquidation, to the exclusion of creditors of its several members. This equity is a derivative one. It is practically a subrogation to equity of the individual partner to have partnership property applied to the payment of partnership debts in preference to those of any individual partner. People's Nat. Bank of Jackson v. Wilcox, 100 N. W. 24, 29, 136 Mich. 567, 4 Ann. Cas. 465 (quoting Case v. Beauregard, 99 U. S. 119, 25 L. Ed. 370).

As security

See Security.

As specific lien

Civ. Code, § 2872, declares that a "lien" is a charge imposed upon specific property by which it is made security for the performance of some act, and, if the contract with a water company provides that the agreement to furnish water shall bind its canal, there would be created thereby a lien on the canal for the performance of the act of furnishing the water as agreed. Stanislaus Water Co. v. Bachman, 93 Pac. 858, 863, 152 Cal. 716, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359 (citing Fresno Canal & Irr. Co. v. Rowell, 22 Pac. 53, 80 Cal. 114, 3 Am. St. Rep. 112; Same v. Dunbar, 22 Pac. 275, 80 Cal. 530).

LIEN CLAIMANT

Act March 13, 1899, § 1 (Laws 1899, p. 143, c. 90), provides that costs shall not be allowed in a suit to foreclose a logger's lien unless a demand for payment of the lien has been made before suit, unless the court finds that the claimant had reasonable grounds to believe that the owner or a person having control of the property on which the lien was claimed was attempting to defraud the claimant. Held, that the terms "lienholder" and "lien claimant" included a person having a lienable claim, though not perfected, and hence a demand before the filing of the lien notice was a sufficient compliance therewith.

Sumpter v. Burnham, 99 Pac. 752, 753, 51 Wash. 599.

LIEN OR INTEREST CREATED THEREBY

The owner of property, exempt from taxation under its charter (Pub. & Loc. Laws 1869, c. 149), executed a mortgage to secure a loan, and executed its bonds to secure the mortgage, and agreed that it would pay all taxes and assessments imposed on the mortgaged property, all taxes assessed or imposed on the mortgage, and all taxes assessed against the lien or interest created by the mortgage. St. 1898, § 1042d, added by Laws 1903, c. 378, § 2, provided that, whenever taxable real estate is subject to mortgage, the mortgage, for the purposes of taxation, should be an interest in the real estate taxable as such where the real estate was located or might be separately assessed and taxed. Held, in the mortgagee's action to foreclose because of the mortgagor's refusal to pay taxes against the bonds in the hands of purchasers from the mortgagee, that the first obligation referred only to general taxes or special assessments levied on the property; that the third obligation referred to an assessment against some interest in the mortgaged real estate, not including an assessment on the bonds; that the words "mortgage" and "lien or interest created thereby" were synonymous; that the obligation to pay taxes on the "mortgage" did not comprehend such taxes assessed on the bonds, and that the mortgagor was not liable therefor. Citizens' Savings & Trust Co. v. School Sisters of Notre Dame, 139 N. W. 439, 441, 151 Wis. 619.

LIENABLE ARTICLE

Gas appliances, such as pendants, chandeliers, brackets, and globes, are not fixtures nor "lienable articles," within the statute giving liens for material furnished and labor done on buildings, in the absence of evidence of an intention on the part of the owner when he has them put in to make them permanent parts of the building, and such intention is not shown by the mere fact that they are put in by the original owner of the building, and remain in the same after it is sold by him to another. Frank Adam Electric Co. v. Gottlieb, 86 S. W. 901, 903, 112 Mo. App. 226.

LIENABLE CLAIM

The term "lienable claim" suggests mere right to obtain an interest in specified property, instead of an interest in presently therein. Jackman v. Eau Claire Nat. Bank, 104 N. W. 98, 106, 125 Wis. 465, 115 Am. St. Rep. 955.

LIENHOLDER

"By the term 'life,' as here used [referring to the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution], something more is meant than mere animal existence. The inhibition against its deprivation extends to all those limbs and faculties by which 'life' is enjoyed. The provision equally prohibits the mutilation of the body, by the amputation of an arm or leg, or the putting out of an eye, or the destruction of any other organ of the body through which the soul communicates with the outer world. The deprivation, not only of 'life,' but of whatever God has given, to every one with 'life' for its growth and enjoyment, is prohibited by the provision in question, if its efficacy be not frittered away by judicial decision." MacMullen v. City of Middletown, 98 N. Y. Supp. 145, 150, 112 App. Div. 81 (quoting Field, J., in Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77).

The use of the word "life," in a will creating a trust, devising the fund to the trustees to hold and collect the rents, income, and profits thereof, and pay over the same to such three children annually, during the term of their natural "life," in the singular, if significant, tends to show that the testator was thinking of the life of each. Brown v. Farmer, 68 N. E. 32, 33, 184 Mass. 136.

LIFE AND ACCIDENT INSURANCE

"Life and accident insurance" is a contract whereby one, for a stipulated consideration, agrees to indemnify another against injuries by accident or death. State v. Willett, 86 N. E. 68, 70, 171 Ind. 296, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 197.

LIFE ESTATE

See Conventional Life Estate; Legal Life Estate.

As dower of use, benefit, and profits, see Dower.

An "estate for life" is a "freehold" estate not of inheritance. Cummings v. Cummings, 75 Atl. 210, 211, 76 N. J. Eq. 568.

Life estates are freehold estates not of inheritance, and an estate that may last for a life or lives, that is not inheritable, not at will or for any fixed period of time, is a "life estate." Disley v. Disley, 75 Atl. 481, 483, 30 R. I. 366.

"The very idea of a 'life estate' presupposes a fee as existing elsewhere than in the tenant for life, though the latter may be empowered to convey the fee and thus divest him who, but for the exercise of the power, would be holden of the fee conditionally, or a contingent remainderman." Beatson v. Bowers, 91 N. E. 922, 924, 174 Ind. 601.

An "estate for life" is a freehold interest in lands, the duration of which is confined to the life or lives of some particular person or persons or to the happening or not happening of some uncertain event. Where a grantee agreed that the grantors should remain on the premises during their natural lives, free from rent, the grantors had a life estate. Robb v. New York & C. Gas Coal Co., 65 Atl. 938, 939, 216 Pa. 418.

"At common law there were two classes of 'life estates': First, conventional 'life estates,' or those which were created by contract; and, second, those which came into existence by operation of law. The former were not impeachable for waste, unless expressly made so by the conveyance. The reason assigned for this rule is that it is presumed that, if the grantor intended to limit the enjoyment of the estate, he would have expressed his intention in the deed. As to the second class of 'life estates,' on the other hand, they are, as a general rule, impeachable for waste; that is to say, the tenant for life cannot use the property for any purpose which would result in an injury to the inheritance, save those only to which it had been devoted at the time the life estate came into existence." Swayne v. Lone Acre Oil Co., 86 S. W. 740, 742, 98 Tex. 597, 69 L. R. A. 986, 8 Ann. Cas. 1117.

Testator having devised certain lands to his three sons by clauses under which, without more, they would have taken the lands in fee, in a subsequent clause provided that the estates so taken by his sons should only be "life estates," and, in case any of them died without issue, the land thereby willed for life should go to the other living children or the issue of such as had died. Held that, two sons having died subsequently to testator's death, without issue, the third took a fee simple, and not merely a life estate; the words "life estate" being equivalent to defeasible fee. Smoot v. Kirk (Ky.) 104 S. W. 716, 717.

A life estate may be created by a deed, lease, or devise, with or without a stipulation for rent. A lease of premises, to have and to hold unto lessee, his heirs, etc., so long as he should wish to live in the city in which the premises were, vested a life estate, terminable only at his death or removal from the city. Thompson v. Baxter, 119 N. W. 797, 798, 107 Minn. 122, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 575.

Tenancies at will, from year to year, or at sufferance distinguished

A life estate differs from tenancies at will, or from year to year, or at sufferance; the principal distinction being that the former confers a freehold and the latter a mere chattel interest. Thompson v. Baxter, 119 N. W. 797, 798, 107 Minn. 122, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 575.

LIFE INSURANCE

See Life and Accident Insurance.

Proceeds of, see Proceeds.

Since the term "life insurance" includes accident policies, Act Pa. June 23, 1885, providing that when a policy of life insurance contains a warranty of the truth of the answers contained in the application no untrue statement made in good faith shall effect a forfeiture, unless the untrue statement relates to some matter material to the risk, is applicable to accident insurance. Miller v. Maryland Casualty Co., 193 Fed. 343, 348, 113 C. C. A. 267.

As chose in action

See Chose in Action.

As contract to pay certain sum

Life insurance is a promise to pay a certain sum upon the death of the insured. Ellison v. Straw, 97 N. W. 168, 170, 119 Wis. 502.

An "insurance" upon life is a contract by which the insurer, for a stipulated sum, engages to pay a certain sum of money if another dies within the time limited by the policy. It is a chose in action and even before the death of the insured may be assigned. Rylander v. Allen, 53 S. E. 1032, 1033, 125 Ga. 206, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 128, 5 Ann. Cas. 355.

As expressly defined by Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 2114, "life insurance" is "a contract, by which the insurer for a stipulated sum engages to pay a certain amount if another dies within the time limited by the policy. The life may be that of the assured, or of another in whose continuance the assured has an interest." Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York v. Lane, 151 Fed. 276, 278.

A "life insurance" policy is not merely a contract of indemnity. It is a contract to pay to the beneficiary a sum certain in the event of death; and if the contract was valid in its inception, and so continues until its maturity, the beneficiary is entitled to the whole of the stipulated sum. Keckley v. Coshocton Glass Co., 99 N. E. 299, 300, 86 Ohio St. 218, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 607.

A "life insurance policy" is not a contract of indemnity, but is a contract to pay money upon the death of the assured in consideration of certain payments made during his life. Wayland v. Western Life Indemnity Co., 148 S. W. 626, 630, 166 Mo. App. 221; Reed v. Provident Sav. Life Assur. Soc., 82 N. E. 734, 736, 190 N. Y. 111.

As insurance

See Insurance.

Benefit societies

A certificate in a mutual benefit association, providing that defendant association would pay on the member's death to his sister as beneficiary a specified sum on certain conditions, was a life insurance policy, within Act April 11, 1903 (Acts 1903, c. 119), providing that, after its passage, the suicide of a policy holder of any life insurance company doing business within the state should not be a defense to the policy, whether the suicide was voluntary or involuntary, or the holder was sane or insane. Head Camp Pacific Jurisdiction Woodmen of the World v. Sloss, 112 Pac. 49, 50, 49 Colo. 177, 81 L. R. A. (N. S.) 831.

A "life insurance contract" or policy is "a contract by which a company or association agrees to pay a certain sum of money on the death of a member, in consideration of the payment by the member of fixed sums at fixed periods." A certificate issued by a fraternal mutual benefit society, providing that on the death of the member a specified sum will be paid his wife out of the mortuary fund on condition of payments by the member of fixed sums at fixed periods, is a life insurance contract or policy, within Code 1887, § 3251, providing what shall be a sufficient declaration in an action on a policy, and is not merely a certificate of membership in a beneficial society. Cosmopolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Koegel, 52 S. E. 166, 168, 169, 104 Va. 619 (citing Logan v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 47 S. W. 948, 146 Mo. 114; 1 Bacon Benefit Societies & Life Insurance, § 52).

The object of an association was to furnish each of its members at death a specific sum for application to his funeral expenses, by a system of mutual contribution; the members at the death of any member paying death assessments. It employed agents to solicit business from the general public and was not founded on principles of philanthropy. Held, that its contracts with its members constituted "life insurance," within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 4713, forbidding the taking of an application for insurance upon the life of any person in the state in favor of a person not having a bona fide insurable interest in the life of insured, or who is not related to him within a certain degree. State v. Willett, 86 N. E. 68, 71, 171 Ind. 296, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 197.

LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

In the ordinary sense, a fraternal order is not a "life insurance company." That class of fraternal organizations which agree to pay a sum of money upon the death of a member have that characteristic in common with life insurance companies, but the two classes of corporations are organized under different acts and for different purposes. The insurance company is an ordinary business corporation, and its policies are obtained for ordinary business purposes, for investment, for security for the benefit of credit, as well as the protection of the family, while the beneficiary association is not organized for purposes of profit, its certificates cannot be used for business purposes, and its members can receive no pecuniary advantage from its certificates and creditors cannot reach them. The Modern Woodmen of America is not an insurance company within the meaning of a question in an application for life insurance, "Have you ever been declined or postponed by any company?" Peterson v. Manhattan Life Ins. Co., 91 N. E. 466, 469, 244 Ill. 329, 18 Ann. Cas. 96.

LIFE, LIBERTY, AND PROPERTY

Under the Constitution, no one may be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, and the terms, "life," "liberty," and "property" include every personal, political, and civil right, including that to labor, to contract, and to acquire property. Josma v. Western Steel Car & Foundry Co., 94 N. E. 945, 946, 249 Ill. 508.

"The terms 'life,' 'liberty,' and 'property' embrace every right which the law protects; they include not only the right to own and hold, but also the right to use and enjoy, property." Kansas City Gas Co. v. Kansas City, 198 Fed. 500, 510 (quoting Spring Valley Water Co. v. San Francisco, 165 Fed. 667).

The terms "life," "liberty," and "property" are representative terms, and intended to cover every right to which a member of the body politic is entitled under the law. These terms include the right of self-defense, freedom of speech, religious and political freedom, exemption from arbitrary arrests, and the right freely to buy and sell as others may. Indeed, they may embrace all our liberties, personal, civil and political, including the rights to labor, to contract, to terminate contracts, and to acquire property. None of these liberties and rights can be taken away, except by due process of law. Coffeyville Vitrified Brick & Tile Co. v. Perry, 76 Pac. 848, 850, 69 Kan. 297, 66 L. R. A. 185, 1 Ann. Cas. 936 (citing Gillespie v. People, 58 N. E. 1007, 188 Ill. 176, 52 L. R. A. 283, 80 Am. St. Rep. 176).

The terms "life," "liberty," and "property," as used in the fourteenth constitutional amendment, embrace every right which the law protects; they include not only the right to own and hold, but also to use, property, and profits and income are within the protection of the amendment, subject, however, to the rule that when property is devoted to a public use the owner is entitled to earn only such income therefrom as is just and reasonable as between him and the public. Spring Valley Water Co. v. City and County of San Francisco, 165 Fed. 667, 676.

"The term 'life, liberty, and property,' as used in the federal Constitution, embraces every right which the law protects. They include, not only the right to hold and enjoy, but also the means of holding and enjoying, acquiring, and disposing of, property. The right to labor is property. It is one of the most valuable and fundamental of rights. The right to work is the right to earn one's subsistence, to live and to support wife and family. The right of master and servant to enter into contracts, to agree upon the terms and conditions under which the one will employ and the other will labor, is property. The master has the right to fix the terms and conditions upon which he is willing to give employment; the servant has the right to fix the terms and conditions upon which he is willing to labor; and any statute which curtails or limits that right deprives the party affected of his property, and, in the same measure, of his liberty. Both parties are free to enter into, or refuse to enter into, the contract. Before the law there is the same freedom to employ as to work, to buy as to sell, to choose one's employé as to choose one's employer." Branson v. Industrial Workers of the World, 95 Pac. 354, 361, 30 Neb. 270 (quoting Goldfield Consol. Mines Co. v. Goldfield Miners' Union No. 220, 159 Fed. 500).

LIFE, LIBERTY, AND PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS

The refusal to permit one to engage in a business of an undertaker is a violation of a right to enjoy "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," secured under the state and federal Constitutions, unless there is some good reason for the refusal; and the refusal to permit one to bury the dead body of a relative or friend, except under an unreasonable limitation, is an unlawful interference with a private right. Wyeth v. Board of Health of City of Cambridge, 86 N. E. 925, 927, 200 Mass. 474, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 147, 128 Am. St. Rep. 439.

LIFE LICENSE

An act approved March 7, 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 492, § 1; Burns' Ann. St. Supp. 1905, § 5902a), provides that no person shall be eligible to the office of county superintendent of schools unless he shall hold a 36 months' license, a 60 months' license, a life or professional license to teach in the common schools of the state. The act concerning common schools, approved March 6, 1899 (Acts 1899, p. 488, c. 214, § 1; Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 5905b), provides for the issuance of a 36 months' license and a 60 months' license by the state superintendent of public instruction. The act of 1899 (Acts 1899, p. 243, c. 143, § 7; Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 5905a), provides for the issuance of a professional license on such examination held by the county superintendent as may be prescribed by the state board of education, and that such license shall issue only on the approval of the state board. The school law of 1865 (Acts 1865, p. 34, c. 1, § 155; Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 5851), provides for the issuance of state certificates of qualification by the state board of education, which shall entitle the holder to teach in any of the schools of the state without further examination and be valid during the lifetime of the holder. The act approved March 5, 1873 (Acts 1873, p. 199, c. 86, § 3; Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6049), in amendment of and supplemental to the original act creating the State Normal School, authorizes the board of trustees to grant certificates of proficiency to teachers completing the prescribed courses of study, and provides that two years after graduation, satisfactory evidence of professional ability to instruct having been received, such teachers shall be entitled to diplomas appropriate to such professional degrees as the trustees shall confer on them, which diplomas shall be considered sufficient evidence of qualification to teach in any of the schools of the state. Held, that a post graduate diploma, granted pursuant to the act approved March 5, 1873 (Acts 1873, p. 199, c. 86; Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 6049), to a graduate of the State Normal School of two years' standing, was not a life license within the act approved March 7, 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 492, c. 163, § 1; Burns' Ann. St. Supp. 1905, § 5902a). State ex rel. Benham v. Bradt, 84 N. E. 1084, 1086, 170 Ind. 480.

LIFE OR LIVES IN BEING

A corporation or joint-stock company to which an annuity is bequeathed will not be deemed a life in being where so to regard it would cause a trust created by the will to violate the rule against perpetuities. Fitchie

v. Brown, 29 Sup. Ct. 106, 108, 211 U. S. 821, 58 L. Ed. 202.

The rule has reference to time, and not to persons; the term "life or lives in being" referring not to the persons who are to take, as testator may select as the measure of time the lives of any persons in existence, and "twenty-one years afterward" are 21 years in gross without regard to the life or coming of age of any person. Hays v. Martz, 89 N. E. 303, 305, 173 Ind. 279.

LIFE POLICY

LIFE USE

A provision in a judgment awarding to a widow a "life use" of an interest in certain property in controversy instead of a right of dower therein was improper, the life use not being the same as a dower interest, prior to assignment of dower. Humphrey v. Gerard, 79 Atl. 57, 58, 84 Conn. 216.

LIGHT (WEIGHT)LIGHTER MATERIAL

In a claim of a patent for a frame or foundation for collars of dresses, a description of an upper band as of "lighter material" than the lower band applies to material of which the band is composed, as distinguished from the band itself, and requires it to be comparatively different—whether lighter in weight, or simply more pliable—from material composing the other. Warren Featherbone Co. v. Roberts & Co., 128 Fed. 745, 747.

LIGHTER

As private carrier, see Private Carrier.

LIGHTNING

Under a fire insurance policy containing a clause extending the policy to "any direct loss or damage caused by the lightning" meaning thereby the commonly accepted use of the term "lightning," and excluding loss by cyclone or windstorm, damage to goods from water and debris, into which they were thrown by the falling of the wall as a result of lightning, was the direct and natural consequence of the lightning. Cummins v. Pennsylvania Fire Ins. Co., 134 N. W. 79, 83, 153 Iowa, 579, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1169, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 235.

LIGHTNING ARRESTER

A device used by a telephone company to divert lightning from the line to the ground is spoken of as a "lightning arrester," though it might have more properly been termed a lightning diverter; its office being, not to arrest the lightning, but to divert it from the wire by offering a comparatively easy course to the earth. Wells v. Northeastern Telephone Co., 64 Atl. 648, 652, 101 Ma. 371.

LIKE

See With Like Intent.

See, also, Same.

LIKE CASES

The phrase "in like cases as natural persons," as used in Const. Ala. 1901, § 240, giving the right to foreign corporations to sue in all courts "in like cases as natural persons," must mean, where the cases are alike, the same description of contract or tort. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co. v. Railroad Commission of Alabama, 155 Fed. 792, 799 (citing Smith v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 75 Ala. 449).

The word "like" has been judicially defined to mean "having the same or nearly the same appearance, qualities, or characteristics; resembling; similar to; equal in quantity, quality, or degree" (19 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 130); and, when the Constitution declares that "all corporations shall have the right to sue and shall be subject to be sued in all courts in like cases as natural persons," it must be construed to mean exactly what it says, and, if the facts are such as to give a private individual a cause of action under similar circumstances, if there are facts which bring the case within equitable principles, a municipal corporation has the same rights that a private corporation or an individual would have. Village of Haverstraw v. Eckerson, 108 N. Y. Supp. 508, 507, 124 App. Div. 18.

LIKE CIRCUMSTANCES

An instruction that "ordinary care" was such care as the great majority of mankind would and do exercise in the transactions of human life under like conditions and circumstances, was not erroneous because of the use of the expression "under like circumstances"; this being the equivalent of "under the same or similar circumstances," which is the proper standard. Warden v. Miller, 87 N. W. 828, 830, 112 Wis. 67.

LIKE COMPANY

As used in Ky. St. 1899, § 4077, imposing a franchise tax on 20 enumerated classes of corporations, all having special or exclusive privileges or franchises not allowed by law to natural persons, and on every other like company, the word "like" refers to corporations having or exercising some special or exclusive privilege or franchise not allowed by law to natural persons, or performing some public service. Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 74 S. W. 1050, 1052, 115 Ky. 787.

LIKE EFFECT

Under an instruction that an affidavit produced by defendant on cross-examination, to impeach the credibility of the witness who made it, may be considered in connection with the affiant's deposition, as evidence against the plaintiff of the facts therein stated under oath with "like effect" as his deposition, the words "with like effect" were evidently intended to instruct the jury that the deposition and the affidavit were each independent of the other and each affirmative testimony, not, however, that they were of equal weight, and such instruction should be given where such affidavit is introduced in evidence by plaintiff on the cross-examination of another witness. Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 23 Sup. Ct. 294, 296, 188 U. S. 208, 47 L. Ed. 446.

LIKE KIND

The words "like kind," as used in Code, c. 151, § 1, providing that a person who shall keep or exhibit a gaming table commonly called A. B. C. or E. O. table, or faro bank, or keno table, or "table of like kind," etc., shall be punished, etc., are used in a broad sense, and the act forbids certain kinds of gaming, among which are faro banks and keno tables, and all other games like them. So, on a trial for unlawfully keeping and exhibiting a slot machine, it is not error to instruct the jury that if they shall believe that the slot machine described is a gaming table, and that the machine is so constructed that it offers unequal chances to the player and exhibitor, and that the unequal chances are in favor of the exhibitor, then the slot machine is a gaming table of like kind and character to A. B. C. and E. O. tables, faro bank, and keno table. State v. Gaughan, 48 S. E. 210, 212, 55 W. Va. 692.

The expression "like kind of property," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 1129, providing that, if a carrier shall charge a greater or less compensation for any services in the transportation of any kind of property than it charges any other person for doing him a like service in the transportation of a "like kind of property" under substantially the same conditions, it shall be deemed guilty of discrimination, means "of the same kind," and does not put all live stock in one class, and hence the charge of a higher freight rate for transportation of sheep than that fixed for cattle and other live stock does not constitute a discrimination. Wynn v. Wabash R. Co., 86 S. W. 562, 564, 111 Mo. App. 642.

LIKE MANNER

Testator provided that, on the death of one of his children, one-third of the income of his share of a trust fund should be payable "in like manner" for the benefit of his widow for life, and, on her decease leaving lawful issue of testator's son then living, such one-third of the income and principal was to go to such issue in the same manner as the other two-thirds had been decreed. Held, that the phrase "in like manner" was used to designate the mode in which the recipients were to be benefited, and not to describe such recipients. Sterling v. Ives, 62 Atl. 948, 954, 78 Conn. 498.

St. 1898, § 925—184, provides that, if a landowner assessed for street improvement feels himself aggrieved, he may appeal to the circuit court, which appeal shall be tried "in like manner" as appeals from the disallowance of claims. Held, that the words "in like manner" did not mean that equitable issues should be tried to a jury merely because legal claims and demands against a city were so triable and did not prevent an amendment on the appeal so as to allow the presentation of issues connected with the subject-matter not triable below. Nelson v. City of Waukesha, 132 N. W. 887, 888, 147 Wis. 163.

LIKELIHOOD

See In All Likelihood.

LIKELY

See Reasonably Likely.

The term "likely" means probable or reasonably to be expected. Vohs v. Shorthill & Co., 107 N. W. 417, 419, 130 Iowa, 538 (citing Webst. Dict.; Cent. Dict.).

Since the word "likely" means "worthy of belief," according to Webst. Dict.; "reasonable expectation," according to Stand. Dict.; or "as may be reasonably supposed," according to Cent. Dict.—an instruction in regard to future suffering should not leave the jury in doubt as to what future losses they may consider in estimating the damages, and thus give the jury a roving commission to find what damages they saw fit, and an instruction authorizing the jury to find such damages as "plaintiff will be liable to suffer in the future" was not rendered erroneous by the use of the word "likely," in that it authorized the jury to estimate the damages irrespective of such as they might believe from the evidence would reasonably result from the injuries in the future. Holden v. Missouri R. Co., 84 S. W. 133, 135, 108 Mo. App. 665 (citing Illinois Cent. Ry. Co. v. Davidson, 76 Fed. 517, 22 C. C. A. 306; Scott Tp. v. Montgomery, 95 Pa. 444; Curtiss v. Rochester & S. R. Co. [N. Y.] 20 Barb. 282; distinguishing Schwend v. St. Louis Transit Co., 80 S. W. 40, 105 Mo. App. 534; Hardy v. Milwaukee St. Ry. Co., 61 N. W. 771, 89 Wis. 183; White v. Milwaukee City Ry. Co., 21 N. W. 524, 61 Wis. 536, 50 Am. Rep. 154; Kucera v. Merrill Lumber Co., 65 N. W. 374, 91 Wis. 637).

"Among other definitions of the term 'likely' given by some of the lexicographers are the following: 'Worthy of belief.' Webst. Dict. 'Reasonably expected.' Stand. Dict. 'As may be reasonably supposed.' Cent. Dict. Of course, the term has other significations less definite than the foregoing, and for this reason it should not be used in an instruction to a jury when plainness and definiteness of direction are required; but we do not think the jury understood by the instruction that they were commissioned to estimate the damages irrespective of what they might believe from the evidence would reasonably result in the future from the consequences of the injury, but did not understand that the future losses for which they might assess present damages were such losses as were reasonably certain to accrue from the injury. It was in this sense the learned trial court understood the term as used in the instruction, and there is nothing in the record to induce us to believe that the jury had a different understanding. We think a fair construction of the term, as used in the instruction, means, and was understood by the jury to mean, such losses as were reasonably certain to accrue in the future as the result of the injury complained of." There is but a slight shade of difference between "reasonably expected" and "reasonably certain," and "likely," as used in a question to an expert medical witness as to what results were likely to follow, was competent; the term being used synonymously with "reasonably expected," which might be substituted for "reasonably certain." Garrard v. Manufacturers' Coal & Coke Co., 105 S. W. 787, 771, 207 Mo. 242 (quoting Holden v. Missouri R. Co., 84 S. W. 133, 108 Mo. App. 665).

While the term "likely" has in it to a certain extent an element of probability, it is not strong enough to make proper evidence facts which are likely to occur. In an action for injuries, a medical expert cannot be asked as to whether an injury such as the plaintiff received would be "likely" to produce the condition related to the witness. Higgins v. United Traction Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 76, 77, 98 App. Div. 60.

In an action for personal injuries, it was not error to refuse to strike out, on the ground that it was indefinite and speculative expert testimony, that it was not "likely" that there would be any improvement thereafter in plaintiff's sight, the word "likely," although not synonymous with "probable," having practically the same meaning in this connection. Graham v. Joseph H. Bauland Co., 89 N. Y. Supp. 595, 598, 97 App. Div. 141 (citing Knoll v. Third Avenue R. Co., 62 N. Y. Supp. 16, 46 App. Div. 527).

To constitute "wantonnness" it is sufficient that the act complained of indicates that the injury was the "likely" and not improbable result of the wrongful act. The word "likely" is here used in the sense of something more than possible and less than probable. Conchin v. El Paso & S. W. R. Co., 108 Pac. 260, 261, 13 Ariz. 259, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 88.

LILY OF THE VALLEY

In construing the provision in Tariff Act Aug. 27, 1894, c. 349, § 1, Schedule G, par. 234½, 28 Stat. 525, for "lily of the valley" * * * plants used for forcing," held that "lily of the valley" roots, sprouted, which are imported for forcing, are dutiable thereunder, being included within the term "plants" in a popular sense, though not technically. "Lily of the valley" roots are not covered by Tariff Act Aug. 28, 1894, c. 349, § 2, Free List, par. 558, 28 Stat. 542, relating to "moss, seaweeds, and vegetable substances," not being vegetable substances in the class of moss and seaweeds. McAllister v. United States, 147 Fed. 773.

LIMB

The word "limb" includes the part of a human being from the hip to the sole of the foot. Lorts & Frey Planing Mill Co. v. Well (Ky.) 113 S. W. 474, 475.

LIMES

As fruit, see Fruit.

Limes in brine held not to be dutiable as "limes" under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 266, 30 Stat. 172, but to be free of duty under section 2, Free List, par. 556, of said act, 30 Stat. 198, as "fruits in brine, not specially provided for." Brennan v. United States, 136 Fed. 743, 744, 69 C. C. A. 395.

LIMESTONE

As mineral, see Mineral.

Hauteville stone, a compact "limestone" susceptible of a fairly high polish and used for decorative work in the interiors of buildings, is dutiable as "marble," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 114, 30 Stat. 158, rather than as "limestone" * * * not specially provided for," under paragraph 117, 30 Stat. 159. The definitions of "limestone" and "marble" as given in Century and Worcester's Dictionaries, New American Cyclopaedia, and New International Encyclopedia, do not aid in any great measure in determining the dividing line between what is "marble" and what is "limestone" other than "marble." Bockmann v. United States, 154 Fed. 1000, 1001.

Marble is defined as a "limestone" having a granular and crystalline structure, but it is a crystalline limestone. Hauteville stone is not a crystalline limestone, but is a high-grade limestone ornamental and polishable. In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 114, 30 Stat. 158, the term "marble" is used according to its more precise definition as a limestone having a granular and crystalline structure, rather than its broader sense of being a limestone susceptible of a high polish. Hence Hauteville stone, though an ornamental, polishable, high-grade limestone, is not crystalline, not dutiable under the provision, but under paragraph 117, as limestone. Bockmann v. United States, 158 Fed. 807, 808, 86 C. C. A. 67.

Hauteville stone, and various other stones of substantially the same character, which are susceptible of a high polish and are used as an interior decorative stone, are not the kind of limestone that is "marble," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 114, 30 Stat. 158, but are dutiable as "limestone," under paragraph 117, 30 Stat. 159. United States v. C. D. Jackson & Co., 175 Fed. 884, 885.

LIMIT AND CONTROL

The words "limit and control," as used in Acts 1902, p. 420, c. 300, entitled "An act to limit and control the expenditure of money upon public highways" by a designated county, are sufficiently broad to cover a provision in the body of the act prohibiting the county commissioners from levying taxes on the assessable property of the county for the purpose of constructing, maintaining, and repairing any highway, bridge, or public road not in whole or in part within the county; and hence the act is not in conflict with Const. art. 3, § 29, providing that every law shall express but one subject, which shall be described in its title. Commissioners of Queen Anne's County v. Commissioners of Talbot County, 57 Atl. 13, 99 Md. 13.

LIMITS OF THE VEIN

In the absence of defined walls and of mineralization appreciably greater than that contained in the general mass of the mountain, broken, stained, and fissured material, or crushed and brecciated matter, characteristic of the district, cannot be held to constitute a vein or lode, and, in such cases, the limits of fracturing do not constitute the "limits of the vein," and even if there be found an occasional vug, or fragment of ore, yet, where it is disconnected from any ore body and so intermingled with the surrounding country rock that it cannot be regarded as continuous, it does not mark the line of the vein or lode, within the meaning of the law. Grand Central Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., 83 Pac. 648, 649, 876-680, 29 Utah, 490.

LIMITATION

See Conditional Limitation; Executory Limitation; Small Limitations; Title by Limitation or Prescription.

The word "limitation," as used in a lease for a term of years, reciting that it is subject to the conditional limitations herein stated, and stipulating in the following paragraph that the occupation of the premises by the tenant and his family as a strictly private dwelling apartment is a specific consideration for the granting of the lease, means restriction. Schwoerer v. Connolly, 88 N. Y. Supp. 818, 819, 44 Misc. Rep. 222.

An "estate upon limitation" is one which is made to determine absolutely upon the happening of some future event. The technical words generally used to create limitations are conjunctions relating to time, such as during, while, so long as, until, etc. These words are not, however, absolutely necessary, for, where necessary in order to carry out the intent of the grantor, an estate will be construed to be a limitation, though words ordinarily used in the creation of an estate upon condition appear in their stead. An "estate upon limitation" differs from one upon condition in this: That the estate is determined ipso facto by the happening of the contingency and does not require any entry by the grantor in order to defeat it. Diamond v. Rotan (Tex.) 124 S. W. 196, 200 (quoting and adopting definition in Tied. Real Prop. § 211).

Where an estate is so expressly limited by the words of its creation that it cannot endure for any longer time than until the contingency happens upon which the estate is to fail, the provision is a limitation. Low v. Thompson, 111 N. Y. Supp. 607, 608.

Code, § 1329, which provides that "any limitation by deed" to the heirs of a living person shall be construed to be to his children, abolishes the common-law rule that a deed to the heirs of a living person is void for uncertainty, and makes a deed to the heirs of a living person a valid deed to his children; the word "limitation" in the statute meaning the creation of an estate. "The confusion which has frequently arisen in the use of the word 'limitation' has been due to a failure to appreciate the distinction, its original sense, namely, that of a member of a sentence expressing the limits or bounds to the quantity of an estate, and its derivative sense, in which it is used, as an entire sentence, creating and actually or constructively marking out the quantity of an estate. In our statute the word is manifestly used in its derivative or secondary sense." Campbell v. Everhart, 52 S. E. 201, 204, 139 N. C. 503 (citing 2 Fearne, Remainders [4th Am. Ed.] marg. p. 10, § 24; Starnes v. Hill, 16 S. E. 1101, 112 N. C. 1, 22 L. R. A. 598).

Estate on condition distinguished

The distinction between an "estate on limitation" and one "on condition" is that in the former the event or occurrence relied on to determine the first estate and as the beginning of another merely marks the end or limit of the first, and thus indicates the boundary between the two, while in estates on condition it actively defeats what might otherwise be a greater interest. Diamond v. Rotan (Tex.) 124 S. W. 196, 200.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS

The "statute of limitations" is a statute of repose. McWhorter v. Cheney, 49 S. E. 603, 606, 121 Ga. 541.

The statute of limitations is a statute of repose, enacted as a matter of public policy to fix a limit within which an action must be brought, or the obligation be presumed to have been paid, and is intended to run against those who are neglectful of their rights, and who fail to use reasonable and proper diligence in the enforcement thereof. Burleigh County v. Kidder County, 125 N. W. 1063, 1065, 20 N. D. 27.

"Statutes of 'limitation' are statutes of repose intended to prescribe a definite limit of time within which the remedies included within their provisions must be prosecuted. They are designed to afford security from stale demands, when from lapse of time, death of witnesses, failure of memory, loss of vouchers, or other causes, the true state of the transactions may be incapable of explanation, and the rights of the parties cannot be satisfactorily investigated." Davis v. Munie, 85 N. E. 943, 944, 235 Ill. 620.

The "statutes of limitation" are based on the theory of laches. Schroeder v. Bozarth, 79 N. E. 583, 586, 224 Ill. 310 (citing Mettler v. Miller, 22 N. E. 529, 532, 129 Ill. 630, 642).

A "statute of limitation" is but the action of the state in determining that, after the lapse of a specified time, a claim shall not be legally enforceable. State of South Dakota v. State of North Carolina, 24 Sup. Ct. 269, 288, 192 U. S. 286, 48 L. Ed. 448.

"Statutes of limitation" are such legislative enactments as prescribe the periods within which actions may be brought upon certain claims, or within which certain rights may be enforced. Peters v. Hanger, 134 Fed. 586, 588, 67 C. C. A. 386.

"Statutes of limitation," as applied in courts of law, are inflexible and framed upon the theory that mere lapse of time, irrespective of other considerations, should bar the claim, while the doctrine of "laches," applied in courts of equity, is sufficiently flexible to give reasonable effect to the special circumstances of any case, and rests not alone upon the lapse of time, but upon the inequity of permitting the claim to be enforced, because of some change in the condition or relations of the property or the parties. Stevens v. Grand Central Min. Co., 133 Fed. 28, 31, 67 C. C. A. 284 (citing Hammond v. Hopkins, 12 Sup. Ct. 418, 143 U. S. 224, 250, 36 L. Ed. 134; Townsend v. Vanderwerker, 16 Sup. Ct. 258, 160 U. S. 171, 186, 40 L. Ed. 383; Ward v. Sherman, 24 Sup. Ct. 227, 192 U. S. 168, 176, 48 L. Ed. 391; Bryan v. Kaes, 10 Sup. Ct. 435, 134 U. S. 126, 135, 33 L. Ed. 829).

"Limitation," when relied upon as a defense in an action of trespass to try title, is in no sense a plea of confession and avoidance. Unlike a plea of limitation, when urged against an action of debt, it confesses nothing. In the latter class of actions this character of pleading admits that the debt once existed, and seeks to avoid its collection by showing that the right of action is barred by the lapse of time. In those suits the plaintiff states specifically the facts by which he expects to prove his debt, and facts showing the promise, either express or implied, upon which he relies. But in an action of trespass to try title the defense of limitation does not expressly or impliedly admit that the plaintiff ever did have any title to the land sued for. On the contrary, it is as much the assertion of an affirmative title, or right to the land, acquired by the defendant under the provisions of the statute, giving absolute title by reason of adverse use and possession for the statutory period, as a denial of the right of recovery by reason of the lapse of time. It is not simply a defense limited in its effect to disproving the plaintiff's right of action, but the setting of a superior claim in the defendant. In this respect it occupies the same plane as would a superior right or title acquired from any other source, and is no more to be regarded as a confession that the plaintiff once had a title than would the pleading of a written conveyance acquired under such conditions as would render it superior to that under which the plaintiff might claim. Meade v. Logan (Tex.) 110 S. W. 188, 191.

Gen. Laws 1865, p. 749, c. 191, § 31, providing that every judgment should be presumed to be paid after 20 years from rendition thereof, but that in any suit in which the party against whom such judgment was rendered was a party the presumption might be repelled by written acknowledgment or proof of payment of some part of the amount recovered by the judgment, but that in all other cases it should be conclusive, is not one of limitation, and the absence of a judgment debtor from the state did not affect the running of time in favor of the presumption. Cobb v. Houston, 94 S. W. 299, 301, 117 Mo. App. 645.

The provision of Civ. Code 1901, par. 969, requiring claims against counties to be presented within six months, is not a "law of limitation" within Civ. Code 1901, par. 2968, providing that laws of limitation shall not be available in any suit unless specially pleaded as a defense, but is a special statutory limitation of the essence of the right created, and the lapse of which not only bars the remedy but extinguishes the right. Cochise County v. Wilcox (Ariz.) 127 Pac. 758, 760.

Pub. St. 1901, c. 187, § 7, permitting a petition to have the probate of a will re-examined in solemn form within one year after the date of the decree, is a statute of limitations designed to secure the final probate of wills, while the facts are within the knowledge of living persons, and to promote the requirement of public policy looking to the speedy settlement of decedent's estates, and such a petition cannot be maintained more than a year after the probate decree. Knight v. Hollings, 63 Atl. 38, 42, 73 N. H. 495.

The statute allowing two years for redemption from a tax sale is not a statute of limitations within Const. § 104, providing that limitations shall not run against the state or any county, etc., and a county has not the right after the expiration of the two-year period to redeem land, which after the tax sale it bought at a trustee's sale, to protect a loan made by it on the land prior to the tax sale. Tallahatchie County v. Little, 46 South. 257, 258, 93 Miss. 88.

Statutes of limitation do not run against the state in respect to "public rights," unless the state is expressly included within the terms of the statute; but where the state becomes a partner with individuals or engages in business, it divests itself of its sovereign character and is subject to the statute. The rule that statutes of limitation do not run against the state also extends to counties, cities, towns, and minor municipalities in all matters respecting strictly public rights, as distinguished from private and local rights; but as to matters involving private rights they are subject to statutes of limitation to the same extent as individuals. Brown v. Trustees of Schools, 79 N. E. 579, 580, 224 Ill. 184, 115 Am. St. Rep. 146, 8 Ann. Cas. 96 (citing County of Platt v. Goodell, 97 Ill. 84; Lee v. Town of Mound Station, 8 N. E. 759, 118 Ill. 304; President, etc., of Kaskaskia v. McClure, 47 N. E. 72, 167 Ill. 23).

Equitable actions

"Limitations" and "laches," when applied to the period within which an equitable right may be asserted, are not synonymous. "Limitations" signify that fixed statutory period, whether expressly applicable to suits in chancery or followed by analogy, while "laches" signifies unreasonable delay independent of statute or any fixed period of time. "Laches" also involves prejudice, actual or implied, resulting from the delay. It does not arise from delay alone, but from delay which works disadvantage to another, as the defense of laches is neither a limitation nor an estoppel, but partakes of the characteristics of both. Wilder's Ex'r v. Wilder, 72 Atl. 208, 206, 82 Vt. 123.

As prescription

"So far, therefore, as the title to property is concerned, or, at all events, so far as the title to real property is concerned, 'prescription' and 'limitation' are convertible terms; and a plea of the proper statute of limitations is a good plea of prescriptive right. The language of decisions with reference to water rights has been in accordance with this view." Hence, where defendant at the time plaintiff commenced its action had already had a prescribed right to divert the waters of a certain ditch, the extent of that right is to be determined from the nature and character of the adverse user on which it is founded, and is commensurate with the extent to which it was adversely enjoyed for the requisite statutory period sufficient to vest the right. Wutchumna Water Co. v. Ragle, 84 Pac. 162-164, 148 Cal. 759 (quoting and adopting Alhambra Addition Water Co. v. Richardson, 14 Pac. 381, 72 Cal. 601).

The term "limitations," as used in statutes of this country relating to adverse possession, is merely synonymous with the word "prescription" used in the Roman law, and means the time prescribed by statute within which a title to property may be acquired by adverse possession. Brock v. Kirkpatrick, 48 S. E. 72, 79, 69 S. C. 231 (citing Tyler on Ejectment, p. 88).

LIMITATION OF LIABILITY

See Agreement Limiting Liability.

LIMITATION OF A REMAINDER

A "limitation of a remainder," strictly so called, is a clause creating or transferring an estate or interest in lands or tenements which is limited, either directly or indirectly, to take effect in possession or in enjoyment, or in both, subject, only, to any term of years or contingent interest that may intervene immediately after the regular expiration of a particular estate or freehold previously created together with it by the same instrument out of the same subject of property. Biggerstaff v. Van Pelt, 69 N. E. 804, 806, 207 Ill. 611 (citing Smith, Ex. Int. § 159).

LIMITED JURISDICTION

The Supreme Court of Appeals is a "court of limited jurisdiction," as defined by the Constitution and laws passed in pursuance thereof, and the burden is on one invoking its authority to establish its jurisdiction over the matter in controversy. Forbes v. State Council, Junior Order United American Mechanics of Virginia, 60 S. E. 81, 107 Va. 853.

LIMITED PARTNERSHIP

Code Civ. Proc. § 758, as amended in 1877 (Laws 1877, c. 416, § 1, subd. 169), provides that in the case of death of one of two or more defendants, if the entire cause of action survives against the others, the action may proceed against the survivors, but that the estate of one jointly liable upon contract with others shall not be discharged by his death; and Partnership Law (Laws 1897, c. 420) § 3, makes a partnership formed otherwise than as prescribed in the chapter for the formation of a limited partnership a general partnership. Section 4 defines a "limited partnership" as one or more persons called "general partners," and also one or more called "special partners." Section 5 makes every general partner the agent for the firm. Section 6 makes every general partner liable for all firm obligations jointly and severally with his general copartner. Section 7 makes a special partner liable only to the amount of the capital invested by him, and article 3 is entitled "Limited Partnership." Section 36 provides that the general partner "in such partnership" shall be jointly and severally liable as general partners are by law, and that special partners shall not be liable beyond the fund contributed by them to the capital. Held, that section 6 of the partnership law is confined to limited partnerships, and does not make the partners of a general firm jointly and severally liable to the firm creditors, and hence the representative of a deceased partner could not be substituted for him in an action for firm debts. Selgman v. Friedlander, 92 N. E. 1047, 1049, 199 N. Y. 373.

LIMITED PERIOD

While the Legislature can authorize the assignment of a homestead upon the granting of a divorce to either party absolutely, whether such homestead is carved out of the separate property of one or selected from the community, yet, under Civ. Code, § 146, subd. 4, which limits the right of such party in a homestead selected from the separate property of the other to its enjoyment "for a limited period," there may be enjoyment or occupation by the innocent party for a long period of years, even during the life of such party, but it does not mean that the court has the power of vesting the homestead absolutely in such party unless he is the former owner of property from which the homestead was selected. Zanone v. Sprague, 116 Pac. 989, 991, 16 Cal. App. 333.

LIMITED PUBLICATION

A "limited publication" is one which communicates market quotations to a select few on condition expressly or impliedly precluding their rightful ulterior communication, except in restricted private intercourse. Chamber of Commerce of Minneapolis v. Wells, 111 N. W. 157, 159, 100 Minn. 205 (quoting and adopting definition in Keene v. Wheatley, 14 Fed. Cas. 180).

In a deed granting by metes and bounds a small parcel of land out of the northeastern corner of a large tract known to contain coal, and also the privilege, should the grantee, "his heirs, or assigns, open a coal mine on said (granted) tract of land, of undermining southward beyond the lines of said tract of said land, so far as not to injure the tract of land of which this was a part, and now taken from," the word "lines" strongly imported an intention to make a larger grant than that of the coal lying immediately south. Higgins v. Round Bottom Coal & Coke Co., 59 S. E. 1064, 1068, 63 W. Va. 218.

The St. Louis city charter, which authorizes the assembly to establish "a building line" along boulevards, does not prevent the assembly from establishing different building lines along the same boulevard; the word "line," as used in the charter, meaning a mark of division or demarkation, an outline or contour, a limit or boundary, and not a straight line. City of St. Louis v. Handlan, 145 S. W. 421, 423, 242 Mo. 88.

In printing

"The word 'line' is not a technical term, but one in common use, and having, in common usage, when applied to printing matter, a well-known signification. It then means a row of words, letters, or figures printed across a page or column, without regard to the size of the type," and it has this meaning in act approved April 14, 1891 (2 Gen. St. p. 2325), enacted to regulate the price of legal advertising. Sheehy v. Hoboken, 40 Atl. 626, 627, 62 N. J. Law 184 (quoting and adopting Maillard v. Lawrence, 16 How. 251, 261, 14 L. Ed. 925; Daly v. Ely, 31 Atl. 396, 53 N. J. Eq. 270).

In surveying

That the description of a survey called for the marked "line" of another survey between designated points which was not a straight line but consisted of four lines and three marked corners was immaterial; the word "line" being often used for the plural, and vice versa, and the singular being also sufficient to describe the exterior boundary of the survey line called for between the designated points. Bell v. Powers (Ky.) 121 S. W. 991, 993.

LINE OF DESCENT

The "line of descent" is the course that property takes according to law when the owner dies. Under Domestic Relations Law (Laws 1896, p. 226, c. 272, § 64), providing that the foster parent and the minor sustain toward each other the legal relation of parent and child with all the rights and subject to all the duties of that relation, including the right of inheritance from each other, a son of an adopted daughter of a testator is a "lineal descendant" within Tax Law 1896 (Laws 1896, p. 869, c. 908, § 221), providing that the transfer of property from a decedent to any lineal descendant shall not be taxable under the transfer tax law, etc. In re Cook's Estate, 79 N. E. 991, 994, 187 N. Y. 253.

LINE OF DUTY

Laws 1903, p. 102, c. 41, authorizing a pension to the widow and children of a policeman on his death "while in the line of duty," does not authorize a pension where a policeman while at his place of duty committed suicide because of insanity, where there was no showing that the insanity was the result of the performance of his duty. A policeman would be in the line of his duty while walking upon his beat or while going to any point where his duty called him, but if he should meet a person against whom he held a grudge, and without provocation or cause he should assault him, and in self-defense such person should take his life, it could not in reason be said that he came to his death while in the line of his duty. Again, a policeman's duty might call him to where intoxicating liquors are sold to be drunk as a beverage, and while there he would partake of such liquors until he became intoxicated, and while in that condition go upon the street and get killed as a direct result of his intoxication, it would be travesty to say that his death resulted from the performance of a duty enjoined upon him, or that he was killed "in the line of his duty." In either event his death would not be the result of his being a policeman, or the result of his attempting to discharge any duty as such. Hutchens v. Covert, 78 N. E. 1061, 1062, 39 Ind. App. 382.

LINE OF RAILROAD

The term "line" in the general railroad act declaring that the directors of every company formed under the act may, by a vote of two-thirds of their whole number, at any time, alter or change the route, if it shall appear to them that the line can be improved, means the same as "route." By "line" is not meant the organization of the several particulars taken together, which, when used for the active affairs of the company might colloquially be termed the "line," but it is that specific thing which, taken by itself, even before the company goes into active operation, is called its "line" or "route." Webb v. Forty-Second St., M. & St. N. Ave. Ry. Co., 102 N. Y. Supp. 762, 767, 52 Misc. Rep. 46.

"Two carriers may use the same road, but each has its separate 'line.' The defendant may lease trackage rights to any other company, but the joint use of the same track does not create the 'same line,' so as to compel either company to graduate its tariffs by that of the other." A joint traffic arrangement by which connecting carriers haul from a point on one road to a point on the other road for less than the first carrier charges from the same point on its road to its terminus between the points is not in violation of Ky. St. § 820, making it an offense for a carrier to charge more for hauling for a shorter distance than for a longer distance over the same line in the same direction; the expression "over the same line" not including a shipment passing in part over the line of each. Commonwealth v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 72 S. W. 361, 363, 115 Ky. 57 (quoting and adopting Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Osbourne, 52 Fed. 912, 3 C. C. A. 347).

As used in Rev. St. 1883, c. 6, § 42, as amended by Pub. Laws 1901, p. 160, c. 145, relating to taxation, the word "railroad" comprehends the equipment, roadbed, sites of depots and warehouses and other real estate, and the words "line or system" cannot be disconnected from it, and mean in this connection a railroad operated as a part of a line or system extending beyond the state. State v. Canadian Pac. R. Co., 60 Atl. 901, 902, 100 Me. 202.

LINE OF SHIP CHANNEL

A description of a boundary as following the "line of ship channel" means the line of low tide. Western Pac. Ry. Co. Southern Pac. Co., 151 Fed. 378, 388, 80 C. C. A. 606.

LINE OF TELEGRAPH OR TELEPHONE POLES

By a "line of telegraph or telephone poles" is meant a line of poles carrying an unlimited number of wires, and such a line is not rendered plural in its nature by having more than one line stretched upon it. It still remains a single line. Northeastern Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Hepburn, 65 Atl. 747, 749, 72 N. J. Eq. 7.

LINE SHAFT

The word "shaft," as used in connection with or applied to factories, is a revolving bar to convey the force which is generated by some prime mover to the different working machines, and a "line or main shaft" is a bar of considerable length, and usually bearing a number of pulleys by which power is transmitted to countershafts. Hohenstein-Harmetz Furniture Co. v. Matthews, 92 N. E. 196, 199, 46 Ind. App. 616.

LINE TREES

"Line trees" are "trees standing directly on the boundary between lands of adjoining owners," and are "usually considered common property, which neither may destroy without the consent of the other." Harndon v. Stultz, 100 N. W. 329, 330, 124 Iowa, 440 (citing Musch v. Burkhart, 48 N. W. 1025, 83 Iowa, 301, 12 L. R. A. 484, 32 Am. St. Rep. 305).

Under the express provisions of Civ. Code, § 834, "line trees" are those whose trunks stand partly on the land of two or more coterminus owners, and belong to them in common. Scarborough v. Woodill, 93 Pac. 383, 7 Cal. App. 39.

Where adjoining owners were co-tenants of certain line trees, neither was at liberty to cut the trees without the consent of the other, if he thereby injured the common property in the trees. Scarborough v. Wood-ill, 93 Pac. 383, 7 Cal. App. 39.

LINEAL

"Lineal" is that which subsists between persons of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other, as between son, father, grandfather, great-grandfather, and so upwards in the direct ascending line; or between son, grandson, great-grandson, and so downwards in the direct descending line. State v. De Hart, 33 South. 605, 606, 109 La. 570.

The Century Dictionary defines "lineal" as "proceeding in a direct or unbroken line; unbroken in course; distinguished from collateral; as lineal descent; lineal succession." Worcester defines "lineal" as in a direct line from an ancestor, pertaining to a direct line of descent, hereditary. In re Cook's Estate, 100 N. Y. Supp. 628, 629, 50 Misc. Rep. 487.

LINEAL CONSANGUINITY

"Consanguinity" or kindred is the connection or relation of persons descended from the same stock or common ancestor, and is either lineal or collateral; and "lineal consanguinity" is that which subsists between persons of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other. Suman v. Harvey, 79 Atl. 197, 204, 114 Md. 241.

LINEAL DESCENDANTS

Testator devised part of his estate to trustees, to hold equally for the benefit of testator's three children, and to pay to each of them the rents and profits of his or her portion for life, and at his or her death to transfer and convey to his or her "lineal descendants," if any, and, if none, then equally to the survivors of testator's descendants, or to their lineal descendants, if any; that the descendants of any child should have the portion which their parent, if living, would have taken, and, in case of death of all of testator's children without issue, to convey the trust res to testator's heirs at law. Held, that the words "lineal descendants" had the same legal effect as "heirs of the body," and that equitable estates in fee tail were therefore created by the will, with contingent cross-remainders to the survivors or their descendants, if either child died without issue. Paine v. Sackett, 61 Atl. 753, 755, 27 R. I. 300.

A trust deed conveying property to trustees during their lives and the life of the survivor of them recited that the grantor wished to provide for the maintenance of the beneficiaries named, directed the trustees to distribute the proceeds among the beneficiaries, provided for the distribution thereof on the death of one or more of the beneficiaries with or without "lineal descendants," and that, on the termination of the trust estate by the death of the last surviving trustee, the "lineal descendants" of the beneficiaries named should take the body of the fund, and further provided that the beneficiaries should not take any other interest in the grantor's property in the state than that therein granted. Held, that the phrase "lineal descendants" must be taken in its technical sense, and the contingencies on which the corpus of the fund devolved on the issue of the beneficiaries were that all the beneficiaries, as well as all the trustees, should be dead. Parrish v. Mills, 106 S. W. 882, 886, 101 Tex. 276.

A legally adopted child is a "lineal descendant" of its adopting parents. In re Winchester's Estate, 74 Pac. 10, 140 Cal. 468 (citing Warren v. Prescott, 24 Atl. 948, 84 Me. 483, 17 L. R. A. 435, 30 Am. St. Rep. 370).

The Century Dictionary defines the words "lineal descendant" to mean "descended from father to son through successive generations," and "descendant" as "an individual proceeding from an ancestor in any degree; issue, offspring, near or remote." "Lineal" is defined as "proceeding in a direct or unbroken line; unbroken in course; distinguished from collateral; as lineal descent; lineal succession." Worcester defines "descendant" as "the offspring of an ancestor; progeny," and "descent" as "proceeding from an original or progenitor, extraction." A son of an adopted daughter of testator is not a "lineal descendant" within the transfer tax act, so as to exempt his legacy from the transfer tax. In re Cook's Estate, 100 N. Y. Supp. 628, 629, 50 Misc. Rep. 487.

A "lineal descendant" is one who is in the line of descent from a certain person, but, since the passage of the domestic relations law, not necessarily in the line of generation. Under Domestic Relations Law (Laws 1896, p. 226, c. 272, § 64), providing that the foster parent and the minor sustain toward each other the legal relation of parent and child with all the rights and subject to all the duties of that relation, including the right of inheritance from each other, a son of an adopted daughter of testator is a "lineal descendant" within Tax Law 1896 (Laws 1896, p. 369, c. 908, § 221), providing that the transfer of property from a decedent to any "lineal descendant" shall not be taxable under the transfer tax law, etc. In re Cook's Estate, 79 N. E. 991, 994, 187 N. Y. 253.

As descendant

See Descendant.

LINEAL HEIRS

The words "lineal heirs," like "heirs of the body," mean all lineal descendants to the remotest posterity, and are words of inheritance, and not of purchase, unless the instrument clearly shows they were used in a restricted sense to denote "children." Clark v. Neves, 57 S. E. 614, 615, 78 S. C. 484, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 298 (citing Duckett v. Butler, 45 S. E. 137, 67 S. C. 130; Holman v. Wesner, 45 S. E. 206, 67 S. C. 307).

The phrase "lineal heirs" is equivalent to the words "legal representative." In re Tuttle's Estate, 59 Atl. 44, 45, 77 Conn. 310 (citing Ketchum v. Corse, 31 Atl. 486, 65 Conn. 89).

LINEAL INHERITANCE TAX

A tax on the interests of lineal descendants is a lineal inheritance tax, and that on collateral descendants a collateral inheritance tax. In re Macky's Estate, 102 Pac. 1075, 1078, 46 Colo. 79, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1207.

LINEAL ISSUE

Act Cong. June 13, 1898, c. 448, 30 Stat. 448, as amended by Act March 2, 1901, c. 806, 31 Stat. 938, imposing a succession tax, classified legatees and distributees with reference to their degree of blood relationship to the deceased, and regulated the taxes accordingly. In the first class were placed the lineal issue or lineal ancestor, brother or sister of the decedent; in the second the descendants of a brother or sister; in the third the brother or sister of the father or mother or a descendant; in the fourth class, the brother or sister of the grandfather or grandmother or a descendant; and in the fifth all beneficiaries found to be in any other degree of collateral consanguinity, or who may be a stranger in blood to the person dying seised of the property. Held, that an adopted child, though under the laws of the state entitled to all the rights of heirship of a child born in lawful wedlock, was not a "lineal issue" within the first class, but was a stranger in blood within the fifth class. Kerr v. Goldsborough, 150 Fed. 289, 290, 80 C. C. A. 177.

LINER

A machine known as a "liner," a heavy, hollow, revolving iron roller, filled with steam of high temperature, with a smaller roller above, between which papers were passed by the operator, was not the character of machinery required to be guarded by Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 8029, requiring employers to guard "all vats, pans, saws, planers, cogs, gearing, belting, shafting, set screws and machinery"; the liner being neither a "vat" nor a "gearing." Jenkins v. Lafayette Box Board & Paper Co., 87 N. E. 992, 993, 43 Ind. App. 463.

LINK

The word "link," in an instruction on reasonable doubt on a trial for crime where the testimony of the complaining witness to the main fact was direct and the only circumstantial evidence in the case was corroborative, that it was not necessary that every fact and circumstance and every "link" in the chain must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt, but that all the evidence in the case, when considered as a whole, must satisfy the jury beyond a reasonable doubt that defendant was guilty, is used to refer only to evidentiary facts which may add force or weight to other facts from which the inference of guilt may be drawn, and the instruction is not erroneous. People v. Rich, 94 N. W. 375, 378, 133 Mich. 14.

LINOLEUM

See Granite Linoleum.

Plank linoleum, made by running upon the burlap foundation paste of two colors in stripes of equal width, a process differing from that employed in making inlaid linoleum, is, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule J, par. 337, 30 Stat. 180, dutiable as "linoleum * * * figured or plain," rather than as "inlaid linoleum." United States v. Scott & West, 164 Fed. 285, 286.

LINSEED OIL

Laws 1897, p. 403, c. 217, provides that no person or corporation shall manufacture or sell any linseed oil, unless the same answers a chemical test for purity recognized in the United States Pharmacopoeia, and declares that the same shall be sold under its true name and in vessels bearing proper stamps, describing it as pure linseed oil raw or pure linseed oil boiled. Laws 1901, c. 332, amends the act, and provides that no person or corporation shall manufacture linseed oil, unless the same answers to a certain described test. The amendment makes no reference to raw or boiled oil. The words "linseed oil," as used in the amendment, includes both raw and boiled oil. State v. Williams, 100 N. W. 641, 642, 93 Minn. 155.

LINT COTTON

Acts 1896, p. 172, c. 156, § 16, imposes a tax on all "lint cotton" annually grown in a levee district, etc., and Acts 1904, p. 126, c. 90, § 5, makes it unlawful for any person to remove from the district any "cotton" grown therein without first paying the levee tax thereon, and declares that the levee board may recover from the person wrongfully removing such cotton a certain penalty tax on each bale or hundredweight of "seed cotton" so removed. Held, that the words "lint cotton" in the first act and "cotton" and "seed cotton" in the second act were limited to "lint cotton" ginned by ordinary gins, and did not include "linter" or "Grabbot" cotton obtained by reginning cotton seed and hard locks of cotton and cotton mixed with hulls, bolls, and other substances which could not be removed by ordinary ginning. Mississippi Levee Com'rs v. Refuge Cotton Oil Co., 44 South. 828, 829, 91 Miss. 480.

LINTER COTTON

See Lint Cotton.

LIQUEUR

Vermuth is not a "wine," "cordial," or "liqueur," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule H, par. 296, 30 Stat. 174, prohibiting an allowance for the leakage of those three articles. United States v. Julius Wile, Sons & Co., 178 Fed. 269, 270, 101 C. C. A. 574.

LIQUID

See Inflammable Liquid; Poisonous Liquid.

LIQUID MIXTURE

The terms "beverage," "liquid mixture," or "decoction," as used in Ky. St. 1903, § 2557a, making the sale at retail of a beverage, liquid mixture, or decoction which produces intoxication, unlawful in a territory wherein the sale of intoxicating liquor is prohibited, are used interchangeably, each synonymous with the other. Commonwealth v. Jarvis & Williams, 86 S. W. 556, 557, 120 Ky. 334.

LIQUIDATE

Laws 1907, c. 244, entitled an act "for the liquidation and payment of the claim * * * against the state in full and final settlement of said claim and all other demands," does not indicate any legislative intention to pay a debt or claim which did not exist, as the word "liquidate" is defined to be the act of settling and adjusting debts, or ascertaining the amounts or balance due. Hanly v. Sims, 94 N. E. 401, 403, 175 Ind. 345 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4130).

LIQUIDATED

Plaintiff's demand in an action on notes is liquidated, within Rev. St. 1895, art. 754, providing that, if the suit be founded on a certain demand, defendant may not set off unliquidated damages. Wise v. Ferguson (Tex.) 128 S. W. 816, 818.

Whether a claim is of a nature connoted by the term "set-off," and whether, as to its liquidated or unliquidated character, capable of being the subject of set-off, is to be determined by applying the test, Will an action of indebitatus assumpsit lie thereon? If so, it is liquidated within the legal meaning of the word "set-off." Links v. Marlowe, 84 Atl. 1056, 1057, 83 N. J. Law, 339.

The words "sum liquidated," as used in a statute providing that no demand shall be set off unless for the price of real or personal estate sold or for money paid, money had and received, or for services done, unless it be for a sum liquidated or one that may be ascertained by calculation, do not include an unliquidated claim for use and occupation. Hall v. Glidden, 39 Me. 445, 447.

The word "liquidated," in the sense of the rule that payment of a lesser sum is a discharge of the remainder where the amount in dispute is unliquidated, but that it is not a discharge where it is liquidated, means that the amount due has been ascertained and agreed on by the parties or fixed by operation of law. The rule does not apply where there is a bona fide dispute as to the amount actually due. A demand is not liquidated, even, if it appears that something is due, unless it appears how much is due; and when it is admitted that one of two specific sums is due, but there is a general dispute as to which is the proper amount, the demand is regarded as "unliquidated" within the meaning of the term as applied to the subject of accord and satisfaction. T. B. Redmond & Co. v. Atlanta & B. Air Line Ry., 58 S. E. 874-876, 129 Ga. 133 (quoting 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4174).

A petition which shows that the amount sued for was the price of an article sold by plaintiff to defendant, and which alleges that defendant promised to pay plaintiff the sum sued for, which sum was the agreed value thereof, states a cause of action for a liquidated demand within Sayles' Ann. Civ. St. 1897, arts. 754, 755, providing that, where a suit is founded on a certain demand, an unliquidated demand cannot be set off unless it is connected with the cause of action, and defendant cannot set up as a counterclaim a demand for unliquidated damages for breach of warranty in the sale of the other goods, the word "liquidated" meaning adjusted, certain, or settled in respect to the amount; a debt being liquidated when the amount is agreed on by the parties, or fixed by the operation of law. Brooks Tire Mach. Co. v. Shields, 108 S. W. 1005, 1006, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 531.

A claim is a "liquidated claim" where the amount due is fixed by law or has been ascertained and fixed by the parties. Scarritt Estate Co. v. J. F. Schmelzer & Sons Arms Co., 86 S. W. 489, 491, 110 Mo. App. 406 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Mills, 69 Pac. 317, 18 Colo. App. 8; Commercial Union Assur. Co. of London v. Meyer, 29 S. W. 93, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 7; Mitchell v. Addison, 20 Ga. 50; Kennedy v. Queens County, 62 N. Y. Supp. 276, 47 App. Div. 250).

"A demand is not 'liquidated,' even if it appears that something was due, unless it appears how much was due." The courts have defined the meaning of "liquidated demand" in language so broad that almost any claim short of damages for an assault and battery might be embraced in the definitions given, but on principle and under the cases the court holds that plaintiff's claim for services in this case was not a "liquidated demand" because the number of days he worked for defendant was in serious dispute, and the value of his services was also in controversy; the evidence showing that the demand might be anywhere from $25 to $75. White v. Curtis, 98 N. Y. Supp. 319, 320, 49 Misc. Rep. 50 (quoting from Nassoi v. Tomlinson, 42 N. E. 715, 148 N. Y. 326, 330, 51 Am. St. Rep. 695).

A demand is a "liquidated demand" whenever the amount due is agreed on by the parties or fixed by operation of law. Another definition is adjusted, certain, or settled in respect to amount. In an action for the price of goods sold, defendant pleaded that he had paid plaintiff for a car load of goods previously sold by plaintiff to defendant at a certain price per sack, but that on opening the car defendant had found a shortage and a certain number of sacks so worthless that they were rejected. Held, that the total of the price per sack for each missing and rejected sack constituted a "liquidated demand," and hence might be set off in the action. Harrington Lumber Co. v. Smith, 99 S. W. 110, 112, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 363 (quoting and adopting definitions in Wat. Set-Off, § 337; Abb. Law Dict.).

Where one agreed to pay an attorney, for professional services to be rendered, 5 per cent. of the value of certain timber, title to which was to be acquired as a result of the attorney's efforts, the claim of the attorney for compensation became, upon the performance of the services, a liquidated demand, and, as such, bore interest from the date it became due, notwithstanding the contract provided that, in the event of disagreement as to value, the owner of the timber should submit to the attorney a "give and take proposition," and thereafter refused to do so. Council v. Hixon, 76 S. E. 603, 607, 11 Ga. App. 818.

LIQUIDATED BY LITIGATION

The words "liquidated by litigation," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 57n, 30 Stat. 561, limiting the time for proof of claims liquidated by litigation, are not intended merely to preserve to litigant creditors their rights against a bankrupt estate, so as to preclude right of surety on bankrupt's bond for costs on appeal to prove a claim to recover reimbursement. In re Lyons Beet Sugar Refining Co., 192 Fed. 445, 447.

The phrase "liquidated by liquidation," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 57n, 30 Stat. 561, is not sufficiently comprehensive to include the judgment or decree of a court depriving a creditor of a voidable preference at the suit of the trustee. In re Otto F. Lange Co., 170 Fed. 114, 115.

The term "liquidated by litigation," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 57n, 30 Stat. 561, permitting proof of claims after a year if liquidated by litigation, applies to a case where the creditor has claimed to hold security, and has litigated that question and been defeated and thereafter attempts to prove as a general creditor. In re Salvator Brewing Co., 188 Fed. 522, 524.

After bankruptcy, certain proceedings were brought in the state court to set aside a conveyance of property from the bankrupt to claimants before adjudication. If the conveyance had been held good, the claims would have been satisfied from the property conveyed, which claimants sought to hold as security for their claims, in which they were unsuccessful. Held that, though such litigation did not in terms relate to the amounts due claimants, the question litigated necessarily involved a determination of the net amount for which their claims should be finally allowed, and hence such claims should be regarded as "liquidated by litigation," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1897, c. 541, § 57n, 30 Stat. 561, providing that if claims are liquidated by litigation, and final judgment therein is rendered within 30 days before or after the expiration of a year from the adjudication, they shall be proved within 60 days after the rendition of such judgment. In re Keyes, 160 Fed. 763, 764.

The term "liquidated by litigation," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, § 57n, providing that claims shall not be proved against a bankrupt estate subsequent to a year after the adjudication or if they are liquidated by litigation and the final judgment therein is rendered within 30 days before or after the expiration of such time, then within 60 days after the rendition of such judgment, means that a creditor who during the year was engaged in litigation with the bankrupt's estate concerning its liability to him is entitled to additional time, though the litigation was to determine whether a mortgage securing the creditor was invalid as a preference, which question was determined in the affirmative. Powell v. Leavitt, 150 Fed. 89, 91, 80 C. C. A. 43.

LIQUIDATED DAMAGES

Where a fire insurance loss was adjusted and the amount due agreed on, such amount was "liquidated damages." C. H. Brown Banking Co. v. Baker, 74 S. W. 454, 455, 99 Mo. App. 660 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.).

A contract for a penalty is an agreement to pay a stipulated sum in case of default, intended to coerce performance, to punish default, or to secure the payment of actual damages, while a contract for liquidated damages is a contract by which the parties in advance of breach fix the amount of damages which will result therefrom and agree on its payment. Muehlebach v. Missouri & K. I. Ry. Co., 148 S. W. 453, 456, 166 Mo. App. 305.

The term "liquidated damages" is used in reference to the breach of a contract or nonperformance of duty as expressing a fixed sum which is agreed upon between the parties as the ascertained damage which the one is to receive and the other to pay because of the default. United States v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 151 Fed. 534, 536.

Construction of contracts

There are two rules for inferring that the sum to be paid for breach of a contract is intended as liquidated damages: First, where the damages are not readily capable of ascertainment by any known rule, whether the uncertainty lies in the nature of the subject, or in the circumstances of the case; and, second, where from the agreement it is apparent that the damages have been the subject of a fair adjustment between the parties. Charleston Lumber Co. v. Friedman, 61 S. E. 815, 816, 64 W. Va. 151.

In determining whether a sum named in a contract is to be considered as a "penalty" or as "liquidated damages," the courts are aided by circumstances extraneous of the writing. When parties to a contract stipulate that in case of a violation thereof the party making the default shall pay a stipulated sum, the courts will 'take the sum so fixed as the injured party's measure of damages only when it appears that to do so will no more than compensate his loss; but, if the sum so fixed in such contract will more than compensate the innocent party, the court will regard the same as a penalty. Lee v. Carroll Normal School Co., 96 N. W. 65, 66, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 681 (citing Gillilan v. Rollins, 59 N. W. 893, 41 Neb. 540).

When damages arising from breach of contract are uncertain, and are not readily susceptible of proof, and, as stipulated, are not so disproportionate to the probable damage suffered as to appear unconscionable, the stipulation will be regarded to provide for "liquidated damages," and not a "penalty"; but if it is inserted to secure the payment of a definite sum of money, or if the actual damages are easily ascertainable, and are less than the stipulated sum, or if the principal agreement provides for the performance of several acts of different degrees of importance, and the stipulated sum is to be paid on a violation of any or all of them, and the sum will, in some instances, be too large, or it is uncertain whether the parties intended liquidated damages or a penalty, it will be treated as a "penalty." Thus, where a contract for the exchange of real estate provided that, if either of the parties should fail to comply with the conditions thereof, he should pay in forfeit to the other the sum of $500 as liquidated and agreed damages, which amount was not so disproportionate to the probable damage suffered as to appear unconscionable, it would be construed as liquidated damages, and not a penalty. Madler v. Silverstone, 104 Pac. 165, 166, 55 Wash. 159, 34 L. B. A. (N. S.) 1.

"Where an absolute sum is fixed in a contract as security against all breach or breaches of the contract without reference to the magnitude of the breaches or the number thereof and without referring to the amount of the actual damages which might ensue from such breach or breaches whether great or small, and this where there might be several breaches and each of a greater or less magnitude, and each followed by greater or less damages, such fixed sum cannot be considered as agreed or 'liquidated damages,' but must be considered as a 'penalty.'" Where a party sold his business and good will and, as a part of the same transaction, executed a written instrument in which he said that he bound himself in the sum of $500; that he would not engage in the same business at the same place for the period of five years, the sum named in the instrument was a penalty and not "liquidated damages." Heatwole v. Gorrell, 12 Pac. 135, 137, 35 Kan. 692.

When a sum which it is stipulated in a contract shall be paid for its breach is disproportionate to presumable or probable damage or to a readily ascertainable loss, the courts will treat it as a "penalty" and will rely on the principle that the precise sum was not the essence of the agreement, but was in the nature of security for performance. Hicks v. Monarch Cycle Mfg. Co., 68 N. E. 127, 128, 176 N. Y. 111 (citing Ward v. Hudson River Bldg. Co., 26 N. E. 256, 125 N. Y. 230; Curtis v. Van Bergh, 55 N. E. 398, 161 N. Y. 47; 3 Pars. Cont. (6th Ed.) 157).

A stipulation that for each day's delay beyond the time for completing a water supply works the contractor should pay $500 as "liquidated damages," and not as a penalty, was not in fact a penalty and not liquidated damages, where, by failure to complete the water supply works, the city would be deprived of the right of selling its surplus water to municipalities and other persons outside its corporate limits, and the damages which it would thereby suffer were altogether uncertain in amount and not readily susceptible of proof. Jersey City v. Flynn, 70 Atl. 506, 507, 74 N. J. Eq. 104.

While it may be stated, as a general proposition, that courts do not look upon forfeitures with favor, and will, when possible, construe provisions therefor as one for a penalty rather than as one for liquidated damages, the true rule is to give such a construction to the provision as will carry out the intent of the parties if clearly as-certainable from the contract. Turner v. Fremont, 159 Fed. 221, 225.

Where damages are not capable of being ascertained by any satisfactory rule and the language of the contract admits of the construction, the sum reserved is "liquidated damages," but where the loss may be easily determined by proof of market values, the sum reserved is a "penalty" subject to the intention of the parties as evidenced by the contract. Kellam v. Hampton (Tex.) 124 S. W. 970, 971.

Where the sum named in a contract is declared to be fixed as liquidated damages and is not clearly disproportionate to the loss that may result from a breach, and the damages are not measurable by any exact pecuniary standard, the sum designated is "liquidated damages." Burley Tobacco Soc. v. Gillaspay (Ind.) 100 N. E. 89, 91.

In determining whether a specified sum was intended and must be treated as a penalty or as liquidated damages, it is a well-established principle of construction that it will be treated and enforced as liquidated damages where it is agreed to be paid for doing or failing to do an act in respect to which the damages are uncertain and not measurable by any exact pecuniary standard. In a contract for the improvement of a city street providing for completion before October 1st, on failure to do which the contractor agreed to "pay and forfeit" to the city as "liquidated damages" the sum of $25 per day after October 1st, though the word "forfeit" ordinarily means "penalty," its meaning, like that of the words "liquidated damages," is to be determined by the connection in which it is used, and in view of the fact that it was necessary to complete such improvement in the summer months, and damages might reasonably flow from a failure to complete within the time limited, the damages will be considered liquidated damages, and not a penalty, regardless of whether the city actually suffered damages by the delay. Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. City of Wabash, 86 N. E. 1034, 1036, 43 Ind. App. 167 (quoting and adopting People v. Love, 19 Cal. 676; citing and adopting Merica v. Burget, 75 N. E. 1083, 36 Ind. App. 453; Chaude v. Shepard, 25 N. E. 858, 122 N. Y. 897; Noyes v. Phillips, 60 N. Y. 408; Ex parte Alexander, 39 Mo. App. 108; Pogue v. Kaweah Power & Water Co., 72 Pac. 144, 138 Cal. 664; Eakin v. Scott, 7 S. W. 777, 70 Tex. 442; Wibaux v. Grinnell Live-Stock Co., 22 Pac. 492, 9 Mont. 154; Mayne, Dam. [5th Ed.] 146; Pastor v. Solomon, 55 N. Y. Supp. 956, 26 Misc. Rep. 125; 3 Pars. Cont. [9th Ed.] *157; Streep v. Williams, 48 Pa. 450).

"Even if the thing to be done is called a 'penalty' or 'liquidated damages,' or given no name at all, it will be treated according to the evident intent of the parties and the subject-matter of the contract." A provision in a contract that, if defendant failed to divert from a river a certain amount of water through a certain uncompleted ditch, which it agreed to complete within a specified time, and to continuously deliver such amount of water, it would surrender to plaintiff all rights which it had acquired through deeds of rights of way or water rights executed by plaintiff to its predecessor, was in the nature of liquidated damages, and not a penalty, within Civ. Code, § 3369. Pogue v. Kaweah Power & Water Co., 72 Pac. 144, 145, 138 Cal. 664 (citing and adopting People v. Love, 19 Cal. 677).

"If there are several covenants in the contract of different degrees of importance, and the same sum is stipulated to be paid for a breach of either, the courts incline to treat the sum as a 'penalty,' and, in case of the breach of a covenant, to assess no greater damages than will compensate the obligee." Where a vendor in a contract for the sale of realty bound himself to keep the premises in repair, insure the buildings against fire, furnish an abstract within 30 days, and put a deed in escrow in the same time, a stipulation for payment of $500 if either party failed to perform his part of the contract was for a simple "penalty," and not for liquidated damages. Boulware v. Crohn, 122 Mo. App. 571, 99 S. W. 796, 800 (citing Gower v. Saltmarsh, 11 Mo. 271; Hathaway v. Lynn, 43 N. W. 956, 75 Wis. 186, 6 L. R. A. 551; Wilkinson v. Colley, 30 Atl. 286, 164 Pa. 41, 26 L. R. A. 114).

A bidder for the erection of a public building for a city, who made a deposit with the city and agreed that the amount thereof was the amount of damages which the city would sustain by failure to carry out the proposal, made the deposit liquidated damages, and not a penalty. Wheaton Building & Lumber Co. v. City of Boston, 90 N. E. 598, 601, 204 Mass. 218.

When damages arising from the breach of a contract are uncertain in their nature, and not readily susceptible of proof by the ordinary rules of evidence, and are not so disproportionate to the probable damages suffered as to appear unconscionable, and it is reasonably clear from the whole agreement that it is the intention of the parties to provide for liquidated damages and not a penalty, such a stipulation is for liquidated damages. Herberger v. H. E. Orr Co., 114 Pac. 178, 180, 62 Wash. 526.

In a contract for the purchase and sale of an article of merchandise, to be delivered in stated quantities periodically during a term of over five years, a provision that in case of breach by either party the other may be released and recover as liquidated damages a sum equal to the entire purchase price to be paid during the term, is one for a "penalty," having no reference to the actual damages, which in such case are readily ascertainable, and the amount being grossly excessive in case the contract had been performed for any considerable time before the breach. McCall Co. v. Deuchler, 174 Fed. 133, 135, 98 C. C. A. 169.

Where a contract provides for the payment of a certain sum as liquidated damages on nonperformance of a specific act which may produce damages of an uncertain character, and no language is used that such damages shall be considered only as a "penalty," the same is to be regarded as "liquidated damages." Where a street railroad, in consideration of $3,481.07 paid to it by the owner of property fronting on its line, agreed that during one-half of the period named in the company's charter the road should be maintained and operated during its entire length, and that in event of its failure to do so it would pay the property owner the sum of $3,481.07, with interest, the sum specified was not a "penalty," but "liquidated damages," which the property owner was entitled to recover on a breach by the railroad. Santa Fe St. Ry. v. Schutz, 83 S. W. 39, 44, 87 Tex. Civ. App. 14.

Where the payment of a certain sum is agreed to be made for the breach of a single stipulation in a contract, and the damages for such breach are not readily susceptible of proof, if such sum cannot be said to be in excess of what might reasonably be recovered in a suit for such damages, this sum will be held to be for "liquidated damages," and not a penalty. Gussow v. Beineson, 68 Atl. 907, 76 N. J. Law, 209.

A bond given by a bidder for a mail contract conditioned as required by the federal statute, which provides that the contractor and his sureties shall be liable for the amount of the bond as "liquidated damages to be recovered in an action of debt on said bond," is an absolute undertaking to pay the amount named therein as "liquidated damages" in case of condition broken, and not one of indemnity or security to the government against loss or damages for breach of contract, and in an action thereon the actual damages cannot be inquired into. United States v. Alcorn, 145 Fed. 995, 1001.

Where, on a contract to convey land, $300 was paid by the vendee on condition that the vendor furnish a fee-simple title, and to be returned on failure to do so, such sum, in the absence of any showing that it was disproportionate to the damages likely to result from the breach, was properly treated as "liquidated damages." Pinkney v. Weaver, 74 N. E. 714, 717, 216 Ill. 185.

The rule generally affirmed by authorities is that, where it is agreed by the parties that the sum or rate fixed in a contract shall be "liquidated damages," and the case is one in which they are at liberty to so agree, such an agreement must stand and control unless it is inconsistent with other parts of the contract or is unreasonable or unconscionable in view of the probable damages which may flow from a breach of such a contract. Where defendant milkman contracted with plaintiff for the purchase of 1,000 pounds of milk each day, which plaintiff was to be permitted to purchase from certain territory without interference by defendant, the stipulation that plaintiff should pay five cents as damages for each gallon of milk which he failed to furnish was for "liquidated damages." Mondamin Meadows Dairy Co. v. Brudl, 72 N. E. 643, 645, 163 Ind. 642.

A clause for liquidated damages must be construed as a penalty, if the damages upon a breach are capable of exact computation, or if the so-called liquidated damages are out of all proportion to possible damages; and hence, where a party agrees to pay a definite sum in damages for his failure to pay rent, such sum cannot be regarded as "liquidated damages," since, where a larger sum is to be paid in default of paying a smaller sum agreed to be paid by the same instrument, the larger sum is a "penalty," although the instrument denominates it "liquidated damages." Feinsot v. Burstein, 138 N. Y. Supp. 185, 188, 78 Misc. Rep. 259.

B. being the owner of stock in a coal company, which owned no property except a contract assigned to it by B., whereby U. agreed to sell coal land to B., and B. agreed to buy it for $34,000, payable in three installments, a tripartite agreement was made, whereby the company agreed to sell to R. and R. agreed to buy 20,000 shares of its stock for $5,000, of which $1,500 was then paid, with right to R. to rescind if representations made be found untrue; gave R. for the recited consideration of such agreement and the payment made an option to buy another 20,000 shares at 25 cents a share; recited that it was understood and agreed that the company was indebted to U. in the sum of $32,000 payable in three stated installments; that B. was thereby given by the company 35,000 shares of its stock, in consideration of which he thereby agreed to pay all its said indebtedness as it became due; that, if such sums were not so paid, said 35,000 shares should be delivered to R., who should either pay all such debts and release the company, or deliver such 35,000 shares to the company; and that B. should deliver to a bank the 50,000 shares of stock of the company owned by him, and, if he failed to pay the debts of the company as agreed, then the bank should deliver the 50,000 shares to R., and R. should become the absolute owner thereof. Held, that the provision as to the 50,000 shares was neither part of the consideration nor one for liquidated damages, but a penalty or forfeiture; it being applicable whether B. failed in the payment of one or all of the installments to U., and even though R. did not pay such indebtedness, and found that misrepresentations had been made, and on that account rescinded his contract of purchase. A provision which would be one for a penalty if involving a sum of money is technically one for a forfeiture if involving loss of chattels or security pledged. Bell v. Scranton Coal Mines Co., 110 Pac. 628, 631, 59 Wash. 659.

LIQUIDATION

See Partial Liquidation.

"Liquidation" implies a winding up of the affairs of a corporation. Assets Realization Co. v. Howard, 127 N. Y. Supp. 798, 816, 70 Misc. Rep. 651.

"Liquidation" in its general sense means "the act or operation of winding up the affairs of a firm or company, by getting in the assets, settling with its debtors and creditors, and appropriating the amount of profit or loss." In re Silkman, 105 N. Y. Supp. 872, 875, 121 App. Div. 202 (quoting 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4180).

The word "liquidation," as used in the Customs Laws, means the ascertainment of the duties due the United States, taxed at the rate prescribed by law upon the particular class of merchandise imported. United States v. Sommers, 171 Fed. 57, 63, 96 C. C. A. 299.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 57n, 30 Stat. 561, declares that claims shall not be proved against a bankrupt's estate subsequent to one year after the adjudication, or, if liquidated, by litigation, and the final judgment is rendered within 30 days before or after the expiration of such time, then within 60 days after the rendition of such judgment. Held, that the term "liquidation," as so used, was not limited to proceedings having for their object only the ascertainment of the amount due on the claim, but included as well proceedings to ascertain the kind and character as well as the amount of the claim, and hence proceedings against a bankrupt's estate to establish certain bonds as a preferred lien on the bankrupt's assets covered by mortgage given to secure the bonds were proceedings for liquidation, so that, on adverse determination, the bondholders were entitled within 60 days to file their claims on the bonds as general creditors. In re Standard Telephone & Electric Co., 186 Fed. 586, 591.

Complainant held 250 shares, of which 185 had been pledged to decedent in his lifetime as security for complainant's note to testator. The remaining 250 shares were held, 100 by defendant trustees and 150 by two other persons individually. The business being unsuccessful, it was decided to liquidate, whereupon the estate, fearing that the dividend distributable to complainant on the pledged stock would be insufficient to pay the note, proposed that if complainant would turn over his other 65 shares the note would be surrendered, with the understanding that if, in liquidation, the property of the company amounted to more than enough to pay the note and accrued interest, the balance would be turned over to complainant, which proposition was accepted in terms, after which complainant participated in the liquidation agreement, one of the clauses of which declared that after the corporation's indebtedness was paid the treasurer should divide the balance among the stockholders in proportion to their several holdings. Held, that the word "liquidation," as used in such agreement, meant the act of winding up the affairs of the company by getting in the assets, settling with its debtors and creditors, and apportioning the amount of profit or loss, and that the agreement should be construed to mean only that, if complainant's proportion of the net assets amounted to more than enough to pay the note, he should receive the balance, and not that he should receive all of the net assets above the amount necessary to pay the note. Fuller v. Perkins, 73 Atl. 372, 373, 30 R. I. 3; Jones v. Seaman, 117 N. Y. Supp. 288, 133 App. Div. 127.

The term "liquor or liquors" includes all kinds of intoxicating decoctions, whether spirituous, vinous, malt, or alcoholic. Marks v. State, 48 South. 864, 868, 159 Ala. 71, 133 Am. St. Rep. 20.

The word "liquor" and the associated word "drinks" in a statute regulating or forbidding the sale of intoxicants, mean an alcoholic beverage. Pennell v. State, 123 N. W. 115, 116, 141 Wis. 35.

"Liquor" is defined as: "(1) A liquid or fluid substance, as water, milk, blood, sap, etc. (2) A strong or active liquid of any sort specifically, an alcoholic or spirituous liquor either distilled or fermented; an intoxicating beverage especially a spirituous or distilled drink as distinguished from fermented beverages as wine and beer. (b) A strong solution of a particular substance used in the industrial arts." It is also defined as: "Any liquid or fluid substance, as water, milk, blood, sap juice and the like. (2) Especially alcoholic or spirituous fluid either distilled or fermented. A decoction, solution or tincture." Luther v. State, 120 N. W. 125, 128, 83 Neb. 455, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1148 (dissenting opinion of Letton, J.; citing Cent. Dict; Webst. Dict.).

Generally, the term "liquor" implies intoxicating liquor. Therefore proof that defendant sold "liquor" is sufficient to show, in the absence of adverse testimony, that he sold intoxicating liquor, especially where it is shown that it looked like rye whisky. Carswell v. State, 66 S. E. 488, 7 Ga. App. 198.

The measurement intended by the statute prohibiting the sale without a license of liquor in less quantities than five gallons is a measurement of the quiet liquor after it has been released from confinement and the gas, froth, or foam arising when the liquor is released from the vessel in which it is contained cannot be considered in determining the quantity of liquor. People v. Nylin, 86 N. E. 156, 158, 236 Ill. 19.

The word "liquor" is collective, its significance including the plural as well as the singular, and a conviction in a prosecution for selling alcoholic, spirituous, malt and intoxicating liquor may be supported by proof of the sale of liquor which is either alcoholic, spirituous, malt, or intoxicating in quality without proof that it possesses more than one of such qualities. Wilburn v. State, 68 S. E. 460, 461, 8 Ga. App. 28.

Acts 1909, c. 479, imposed a privilege tax for revenue on liquor dealers selling liquor under different conditions, and provided that "liquor dealers" should include every person, company, or firm selling spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors, beer, ale, or intoxicating bitters, or any medicated or adulterated cider, or any club or association handling such liquors for sale, etc. Held, that the words "liquor" and "liquor dealers" should be construed as limited to beverages and persons selling beverages containing a sufficient amount of alcohol to make them intoxicating, and that the act did not impose such tax on a vendor of soft drinks containing a small percentage of alcohol, insufficient in quantity to render the liquors intoxicating. Austin v. Shelton, 127 S. W. 446, 447, 122 Tenn. 634.

Laws 1897, p. 207, c. 312, § 2, provides that the term "liquors" as used in the act shall include all distilled or rectified spirits, wines, fermented or malt liquors. Section 31, p. 233, provides that it shall not be lawful for any person who has not paid a tax and posted the certificate provided by the act to sell liquors in any quantity in less than five wine gallons at a time. Held, that an indictment charging violation of the latter section need not allege that the liquors sold were distilled or rectified spirits, wines, fermented or malt liquors; it being sufficient to charge the offense in the language of such section. People v. Myers, 77 N. E. 1193, 185 N. Y. 558.

Under Laws 1897, p. 207, c. 312, § 2, the term "liquors," as used in that act, includes all "distilled, rectified spirits, wines, fermented or malt liquors." People v. Myers, 95 N. Y. Supp. 993, 994, 109 App. Div. 143.

Liquor Tax Laws, § 2, defines "liquor" as meaning all distilled or rectified spirits, wine, fermented or malt liquors. Cullinan v. Dwight, 100 N. Y. Supp. 896, 897, 51 Misc. Rep. 221.

Flavoring extracts, composed of from 40 to 50 per cent. alcohol, 3 per cent. flavoring principle, and water, the quantity of alcohol being no greater than is required to hold the flavoring principle in solution, which are not made, nor used, nor capable of being used, as a beverage, but which are chiefly used in flavoring soda water syrups, the quantity of extract used in each glass of the beverage being about 3 or 4 drops, are not "beverages," nor "liquors," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 3244, and the manufacturer is not subject to special tax as a rectifier or wholesale or retail dealer in liquors. Allen v. Liquid Carbonic Co., 170 Fed. 315, 317, 95 C. C. A. 11.

A sale of liquor known as "malt rose" containing between .74 per cent. and 1.18 per cent. in volume of alcohol, and intended to aid in the evasion and defeat of the liquor law, is a violation of Liquor Tax Law (Laws 1897, p. 207, c. 312) § 2, defining liquors, as used in the act, to include all distilled or rectified spirits or fermented or malt liquors. People v. Cox, 94 N. Y. Supp. 526, 527, 106 App. Div. 299; Id., 92 N. Y. Supp. 125, 45 Misc. Rep. 311.

Beer

The sale of "lager beer" which was drunk on the premises during the hours when the sale of malt liquors was prohibited was a violation of Liquor Tax Law (Laws 1897, p. 207, c. 312) § 2, defining liquors as used in the act to include all distilled or rectified spirits or fermented malt liquors. Cullinan v. McGovern, 94 N. Y. Supp. 525, 526.

LIQUOR DEALER

See Retail Liquor Dealer.

Where one sold liquor under a valid license and bond, though the application on which the license was granted was defective, he was a "liquor dealer" under the laws of Texas, with the right to sell liquor, and subject to the penalties arising from an infraction of his bond. Castellano v. Marks, 83 S. W. 729, 731, 37 Tex. Civ. App. 273.

Acts 1909, c. 479, imposed a privilege tax for revenue on liquor dealers selling liquor under different conditions, and provided that "liquor dealers" should include every person, company, or firm selling spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors, beer, ale, or intoxicating bitters, or any medicated or adulterated cider, or any club or association handling such liquors for sale, etc. Held, that the words "liquor" and "liquor dealers" should be construed as limited to beverages and persons selling beverages containing a sufficient amount of alcohol to make them intoxicating, and that the act did not impose such tax on a vendor of soft drinks containing a small percentage of alcohol, insufficient in quantity to render the liquors intoxicating. Austin v. Shelton, 127 S. W. 446, 447, 122 Tenn. 634.

Where a statute prohibited a merchant and dealer in spirituous liquors from keeping open his place of business on Sunday for the purpose of traffic and sale, a member of a firm engaged in the sale of spirituous liquors was a "dealer," within such statute, and was amenable in his individual capacity. Morris v. State, 89 S. W. 882, 883, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 562.

LIS

The phrase "lis mota" means the commencement of the controversy. Mutual Reserve Life Ins. Co. v. Jay, 109 S. W. 1116, 1118, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 165.

In an action involving plaintiff's legitimacy, testimony by a deceased kinsman of plaintiff, in a prior action, given when a controversy existed on the question, but before the present suit was brought, tending to establish plaintiff's legitimacy, was not admissible; the term "lis mota," as used in the rule requiring ex parte declarations of decedents to have been made ante litum motam to be admissible, meaning the beginning of the controversy, and not of the action. Rollins v. Wicker, 70 S. E. 934, 935, 154 N. C. 559.

LIS PENDENS

"Lis pendens" by itself does not constitute a cloud or incumbrance upon a title, and does not, of itself, furnish any ground in reason why a purchaser should not be compelled to complete his purchase. Baecht v. Hevesy, 101 N. Y. Supp. 413, 415, 115 App. Div. 509.

Though the result of a suit in one court may enter as a factor into the determination of another in a different tribunal, "lis pendens" cannot be properly pleaded on the ground of the coexistence of the suits, where the causes of action are not identical. Central Improvement & Contracting Co. v. Grasser Contracting Co., 44 South. 10, 13, 119 La. 263.

Whether the doctrine of lis pendens is based on constructive notice or on the policy of the law, forbidding parties to convey property pending litigation concerning it to the prejudice of the other party, the rule is that during the pendency of a suit neither party can alienate the property in dispute, so as to affect the rights of the other party. Maes v. Thomas (Tex.) 140 S. W. 846, 847.

"Lis pendens" denotes those principles and rules of law which define and limit the operation of the common-law maxim, "Pendentes lite nihil innovetur." Pending the suit nothing should be changed, if it has the effect to bring the subject-matter of the litigation within the control of the court; and to render the parties powerless to place it beyond the power of the final judgment. Powell v. National Bank of Commerce in Denver, 74 Pac. 536, 538, 19 Colo. App. 57 (citing Freem. Judgm. § 193).

"As a general rule an action or suit brought solely for the recovery of a money judgment or for other relief not directly affecting property will not constitute a 'lis pendens'; and, in the absence of fraud or collusion between the parties thereto, alienations are valid until the property is affixed with a judgment or execution lien, or taken into custody by an attachment, receivership, or other auxiliary proceeding." Moragne v. Doe, 39 South. 161, 162, 143 Ala. 459, 111 Am. St. Rep. 52, 5 Ann. Cas. 331.

Where no steps were taken from March 4, 1887, until September 29, 1902, by plaintiff city in the prosecution of its action to recover taxes due for 1885, and in the meantime defendant became a lender and purchaser for value in good faith, without actual notice of the pendency of the suit or the claim for taxes, and no reason for delay in prosecuting the suit was shown, a "lis pendens" did not exist in favor of the city at the time defendant's rights intervened. City of Louisville v. Burke (Ky.) 87 S. W. 269, 270.

The object of a "lis pendens" notice is to warn persons and put them on their guard in their dealings with defendants regarding the subject-matter of a pending action. First Nat. Bank of Peoria v. Farmers' & Merchants' Nat. Bank of Wabash (Ind.) 82 N. E. 1013, 1016.

"Lis pendens" is simply a rule to give effect to the rights ultimately established by the judgment. It merely precludes any change in the subject-matter to the prejudice of plaintiff during the pendency of the action, and the filing of the statutory notice is designed to effect that result, not to give constructive notice of plaintiff's claim as does the recording of a deed or mortgage.

Whatever effect actual notice of a pending action may have, the filing of a statutory notice of pendency does not constitute constructive notice of anything more than the pendency of the action, and, when the action has ceased to be pending under the law of lis pendens, the statutory notice ceases to be effectual for any purpose. Its purpose is to prevent any alienation of the subject-matter in litigation, pending the action, that could prejudice plaintiff's rights or impair or defeat any interest he should establish as against defendant in the suit, and does not constitute such notice of plaintiff's equity as would affect the conscience of a purchaser. McVay v. Tousley, 105 N. W. 932, 935, 20 S. D. 253, 129 Am. St. Rep. 927.

The doctrine "lis pendens" applies not merely to purchasers from the defendant, but also to purchasers from the plaintiff. The rule has been applied to all cases of transfer during the progress of the cause, notwithstanding the hardships of individual cases from considerations of public policy and convenience. The rule applies to a judgment creditor whose rights as an incumbrancer are acquired during the existence of the lis pendens, and also to a purchaser at a judicial sale, had in execution of a judgment in favor of a person whose interests in the property sold are affected by the lis pendens. While in England and in some of the states it has been held that lis pendens begins upon service of process or subpoena, in this state a pending suit is notice from the filing and docketing of the cause, if followed by the issuance and service of process and due prosecution of the suit. Civ. Code 1895, § 3936. The question as to when lis pendens begins, as applied to a cross-bill, depends largely on what is the extent of the lis pendens arising on the original suit, or of what the original suit gives notice to one dealing with the property affected. When a suit is filed by a plaintiff, any one taking from the defendant a conveyance of the property involved takes with notice of plaintiff's action, including ordinary or amplifying amendments which do not change the identity of the suit or affect its general purpose or object or create a new lis pendens. A purchaser, pending a suit, must anticipate that the defendant will resist the action and will file appropriate defensive matter thereto, but he is not bound to anticipate that defendant will bring a cross-action against the plaintiff, setting up some equitable right and demanding affirmative equitable relief in regard thereto. Bridger v. Exchange Bank, 56 S. E. 100, 101, 126 Ga. 821, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 463, 115 Am. St. Rep. 118 (citing Seacombe v. Steele, 61 U. S. 105, 15 L. Ed. 833; Fash v. Ravesties, 32 Ala. 451; *Berry v. As notice

A "lis pendens" is not the commencement of an action as against the defendants. It is a mere notice to outside parties that such an action is about to be or actually has been commenced. Cohen v. Biber, 108 N. Y. Supp. 249, 250, 123 App. Div. 528.

A "lis pendens" is for the purpose of giving notice of the jurisdiction or control which the court acquired over property involved in a suit pending the continuance of the action. State v. Washington Dredging & Improvement Co., 86 Pac. 936, 938, 43 Wash. 508 (adopting definition in Washington Dredging & Improvement Co. v. Kinneer, 64 Pac. 522, 24 Wash. 405).

That the transferee of corporate stock knew that suit was pending for the appointment of a receiver and dissolution of the corporation, and to require the transferor to account for property alleged to have been wrongfully appropriated, did not prevent it from purchasing the stock free from all equities between the transferor and another stockholder, or the corporation, as the doctrine of constructive notice by "lis pendens" does not apply to such property. Central Sav. Bank v. Smith, 95 Pac. 307, 311, 43 Colo. 90.

LIST

See Classified List; Tax List.

Such list, see Such.

Unfair list, see Unfair.

"List," in its common ordinary sense, means to put into a list or catalogue, register, or enroll. Strout Co. v. Gay, 72 Atl. 881, 882, 105 Me. 108, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 562.

Of witnesses

Rev. St. § 1033, requiring that in a capital case the list of the witnesses and jurors shall be delivered to the defendant at least two entire days before the trial, by "list of the witnesses" means a list containing the names of the witnesses, and necessarily this means the names which they then bear, and which identify them. A woman who has been married and divorced is not incompetent as a witness in a capital cause because she is designated on the list of witnesses furnished to the defendant in compliance with the statute by her maiden name, under which she has gone since her divorce some 10 or 12 years ago. Bird v. United States, 23 Sup. Ct. 42, 45, 187 U. S. 118, 47 L. Ed. 100.

Tax List

The phrase "list of all shares of stock," used in the statute providing persons owning shares of stock in banks shall not be required to deliver to the assessor a list thereof, but the president or other chief officer shall deliver to the assessor a list of all shares of stock held therein and the face value thereof, necessarily means "a list of all shares of stock, with the names of the owner or holders thereof, and the amount of such holdings"; and under the statute the stock is not assessable to the bank. State ex rel. Wilson v. First Nat. Bank of Carterville, 79 S. W. 943, 945, 946, 180 Mo. 717.

The terms "list," "tax list," and "delinquent tax list" are, by common usage, understood to refer to the notices or other matters with which such lists are included, and the list within Comp. St. 1905, c. 77, art. 9, § 7, requiring the publication of a delinquent list, is a part of the notice of the pendency of the suit and is a complete list of the lands against which there are delinquent taxes, while the list required by section 17 is a part of the notice of sale under the decree, and is merely a list of all the lands on which decrees have been rendered. The latter list is not the delinquent tax list within the act, nor as the term is generally understood, and the publication under section 7 precedes that under section 17. State ex rel. Cronin v. Cronin, 106 N. W. 986, 987, 75 Neb. 738.

With real estate agent

A contract to "list" real estate is not satisfied by taking a description of it by the broker, but it would at least require that some mention of the real estate should appear in some of the broker's advertisements, and, in the absence of such listing, the broker could not recover a commission provided in case of withdrawal of the land by the owner. E. A. Strout Co. v. Gay, 72 Atl. 881, 882, 105 Me. 108, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 562.

"It is probably beyond dispute that the ordinary transaction by which land is said to be 'listed' with an agent—that is, where an owner informs a real estate broker of his wish to sell property upon stated terms, and invokes his professional services in that respect—does not imply any grant of power to execute a contract for its sale." Brown v. Glipin, 90 Pac. 267, 270, 75 Kan. 778.

LITERARY INSTITUTIONS

An incorporated school is a "scientific" or "literary" association within St. 1898, § 1038, exempting from taxation property of such associations. Board of Trustees of Lawrence University v. Outagamie County, 136 N. W. 619, 620, 150 Wis. 244.

The property of a corporation organized to provide a home for working girls at a moderate cost, which has no capital stock, and which can divide none of the income or profits among the members or use it for any other than literary, educational, benevolent, charitable, or scientific purposes, is exempt from taxation under Rev. Laws, c. 12, § 5, cl. 3, exempting the property of "literary, benevolent, charitable, and scientific institutions." Franklin Square House v. City of Boston, 74 N. E. 675, 676, 188 Mass. 409.

Under Rev. St. c. 9, § 8, providing for taxation of real estate against the person in possession, a university fraternity in possession of a chapter house, built on the campus under a contract to purchase from the university, is liable for taxes assessed against the property; the fraternity not being exempt as a literary or scientific institution within section 6, par. 2. Inhabitants of Orono v. Kappa Sigma Society, 80 Atl. 831, 832, 108 Me. 320.

LITERARY PROPERTY

The owner of a common-law copyright has a perpetual right of property and the exclusive right of first general publication, and may, prior thereto, enjoy the benefit of a restricted publication without forfeiture of the right of general publication. Under Rev. St. § 4952, giving to the owner of a copyrighted book the right to copy and vend the same, protection against multiplication of copies and the incidents thereof constitute the only protection afforded by the copyright statutes to the publisher. There is a distinction between the common-law right of "literary property" commonly called common-law copyright and copyright under the statute. A copyright is an incorporeal right to print and publish, being a property in notion without corporeal, tangible substance. A copyright is property distinct from the corporeal property out of which it arises, and each of these classes of property is capable of existing and being owned and transferred especially and independent of each other. The property of an author in his intellectual production is absolute until he voluntarily parts therewith. He cannot be compelled to publish his production or to permit others to enjoy it, but he has the right to exclude all persons from its employment, and any use of the property without his consent is a violation of his right. He may permit one or more persons to use it to the exclusion of all others, and in doing so he may restrict the use which shall be made of it. He may give a copy of a manuscript to a person without parting with his literary property in it and may circulate copies among his friends for their own personal enjoyment without giving them the right of publication. Common-law copyright and statutory copyright cannot co-exist in the same composition, and when the statutory right begins the common-law right ends. Bobbs-Merrill Co. v. Straus, 147 Fed. 15, 18, 77 C. C. A. 607, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 766 (citing Ager v. Murray, 105 U. S. 126, 26 L. Ed. 942; Stephens v. Cady, 14 How. [55 U. S.] 528, 14 L. Ed. 528; *Stevens v. LITHOFONE

Where it was proved that "lithofone," composed of 70 per cent. sulphate of barytes and 30 per cent. sulphide of zinc, was known as "lithofone," whether dry or ground in oil, and by commercial designation was known as "sulphide of zinc white," it was classifiable for duty as such under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, par. 57, c. 11, 30 Stat. 154, and not as a white paint or pigment containing zinc, but not containing lead. Gabriel & Schall v. United States, 123 Fed. 296, 59 C. C. A. 352.

LITHOGRAPH

LITHOGRAPHIC PRINTS

"Lithographic prints" consist of complete articles of a character of pictures ready for use in mounting, binding or framing, and are the product of the art of lithography, which is the art of making a picture, design, or writing on stone in such a manner that ink impressions can be taken from the work of producing such impressions by a process analogous to ordinary printing. United States v. O. G. Hempstead & Son, 159 Fed. 290, 292.

Under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 400, 30 Stat. 188, relating respectively to "lithographic prints" and to "booklets," articles consisting of several post cards folded together and ready to be detached, with a paper cover pasted thereon, are covered by the former rather than the latter term. Downing & Co. v. United States, 172 Fed. 447, 448.

Calendars composed of lithographic sheets with a metal strip at each end, and having a calendar pad composed of lithographic sheets attached thereto, the lithographic prints being the most important feature of the importation, are dutiable as "lithographic prints" bound, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 400, 30 Stat. 188, rather than as printed matter (paragraph 403, 30 Stat. 189), or as manufactures of paper (paragraph 407, 30 Stat. 189). Luyties Bros. v. United States, 180 Fed. 1022, 1023.

The expression "lithographic prints," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 400, 30 Stat. 188, had no such definite, general, and uniform meaning in the wholesale trade and commerce of the United States at the time of the passage of that act as to control its construction. Knauth, Nachod & Kuhne v. United States, 155 Fed. 144, 146.

Articles composed of cardboard on which lithographic prints have been pasted, and which is cut into forms adapted to be folded into pockets to hang on walls, some of them having pincushions or calendars attached, are not dutiable as "lithographic prints," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 400, 30 Stat. 188, but as "manufactures of paper," under paragraph 407, 30 Stat. 189. Knauth, Nachod & Kuhne v. United States, 155 Fed. 144, 146.

LITIGATED

LITIGATION

See Liquidated by Litigation; Necessary Litigation; Without Litigation. Expenses of legal proceeding, see Expenses.

A proceeding to have one declared an incompetent is not a "litigation," in the ordinary sense of the term; and, in the absence of express contract for services of an unofficial stenographer in taking the testimony, the alleged incompetent is not liable therefor, except upon an implied contract. Carpenter v. Hammond, 125 N. Y. Supp. 31, 32, 68 Misc. Rep. 438.

"The purpose of all 'litigation' is to preserve and enforce rights and secure compliance with the law of the state, either statute or common." Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co.

San Diego City Charter, c. 5, art. 3, § 2, provides "that the common council shall have control of all litigation of the city, and may employ other attorneys to take charge of any such litigation, or assist the city attorney therein." Held, that the term "litigation of the city" applies to civil actions only, and that the council has no power to appoint a special prosecutor to prosecute criminal violations of ordinances, so that no liability results from such appointment. Dadmun v. City of San Diego, 99 Pac. 983, 984, 9 Cal. App. 549.

LITTORAL AND AQUATIC RIGHTS

"Littoral and aquatic rights" are simply those rights which, in default of special statutory provisions to the contrary, appertain to lands abutting upon tide-waters, to which the common-law doctrine of riparian ownership does not apply. Barataria Canning Co. v. Ott, 37 South. 121, 124, 84 Miss. 737.

Land fronting on a sound was leased, and the lessee obtained from the county board of supervisors the right to bank, plant, and cultivate oysters in the sound within the limits of the entire front of the property, and thereafter the lessor deeded the land to the lessee, reserving all "littoral and aquatic rights appurtenant to the land," and in a suit between the parties it was decided on appeal that, the lessor having had no exclusive right to the water or fish, and the grant of the supervisors having vested a property right in the lessee, the reservation was of a thing which would not otherwise have passed under the deed, and did not deprive the lessee of his exclusive right to the oysters. Held, that such decision did not bar a reformation of the deed after remand of the cause on the ground that the real intent of the agreement between the parties had been that the lessor should have the right to the oysters and oyster beds. Barataria Canning Co. v. Ott, 41 South. 378, 379, 88 Miss. 771.

LIVE—LIVING

See Then Living.

As resides

"One of the definitions given in the dictionaries of the word 'live' is to dwell, to reside, to abide." Powers v. United States, 119 Fed. 562, 565, 56 C. C. A. 123.

A witness could state in a "trustee suit" to collect taxes, in which defendant's residence was involved, that defendant lived in P. in a certain year; the word "live" not stating the ultimate fact of residence, but a fact bearing on the question of residence. Coolidge v. Taylor, 80 Atl. 1033, 1041, 85 Vt. 39.

Statement of a witness that he lived at a certain street and number in a specified city was not inconsistent with his "residence" in another county, since a person may "live" in one place, and have a legal residence in another. O'Brien v. O'Brien, 116 Pac. 692, 694, 16 Cal. App. 103.

Under Rev. Laws, c. 154, § 6, providing that the libel for divorce must be filed, heard, and determined in the county in which one of the parties "lives," a wife who has separated from her husband because of his adultery may obtain a domicile in a county other than that in which he resides, and bring a libel against him for divorce at the domicile so obtained. Clark v. Clark, 77 N. E. 702, 191 Mass. 128.

The word "lives," in Code, § 1313, providing that moneys and credits shall be listed where the owner "lives," is the equivalent of "residence." Cover v. Hatten, 113 N. W. 470, 471, 136 Iowa, 63.

The place where a person lives, within Code, § 1313, providing that moneys and credits shall be listed and assessed where the owner lives, is the place of his residence. Glotsfelty v. Brown, 126 N. W. 797, 798, 148 Iowa, 124.

As used in St. 1821, c. 60, § 27, providing that in extending execution upon real estate the officer may appoint an appraiser for the debtor, if he neglect or refuse to choose one after being duly notified by the officer, if the debtor be living in the county where the land lies, the phrase "living in the county" means actual residence at the time of the levy in the county where the land levied upon is situated. Dodge v. Farnsworth, 19 Me. 278, 279.

Death of testator or life tenants referred to Testator gave to his son and the son's wife the use of certain real estate for life, and provided that at their death the property should descend to the son's children living at the time and the issue of any child of the son then deceased. Held, that such description of the remaindermen did not mean children of the son living at the time of testator's death, but excluded children living at testator's death who did not survive the life tenants. Birdsall v. Birdsall (Iowa) 132 N. W. 809, 810, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1121.

LIVE APART

Under Ky. St. 1903, § 2117, making "living apart" without any cohabitation for five consecutive years next before the application a ground for divorce, the time elapsing since a spouse became a lunatic cannot be counted as part of the five years required by the statute, but if the parties lived apart without cohabitation for five years before one became a lunatic, and they have since continued to live apart, divorce may be granted. Andrews v. Andrews' Committee, 87 S. W. 1080, 1081, 120 Ky. 713.

LIVE IN ADULTERY

See, also, Live Together.

To constitute "living in adultery," there must be more than a single act, but there need not be a living together continuously, or for a given time, nor is it necessary for the man to abide in the same house with the woman; but the offense is committed if he at stated periods, or frequently, spends the day or night, or any considerable part of his time, with a woman, not his wife, at such times having carnal knowledge of her at will, though at other times he be domiciled with his wife. Baker v. Baker, 124 S. W. 866, 867, 136 Ky. 617.

A single act of criminal intercourse does not constitute "living in adultery or fornication." Lawson v. State, 42 S. E. 752, 116 Ga. 571 (citing McLeland v. State, 25 Ga. 477; Bish. St. Crimes, § 697).

One act, or even occasional acts, of illicit intercourse do not constitute the offense of "living together in a state of adultery or fornication, or of adultery and fornication," in violation of Pen. Code 1895, § 381. Winkles v. State, 61 S. E. 1128, 1129, 4 Ga. App. 559.

LIVE TOGETHER

See, also, Live in Adultery.

A husband and wife are "living together" when they dwell under the same roof, eat at the same table, and hold themselves out to the world and conduct themselves towards each other as husband and wife, and it is incorrect to say that they are living as husband and wife when they do not occupy the same room or have sexual intercourse. Levy v. Goldsoll (Tex.) 131 S. W. 420, 421.

The mere fact that a man took his meals at the house of a married woman did not constitute a "living together" by such man and woman, within the meaning of the statute defining the crime of adultery. Paul v. State, 90 S. W. 171, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 20.

Where defendant had sexual intercourse with prosecutrix while she was living in defendant's house as his general servant, during the illness of defendant's wife, defendant was not guilty under an indictment charging that defendant and prosecutrix "lived together and had carnal intercourse." The statute does not intend to convey the idea that a married man with a family was "living together" with a servant merely because the servant might occupy a room in the house of the master. To give the statute such construction would be to hold that, where a landlord or family slept under the same roof with the servant, this would be a "living together" with the servant. Boswell v. State, 85 S. W. 1076, 1077, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 47, 122 Am. St. Rep. 731.

Civil Code, art. 1481 providing that those who "have lived together" in open concubinage are incapable of making to each other any donation of immovables, does not mean that the parties must have dwelt or resided together. Succession of Jahraus, 88 South. 417, 418, 114 La. 456.

LIVED UPON

Where, on a trial for violating Act April 26, 1909 (Laws 1909, c. 196), punishing any person who shall knowingly live on or be supported in whole or in part by the money procured by any female through the prostitution of any other female, accused relied on the fact that the money given him by a third person was received in payment of debts or to redeem jewelry for the third person, and the third person testified that she never gave accused any money for his own use, a charge authorizing a conviction if accused received money from the third person with knowledge that the same was derived through the prostitution of another, and that he used the same for his own living or personal expenses, was erroneous, because broader than the statute, and as eliminating the defense; the phrase "lived upon" meaning to be maintained in life; to acquire a livelihood; to subsist with, on, or by, as to live on spoils. Trozzo v. People, 117 Pac. 150, 156, 51 Colo. 323.

LIVE ENGINE

An engine having no steam is called a "dead engine," and one with steam is a "live engine." Turner v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 111 Pac. 433, 83 Kan. 815.

LIVE SPRINGS

Springs occupying a space of about one-half acre in a ten-acre tract, marshy part of the year, resting right upon the brow of a little drop-off, so that there was quite a lot of water standing around in the springs, of which it looked as there might be five or six, but into which no stream led, and the water from which formed no channel or stream, though, during a part of the wet season, some of the water would flow down the hillside for a short distance and disappear in the soil, were not "live springs," but constituted nothing more than a bog occasioned by seepage of the water. Dickey v. Maddux, 93 Pac. 1090, 1091, 48 Wash. 411.

LIVE STOCK INSURANCE COMPANY

A "live stock insurance company" incorporated under Rev. St. 1895, art. 642, subd. 46, authorizing the incorporation of fire, marine, life, and live stock insurance companies, to conduct a live stock insurance company on a mutual or co-operative plan without capital stock, and to issue policies of indemnity on live stock to its members, is a live stock insurance company conducted on the mutual or co-operative plan, and is not a "mutual relief association" within article 3096, providing that nothing in the title—title 58, entitled "Incorporation of Insurance Companies"—shall apply to mutual relief associations. State v. Burgess, 100 S. W. 822, 923, 101 Tex. 524.

LIVE STOCK SANITARY COMMISSIONER

An information drawn under section 27, c. 495, p. 823, Sess. Laws 1905, relating to the inspection by the "live stock sanitary commissioner" of cattle imported from places beyond the south line of the state, which charges a want of inspection by the live stock sanitary "commission," and charges generally the want of any inspection, is not invalidated by the omission of the terminal syllable "er" from the word used to describe the official having power to make the inspection, since there is no substantial difference between a commission composed of a body of individuals having lawful warrant to perform certain acts and a commissioner having identical authority. Both terms are general characterizations without fixed legal signification and import an office with prescribed duties. State v. Asbell, 86 Pac. 457, 458, 74 Kan. 397, 121 Am. St. Rep. 345.

LIVE WIRE

The term "live wire" is used in electricity to describe a wire charged with a dangerous voltage of electricity. Potts v. Shreveport Belt Ry. Co., 84 South. 103, 110 La. 1, 98 Am. St. Rep. 452.

A "live wire" is one charged with a deadly current of electricity. City of Owensboro v. Knox's Adm'r, 76 S. W. 191, 192, 116 Ky. 451.

A "live wire" is one charged with a deadly current of electricity. Mangan's Adm'r v. Louisville Electric Light Co., 91 S. W. 703, 705, 122 Ky. 476, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 459 (quoting and adopting City of Owensboro v. Knox's Adm'r, 76 S. W. 191, 116 Ky. 451).

LIVING

The word "living," as ordinarily used in reference to legatees, without anything in the context to qualify its meaning, signifies such legatees as are living at the time of making the will. Bryant v. Flanders, 87 N. E. 574, 575, 201 Mass. 373.

Child en ventre sa mere

The term "en ventre sa mere" comes clearly within the description "a child living at the time of its father's death." State v. Atwood, 102 Pac. 295, 297, 54 Or. 526, 21 Ann. Cas. 516.

LIVING HEIRS

LIVING IN STATE OF COHABITATION AND ADULTERY

The words "living in a state of cohabitation and adultery" in Pen. Code, § 269a, as amended by Act March 21, 1911 (Laws 1911, p. 426), punishing living in a state of cohabitation and adultery, mean the living together as husband and wife; and to justify a conviction it must appear that there existed between defendants an adulterous cohabitation. People v. Breeding, 126 Pac. 179, 181, 19 Cal. App. 359.

LIVERY STABLE

As mercantile pursuit, see Mercantile.

A "livery stable" is a building where horses or vehicles are kept or let for hire; a "place where horses are groomed, fed, and hired; where vehicles are let;" a stable where horses are kept at livery and hire, and vehicles are let; a stable where horses are kept for hire, and where stabling is provided. Elliott v. Hodgson & Jackson, 65 S. E. 405, 407, 133 Ga. 209, 134 Am. St. Rep. 206 (quoting and adopting definition in Williams v. Garignes, 30 La. Ann. 1004; Stand. Dict.; and Webster, International Dict.).

A "livery stable" is ordinarily a place where horses and carriages are kept to be let for hire, and, in the ordinary conduct of the business, the horse or vehicle so let is in charge and under the control of the hirer or his representative. City of Des Moines v. Bolton, 102 N. W. 1045, 1046, 128 Iowa, 106, 5 Ann. Cas. 906.

LIVERY STABLE KEEPER

A "livery stable keeper" has been defined to be the keeper of a stable where horses or vehicles are kept or let for hire; one whose business it is to keep horses for hire or to let, or to keep, feed, or board, horses for others; one who takes horses to bait and board, and he usually keeps horses to let; the keeper of a stable where horses are groomed, fed, and hired, where vehicles are let; the keeper of a stable where horses are kept at livery and hire, and vehicles are let, where horses are kept for hire and stabling is provided. While it is not absolutely necessary for a stable keeper to exercise all the different functions mentioned in the above definitions in order to be a livery stable keeper, his business must be substantially that as indicated. Elliott v. Hodgson & Jackson, 65 S. E. 405, 407, 133 Ga. 209, 134 Am. St. Rep. 206 (quoting Abbott, Law Dict.; Anderson, Law Dict.; Black, Law Dict.; Stand. Dict.; Webster, International Dict.; Groves v. Kilgore, 72 Me. 489; Williams v. Garignes, 30 La. Ann. 1004).

A "livery stable keeper" is "one whose business it is to keep horses for hire, or to let, or to keep, feed, or board, horses for others"; one who takes horses to bait and board; and he usually keeps horses to let. It is not absolutely necessary for a livery stable keeper to exercise all of the different functions which may be sometimes performed by him in order to be a "livery stable keeper," within the meaning of the lien law, but his business must be substantially that indicated thereby. Under Civ. Code 1895, § 2810, his lien includes, not only the actual feeding of a horse placed with him, but also such charges as are directly connected with his keeping as were naturally in the line of a livery stable keeper's business, but expenses of transporting a horse by railroad to races in or out of the state, and of entering him therein, do not furnish the basis of a lien; and where a horse is left with a stableman to be boarded or kept at an agreed price, and the stableman had two or more stables in this state for the accommodation of stock, and by agreement with the owner kept the horse at one of the stables, the fact that he was not kept at one of the stables rather than at another would not defeat his lien, although, where a horse is delivered to a livery stable keeper and, under contract with the owner, is sent to races at distant points and kept in the stable of another person who is paid by the liveryman, the liveryman thereby acquires no statutory lien. Elliott v. Hodgson & Jackson, 65 S. E. 405, 407, 133 Ga. 209, 134 Am. St. Rep. 206.

An owner and keeper of a livery stable, who boarded horses by the month at so much per stall, but did not feed or care for them, is entitled to a lien as a "livery stable keeper," within Lien Law (Laws 1897, p. 533, c. 418, § 74, as amended by Laws 1899, p. 942, c. 465), giving a person keeping a livery stable or a boarding stable, or boarding animals, a lien for the care, keeping, or boarding of such animals; and the relation between the parties was not that of landlord and tenant. Selner v. Lyons, 110 N. Y. Supp. 1049, 1050.

"Livery stable keepers" are those whose business it is to care for the horses and carriages of others and to let their own horses and carriage either with or without drivers, but they are not common carriers of passengers, within the legal meaning of that term, and the rule of law which requires the highest degree of diligence of a carrier of passengers is not applicable to them. Stanley v. Steele, 60 Atl. 640, 642, 77 Conn. 688, 69 L. R. A. 561, 2 Ann. Cas. 342.

LLOYDS

The word "Lloyds" has, by use, come to be understood by the general public as synonymous with "insurance." Under General Corporation Law (Laws 1909, p. 15, c. 28 [Consol. Laws, c. 23]) § 6, providing that no corporation shall be organized with the name of "insurance" in it, except a corporation formed under the banking or the insurance law, a corporation cannot be formed under the business corporations law with the name "Lloyds" in its name, as that word has by use become synonymous with "insurance."

Barker v. Koenig, 119 N. Y. Supp. 777, 778, 135 App. Div. 16.

Ready for loading, see Ready.

Under a charter party for a vessel to carry a cargo of coal, which provided that she should "have turn in loading" and "be loaded promptly," she was entitled to be loaded promptly in view of the facilities of the port and the climatic conditions which existed at the time, and to have such facilities used to their normal capacity, not only in her own loading, but also in the loading of other vessels after her arrival while she was waiting her turn. Harding v. Cargo of 4,698 Tons of New Rivers Steam Coal, 147 Fed. 971, 973 (citing Abb. Shipp. [18th Ed.] 297).

Charter parties required the vessel in each case to load a cargo of phosphate at Port Inglis, Fla., and provided that the vessel should proceed to the Port Inglis anchorage, "or as near thereunto as she may safely get, and there load. * * * The cargo to be brought alongside and taken from alongside free of risk and expense to the vessel, any custom of the port to the contrary notwithstanding. * * * Steamer or vessel to proceed to safe anchorage at port of loading and there load." Also: "The cargo to be supplied at the average rate of not less than 400 tons per weather working day, * * * commencing 24 hours after vessel is in loading berth and is ready to receive cargo and written notice given to that effect." Vessels were obliged to load at such port some miles from shore, and the government had established there two loading buoys. Three vessels were ordered to proceed to the port at the same time, and they reached there and anchored, and gave notice that they were ready to load. Held, that the "loading berth" referred to in the charter was the "safe anchorage" spoken of in the prior clause; that, having reached such anchorage and given the required notice, the lay days commenced, and the charterer could not require the vessels to await their turn at the loading buoys before the time commenced, even though that may have been the custom of the port, nor avoid liability for demurrage because of their detention for two or three weeks beyond the time, either because they could not get to the buoys or because they could not, perhaps have been fully loaded where they lay—its duty being to load them there, so far as could be safely done, and then permit them to move further out for its completion. Constantine & Pickering S. S. Co. v. Auchincloss, 161 Fed. 843, 846, 88 C. C. A. 661.

The sum added to the net life insurance premium to meet expenses and contingencies is called "loading" the premium. United States Life Ins. Co. v. Spinks (Ky.) 96 S. W. 889, 893, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1053.

Where insurance premiums and renewal premiums were greater than the amount necessary to pay for the insurance, the excess is called "loading." Mutual Benefit Life Ins. Co. v. Commonwealth, 107 S. W. 802, 806, 128 Ky. 174.

LOAN

See Money Loaned and Invested; Sell, Barter, or Loan; Stock Loan; Temporary Loan.

Passing a loan, see Pass.

See, also, Lend; Money Lent.

From the use of the word "loan," in its ordinary signification, the law implies a promise to repay. Herlihy v. Coney, 59 Atl. 952, 953, 99 Me. 469.

Rev. St. c. 48, § 64, providing that premiums for building association loans shall consist of a percentage charged on the amount lent in addition to interest, and section 65, providing that the monthly interest shall not be at a greater rate than 6 per cent. per annum, mean by the words "loan" and "lent" the whole sum contracted for, not the sum actually advanced. Tibbetts v. Deering Loan & Building Ass'n, 72 Atl. 162, 165, 104 Me. 404.

A party advancing money to another to enable the latter to manufacture lumber on an understanding that the lumber shall be sold by the former on commission, so that the former may get back the advances, does not make a "loan," within the strict definition of the term. Murphy v. Dalton, 102 N. W. 277, 139 Mich. 79.

Where the note of a borrowing member of a building and loan association contained the words "monthly installments on said share," but no reference indicated an agreement to apply such installments on the member's loan, and the deed to secure the loan was conditioned on the payment of the "loan" and of "installments on certain shares," referring to the principal debt covered by the note both as a "loan upon 18 membership shares," the terms "loan" and "installments" were not used synonymously. Cooper v. Newton, 160 Fed. 190, 193.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 2547, provides that where any loan of goods or chattels shall be pretended to have been made to any person with whom, or those claiming under him, possession shall have remained for the space of two years without demand made and pursued by due process of law on the part of the pretended lender, or when any reservation or limitation shall be pretended to have been made of a use of property, by way of condition, etc., the transfer shall be held fraudulent, unless the loan is declared by a written instrument duly acknowledged or proved and recorded. Held, that such section had no application to a chattel placed in the hands of bailees to be stored without charge for a reasonable time without any agreement that such bailees should have the right to use the same. Woodward v. San Antonio Traction Co. (Tex.) 95 S. W. 76, 78 (citing Templeman v. Gibbs, 24 S. W. 792, 86 Tex. 359; Hunstock v. Roberts [Tex.] 65 S. W. 676).

Evidence, in an action by an ex-county treasurer against the county for commission, on the theory that a transaction by which, during his term, a judgment creditor of the county transferred the judgment to a bank, it paying him therefor, was a loan by the bank to the county and a payment of the judgment creditor by the county, so that such treasurer was entitled to commissions for receiving and disbursing the money, held sufficient to support a finding that the transaction was not a "loan," but a purchase by the bank of the judgment. Benefield v. Marion County, 95 S. W. 713, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 245.

The word "loan" is defined to mean "to deliver to another for temporary use, on condition that the thing be returned, or to deliver for temporary use, on condition that an equivalent in kind shall be returned with a compensation for its use." State v. Brown, 102 S. W. 394, 395, 83 Ark. 44, 119 Am. St. Rep. 109 (quoting and adopting definition in Webst. Dict.).

Where a bond guaranteed that the principal would return certain securities on a specified day, and contained no provision either permitting or requiring the principal to discharge his obligation by payment of money on or before the day named, which he was authorized to do by a collateral agreement, the bond was not given for the "loan or forbearance of money" within the New York usury law (1 Rev. St. [1st Ed.] pt. 2, c. 4, tit. 3, § 5), making all bonds, whereon is reserved any greater sum than 6 per cent. for the loan or forbearance of any money, void. Klein v. Title Guaranty & Surety Co., 166 Fed. 365, 368.

Though payment of money be called a "loan," it is not a loan where the money was not to be paid back at all events but the agreement was that on a certain condition it should be paid back. Teed v. Parsons, 66 N. E. 1044, 1046, 202 Ill. 455.

A corporate officer having misappropriated funds, acceptance by the directors of his notes in satisfaction of the misappropriations did not constitute a "loan," within a charter provision prohibiting "loans" of corporate funds to corporate officers or employes. Mur- phy v. Penniman, 66 Atl. 283, 287, 105 Md. 452, 121 Am. St. Rep. 588.

Deposit

The deposit of a national bank constitutes "loans" to it and confers on the depositor a mere chose in action. State v. Clement Nat. Bank, 78 Atl. 944, 950, 84 Vt. 167, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 22.

The transaction between a depositor and the bank is really a "loan" of money and not a deposit, in the strict legal sense of the term. Schippers v. Kempkes (N. J.) 67 Atl. 1042, 1048.

An ordinary deposit of money in a bank is not a "loan" of the money to the bank. Elliott v. Capital City State Bank, 103 N. W. 777, 778, 128 Iowa, 275, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1130, 111 Am. St. Rep. 198.

A "deposit" in a bank is a "loan" payable on demand, and the depositor may not, as a general rule, maintain an action for his deposit until he has first made a demand for its payment. Pratt v. Union Nat. Bank, 75 Atl. 313, 314, 79 N. J. Law, 117.

A national bank had through an employé deposited money with a savings bank, and subsequently, upon a request for more money, the national bank wrote, offering to deposit more money, but refusing to make a loan. In response, it received a certificate of deposit with a letter, asking that it be placed to the credit of the savings bank. The certificate was issued to L., the president, of the savings bank, and was by him indorsed to A., an employé of the national bank, who, in turn, indorsed it to the bank, which gave credit on its books to the savings bank for the amount of the certificate. The certificate was marked "Paid," taken up, and renewal certificates issued from time to time in the same way. After failure of the savings bank, recovery was sought on the last certificate, which was issued directly to A., and signed by the cashier of the savings bank. Held, that the transaction was a "loan" and not a "deposit," and hence did not create a preferential claim. State v. Corning State Sav. Bank, 113 N. W. 500, 503, 136 Iowa, 79.

A bank wrote to its correspondent that $30,000 worth of bonds had been allotted to it, and that it would have to take up and carry about $15,000 of old bonds, stating that it would have to finance the deal, and asked if the correspondent could help out on $10,000 for 30 or 40 days; that, if so, it would send up some paper maturing the next month; and that it did not object to any fair rate. Seven days later two certificates of $5,000 each bearing 7 per cent. interest payable in 40 and 45 days were mailed to the correspondent. Credit for the full amount was given. Held, that the transaction was a "loan," and not a deposit, and hence did create a preferential claim. State ex rel. Carroll v. Corning State Sav. Bank, 115 N. W. 937, 940, 189 Iowa, 338.

A deposit of moneys belonging to an insurance corporation in a bank, returnable on demand in accordance with certificates of deposit issued at the time, is not a "loan," within Insurance Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 28) § 36. People v. Thomas, 180 N. Y. Supp. 246, 249, 71 Misc. Rep. 839.

LOAN FOR CONSUMPTION

"A 'loan for consumption' is a transfer of personal property, such as corn or money, to be consumed by the borrower and to be returned to the lender in kind and quality." State v. Brown, 102 S. W. 394, 395, 83 Ark. 44, 119 Am. St. Rep. 109 (quoting and adopting definition in Kinne v. Kinne [N. Y.] 45 How. Prac. 61).

LOBBY

"Lobbying," which has a well-defined meaning, and signifies to address or solicit members of a legislative body for the purpose of influencing their votes, is contrary to public policy, whether or not it is carried on in such manner as to constitute a crime under the statute; and a note given for money advanced for the expenses of a person to enable him to engage in the business of lobbying will not be enforced. Le Tourneux v. Gilliss, 82 Pac. 627, 628, 1 Cal. App. 546.

A lobbyist is one who solicits members of a legislative body, in the lobby or elsewhere, with the purpose of influencing their votes, and a contract to render such services, or services which consist in part of lobbying, is void as against public policy, and an action cannot be maintained thereon. Burke v. Wood, 162 Fed. 533, 537.

LOCAL

A "local," in railroad parlance, is a train which stops at all stations and does not run with great rapidity when in motion. Hicks v. Union Pac. R. Co., 107 N. W. 798, 800, 76 Neb. 496.

The words "local and special" are frequently used interchangeably, though they do not have the same meaning; "local" signifying a belonging or confinement to a particular place and being a counter term to "general." People v. Wilcox, 86 N. E. 672, 673, 237 Ill. 421.

The word "local," which is the restrictive word used in the phrase "local improvements," is often used in reference to towns and cities so as to include the whole municipality. We speak of the "local affairs" of a town, its "local government," the rights of its inhabitants to "local option," or their liability to "local taxation," referring in each instance to the whole corporation. In the same way, if the local authorities of a town should undertake a general system of street improvement or a general system of sewerage, covering every street, we might, using the language in its ordinary meaning, speak of such work as a "local improvement"; the purpose thereof being a benefit to the local inhabitants. Crane v. City of Siloam Springs, 55 S. W. 955, 957, 67 Ark. 30.

LOCAL ACT

See Local Law.

LOCAL ACTION

Where the cause of action can arise in one place only, the action is local; but, if the cause of action is one that might have arisen anywhere, the action is transitory. Woolf v. McGaugh, 57 South. 754, 755, 175 Ala. 299.

Trespass to real property is a "local action," and the suit must be brought in the county or place where the cause of action arose. Mayor, etc., of City of Baltimore v. Meredith's Ford & Jarrettsville Turnpike Co. in Baltimore & Harford Counties, 65 Atl. 35, 86, 104 Md. 351.

Ejectment is a "local action" such as can be maintained only in the district where the land lies. Act Cong. March 3, 1887, c. 373, 24 Stat. 552, provides that no civil suit shall be brought before either of the federal courts of original jurisdiction against any person or by any original process or proceeding in any other district than that whereof he is an inhabitant, but where the jurisdiction is founded only on the fact that the action is between citizens of different states, suit shall be brought only in the district of the residence of either plaintiff or defendant. Held, that the restriction as to venue is not applicable to local actions, and hence ejectment can be brought in a federal court in the district where the land lay, though both plaintiff and defendant are foreign corporations and nonresidents of the state. Elk Garden Co. v. T. W. Thayer Co., 179 Fed. 556, 557 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4202).

By the common law an action for the recovery of damages for injuries to land is "local," and can be brought only where the land is situated; and such is the law in most of the states of the Union. In Minnesota, an action for pecuniary damages for trespass to real estate in another state is viewed, not as relating to the real estate, but only as affording a personal remedy. It is there deemed to be transitory in its nature, and not local. Peyton v. Desmond, 129 Fed. 1, 4, 63 C. C. A. 651.

A "local action" as distinguished from a transitory action is one where the principal facts on which it is founded are of a local nature, or which could have arisen only in some particular county. Perry v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 68 S. E. 1060, 1061, 153 N. C. 117.

"The distinction between local and transitory actions is as old as actions themselves, and no one has ever supposed that laws which prescribe generally where one should be sued included such suits as were local in their character, either by statute or the common law, unless it was expressly so declared. Local actions are in the nature of suits in rem, and are to be prosecuted where the thing on which they are founded is situated." A suit to enjoin a defendant from diverting, in California, the waters naturally flowing down a river having its source in that state and flowing into and through the state of Nevada, where complainant's lands are situated, he being the lowest proprietor on the river, is an action transitory in its nature, so that a court in Nevada, having acquired jurisdiction of defendant's person, had jurisdiction to try the same. Miller & Lux v. Rickey, 127 Fed. 573, 577 (citing Casey v. Adams, 102 U. S. 66, 26 L. Ed. 52).

A suit for partition is a local action within the provisions of Act March 3, 1875, c. 137, § 8, 18 Stat. 472, and one in which any question between any of the parties, plaintiffs or defendants, affecting their rights or interests in the land may be put in issue and determined; and a federal court is not without jurisdiction because questions may arise between plaintiffs who are citizens of the same state, nor will it make a realignment of parties to defeat its jurisdiction because such questions may arise, where the bill, although properly setting out the interest of each party in the premises, does not disclose any controversy which renders it necessary. German Savings & Loan Soc. v. Tull, 186 Fed. 1, 11, 69 C. C. A. 1 (citing Greeley v. Lowe, 15 Sup. Ct. 24, 155 U. S. 58, 67, 74, 39 L. Ed. 69).

"Originally the pleader was required to state truly the place where each fact asserted by him occurred, and, if issue was joined thereon, the fact was tried by a jury summoned from that neighborhood or venue. Afterwards, when jurors were no longer expected to decide issues of fact upon their own knowledge, a fictitious venue was, in some actions, permitted, and the pleader assigned to his facts, under a videlicet, the place in which he desired the trial to be held. These actions were then styled 'transitory.' But this fiction was not allowed when the cause of action was so related to a certain piece of land that it must have arisen on or near the land. Actions for such causes were styled 'local,' and triable only in the vicinity where the land lay." Defiance Fruit Co. v. Fox, 70 Atl. 460, 461, 76 N. J. Law, 482 (quoting Hill v. Nelson, 57 Atl. 411, 70 N. J. Law, 376, 378).

An action to recover only the value of ore or timber severed from land is transitory, and may be maintained wherever the trespasser can be served with summons, although plaintiff therein may be compelled to allege and prove ownership of the land from which the timber is cut, or the ore extracted; but, where the whole or any part of the damages claimed is for injury to the freehold, the action is "local" and must, if the land is located in this state, be tried, by the express provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 392, in the county where the land is situated, or, if the land is located in another state, it must be tried in the courts of that state. Ophir Silver Min. Co. v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 82 Pac. 70, 72, 147 Cal. 467, 3 Ann. Cas. 340.

Since the Missouri statutes provide for every contingency as to the bringing of actions, the rule of the common law, which regarded an action for breach of covenants of seisin and warranty as "local" and not "transitory," was completely altered, and as to such action such rule of the common law no longer obtains in Missouri; the title to real estate being only incidentally involved in such action. Coleman v. Lucksinger, 123 S. W. 441, 443, 224 Mo. 1, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 934.

LOCAL AFFECTION

A "local affection" is not a local disease within the meaning of a warranty in a policy of insurance, unless such affection has sufficiently developed to have some bearing on the general health. Cady v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 113 N. W. 967, 971, 134 Wis. 322, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 260.

LOCAL AGENT

See, also, Agent.

The term "local agent," within Rev. St. 1895, art. 1223, providing for service of writs in suits against foreign corporations on any local agent within the state, means an agent at a given place or within a definite district, and an "agent for the state" is not a local agent within the state. Western Cottage Piano & Organ Co. v. Anderson, 79 S. W. 516, 517, 97 Tex. 432.

Under Code, § 217, authorizing service of summons to be made upon a corporation by delivering a copy thereof to the president, secretary, etc., "or local agent thereof," and providing that any person receiving or collecting moneys within the state for any domestic or foreign corporation shall be deemed a local agent for the purpose of service of summons, a traveling auditor of a foreign corporation, which has ceased to do any business in the state, who is not authorized to collect or receive money, for the corporation, is not a "local agent," on whom service may

Under a statute providing that citation or other process against a foreign corporation may be served on any "local agent" of the corporation within the state, where a citation directed the officers to summon defendant foreign corporation by delivering to B., "agent," and the return rectified delivery to B., "agent," and the petition alleged that B. was defendant's agent in the state of Texas, who resided in a specified county, and on whom service could be had, the return was insufficient to show that B. was a "local agent," within the state, and the defect was not cured by the allegation in the petition; hence a judgment by default was not authorized. National Cereal Co. v. Earnest (Tex.) 87 S. W. 734.

Rev. St. 1895, art. 1223, provides that citation may be served on a foreign corporation by service on the "local agent," and article 1194, subd. 25, provides that a foreign corporation may be sued in any county where it has an agency or representative. Held, that the statute contemplates service on a person employed in forwarding the particular business for which the corporation was organized, and service on an attorney representing the defendant, and who was in the county at the time of service merely for the purpose of settling certain claims between the parties to the action, was insufficient. Bay City Iron Works v. Reeves & Co., 95 S. W. 739, 740, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 254.

One who, without compensation, procured a watchman for a foreign corporation's sawmill and sold oil belonging to it for $7, which he applied to the payment of the watchman's services, was not the agent of the corporation, within Revisal 1905, § 440, providing that service of summons on a corporation may be made upon a "local agent," and that any person receiving or collecting moneys in the state for any corporation shall be deemed a local agent. Kelly v. Lefaiver & Co., 56 S. E. 510, 511, 144 N. C. 4 (citing Moore v. Freeman's Nat. Bank, 92 N. C. 590; Copland v. American De Forest Telegraph Co., 48 S. E. 501, 136 N. C. 11).

The local operator of defendant wireless telegraph company, who is in sole charge of defendant's property at a particular place and in control of its business there, and has received messages from ships at sea for pay, though the office is not yet open for general business, is defendant's "local agent," within a code provision, authorizing summons in an action against a corporation to be served on its local agent; the proviso that any person receiving or collecting moneys in the state for any corporation shall be deemed a "local agent" for the purpose of the section not being intended to limit but to extend the meaning of the term "local agent." Copland, v. American DeForest Wireless Telegraph Co., 48 S. E. 501, 136 N. C. 11.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 1222, requiring the citation to be served on the president, etc., or upon the local agent representing the company in the county, in actions against an incorporated company, considered in view of article 1223, permitting process to be served on the president, general manager, or upon any "local agent" within the state, in suits against a foreign corporation, service upon the manager of a domestic corporation was not sufficient to sustain a default judgment against the corporation, since the term "local agent" implies a representative of a corporation appointed to transact its business and represent it in a particular locality, and it does not embrace the idea of an agent who casually happens to be in the particular territory, or one who is temporarily sent to such locality to perform some particular purpose or specified act, or to superintend the business in a general way; and while, under certain circumstances and in a certain sense, the terms "general manager" and "local agent" may convey much the same idea, they were not used in the statute as synonymous. Latham Co. v. J. M. Radford Grocery Co., 117 S. W. 909, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 510.

Findings in a default judgment that citation was served on defendant corporation by delivering a copy to the local agent of defendant, resident in a certain city, who was the representative, general manager, and local agent of the corporation, sufficiently showed that the person served was the "local agent representing such company" in the county in which suit was brought, within the meaning of Rev. St. 1895, art. 1222, relative to the service of process upon corporations. El Paso & S. W. R. Co. v. Kelly (Tex.) 83 S. W. 855, 859.

LOCAL ASSESSMENTS

See, also, Special Assessment.

A special assessment or forced contribution levied on particular property specially benefited by the maintenance of a levee system is a "local assessment." The general temporary exemption of new railroads from "taxation," as granted in article 230 of the Constitution of 1898 and in the constitutional amendment of 1904 (Laws 1904, p. 19, No. 16), includes all ad valorem district levee taxes, but not "local assessment," such as acreage and produce taxes and the mileage tax levied on railroads. Louisiana Ry. & Nav. Co. v. Madere, 50 South. 609, 610, 124 La. 635.

Special taxes voted in aid of railroads under constitutional sanction are not "local assessments," since the word "special" implies merely an additional tax over and above the general tax authorized by the Constitution. Louisiana & A. Ry. Co. v. Shaw, 46 South. 904, 905, 121 La. 997.

LOCAL AUTHORITIES

The term "local authorities," within Railroad Law (Laws 1890, c. 565) § 83 (Consol. Laws 1910, c. 49, § 53), providing that where a railroad crosses a highway at grade and the railroad company refuses, on request of the local authorities, to station a flagman there, the Supreme Court may, on application of the local authorities, order one stationed there, means the officer particularly charged with the care of the highway, who under Town Law (Consol. Laws, c. 62) § 80, as amended by Laws 1909, c. 491, § 1, is the superintendent of highways. Local Authorities of Town of Pawling v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 129 N. Y. Supp. 643, 144 App. Div. 791.

Const. Ill. 1870, art. 11, § 4, prohibits the granting of a right to construct a street railroad in a street without the consent of the "local authorities," and street railway act (2 Starr & C. Ann. St. 1896, p. 2110, c. 66, § 3) requires the consent of the "corporate authorities." Held, that the terms "local authorities" and "corporate authorities" were synonymous, and used to indicate those representatives either directly elected by the people or appointed in some mode to which the people had given their assent. Potter v. Calumet Electric St. Ry. Co., 158 Fed. 521, 527.

The Legislature having conferred upon the commissioners' courts the power to establish, change, and discontinue public highways, and to exercise general superintendence over all highways in their counties, commissioners' courts are the "local authorities" within the Constitution, from whom permission to build a street railway along the public highways of counties must be obtained. Galveston, H. & S. A. Ry. Co. v. Houston Electric Co., 122 S. W. 287, 289, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 170.

LOCAL BUSINESS

A contract by a foreign corporation for the installation of a new elevator and the repair of an old elevator is local business, within Pub. Acts 1903, p. 40, No. 34, requiring a foreign corporation doing business in the state to first record a copy of its charter or articles of incorporation. Haughton Elevator & Machine Co. v. Detroit Candy Co., 120 N. W. 18, 19, 156 Mich. 25.

LOCAL CONCERN

The formation of towns and cities, or the change of their boundaries, is not a "local concern," of which the county court has exclusive jurisdiction, under Const. 1874, art. 7, § 28, giving to such courts exclusive original jurisdiction in all matters relating to county taxes, roads, bridges, ferries, etc., and in every other case that may be necessary to the internal improvement and local concerns of the county. The local concerns over which the county court is given exclusive jurisdiction are those which relate specially to county affairs, such as public roads, bridges, ferries, and other matters of the kind mentioned in the section. City of Little Rock v. Town of North Little Rock, 79 S. W. 785, 788, 72 Ark. 195.

LOCAL COURTS

See Inferior or Local Courts.

LOCAL FREIGHT

As the term is ordinarily employed, a shipment between points on the same line of road is "local freight." Hill v. Wadley Southern Ry. Co., 57 S. E. 795, 799, 128 Ga. 705.

The term "local freight" means a train of freight cars receiving and delivering goods within a limited distance, and carrying a caboose for the accommodation of the train crew, and, incidentally, a few passengers. State v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 117 S. W. 1173, 1175, 219 Mo. 156.

The words "local freight" may refer either to shipments from one way station to another, or to freight to be carried wholly within the boundaries of a particular state. Selectmen of Clinton v. Worcester Consol. St. Ry. Co., 85 N. E. 507, 510, 199 Mass. 279 (citing Mobile & M. R. Co. v. Steiner, 61 Ala. 579; Shipper v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 47 Pa. 844).

LOCAL IMPROVEMENT

A "local improvement," within the meaning of the law, is an improvement which, by reason of its being confined to a locality, enhances the value of property situated within the particular district, as distinguished from benefits diffused by it throughout the municipality. City of Butte v. School Dist. No. 1, 74 Pac. 869, 870, 29 Mont. 336.

The term "local improvements," for which a city asserts the right to make special assessments, as applied to a street, means the improvement of the street whereby by the real property abutting or adjacent is specially benefited in its market value. A local assessment can only rest upon substantial enhancement in values, rather than upon the idea that the public may be imposing this burden upon the citizen because he is so situated that he can most promptly and conveniently perform a duty highly salutary and advantageous to the public, a doctrine which is alleged to rest upon the police power of the state. A statute authorizing a municipal corporation to assess cost of street sprinkling on abutting land in proportion to the frontage is unauthorized. Stevens v. City of Port Huron, 113 N. W. 291, 293, 149 Mich. 536, 12 Ann. Cas. 603.

A "local improvement" is a public improvement which, through its being confined to a locality, enhances the value of adjacent property, as distinguished from benefits diffused by it throughout the municipality, and though a system of sewers to relieve the congested condition of existing sewers by furnishing additional means, whereby the surface water caused by excessive rain may be carried away, may benefit all the property in a village, if the improvement will specially enhance the adjacent property, it is local and may be paid for by special assessment. Northwestern University v. Village of Wilmette, 82 N. E. 615, 617, 230 Ill. 80.

The term "local improvement" in Const. art. 9, § 9, authorizing the General Assembly to vest municipalities with power to make improvements by special assessment of contiguous property, means such improvements as are paid for by special assessment or special taxation, and the test whether an improvement is local is whether it specially benefits the property assessed and a local improvement is an improvement within and under the control of one municipality. Loeffler v. City of Chicago, 92 N. E. 583, 589, 243 Ill. 43, 20 Ann. Cas. 335.

A "local improvement" is a public improvement which, by reason of its being confined to a locality, enhances the value of adjacent property, as distinguished from an improvement which benefits the whole municipality. The term, when used without some specific designation, is not to be limited merely to street improvements and sewers, but it also includes the laying of a water main. Vreeland v. City of Tacoma, 94 Pac. 192, 193, 48 Wash. 625.

LOCAL LAW

See, also, General Law; Private Law; Special Law.

As applied to legislation, the word "local" is used as a counter term to "general," and signifies legislation relating to only a portion of the territory of a state. People v. Wilcox, 86 N. E. 672, 673, 237 Ill. 421 (citing Bouv. Law Dict.; Burrill, Law Dict.; People v. O'Brien, 88 N. Y. 193; People v. Newburgh & S. P. R. Co., 86 N. Y. 1; Ellis v. Frazier, 63 Pac. 642, 38 Or. 462, 53 L. R. A. 454).

A law is not local or special when it is general and uniform in its operation upon all in like situation. People ex rel. Johnson v. Earl, 94 Pac. 294, 302, 42 Colo. 238.

"Where a law is general and uniform throughout the state, operating alike upon all persons and localities of a class, it is not open to the objection that it is 'local or special legislation.'" Allen v. Kennard, 116 N. W. 63, 64, 81 Neb. 289 (citing State ex rel. Jones v. Graham, 19 N. W. 470, 16 Neb. 74; State v. Berka, 30 N. W. 267, 20 Neb. 375; Van Horn v. State, 64 N. W. 365, 46 Neb. 62; Livingston Loan & Building Ass'n v. Drummond, 68 N. W. 375, 49 Neb. 205).

An act entitled "An act providing for the permanent location of the seat of government and capital of the state, creating a board of capital commissioners and defining its powers and duties, authorizing the Governor to accept, for capital purposes, the proceeds of the sale of land, or donations from other sources, and declaring an emergency," is not a "local law," within Const. art. 5, § 32, providing that no special or local law shall be considered by the Legislature until notice of the intended introduction thereof shall first have been published in newspapers, etc. Coyle v. Smith, 113 Pac. 944, 948, 28 Okl. 121.

Acts 81st Leg. c. 20, § 2, providing for a state tax and authorizing a county tax for maintaining in prohibition territory a cold storage where intoxicating or nonintoxicating liquors are kept on deposit for others, is not a "local or special law," within the prohibition of Const. art. 5, §§ 56, 57. Ex parte Flake (Tex.) 149 S. W. 146, 151.

Rev. St. 1899, §§ 8278-8317c, providing for the drainage of overflowed land, applies to and governs all persons equally who come within its scope, and is not a "local law," within Const. art. 4, § 53, prohibiting local laws. State ex rel. Applegate v. Taylor, 123 S. W. 892, 916, 224 Mo. 393 (citing State v. Etchman, 88 S. W. 643, 189 Mo. 648; State ex inf. Hadley v. Standard Oil Co., 116 S. W. 902, 218 Mo. 1; Coffey v. City of Oathage, 98 S. W. 562, 200 Mo. 616).

"In order to determine whether or not a given law is general, the purpose of the act and the objects on which it is intended to operate must be considered. If these objects are distinguished from others by characteristics evincing a peculiar relation to the legislative purpose, and showing the legislation to be reasonably appropriate to the former and inappropriate to the latter, the objects will be considered, as respects such legislation to be a class by themselves, and legislation affecting such a class to be general. But if the characteristics used to distinguish the objects to which the legislation applies from other be not germane to the legislative purpose, or do not indicate some reasonable appropriateness in its application, or if objects with similar characteristics and like relation to the legislative purpose have been excluded from the operation of the law, then the classification is incomplete and faulty, and the legislation not general, but 'local and special.'" Parker-Washington Co. v. Kansas City, Kan., 85 Pac. 781, 782, 73 Kan. 722.

An act is "general," as contradistinguished from, and inconsistent with, "local," in the sense the latter term is used in Const. art. 4, § 18, providing that no private or local bill shall embrace more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title only when its operation extends to the whole state, or perhaps to the whole of some class of localities therein which the Legislature may constitutionally make upon the principle recognized and approved for the classification of cities for the purpose of general legislation. An act is "general" in the restricted sense in which the term is used in article 7, § 21, providing that no general law shall be in force until published, when it is of that character within the broad meaning of the term, and also when it is "public" in that its effects extend to the people of a locality such as a county, city, town, or village, or a collection of localities not forming a legislative class formed for some legitimate cause; the term "general" and the term "public" being considered in this respect synonymous. When an act is "general" merely because it is "public," it is, at the same time, "local," and must be tested as to its validity by section 21, art. 7, and section 18, art. 4, as well, and, if it belong to one of the prohibited classes of special legislation, it must also be tested by the constitutional restriction upon that subject. Milwaukee County v. Isenring, 85 N. W. 131, 135, 109 Wis. 9, 53 L. R. A. 685.

Where all objects which can constitutionally be included in a class are by legislation recognized by inclusion therein, such legislation will be general in the constitutional sense, and P. L. 1907, p. 365, art. 25, supplementary to the school law creating and providing for the Teachers' Retirement Fund, is not a private, local, or special law, violative of Const. art. 4, § 7, par. 11, prohibiting the passage of such laws in certain cases, because for constitutional reasons it did not compel teachers whose contracts antedated the enactment of the supplement to become members of the fund, but only those whose contracts were made after it became effective. Allen v. Board of Education of City of Passaic, 79 Atl. 101, 103, 81 N. J. Law, 135.

A law, general in its terms, applying to all persons alike throughout the state, is not a "local law" within Const. arts. 48, 49, forbidding local laws, merely because the conditions under which it can operate prevail only in certain parts of the state, and Rev. St. § 910, as amended by Acts 1902, No. 66, relating to the sale of intoxicating liquor and restricted so as to apply only to prohibition parishes, and Acts 1902, No. 107, as re-enacted by Acts 1908, No. 176, fixing the punishment for illegal sales of liquor, construed to apply only to nonprohibition parishes, are not local laws. State v. Donato, 53 South. 662, 664, 127 La. 393.

Act April 17, 1908, providing for special elections for the relocation or removal of county seats, being applicable to all the counties of the state alike, is not invalid as a special or local law, prohibited by Const. art. 5, §§ 32, 46. City of Pond Creek v. Haskell, 97 Pac. 338, 341, 21 Okl. 711.

Laws 1903, p. 9, c. 7, authorizing every city, "heretofore" incorporated under a special charter, having less than "10,000" inhabitants, to be determined by the "last preceding United States census," and having "power to make special assessments to construct sewers," to make such assessments in a specified manner, is not unconstitutional as a "local or special law," within Const. art. 3, § 27, prohibiting such laws for the incorporation of municipalities, or changing or amending their charters, etc., on the theory that the restriction of the act to cities theretofore incorporated under a special charter prevented other cities from entering the class, since the only cities under special charters are those theretofore incorporated, and since under the Constitution no other city can be especially incorporated. And the act is not "local or special" within such constitutional prohibition, on the theory that the phrase "last preceding United States census" limits the act to cities having the required population at the last census before the passage of the act, since the phrase relates to the census last preceding any date which may become material in ascertaining whether any particular city has come within the statute. And the act is not "local or special" within such constitutional prohibition, because restricted to cities, incorporated under a special charter, having 10,000 inhabitants. And the act is not "local or special" within such constitutional prohibition, because limited to cities acting under a special charter, and having the prescribed population, "having power to make special assessments to construct sewers," though a particular city is the only one which could make such assessments when the act was passed. McGarvey v. Swan, 96 Pac. 697, 701, 17 Wyo. 120.

Const. art. 11, § 2, grants to the legal voters of every city and town power to enact and amend their municipal charter, and article 4, § 1a, provides that the initiative and referendum powers reserved to the people are further reserved to legal voters of every district as to all local, special, and municipal legislation. Held that, as the words "local" and "special" mean enactments intended only to affect certain persons who operate in specified localities, an incorporated port cannot under a special election had under such powers extend its boundaries by annexing other territory without the consent of the inhabitants of the territory annexed, this being particularly true in view of L. O. L. § 3209, and Laws of 1911, p. 158, § 3, both of which provide for the annexation of new territory to municipalities and ports only with the consent of the inhabitants of the territory to be annexed. State ex rel. Anderson v. Port of Tillamook, 124 Pac. 637, 640, 62 Or. 332.

Highway Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 25) § 59a, added by Laws 1910, c. 701, providing that awards under any statute for damages to real estate by change of grade of any street, etc., shall bear interest, is a general, and not a local, law, as affecting the sufficiency of the title of the act. People ex rel. Central Trust Co. of New York v. Prendergast, 95 N. E. 715, 717, 202 N. Y. 188.

The good roads law, Rev. Codes, §§ 1049-1068, inclusive, providing for organization and government of good road districts, being general in its application, applying alike to all sections of the state where the taxpayers are willing to assume the burden of additional taxation to improve the roads within such sections and applying to all good road districts within the state, relating to all of a class, is not a local or special law within Const. art. 3, § 19, prohibiting the Legislature from passing local and special laws in certain cases. Hettinger v. Good Road Dist. No. 1 of Washington County, 113 Pac. 721, 723, 19 Idaho, 318.

A "local statute" is one which applies only to a particular locality or limited part of the state and the inhabitants of that part. But a law is not local or special that is applicable throughout the state, even though its operation in any locality is made to depend upon a local contingency, or a particular expediency to be ascertained or determined by a public vote in the locality or by petition, or adjudication of a court or other authority authorized by the act. It is, nevertheless, open to every locality when brought within its terms. Within Const. art. 4, § 23, subd. 10, forbidding the enactment of special or local laws for the assessment and collection of taxes for state, county, township, or road purposes, Act Nov. 22, 1905 (Laws 1905, p. 410), providing for the improvement of roads at the expense of the lands benefited thereby on petition of a majority of the resident landowners, etc., is general and applicable throughout the state, and is not a local statute applicable only to a particular locality or limited part of the state and the inhabitants of that part, though its operation is contingent, depending on the wish of the landowners in the vicinity of a proposed improvement and the existence of certain conditions. St. Benedict's Abbey v. Marion County, 93 Pac. 231, 233, 50 Or. 411 (citing Fouts v. Hood River, 81 Pac. 370, 46 Or. 492, 1 L. R. A. [N. S.] 483, 7 Ann. Cas. 1160; Baxter v. State, 88 Pac. 677, 49 Or. 353; Goodrich v. Winchester & D. Turnpike Co., 26 Ind. 119; Palmer v. Stumph, 29 Ind. 329; Paul v. Gloucester County, 15 Atl. 272, 50 N. J. Law, 585, 1 L. R. A. 86).

To understand the signification of the words "municipal legislation," as used in Const. art. 11, § 2, prohibiting the Legislature from amending the charters of cities and towns, the right of which is reserved to the voters thereof, and article 4, providing that the referendum may be demanded by the people, which power is reserved to the legal voters of every municipality and district as to all local, special, and municipal legislation of every character in and for their respective municipalities and districts, requires an interpretation of the term "local and special legislation," the right to formulate rules in relation to which is impliedly denied to cities and towns, on the principle that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. The qualifying words "local" and "special" are synonymous, and, in the sense in which they are used, mean any enactment that is plainly intended to affect a particular person or thing or to be in effect in some specified locality only. The words "municipality" and "district" are evidently expressions of equivalent import, for a district legally created from a designated part of the state and organized to promote the convenience of the public at large is a municipal corporation. The authority of such a corporation has been heretofore derived from an act of the legislative assembly creating it, and, as such statute is applicable to and enforceable in a part of the state only, it is a local or special law. The change in the organic law deprives the legislative assembly of all authority to enact, amend, or repeal any charter of a town, the legal voters of which reserve to themselves the exercise of all such power, except the right of repeal, and it was evidently the intention of the framers of such constitutional provision, and also the people who ratified it, to vest an incorporated city or town with authority to provide the manner of exercising the initiative and referendum powers as to amendments of a charter, which change is reasonably within the term of "municipal legislation." Acme Dairy Co. v. City of Astoria, 90 Pac. 153, 154, 49 Or. 520.

Gen. St. 1906, §§ 3772, 3775, regulating the catching of fish in rivers, creeks, bays, bayous, or other waters on the coast, are not "local or special laws," where the first provision therein covers the full territory of the state defined as on the coast of the state, while the latter applies to all the rivers of the state, and are not in violation of Const. art. 3, §§ 20, 21. Carlton v. Johnson, 55 South. 975, 976, 61 Fla. 15.

A class of laws are known in common parlance as "local option laws," relating to subjects which, such as intoxicating liquors or the running at large of cattle, may be differently regarded in different localities, and are sustained on the ground that the subject, though not embraced within the ordinary power of the municipalities to make by-laws and ordinances, is within the class of police regulations in respect to which it is proper that the local judgment should control. In re O'Brien, 75 Pac. 196, 200, 29 Mont. 530, 1 Ann. Cas. 373 (citing Cooley, Const. Lim. 146).

Law applying to class

A "local or special law," within the constitutional prohibition against the passage of such laws, is one which relates to particular persons or things of the same class. Hall v. Bell County (Tex.) 138 S. W. 178, 179 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4208; 7 Words and Phrases, p. 6577).

A "local law" applies to all persons within the territorial limits prescribed by the act, while a special law applies to particular persons or things of a class. Commissioners of Prince George's County v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 77 Atl. 483, 484, 113 Md. 179.

Classification as to population

A statute classifying counties for certain purposes and providing that the twenty-seventh class, consisting of only one county, should be classified according to the population, as shown by the federal census of 1900, whereas the method of ascertaining the population in all other counties is different, is a "local and special law." Johnson v. Gunn (Cal.) 84 Pac. 370, 371.

A statute classifying counties according to population, providing that the population of some of the counties shall be determined by the federal census of 1900, and that in other counties the population shall be determined by different modes, is not a "local or special law," in violation of Const. art. 11, § 5. Johnson v. Gunn, 84 Pac. 665, 666, 148 Cal. 745.

Act April 3, 1903 (P. L. 136), authorizing county commissioners in counties having a population of over 500,000 and less than 1,000,000 to erect a memorial hall or building in memory of the soldiers and sailors of the War of the Rebellion, is not a "local act" regulating the affairs of Allegheny county alone, but is a classification of counties according to population in order to permit expenditure of public money in a specified way. Yoho v. Allegheny County, 67 Atl. 648, 650, 218 Pa. 401 (citing Commonwealth v. Gilligan, 46 Atl. 124, 195 Pa. 504; Seabolt v. Commissioners of Northumberland County, 41 Atl. 22, 187 Pa. 318).

A law is not "local" or "special," within the constitutional inhibition against such laws regulating county and township affairs, for classifying counties and townships on the basis of population, if population makes a substantial difference in the conditions affected by the statute, and the statute, if considered as regulating county and township affairs, did not violate the constitutional inhibition for fixing a lower tax rate in counties and cities having a larger population. People ex rel. Booth v. Opel, 91 N. E. 458, 461, 244 Ill. 817.

Laws having local application

A law which has a bona fide application to the entire state as to some of its chief features is a "general" and not a "local law," as defined by Const. 1901, § 110, though it does not apply in every detail. The law is a "general" and not a "local law," notwithstanding the fact that local laws on the subject were passed at the same session and approved on the same day. State ex rel. Collman v. Pitts, 49 South. 441, 442, 160 Ala. 133, 135 Am. St. Rep. 79.

"Local law" means that code of laws which governs the affairs of a certain prescribed jurisdiction. Mather v. Cunningham, 74 Atl. 809, 813, 105 Me. 328, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 761, 18 Ann. Cas. 692.

Const. § 110, defines a "local law" as a law which applies to any political subdivision or subdivision of the state less than the whole. State ex rel. Attorney General v. Sayre, 39 South. 240, 142 Ala. 641.

Const. § 104, prohibits the Legislature from passing a special or local law in specified instances, and section 110 defines "local law" in this connection as one which applies to any subdivision or subdivisions of the state less than the whole. Sisk v. Cargile, 35 South. 114, 117, 138 Ala. 164.

The word "local," as applied to legislation, signifies legislation relating to part of the territory of a state only, while the word "special" is more appropriately applied to laws granting some special right, privilege, or immunity, or imposing some particular burden upon some portion of the people of the state less than all. People v. Wilcox, 86 N. E. 672, 673, 237 Ill. 421.

A statute compelling the parish of Orleans to erect a courthouse with its own funds is a "local law," whose enactment should have been preceded by the publication of the notice required by article 50 of the Constitution. Such a statute does not lose its character of a "local law" from the fact that it provides that the state shall contribute towards the erection of the building and be part owner thereof. Such provision adds a public side to the statute, but does not do away with the local side, as to which the inhabitants of the locality are entitled under the Constitution to be notified and to be heard. Benedict v. City of New Orleans, 39 South. 792, 796, 115 La. 645.

An act providing for the accomplishment of an object and providing means for payment therefor does not contain two subjects, and hence the provision of the Public Service Commissions law (Laws 1907, p. 889, c. 429) for payment of salaries and expenses of the commission for the First district by New York City does not constitute a local act joined with general legislation, within Const. art. 3, § 16, providing that no local act shall embrace more than one subject, etc.; such provision being a matter of apportionment, within the taxing power. Gubner v. McClellan, 115 N. Y. Supp. 755, 757, 130 App. Div. 716.

Act Feb. 25, 1905, abolishing the Watson judicial district of Desha county, and providing for the transfer of cases pending in the several courts of that district is not a "local or special act," within Const. 1874, art. 5, § 26, declaring that no "local or special act" shall be passed until the notice provided for shall have been duly published. Waterman v. Hawkins, 86 S. W. 844, 845, 75 Ark. 120.

Act Sept. 26, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 369), providing for the removal of causes from the city court of Bessemer, Jefferson county, to other courts in the county, is a "local law," within Const. § 106, requiring the publication of notice of intention to apply for the enactment of local laws. Dudley v. Fitzpatrick, 39 South. 384, 385, 143 Ala. 162 (citing Wallace v. Board of Revenue of Jefferson County, 37 South. 321, 140 Ala. 491).

A "local law" is one "which applies to any political subdivision or subdivisions of the state, less than the whole." An act to consolidate the courts of a certain state and county is a "local law." Wallace v. Board of Revenue of Jefferson County, 37 South. 321, 322, 140 Ala. 491 (quoting Const. § 110).

Gen. Acts 1907, p. 542, which amends Loc. Acts 1907, p. 285, § 11, so as to provide for the organization of grand juries for the circuit court of a designated county, is a "local law," within Const. 1901, § 110, defining a local law as one which applies to any political subdivision or subdivisions of the state less than the whole. Sellers v. State, 50 South. 340, 341, 162 Ala. 35.

Law applying to single city

A "local statute" enacted for a particular municipality, for reasons satisfactory to the Legislature, is intended to be exceptional and for the benefit of such municipality. Ex parte Young, 95 S. W. 98, 104, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 536.

A "local act" is one confined to a particular municipality or particular part of the state. Gubner v. McClellan, 115 N. Y. Supp. 755, 759, 130 App. Div. 716.

"The term 'local,' as applied to statutes, is of modern origin, and is used to designate an act which operates only within a single city, county, or other particular subdivision or place and not throughout the entire legislative jurisdiction. In this sense, the term 'local' is the antithesis of 'general.'" State ex rel. Attorney General v. Sayre, 39 South. 240, 142 Ala. 641 (citing State v. Chambers, 93 N. C. 600; Kerrigan v. Force, 68 N. Y. 381).

The act passed in 1907 (Laws 1907, p. 517) to make judges of the Montgomery city court elective by the people is a "local law," within the requirement of Const. § 106, that notice of such acts be given. State ex rel. Thomas v. Gunter, 54 South. 283, 284, 170 Ala. 165.

An act to consolidate the courts of a certain city and county, is a "local law," defined by Const. § 110, as a law which applies to any political subdivision or subdivisions of the state less than the whole. Wallace v. Board of Revenue of Jefferson County, 37 South. 321, 322, 140 Ala. 491.

Without undertaking to discriminate nicely or define with precision, it may be said that the character of a law as general or "local" depends on the character of its subject-matter. If that be of a general nature, existing throughout the state, in every county, a subject-matter in which all the citizens have a common interest, if it be a court organized under the constitution and laws within and for every county of the state, and possessing a legitimate jurisdiction over every citizen, then the laws which relate to and regulate it are laws of a general nature, and, by virtue of the prohibition referred to, must have a uniform operation throughout the state, 92 Ohio Laws, p. 683, providing for the pensioning of school-teachers in school districts in cities of the third grade of the first class, is in violation of Const. art. 2, § 26, providing that laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation throughout the state; such act at the time of its passage and taking effect being applicable only to the city of Toledo, and containing a provision in section 2 requiring the board of education to select three members of a pension committee at its first regular meeting within 30 days after the law went into effect, and making no provision in such regard for cities which might thereafter come into the class. Hibbard v. State, 64 N. E. 109, 111, 65 Ohio St. 574, 58 L. R. A. 654 (citing Kelley v. State, 6 Ohio St. 269, 271).

Charter of building and loan association

The charter of a building and loan association, obtained under the general law, is not a "local" or "private" law, within Code 1906, § 8, providing that private and local laws, not revised and brought into the Code, are not affected by its adoption; and so is not saved from the operation of section 2678, revising the usury law, and doing away with the exception thereof, whereby building and loan associations could receive more than 10 per cent. interest. Mississippi Building & Loan Ass'n v. McElveen, 56 South. 187, 189, 100 Miss. 16.

As special law

The words "local" and "special," as used in Const. art. 3, § 30, providing that no local or special laws shall be passed for the incorporation of cities and towns, are synonymous words of description. Eckerson v. City of Des Moines, 115 N. W. 177, 183, 187 Iowa, 452.

The words "local" and "special" in Const. art. 4, § 1a, reserving the initiative and referendum powers to the voters of every municipality as to all local, special, and municipal legislation, are synonymous, and mean enactments intended to affect only certain persons, or to operate in specified localities; and an act is "local" when the subject relates to a portion only of the people or their property, or when it operates only within a single city, county, or other particular division. Schubel v. Oleott, 120 Pac. 375, 378, 60 Or. 508.

The terms "local law" and "special law" are used interchangeably. Const. 1901, § 10, defines a "local law" as one applicable to any political subdivision of the state, and a "special law" as one which applies to an individual association or corporation. Montgomery City Charter (Acts 1892-93, p. 377) § 20, exempts persons procuring a liquor license from the city from paying any tax or license to the county. Act March 4, 1903 (Gen. Acts 1903, p. 184), provides for a county liquor tax, and repeals all laws, general and "special," inconsistent with itself, and Act Sept. 30, 1903 (Gen. Acts 1903, p. 298) § 4, again confers power on counties to levy a liquor tax, and provides that the statute shall not affect the exemption provided by any city charter. Held that, notwithstanding the constitutional definitions, the exemption was repealed by Act March 4, 1903 (Gen. Acts 1903, p. 184), and not revived by Act Sept. 30, 1903 (Gen. Acts 1903, p. 298) § 4. Gaston v. O'Neal, 41 South. 742, 743, 145 Ala. 484 (citing Maxwell v. State, 7 South. 824, 89 Ala. 150; Holt v. City of Birmingham, 19 South. 735, 111 Ala. 869).

LOCAL LEGISLATION

See Local Law.

LOCAL NATURE

A suit by a creditor of a railroad company to have its property, situated in different federal districts of the same state, administered for the benefit of all creditors is one of a "local nature," which, under Rev. St. § 742, may be brought in either of such districts, and the appointment of a receiver therein is an equitable attachment of all property of the defendant within the state. Horn v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 151 Fed. 626, 632.

LOCAL OFFICER

Const. art. 10, § 2, provides that city, town, and village officers whose appointment is not provided for by the Constitution shall be elected by the electors of such cities, etc., or appointed by such authorities thereof as the Legislature shall designate. No provision for election or appointment of local health officers is provided for. Public Health Law (Laws 1893, p. 1501, c. 601) § 20, as amended by Laws 1907, p. 427, c. 225, provides that the state commissioner of health shall appoint a health officer for each municipality except cities on the nomination of the local board of health, devolves certain duties upon the commissioner respecting the competency and qualifications of applicants, and provides that there shall continue to be "local" health officers in the several villages, etc. Laws 1893, p. 1502, c. 661, § 21, as amended by Laws 1907, p. 267, c. 189, provides that every local board of health shall prescribe the duties and powers of the "local health" officer. Held, that municipal health officers are local officers within the Constitution, and the provision of the statute empowering the state commissioner to appoint them and pass on their competency and qualifications was violative of the Constitution; the right of appointment resting wholly in the local authorities. Towne v. Porter, 113 N. Y. Supp. 758, 761, 128 App. Div. 717.

LOCAL OPTION ELECTION

Where the question of the sale of intoxicating liquors may be submitted to the electors of each municipality at each biennial election, the determination of the electors is the exercise of "local option." People ex rel. Sandman v. Brush, 71 N. E. 731, 733, 179 N. Y. 93.

"Local option elections" mean recurring elections, and mean recurring elections for the territory specified in Const. 1876, art. 16, § 20, as amended in 1891, providing for the submission to voters of the question whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited within prescribed limits. Ex parte Mills, 79 S. W. 555, 556, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 224.

LOCAL OPTION LAW

The term "local option" implies the grant of a right to one locality to adopt and another to decline to avail itself of a law. State ex rel. Hooyer v. Hickerson, 109 S. W. 108, 109, 130 Mo. App. 47 (citing Ex parte Handler, 75 S. W. 922, 176 Mo. 389).

"A 'local option law' is a law framed for the purpose of prohibiting, or severely restricting, the sale of intoxicating liquors, under penalties, and containing a provision that the several counties, townships, or other divisions of the state may hold elections to determine, by popular vote, whether they desire the law to be in force in their limits, and with a further provision that, in each case where such election results in favor of the adoption of the law, it shall take effect in the district so voting, but that each district rejecting it shall continue to be governed in this respect by the existing laws. * * * But the overwhelming preponderance of authority is to the effect that such a statute, if it is a complete enactment in itself, requiring nothing further to give it validity, and depending upon the popular vote for nothing but a determination of the territorial limits of its operation, is a valid and constitutional exertion of the legislative power." State ex rel. Crothers v. Barber, 101 N. W. 1078, 1081, 19 S. D. 1 (quoting and adopting definition in Black, Intox. Lq. § 45).

LOCAL OPTION TERRITORY

Local Option Law, Act March 23, 1907, p. 495, c. 198, § 1, provides that anti-saloon territory shall mean all the territory within the limits of any city, town, ward, ward subdivision, district, or precinct in which, through the action of the qualified electors therein, as provided in the act, the keeping and sale of intoxicating liquors is prohibited, etc. Section 2 provides for a simultaneous submission by a ward, and by a precinct within the ward, of a proposition to become anti-saloon territory. Section 7 provides that all the territory within any political subdivision which has become anti-saloon territory shall continue to be such through its entire extent, etc. Held, that the several political subdivisions enumerated are given the right to control within their own territory upon the question of prohibition, and each has the privilege of saying exclusively and conclusively that prohibition shall prevail within its limits, but not that it shall not prevail; and, where the question is submitted simultaneously in a ward, and in a precinct of the ward, and the ward votes for prohibition, and the precinct votes against it, prohibition will prevail throughout the entire ward. Schwartz v. People, 104 Pac. 92, 94, 46 Colo. 239.

Under Acts 1910, c. 190, § 30, requiring shipments of ardent spirits into local option or no-license territory to be plainly marked, showing the kind and quantity of spirits and the consignee of the package, and section 19c, defining "local option territory" as territory which, by vote under the local option law, has declared against the issuance of licenses for the sale of ardent spirits, and "no-license territory" as territory in which, under the provisions of that or some other act, no license for the sale of such spirits can be granted, a conviction cannot be sustained for failure to mark as specified a shipment into a magisterial district, where licenses may be issued under certain conditions, and which voted against local option at the last local option election, although no licenses are actually in effect. Armstead v. Commonwealth, 74 S. E. 399, 400, 113 Va. 765.

LOCAL PROPERTY

Rolling stock of a railroad company, which is one place to-day and another to-morrow, and which is continually carried along the line of the road in the actual operation, has no actual situs for the purposes of local taxation, and hence is not "local property," within the meaning of the Constitution. San Francisco & S. J. V. Ry. Co. v. City of Stockton, 84 Pac. 771, 774, 149 Cal. 83.

LOCAL ROUTE

A street railway franchise which provides for the exchange of transfers with any other company operating street railways, which shall give and receive transfers on the basis of settlement that the transfer shall be redeemed at such a proportionate part of the fare paid as the run or local route of the car on which the transfer is received bears to the sum of the runs of the local route of the cars from which the transfer is issued, and on which it is received, gives a passenger the same right to travel as to distance over the railway system to which a transfer is tendered as if he pays fare on that system, and two street railway companies operating systems under the franchise and giving and receiving transfers are each entitled to one-half of the fares earned from passengers receiving and using transfers, the words "local route" meaning the entire distance a passenger may travel on the system as if he paid fare, whether he changes cars on that system or not, and the word "sum" referring to the result of two units added so that the entire distance a passenger may travel on each system constitutes a unit or the sum which goes to make up the entire service required to be furnished on the payment of one fare. State ex rel. Linhoff v. Seattle, R. & S. Ry. Co., 114 Pac. 431, 433, 62 Wash. 544.

LOCAL STATUTE

See Local Law.

LOCALITY

See General Locality.

The word "locality" within Rev. St. 1908, § 5625, providing that a nonproducing gold, silver, lead, copper, etc., mine shall not be assessed at a greater amount per acre than is assessed per acre against the lowest producing mine in the same locality, is not synonymous with "mining district"; the term "locality" having a variable meaning, depending on particular circumstances. Foster v. Hart Consol. Min. Co., 122 Pac. 54, 55, 52 Colo. 429.

Under Cr. Code, § 563 (22 Stat. at Large, p. 128, § 7), providing that, where the county board of control designates a locality for a dispensary on 20 days' public notice, a majority of the voters of the township can prevent its location by petition to the board, a designation is sufficient without stating the exact location as to street or number of the building in which the dispensary is to be situated. A particular town is a "locality" in a township, while a street or street number is a "locality" in a town. Severance v. Murphy, 46 S. E. 35, 38, 67 S. C. 409.

In an action for value of wood burned by fire set by a railroad company's engine, instruction that the measure of damages was the value of the wood in the locality where it was, and not what it could be sold for elsewhere, was not erroneous because of the use of the word "locality," since such word would be understood by the jury to mean "place."

Hart v. Atlantic Coast Line R. R., 56 S. E. 559, 144 N. C. 91, 12 Ann. Cas. 706.

The word "locality" is a word of somewhat limited signification, but it has purely a relative meaning. By Pub. St. 1882, c. 113, §§ 43-45, the Legislature intended to give the board of railroad commissioners power to regulate the fares charged by street railway companies, whether or not fixed in accordance with restrictions imposed by municipal officers, subject to the condition that fares so established for a municipality should not be raised except by mutual agreement with such officials, and even if the fares between a city granting a location and another city in the state were not established for a "locality," within the statute, a street railway company cannot complain of the fares fixed in granting a location, when no attempt has been made to have the fares revised by the railroad commissioners. Selectmen of Clinton v. Worcester Consol. St. Ry. Co., 85 N. E. 507, 510, 199 Mass. 279.

LOCALIZED PROPERTY

Acts 1897, p. 102, c. 5, requiring railroads to file a schedule setting forth the length in miles of its railroad bed, switches, and side tracks, and the value of the whole, providing that the road of any railroad shall include side tracks, switches, etc., and that the roadbed, rolling stock, franchises, choses in action, and personal property having no actual situs shall be known as distributable property," and shall be valued separately, and that the depot buildings and other property, real, personal, and mixed, having an actual situs, shall be known as the "localized property," and shall be valued separately, divides the taxation of railroad property into "localized" and "distributable" property; and switches and industrial tracks off the main right of way, but used as a part of the general system, and for the same purposes as switch tracks on the right of way are used, must be assessed as "distributable" property, but all buildings, coal bins, round-houses, machine shops, depot buildings, and other structures located on the terminal yards must be assessed as "localized" property. Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Patterson, 122 S. W. 467, 469, 122 Tenn. 1.

LOCALLY CLOSED CIRCUIT

The term "locally closed circuit," as used in the patent by the patentee of the Thomson Patent, No. 430,328, and in prior patents, means a circuit disconnected from the main line. It refers to a circuit which does not extend over the source of energy, but pertains to the local place and no other. As used in such patent and interpreted by its use in former patents, and construed in the light of the file wrapper and contents, it must be understood in its general and ordinary sense. Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Wagner Electric Mfg. Co., 119 Fed. 178-180.

LOCATE

See Relocate.

Webster defines "locate" as "to place; to set in a particular site or position; to designate the place of." The Century Dictionary defines it as "to fix in a place; to establish in a particular spot or position; to fix the place of; to reside; to place one's self or be placed; adopt or form a fixed residence." Where a foreign corporation had no office in a county, and its loan business therein was carried on by a traveling solicitor, who sent applications to the office of the company in another state, where the notes evidencing the loan were payable, the corporation was not "located" within the county, within section 848 of Rev. St. Ariz. 1887, requiring the filing with the county recorder, of the appointment of an agent, upon whom notices and processes may be served. Industrial Building & Loan Ass'n v. Meyers-Abel Co., 95 Pac. 115, 117, 12 Ariz. 48.

As establish and fix

A petition for a highway was not objectionable, because it prayed that the court "locate and establish" a road, instead of asking to have the road "laid out"; the term "laid out" being colloquial, meaning "to plan in detail," while "to locate" is to define the limits, to establish in a particular place, and, in a road proceeding, is as comprehensive as "lay out"—the term "lay out" expressing the work to be done by the viewers in establishing on the ground the lines and angles of the road. Feagins v. Wallowa County, 123 Pac. 902, 62 Or. 186.

Const. art. 7, § 23, designates the temporary location of the seat of government, the state university, insane asylum, and penitentiary, and the last clause thereof provides that the Legislature shall not locate any other public institutions except under general laws and by vote of the people. Act Jan. 10, 1891, provides that the establishment of the Wyoming Agricultural College be located by a vote of the people, and such college was located by a vote of the people at Lander. Subsequently Act Feb. 7, 1905, was passed purporting to repeal Act Jan. 10, 1891, but it was claimed that the last law was in contravention of Const. art. 7, § 23, providing that the Legislature shall not "locate" any other public institutions, except under general laws, and by a vote of the people, in that the repeal of the act constituted an attempt to dissolve an institution created by the people by their own vote in locating it. Held, "that the institution was not, however, created or established by the people as distinct from the Legislature, either through their votes in locating it or otherwise. Nor have the people by the fundamental instrument of their state government reserved the right to themselves to establish or create public institutions. The people have reserved the power to vote upon the location of such institutions established or proposed to be established. * * * Unless, therefore, to 'locate' is to 'establish' an institution of the character of the college in question, it is erroneous to say that the people established it. * * * Examples are numerous in the books of public institutions which were established and in existence in advance of their location, or the selection of a site. They may not be in a position to conduct operations until located; but that they may constitute an existing institution, if so declared by the Legislature and provided with a governing board, is, we think, self-evident. * * * The location of an institution differs essentially from its creation." Hence the dissolution by the Legislature of the Wyoming Agricultural College was not in contravention of the Constitution, notwithstanding it was located by vote of the people. State ex rel. Wyoming Agricultural College v. Irvine, 84 Pac. 90-106, 107, 14 Wyo. 318.

Laws 1906, c. 133, creates Lincoln county, and section 3 provides that the town of Libby shall be the county seat until the county seat is designated as provided, and that for the purpose of "definitely fixing and creating" a county seat the board of county commissioners shall insert on the ballots in the general election, "for the county seat of Lincoln county ———," and the town receiving the largest number of votes shall be the county seat. Held, that the section contravened Const. art. 5, § 26, prohibiting the Legislature from passing special acts locating or changing the county seats, which was substantially adopted from Act Cong. July 30, 1896, c. 818, 24 Stat. 170, relating to the territories, construing the constitutional provision and act of Congress in view of their legislative history; "locating," as used in the statute, meaning to establish and fix a permanent county seat, and "changing" meaning the removal of an established, permanent county seat. State ex rel. Geiger v. Long, 117 Pac. 104, 105, 43 Mont. 401.

As purchase

See Purchase.

As selection of place

To "locate" is to select by fixed boundaries. Petersburg School Dist. of Nelson County v. Peterson, 103 N. W. 756, 758, 14 N. D. 344.

A deed to an electric railway company of a strip 25 feet in width and such additional width as may be required for the use of the railway at cuttings and embankments and also for side tracks and turnouts as finally located, executed in consideration of the company locating its railway on the land of the grantor, limits the grant to the necessities of the railroad as finally located and limits the grant of land for side tracks and turnouts to such as were originally constructed, and the company may not take additional land for side tracks and turnouts; the word

"locate," when referring to roads, meaning a determination and designation by those authorized to do so of the precise place where the road is to be built, or referring to the actual construction of the road. Kensington Ry. Co. of Montgomery County v. Moore, 80 Atl. 614, 615, 115 Md. 38, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1306 (5 Words and Phrases, pp. 4217, 4218, 4221).

In an action to rescind a lease for failure of defendant lessor to make certain improvements before the commencement of the term, the answer alleged the pendency of proceedings to open and establish a road, and averred that the location of the improvements was to be fixed after the road had been definitely located through the land, and convenient to the road when it was opened and ready for travel. Held that, while the term "located" as applied to a road is of uncertain significance, and may refer to the fixing of the line which the road is to occupy or to the actual construction of the road, it was meant as used in the answer to describe the act of the public officials in determining the place which the road was to occupy, and hence a finding that the improvements were to be placed after the road was located "and built" was beyond the issues. Schwartz v. Carpenter, 108 Pac. 318, 319, 157 Cal. 432.

The word "locate," as used in the treaty of September 24, 1819, with the Chippewa Nation, reserving lands for the use of the Indians to be located at and near the Grand Traverse of the F. river in such manner as the President of the United States should direct, does not mean to patent, but to have the several sections surveyed, marked out, and a map made of them showing the particular section belonging to each of the reservees. Francis v. Francis, 27 Sup. Ct. 129, 131, 203 U. S. 233, 51 L. Ed. 165 (citing Stockton v. Williams [Mich.] Walk. Ch. 120, 129).

Under the Nelson Act, allowing allotments to Indians located on the White Earth Reservation, the expression "located" includes those Indians born after the passage of the act. United States v. La Roque, 198 Fed. 645, 646, 117 C. C. A. 349.

An Indian need not have been on the reservation at the instant when the act of February 28, 1891, amending the general allotment act of February 8, 1887, was passed, in order to avail himself of the benefit of the provision of the later act giving to each Indian "located" thereon one-eighth section of land. Fairbanks v. United States, 32 Sup. Ct. 292, 296, 223 U. S. 215, 56 L. Ed. 409.

LOCATED PROPERTY

Stock in a nonresident railroad corporation, owned by a domestic railroad company, is taxable for county and municipal purposes in that county and city wherein the principal office of such corporation is fixed by its charter or by-law. Such property is "located property," in the meaning of the law of this state providing the machinery for distributing the property of railroad companies for county and municipal taxation. Greene County v. Wright, 54 S. E. 951, 953, 126 Ga. 504.

LOCATION

See Each Location; Final Location; Lode Location; Mining Location; Placer Location; Relocation.

Removal, see Remove—Removal.

As site or situation

A notice of election for the removal of a county seat is not objectionable in using the word "site" in respect to both building and offices. The word "location" is used in the statute in respect to offices, and, while it may be preferable, both words are frequently employed in the same sense, and no confusion could have resulted. Stanton v. Board of Sup'rs of Essex County, 96 N. Y. Supp. 840, 842, 48 Misc. Rep. 415.

Highway

"Location" of a highway and "alteration" of a highway do not amount to the same thing. Ford v. Erskine (Me.) 83 Atl. 455, 457.

The word "location," as used in Pol. Code, § 2689, relating to the establishment of highways, refers to proceedings designed to fix the line of the highway at a time prior to its actual construction and opening. Schwartz v. Carpenter, 108 Pac. 318, 320, 157 Cal. 432.

Railroad

Under Laws 1854-55, p. 264, c. 228, § 29, providing that in the absence of contract in relation to land through which a certain railroad may pass it shall be presumed that the land has been granted by the owner to the company, unless the owner shall apply for an assessment of the value of the land within two years next after the road has been "located," the location of the railroad is its physical location by the laying of its track. City of Hickory v. Southern Ry. Co., 40 S. E. 202, 204, 137 N. C. 189.

Under the rule that, where a railroad company, to which has been given the power to choose its particular route between designated termini, has exercised its discretion in this regard, its power of choice is exhausted, and it cannot subsequently change its "location," without express legislative authority, the authorities differ somewhat as to what will constitute a "location," within the rule, but, after the selection of the route and actual construction, they generally concur that the "location" is fixed. Brown v. Atlantic & B. Ry. Co., 55 S. E. 24, 26, 126 Ga. 248, 7 Ann. Cas. 1026 (citing Mahaska County R. Co. v. Des Moines Val. R. Co., 28 Iowa, 437; 4 Am. & Eng. Ry. Cas. 199, 200, note to Western Penn. R. Co.'s Appeal).

"Location" of a railroad, within the legal definition of the terms, is a proceeding in the exercise of the power of eminent domain, amounting to an appropriation of the particular place selected for the site of the road, as against all persons except the owner of the land, and a person who may have perfected a prior location thereon; and, as to the landowner, it gives a right to acquire his title by purchase, or the further exercise of the power of eminent domain, paramount to that of a company claiming under a subsequent location. A mere survey made by the engineers of a company, not adopted or determined upon by the corporation itself, by an act of its board of directors, as the location of its road, is not an appropriation or location giving priority of right as against third persons. A survey staked out upon the ground as a center line, a preliminary line, or an actual location, whether delineated on paper or not, if adopted by the corporation as aforesaid, is a sufficient "location." A "location," as between rival companies, need not be exact as to the width of the right of way claimed or other matters of mere detail. If the site intended to be held is substantially shown, the location is sufficient. A survey made by promoters of a railroad corporation, for the purposes, before the company is incorporated, or by an existing railroad company, for an extension of its road, before filing, in the office of the Secretary of State, a certificate of extension, as required by section 53 of chapter 54 of the Code of 1899, may be adopted as a location after incorporation or the filing of the certificate, as the case may be. If, acting in good faith and diligently prosecuting the enterprise, it professes to have undertaken the construction of its road, a railroad corporation may seize and hold, as against a rival company, by location thereon, land on any part of its proposed route, without having made a survey of its entire road. Though not the only mode of adopting a survey, so as to make it a location, the filing of a map of it in the office of the Secretary of State, by order of the board of directors of the company, is prima facie proof of such adoption. The mere filing of such plat in such office, without proof that it was authorized by the corporation, is not evidence of an adoption of the survey shown by it. A location can be made only by act of the corporation through its board of directors, but acts done by agents under the orders of the board of directors, for the purpose of claiming and holding a location designated by the board as such, are evidence of intent on the part of the board of directors to claim and hold such location. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Deepwater Ry. Co., 50 S. E. 890, 894, 57 W. Va. 641.

LOCATOR

See Original Locator; Relocator.

LOCK

See Foot-Lock.

In an action against a railroad company to recover for killing stock, an instruction that plaintiff could not recover if he had failed to "lock" the gate leading to the right of way was erroneous, since the only obligation of plaintiff was to secure the gate by the usual means, and the word "lock" implying an obligation to lock the gate with a key. Brownfield v. Union Pac. R. Co., 104 N. W. 876, 877, 74 Neb. 440.

"A 'lock' is almost invariably used in connection with a canal, and forms part of it. It cannot exist except in connection with a canal or some equivalent situation." Winnebago Paper Mills v. Kimberly-Clark Co., 120 N. W. 411, 413, 138 Wis. 425.

LOCKED STOREROOM

"Locked storeroom," as used in an insurance policy covering goods in a locked storeroom provided for the exclusive use of the assured by the landlord in the same house, does not include a separate laundry, under lock and key, in the basement of a flat house, set aside for the use of an occupant of one of the flats used by him for laundry purposes, cooking, storing of vegetables, and wherein he stored trunks packed with winter clothing. Michaels v. Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York, 105 S. W. 783, 784, 128 Mo. App. 18.

LOCKOUT

An employer's discharge of employes about to enter upon a strike, done before they can strike, is commonly called a "lock-out." Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Gee, 140 Fed. 153.

"A 'lockout' is a cessation of the furnishing of work to employes in an effort to get for the employer more desirable terms." Iron Molders' Union No. 125 of Milwaukee, Wis., v. Allis-Chalmers Co., 186 Fed. 45, 52, 91 C. C. A. 631, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 315.

LOCOMOTIVE

Operating locomotive, see Operate.

Code 1907, § 5473, providing that the engineer having the control of the running of a locomotive on any railroad shall give specific signals in designated situations, does not apply to a street or interurban railroad operated by electric power; for a street car, in its popular sense, is not a "locomotive." Birmingham Ry., Light & Power Co. v. Green, 58 South. 801, 4 Ala. App. 417.

Rev. St. 1899, § 1166, provides that when any stock shall go on a railroad right of way at a place where the road is not fenced, and the stock is frightened by any locomotive or train and injured, the company shall be liable; and section 4160 provides that words and phrases shall be taken in their plain and usual sense. Held, that a "speeder"—a contrivance similar to a hand car, save that it is operated by a gasoline engine—is not a "locomotive," within the statute, and a railroad is not liable for injuries to stock frightened thereby. Henson v. Williamsville, G. & St. L. Ry. Co., 85 S. W. 597, 598, 110 Mo. App. 585.

Rev. Laws, c. 106, § 71, cl. 3, declaring that a master shall be liable for injuries to a servant caused by the negligence of a person in his employ, who is in charge of an engine or train on a railroad, extends to a manufacturing plant which operates a system of railroad tracks in its yard in connection with a commercial railroad, and an engine and cars operated on the tracks constitute a "locomotive and train on a railroad." Hines v. Stanley G. I. Elec. Mfg. Co., 85 N. E. 851, 852, 199 Mass. 522.

A whirley, derrick, or locomotive crane built upon car trucks, and equipped with a boiler and engine furnishing the power to operate the crane, and to move the machine about upon the railroad tracks in the vicinity where it is being operated by a railway company for the purpose of unloading heavy materials to be used in the construction of docks, and not employed by the railway company in its business as a common carrier in moving state traffic, is not, while being so operated, a "locomotive, car, tender, or similar vehicle used in moving state traffic," required by sections 8950 and 8952 of the General Code to be equipped with an automatic coupler and provided with drawbars of standard height. Where a railway company, as a common carrier, has deposited on tracks built upon a partly constructed dock, cars loaded with materials to be used by it in the further construction of such dock, the use of this machine to shift these loaded cars a short distance to meet the needs and convenience of the employes engaged in unloading the same, does not bring the machine, during the time it is so employed, within the provision of these sections. Lake Shore & M. S. Ry. Co. v. Benson, 97 N. E. 417, 419, 85 Ohio St. 215, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 945.

The term "locomotive engine" has a well-known significance, and is used generally for an engine to draw a train of trucks or cars along a permanent or temporary set of rails. There is also a well-known class of engines, such as traction engines, which, though they are capable of being moved from place to place, are never spoken of as locomotive engines. A pile driver, consisting of a steam engine placed on a flat car at one end and a driver used in raising the hammer at the other end, all forming one machine, capable of self-propulsion by means of a sprocket wheel on the axle under the boiler, connected by a chain with the engine, the chain being removed when driving a pile, is not a "locomotive engine," within Burns' Rev. St. 1901, § 7083, subd. 4, providing that every railroad, etc., shall be liable for injuries suffered by an employé, and caused by the negligence of any other employé having charge of any "signal, telegraph office, switch yard, shop, round-house, locomotive engine, or train upon a railway." Jarvis v. Hitch, 67 N. E. 1057, 1059, 161 Ind. 217.

Ky. St. § 786, relating to "railroads," requiring every company to provide every locomotive engine on its road with a bell and steam whistle, and to ring the one and sound the other outside cities, at a grade crossing of its road with a highway, in view of section 842a, subsec. 1, providing that all interurban electric companies authorized to construct a railroad 10 miles long shall be under the same duties, so far as practicable, as railroad corporations, requires such an interurban electric to sound the gong and electric whistle of its motors at such crossings; any engine used in producing motion, whether by steam or other power, being a locomotive engine, within the statute; and the gong and electric whistle, being but substitutes for the bell and steam whistle required by the statute. Commonwealth v. Louisville & E. R. Co., 133 S. W. 230, 231, 141 Ky. 533.

An inspection car, operated by a steam engine placed in the center thereof, and designed to run from place to place for use by the officers of the railroad in making inspections, is a locomotive engine within a city ordinance limiting the speed of engines, and requiring the giving of signals, and within Rev. St. 1899, § 1102, requiring the giving of signals at crossings, though the term "locomotive engine" usually signifies a steam engine used to draw a car or train of cars along a railroad. Mudd v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 124 S. W. 59, 61, 146 Mo. App. 388.

By the words "locomotive engine or train upon a railroad" must be understood a railroad and locomotive engine and trains operated and run, or originally intended to be operated and run, in some manner and to some extent by steam. Employers' Liability Act March 4, 1893, p. 295, c. 130, § 1 (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7083), providing that every railroad or other corporation shall be liable for damages for personal injuries suffered by an employé, where the injury was caused by the negligence of any employé having charge of any signal, telegraph office, "locomotive engine, or train upon a railroad," does not apply to employes operating electric cars; such a car not being a "locomotive engine" or a "train upon a railroad," within the meaning of the statute. Indianapolis & G. Rapid Transit Co. v. Andia, 72 N. E. 145, 150, 33 Ind. App. 625.

LODE

See Known Lode or Vein; Mineral Lode.

As any mineral matter

A "lode," within the meaning of the federal statute making the discovery of a vein or "lode" a prerequisite to the location of a mining claim, is whatever the miner could follow and find ore. A valid location of a mining claim may be made whenever the prospector has discovered such indications of mineral that he is willing to spend his time and money in following with the expectation of finding ore, and a valid location may be made of a ledge deep in the ground and appearing at the surface, not in the shape of ore, but in vein matter only. Columbia Copper Min. Co. v. Duchess Mining, Milling & Smelting Co., 79 Pac. 385, 388, 13 Wyo. 244 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Lindley, Mines [2d Ed.] p. 610).

Defined boundaries required

"A 'vein' or 'lode' is mineral-bearing rock or other earthy matter in place in a fissure in rock, so that its boundaries are sharply defined by rocky walls in place." Webb v. American Asphaltum Mining Co., 157 Fed. 203, 204, 84 C. C. A. 651.

A "lode" is a zone or belt of mineralized rock, lying within boundaries clearly separating it from the neighboring rock. Ambergris Min. Co. v. Day, 85 Pac. 109, 112, 114, 12 Idaho, 108 (quoting and adopting definition in Eureka Consol. Min. Co. v. Richmond Min. Co., 8 Fed. Cas. 819, and citing definitions quoted in 5 Words & Phrases, p. 4423).

A vein or "lode," within Rev. St. U. S. § 2333, providing that, where an application for a patent for a placer claim does not include an application for a known vein or lode within its boundaries, the application shall be construed as a declaration that the claimant of the placer claim has no right of possession of the vein or lode claim, but that, where the existence of a vein or lode claim is not known, a patent for the placer claim shall convey all valuable mineral and other deposits within the boundaries thereof, is a body of mineral or mineral-bearing rock within defined boundaries in the general mass of the mountain, and that a "known vein or lode" is one clearly ascertained, and of such extent as to render the land more valuable on that account and justify its exploitation and development. Noyes v. Clifford, 94 Pac. 842, 847, 87 Mont. 138.

Veins or "lodes" are lines or aggregations of metal imbedded in quartz or other rock in place, consisting of a strip of mineral-bearing rock within defined boundaries in the general mass of the mountain, which must be continuous and without interruption, bounded by country rock mineralized to no greater extent than the general condition of the vicinity. Rock or matter of any kind, in order to constitute a vein or "lode," within the meaning of the statute, must be metaliferous and contain such mineral value as will distinguish it from the country rock, especially where no well-defined walls appear. What values the filling or material of a fissure should contain to constitute it a vein, within the meaning of the act of Congress, must necessarily depend upon the characteristics of the district or country in which the vein or lode, in any particular instance claimed to exist, is located, and upon the character, as to boundaries, of the vein itself. Values, therefore, of the filling of the vein must be considered with special reference to the district where the vein or lode is found. In the absence of defined walls and of mineralization appreciably greater than that contained in the general mass of the mountain, broken, stained, and fissured material, or crushed and brecciated matter, characteristic of the district, cannot be held to constitute a vein or "lode," under the statute. In such case the limits of fracturing do not constitute the limits of the vein, and even if there be found an occasional vug or fragment of ore, yet where it is disconnected from any ore body and so intermingled with the surrounding country rock that it cannot be regarded as continuous, it does not mark the line of the vein or "lode," within the meaning of the law. Grand Central Min. Co. v. Mammoth Min. Co., 83 Pac. 648, 676, 677, 678, 679, 29 Utah, 490.

Placer distinguished

A "lode" is a solid vein of metal, while a "placer" is earth, sand, or gravel containing valuable mineral in particles. A mining lode is a totally different thing from a placer mine, and not a mere state or condition of such mine. They are two distinct things, and not two different states of the same thing. McCarter v. Sooy Oyster Co., 75 Atl. 211, 215, 78 N. J. Law, 394 (quoting and adopting definition in Webst. Dict.).

LODE CLAIM

Laws 1903, p. 300, entitled "An act to regulate the construction, equipment and operation of metalliferous mines, * * * providing penalties for violation thereof, * * *" provides by section 18 (Rev. St. 1908, § 4297) "that all abandoned mine shafts, pits or other excavations endangering the life of man or beast shall be securely covered or fenced." The complaint in an action against the owner of an unused mining shaft for damages for the death of plaintiffs' infant son, resulting from the alleged negligence of the owner in failing to cover or fence the shaft, averred that the shaft was abandoned, that it belonged to the defendant, that the defendant was a corporation existing under the laws of this state and engaged in mining gold and other precious metals, and that the shaft was located upon mining property known as the Australia lode mining claim belonging to the defendant. Held that, while the act applied only to mines yielding metals, the term "lode claim" meant a mining claim containing a vein of metallic ore, and hence that the complaint sufficiently averred that the shaft was upon a metalliferous mine. Richardson v. El Paso Consol. Gold Mining Co., 118 Pac. 982, 985, 51 Colo. 440.

LODE LOCATION

A "lode location" is a location of mineral-bearing rock in place in a fissure in rock in the manner prescribed by the act of Congress. Webb v. American Asphaltum Mining Co., 157 Fed. 203, 204, 84 C. C. A. 651.

"A valid 'lode mining location' must be open, unoccupied, and unappropriated public domain." Hoban v. Boyer, 85 Pac. 837, 838, 37 Colo. 183.

LODGE

LODGER

See, also, Guest.

Ordinarily the landlord supplies a "lodger" with furnished rooms, the care and occupation of which the landlord has, the lodger merely having the use of rooms without the exclusive possession, while the tenant has exclusive possession. Mathews v. Livingston, 85 Atl. 529, 531, 86 Conn. 263.

One who is in the possession of apartments by virtue of a formal lease in writing, by the terms of which the absolute right of use and occupation is given to the lessee for the purpose of a dwelling for himself and family, the lessor having no right to enter except for the purpose of making repairs or alterations, and in which the lessee is designated as "tenant" and the lessor as "landlord," is not a "lodger," within the intent of Laws 1899, p. 834, c. 380, giving a lien to a lodging house keeper on the baggage and other property brought upon the premises by a lodger. Shearman v. Iroquois Hotel & Apartment Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 365, 366, 42 Misc. Rep. 217.

LOGS AND BOX MATERIALS

Blocks of wood from 6 to 15 inches in diameter and 38 to 42 inches long, sawed from round logs in their natural state, are not classified as "logs and box materials" by the 110 commodities act (Laws 1907, p. 209); and a contract for their transportation, which describes them as cordwood, at the rate fixed for cordwood, is binding on the shipper and carrier; and the mere fact that the consignee or subsequent buyer may manufacture the blocks into barrel heads does not justify the carrier in reclassifying them as logs and box material, and demanding a higher rate as a condition precedent to a delivery. Southern Ry. Co. v. Lowe, 54 South. 51, 170 Ala. 593.

LOGS AND OTHER TIMBER PRODUCTS

LOGS AND ROUND UNMANUFACTURED TIMBER

Pulp wood subjected to the rossing process, by which the bark and excrescences are mechanically removed, in order to prepare it for use, is not, by reason of this treatment, to be excluded from the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 699, for "logs and round unmanufactured timber," including pulp woods, * * * not specially provided for." United States v. Pierce, 140 Fed. 962, 963.

LOGS AND TIMBER

Under Rev. St. 1878, § 3330, as amended by Laws 1879, c. 187, § 1, giving a lien on "logs and timber" to any person furnishing supplies to those engaged in getting out logs and timber, the word "logs" clearly means the stem or trunks of trees cut into convenient lengths for the purpose of being afterwards manufactured into timber of various kinds, and does not include manufactured lumber of any kind nor timber which is squared or otherwise shaped for use without further change in form, and the word "timber" was clearly intended to include the same stems or trunks of trees when cut and shaped for use in the erection of buildings or other structures, and not to be manufactured into lumber, within the meaning of the word "lumber." Railroad ties are usually made from the stems of small trees and shaped for use in the construction of a railroad track, and are clearly "timber," within the meaning of the word as used in the statute. Kollock v. Parcher, 9 N. W. 67, 69, 52 Wis. 393.

LOGS OF WOOD

Sandalwood in pieces of varying sizes, several feet long and several inches thick, to which nothing has been done beyond removing the bark and sawing the wood into lengths convenient for transportation, is not dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 198, 30 Stat. 167, as "wood, unmanufactured, not specially provided for," but is free of duty, under the provision in paragraph 699 of said act (section 2, Free List, 30 Stat. 202, for "logs of wood." George Lueders & Co. v. United States, 131 Fed. 655.

LOGGING RAILROAD

"Logrolling" consists in framing a bill with numerous separate or independent provisions, none of which would pass upon its own merits, but each of which is made attractive enough to command a certain number of votes, which, being united, are sufficient to pass the bill. People v. Sullivan, 65 N. E. 989, 996, 173 N. Y. 122, 63 L. R. A. 353, 93 Am. St. Rep. 582.

What is commonly known as "logrolling" is passing through a measure, not on its own merits, by combining it with other measures, each of which has a certain strength, and thus pulling them through by virtue of their combined strength. Christie v. Miller, 57 S. E. 697, 698, 128 Ga. 412 (quoting and adopting the definition of Judge McCay in Conner's Case, 51 Ga. 573).

"Logrolling," as applied to elections, consists in the combining of several questions so that a voter cannot exercise his judgment as to one or more of the several propositions, but must either adopt or reject them as an entirety. Tolson v. Police Jury, 48 South. 1011, 1014, 119 Ga. 215, 12 Ann. Cas. 847.

LOITER

LOITER, LOAF, AND IDLE

In Gen Laws 31st Leg. c. 59, § 1, par. "d," defining as vagrants all able-bodied persons who habitually "loaf, loiter, and idle" in any public place, etc., for the greater part of their time, without any regular employment or visible means of support, and declaring that one is not relieved from a charge of vagrancy who habitually loafs, loiters, and idles, if he is without visible means of support, by the fact that only occasionally he has employment at odd jobs, being for the most part without employment, the terms "loiter," "loaf," and "idle," when construed with the words "larger portion of their time," require proof, to sustain a conviction of vagrancy, that the person charged was able to work, and, being so able, habitually loafed, loitered, and idled in the city for the greater part of his time, without employment or visible means of support. Ex parte Strittmatter, 124 S. W. 906, 907, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 156, 137 Am. St. Rep. 937, 21 Ann. Cas. 477.

LOITERER

The term "loiterer," in a charge that, if plaintiff was a mere "loiterer" about defendant's station after his discharge, he could not recover for injuries, of necessity implies plaintiff's presence about the station without consent, permission, or license, and, if anything, it is even broader than those terms, for one may be about the premises without consent, permission, or license, and yet not be a "loiterer" but a trespasser. Hern v. Southern Pac. Co., 81 Pac. 902, 907, 29 Utah, 127.

LONE ENGINE

A "lone engine" is a locomotive not hauling any cars, except its own tender. Kielbeck v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 97 N. W. 750, 70 Neb. 571.

LONG

LONG ACCOUNT

The services of an attorney, rendered in an action or actions under a single or different retainers, which merely involves charges in connection with the various steps in the litigation, cannot be said to constitute a long account. On the contrary, the charge in each action, although the service be permissible of exhaustive itemization, is essentially a single charge respecting each action, and exceptional circumstances must be made to appear in order to remove the case from the operation of such rule. Prentice v. Huff, 90 N. Y. Supp. 780, 782, 98 App. Div. 111.

Where the issues framed by the pleadings in a cause are very numerous, involving many dealings between the parties growing out of farming transactions under a contract under which plaintiff farmed certain lands for the defendant, also growing out of sale of personal property of various kinds and at various dates, and for work, labor, and services performed by plaintiff for defendant, also for numerous items or claims for money advanced to and paid out and expended at various dates by each party at the request of and for the benefit of the other, and where there are numerous causes of action set forth in the complaint, as well as those set forth in various counterclaims contained in the answer, are all for the recovery of money upon contract, and some of the causes of action embrace many separate items of account, all of which are denied by the opposite party, and where the issues are such as to render it practically impossible for a jury to intelligently try and determine the same, the case is one eminently proper to be referred as involving the examination of a "long account." Smith v. Kunert, 115 N. W. 78, 78, 17 N. D. 120 (citing Sutton v. Wegner, 43 N. W. 167, 74 Wis. 347; Turner v. Nachtsheim, 86 N. W. 637, 71 Wis. 16; La Coursier v. Russell, 52 N. W. 176, 82 Wis. 265; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Faist, 58 N. W. 744, 87 Wis. 360; Ittner v. St. Louis Exposition & Music Hall Ass'n, 11 S. W. 58, 97 Mo. 561; People v. Peck [N. Y.] 57 How. Prac. 315; Spence v. Simis, 33 N. E. 554, 137 N. Y. 617; Salem Traction Co. v. Anson, 67 Pac. 1015, 69 Pac. 675, 41 Or. 562; Lewis v. Snook, 84 N. Y. Supp. 634, 88 App. Div. 343; Haig v. Boyle, 45 N. Y. Supp. 816, 20 Misc. Rep. 155).

The statute authorizing references does not apply to an action, ex delicto, though there may be a great number of items involved, since such an action does not involve the examination of a long account as contemplated by the statute. Foster v. Missouri Pac. Ry. Co., 128 S. W. 36, 37, 143 Mo. App. 547.

An action for work performed and material furnished does not involve a "long account," within the meaning of New York Code, so as to require a reference, where the work done, though upon 43 different apartments in an apartment house appears to have been under a single employment, and the only work specified in the bill of particulars is papering and kalsomining, and none of the items making up the charge appears to be at all complex, and all of them must of necessity have been of the same general character. Levine v. Royal State Bank, 113 N. Y. Supp. 523, 61 Misc. Rep. 226.

A complaint alleged that between December and the following May plaintiff rendered medical services for defendant, and attached to the complaint was a schedule giving the date and charge for each visit. The answer admitted that the services were rendered, but denied the dates and values of the visits, and that the services were rendered as set forth in the schedule. Held, that the pleadings did not indicate that the trial would necessarily involve the "examination of a 'long account,'" within Code Civ. Proc. § 1013, authorizing a compulsory reference in such a case. Fowler v. Peck, 99 N. Y. Supp. 816, 817, 51 Misc. Rep. 645.

Where services relate to one matter, or can be grouped into so few separate matters that a jury can easily bear them in mind, a compulsory reference is improper, for numerous itemized charges for one matter do not make a "long account," within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1013, authorizing the court to direct a reference, upon motion of either party without the consent of the other where the trial will require the examination of a long account on either side, and will not require the decision of difficult questions of law; and hence, in an action by an attorney for services and disbursements, where the disbursements are insignificant, and of the 25 separate charges for services 3 are retainers, and the remaining 22 relate to services performed in five separate matters, not complicated in character, consisting mainly of consultations, conferences, and negotiations of settlements, a reference should be refused. Russell v. McDonald, 110 N. Y. Supp. 950, 951, 125 App. Div. 844.

In an action to recover part of the price paid for shoes, defendant claimed that plaintiff told him he would sell him the shoes at cost, and the way to figure the cost was to divide the first figure marked on each pair of shoes by 4, and add 5 to the next figure, and plaintiff admitted that the true way to find the cost was to divide the first figure by 4, but that he did not agree to sell the shoes at cost, but at 50 cents above cost, which was the price paid by defendant. Held that, under the compulsory reference statute, there was no long account involved so as to authorize a reference. Barger v. Beach, 127 S. W. 120, 121, 142 Mo. App. 389.

LONG AS

See As Long as; So Long as.

LONG ON

In the parlance of the stock and produce exchange, to say that one was "long on cotton" means that he had too much cotton. Whitley v. Newman, 70 S. E. 686, 690, 9 Ga. App. 89.

LONG PRICE

Tobacco in bond is sold in two ways: At the "long price," which denotes that the duty does not come in question but that the goods are sold at a flat price without reference to duty; and "short price" is that the merchandise and the duties are separated. Friend v. Rosenwald, 108 N. Y. Supp. 701, 702, 124 App. Div. 226.

LONG TIME

In a suit to enjoin the alleged illegal use of a trade-name, an affidavit that complainant had used the name for a "long time" is too indefinite for judicial action. Charles R. De Bevoise Co. v. H. & W. Co., 60 Atl. 407, 69 N. J. Eq. 114.

Where the owner of lots wrote real estate agents that he would sell the lots for a given price, so much cash, and the balance on "long time," the agents were not authorized to sell on terms whereby notes running from one to four years, given by the purchaser for the balance, were payable "on or before" certain dates. The quoted words placed in each of the notes gave the maker the privilege of paying them at any time he might choose, and they did not comply with the terms of the authority, because they were not long-time notes. Colvin v. Blanchard, 106 S. W. 323, 325, 101 Tex. 281.

LONG TON

A "long ton" is a ton consisting of 2,240 pounds. Hale Bros. v. Milliken, 90 Pac. 365, 370, 5 Cal. App. 344.

LONGER PERIOD THAN ONE YEAR

An oral lease for one year, the term to begin a day or two in the future, is not invalid, under Rev. Civ. Code 1903, § 1238, subd. 5, providing that an agreement for the leasing of real estate "for a longer period than one year," or some note or memorandum thereof, must be in writing. Paulton v. Kreiser, 101 N. W. 46, 18 S. D. 487, 5 Ann. Cas. 827.

LOOK

"A man does not discharge his duty to 'look' out for cars before going on a track by looking where his sight is obstructed." Risler v. St. Louis Transit Co., 87 S. W. 578, 579, 113 Mo. App. 120.

LOOKOUT

The word "lookout," as used in an instruction in an action for injuries to a street car passenger in jumping from a car to escape an imminent collision with a railroad train, as to whether such street car company kept a reasonably sufficient lookout for such train, was used in a sense of looking to ascertain the coming or presence of a train. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Vollrath, 89 S. W. 279, 283, 40 Tex. Civ. App. 46.

A "lookout" is only one of the many precautions which a prudent navigator should provide, but it is not indispensable, where, from the circumstances of the case, a lookout could not possibly have been of service; the object being to discover dangers that are unknown, such as the advance of an approaching vessel or appearance of a light on the coast, the discovery of a dangerous object, and many other things, the existence and presence of which could not be so easily and quickly known to the pilot as to the person whose sole business it was to make and communicate such discoveries. The Pocomoke, 150 Fed. 193, 198 (quoting and adopting definition in The Farragut, 10 Wall. [77 U. S.] 338, 19 L. Ed. 946).

LOOSE

LOOSE BEADS

Metal beads temporarily strung on cotton cords or strings for the purpose of facilitating transportation are not dutiable, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 408, 30 Stat. 189, as loose beads.

Henry M. Frankenberg Co. v. United States, 27 Sup. Ct. 623, 629, 206 U. S. 224, 61 L. Ed. 1084.

LORD CAMPBELL'S ACT

The English Act of 1846 (Stats. 9 and 10 Vict. c. 93) is commonly known as "Lord Campbell's Act," and related to the right to recover for death due to the negligence or wrongful act of another. This act has served as a model for all subsequent legislation on the subject. Casey v. St. Louis Transit Co., 91 S. W. 419, 421, 118 Mo. App. 235 (citing Hayes v. Williams, 30 Pac. 352, 17 Colo. 466; Cooley, Torts [2d Ed.] 308).

LOSE

As applied to property, the word "lose" ordinarily refers to an involuntary, not a voluntary, deprivation. No man may be said to have lost that which on his motion he abandons or resigns, and in common speech the expression a woman "has lost her husband" generally refers to a loss by death, and not to a voluntary divorce by the wife. Snorgrass v. Thomas, 150 S. W. 106, 108, 166 Mo. App. 603 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4237 et seq.).

To "lose" is casually and involuntarily to part with the possession, so that the mind has no impress of, and can have no recourse to, the event; and, if the property is found on the surface of the earth, the conditions suggest that it has been intentionally abandoned, and as such has returned to the common mass of things, in a state of nature, which belongs to the first occupant or finder, the owner not appearing; the distinction between "losing" and "abandonment" being that one is involuntary, while the other is by intent or design. But the result, as it relates to the property, is practically the same; the owner not appearing to lay claim to it. In the one case the finder has the right to the possession against all except the true owner. In the other he acquires the absolute property by right of his occupancy. It is the presumption of abandonment that obtains until the owner appears and claims the property that gives the right as legal possessor to the first occupier; the presumption being disputable by the rightful owner. Such presumption or inference does not obtain as to property intentionally left or deposited in a designated place, and possibly forgotten for the time being, as the loss depends upon something more than knowledge or ignorance, or the memory or want of memory of the owner as to the locality at any given moment. "In such case the taker is not justified in concluding that the goods were lost, because there is little doubt he must have believed that the owner would know where to find them again, and he had no pretense to consider them abandoned or derelict." And where plaintiff, while in possession of defendant's premises under a lease, discovered rich specimens of gold-bearing quartz lying on top of the ground, and by investigation he dug up a large quantity of such quartz found lying in the soil unconnected with any ledge, pocket, placer, or other natural deposit, the quartz being imbedded in the loose surface soil, there being also evidences of a sack or duck cloth in which the quartz might have been buried, such quartz was not "lost" or "abandoned property," and therefore belonged to the owner of the soil, and not to the finder. Ferguson v. Ray, 77 Pac. 600, 602, 44 Or. 557, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 477, 102 Am. St. Rep. 648, 1 Ann. Cas. 1 (citing 1 Black. Com. [Lewis' Ed.] c. 8, *295, 296; 2 Bl. Com. [Lewis' Ed.] c. 28, *402; 2 Kent, Com. *356; McLaughlin v. Waite [N. Y.] 5 Wend. 405, 21 Am. Dec. 232).

LOSE A DOMICILE

"To 'lose a domicile,' when once acquired, there must be an intention to do so. A mere change of the place of abode, however long continued, is not sufficient, unless the proper animus or intention is present. This intention, it is true, may be inferred from circumstances, and the residence may be of such a character and accompanied by such indices of a permanent home that the law will apply to the facts a result contrary to the actual intention of the party. Thus one cannot make a permanent fixed commercial residence with all the surroundings of a permanent home in one place and a domicile in another by a mere mental act. But a residence for mere pleasure or health is not regarded as of any great weight in determining the question of a change of domicile, for in such case it is just as likely that the party intends to retain as to abandon his present domicile." Pickering v. Winch, 87 Pac. 763, 767, 48 Or. 500, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1159.

LOSE A HAND

The term "lose a hand," in the constitution of a fraternal benefit association, is used in its ordinary and popular sense, and does not mean that there must be a total destruction of the hand, anatomically speaking, but that the loss of the use of it for the purposes to which a hand is adapted would be a loss of it. Slason v. Supreme Court of Honor, 78 S. W. 297, 299, 104 Mo. App. 54.

LOSER

Cr. Code, § 182, providing that any person who shall by gaming lose and pay or deliver to any person any sum of money or other valuable thing may recover the same, was intended to afford a remedy by way of restitution, enabling the person losing to recover back the money or other valuable thing lost, and the "loser" is the person to whom such money or other valuable thing belongs. Ware v. Dumont, 123 Ill. App. 1, 6.

LOSING

See Person Losing.

LOSING PARTY

An appellant, who dismisses his appeal after bringing the cause to the Appellate Court and causing the same to be placed on its docket, on procuring a settlement out of court from the appellee, is the "losing party," within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 1337, imposing a docket fee of $10 on the losing party. Stafford v. Conwell, 75 N. E. 600, 36 Ind. App. 313.

Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 1394, providing for filing a petition for a rehearing by any losing party, in any case in the Appellate Court, and, after such petition has been overruled, authorizing such party to apply for a transfer of the case to the Supreme Court, on the ground that the opinion of the Appellate Court contravenes ruling precedents of the Supreme Court, is a remedial statute, and to be liberally construed, and appellant is a "losing party," notwithstanding the fact that the judgment of the trial court has been reversed, if the reversal was based on the misconduct of counsel for appellee, and the ruling upon other points alleged to contravene ruling precedents of the Supreme Court, makes a retrial of the case wholly unavailing to appellant. United States Cement Co. v. Cooper, 88 N. E. 69, 70, 172 Ind. 599.

LOSS

See Actual Loss; Constructive Total Loss; Direct Loss; Irreparable Loss; Partial Loss; Pecuniary Loss; Proof of Loss; Technical Total Loss; Total Loss.

"'Loss' is a relative term. A failure to keep that which one has is 'loss.'" Foehrenbach v. German-American Title & Trust Co., 66 Atl. 561, 563, 217 Pa. 331, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 465, 118 Am. St. Rep. 916.

The word "loss," as used in Civ. Code 1895, § 2629, declaring that a joint interest in the profits and losses sustained by the partnership, means something more than the mere failure to realize profits. Edwards v. Hale, 58 S. E. 817, 129 Ga. 302.

"Loss," in relation to fire insurance, refers to the damages of the assured measured in money. Stephenson v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 98 N. W. 19, 21, 116 Wis. 277.

Sand. & H. Dig. § 4133, excludes the application of the insurance laws to mutual insurance societies conducted upon the assessment plan, but requires them to give bond conditioned for the prompt payment of all assessments to the parties entitled thereto, and makes the sureties liable for any violation of conditions thereof, or for any "loss" to the policy holders, and section 4124 requires all fire, etc., insurance companies to give bond conditioned for the prompt payment of all claims. Held, that the sureties on a bond given and conditioned under section 4133 are not required to pay the loss absolutely. The word "loss," as used in section 4133, means such a loss as would accrue to policy holders if the assessments were not promptly paid over, and hence the obligation of the sureties ceases when the assessments are collected and paid over promptly. Ingle v. Batesville Grocery Co., 117 S. W. 241, 243, 80 Ark. 378.

A policy insuring a vessel against "loss sustained by collision" with another vessel is identical with one insuring it against the risk of collision sustained. Burnham v. China Mut. Ins. Co., 75 N. E. 74, 189 Mass. 100, 109 Am. St. Rep. 627.

A liability insurance policy provided that no action should lie thereunder, unless brought to reimburse insured for loss actually sustained and paid by him in satisfaction of a judgment after trial of the issue. An employe recovered judgment against the insured for personal injuries, and release thereof was obtained by giving insured's note for the amount of the judgment, in full satisfaction thereof. Held, that there was a "loss" within the meaning of the policy which would support an action thereunder, notwithstanding the possibility of insured's insolvency or of compromise for less than the amount of liability under the policy. Seattle & S. F. Ry. & Nav. Co. v. Maryland Casualty Co., 96 Pac. 509, 510, 50 Wash. 44, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 121.

The words "loss or damage," in the provision in the contract of defendant railway company to carry goods to Boston by its own and specified connecting lines, and of a steamship company to carry the goods from Boston to Liverpool: "No carrier shall be liable for loss or damage not occurring on its road or its portion of the through route, nor after said property is ready for delivery to the next carrier. * * * The amount of any loss or damage for which any carrier becomes liable shall be computed at the value of the property at place and time of shipment"—and according to which claims for loss or damage must be made within a certain time after delivery or time therefor, are limited to loss of or injury to the property, and do not include damages for loss of a market because of delay in transportation. Johnson v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas, 96 N. Y. Supp. 182, 186, 107 App. Div. 374.

A provision in a live stock shipment contract, requiring the shipper to give notice in writing of any claim for loss or injury to the stock before its removal from the place of destination, is limited to loss or injury arising during transportation, and does not apply to a claim for loss caused by a falling market during delayed transportation. Estes v. Denver & R. G. R. Co., 118 Pac. 1005, 1007, 49 Colo. 378.

Damage synonymous

Damage means "loss"; compensation would be inadequate that did not cover the loss sustained. Turner v. Woodward, 51 S. E. 762, 123 Ga. 866.

It is not error for the court in its instructions to use the words "loss" and "damage" interchangeably. Turner v. Woodward, 51 S. E. 762, 123 Ga. 866.

Destruction synonymous

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1855, 1887, providing for secondary proof of "loss" of written instruments, the term "loss" is not synonymous with destruction, for, in the case of destruction, loss would necessarily follow, but not so in case of loss. "The instrument may be lost for all practical purposes of the trial when it cannot be found after diligent search, and yet it may exist. We do not think that reasonable diligence in making the search should require the exploration of all possible places where the instrument might be." King v. Samuel, 93 Pac. 391, 395, 7 Cal. App. 55.

Injury distinguished

The phrases "loss of property" and "injury to property" are not synonymous. The one means a total destruction of property and the other partial destruction of property. Nelson v. Great Northern R. Co., 72 Pac. 642, 648, 28 Mont. 297.

LOSS BY FIRE

In an insurance policy covering loss or damage by fire, it is not necessary that the damage shall be occasioned by direct contact with the fire. To render the fire the immediate or proximate cause of the damage, it is not necessary that any part of the insured property actually ignited or was consumed by the fire. Where a building and machinery used for generating electricity for electric lighting was insured against loss or damage by fire, and a fire occurred which caused a short circuit of the electric current resulting in damage to certain machinery in the building not reached by the fire, the injury to the machinery was a "loss or damage by fire," within the meaning of the policy. Russell v. German Fire Ins. Co., 111 N. W. 400, 403, 100 Minn. 528, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 326 (citing Lynn Gas & Electric Co. v. Meriden Fire Ins. Co., 33 N. E. 690, 158 Mass. 570, 20 L. R. A. 297, 35 Am. St. Rep. 540).

LOSS BY THEFT

A policy of fire insurance providing that the company shall not be liable for loss caused directly or indirectly "by theft" or by neglect of insured to use all reasonable means to save and preserve the property at and after a fire, etc., includes theft committed during the fire or when the goods are exposed as a consequence of a fire. Sklencher v. Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia, 60 Atl. 232, 72 N. J. Law, 48.

LOSS OF CONSORTIUM

The "loss of consortium" is a deprivation of the full society, affection, and assistance to which a wife is entitled. Angell v. Reynolds, 58 Atl. 625, 626, 26 R. I. 160, 106 Am. St. Rep. 707.

LOSS OF CONTROL

"Such a movement of a team, as would not be uncommon, is not necessarily a 'loss of control.'" Horses are not considered beyond the control of their driver when they merely shy or start, or for a moment have their own way. Johnson v. City of Marquette, 117 N. W. 658, 660, 154 Mich. 50.

LOSS OF EARNINGS

See Future Loss of Earnings.

The term "loss of earnings," as used in a charge, in a personal injury action against a street car company, that plaintiff's damages, if any, should be assessed at such sum as would be a reasonable pecuniary compensation to him for all "loss of earnings," referred to such loss of earnings as plaintiff had sustained by reason of his injuries up to the time of trial, and not those that he would probably lose in the future, so as to be erroneous, where the petition only charged diminished earning capacity, without any actual past loss of earnings. Dallas Consol. Electric St. Ry. Co. v. Hardy (Tex.) 86 S. W. 1053, 1054.

LOSS OF LIMB

See, also, Lost.

A beneficial certificate entitling the member to one-fourth of his benefit if he should "lose a foot," does not mean that there must be a severance of the foot from the body, but means a permanent loss of use of the foot; the language "loss of a foot" in common parlance meaning the loss of the use of that member. Modern Order of Prætorians v. Taylor (Tex.) 127 S. W. 260, 261.

Injuring a hand to the extent that it becomes useless as a hand is "loss of the hand," within the meaning of an accident policy, though the injury does not require amputation of the hand above the wrist. Lord v. American Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 61 N. W. 293, 294, 89 Wis. 19, 26 L. R. A. 741, 46 Am. St. Rep. 815.

The term "loss of a hand" may be applicable to an injury where the use of the hand is destroyed, and in the case of a "loss" of both feet, the term may cover loss of the use of the feet by paralysis. Fishburn v. Burlington & N. W. R. Co., 103 N. W. 481, 488, 127 Iowa, 483 (citing definition in Sneck v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 34 N. Y. Supp. 545, 88 Hun, 94; Lord v. American Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 61 N. W. 293, 89 Wis. 19, 26 L. R. A. 741, 46 Am. St. Rep. 815; Sheanon v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 46 N. W. 799, 77 Wis. 618, 9 L. R. A. 685, 20 Am. St. Rep. 151).

LOSS OF RENTS

An insurance policy which covers loss of rents includes loss of income where the premises in question were not demised for a specific term. Gray v. Merchants' Ins. Co., of Newark, 125 Ill. App. 870, 372.

LOSS OF TIME

"Loss of time," as an element of damages for a personal injury means time totally lost because of the inability of the injured person to follow any wage-earning occupation and is more than the impairment of the power to earn money, as "impairment" implies that he can perform some services and his ability to earn money, though reduced, is not totally destroyed. Blue Grass Traction Co. v. Ingles, 131 S. W. 278, 281, 140 Ky. 488.

An averment of "loss of time," in a petition for negligent injuries, is the same in legal effect as an averment of "loss of earnings." Scholl v. Grayson, 127 S. W. 415, 417, 147 Mo. App. 652.

The law treats "loss of time," generally speaking, as synonymous with "the loss of those earnings which accrue from employing time in labor or business." Wall v. Continental Casualty Co., 86 S. W. 491, 499, 111 Mo. App. 504.

An accident policy insuring one against injury necessarily resulting in "loss of time" arising from inability to engage in any business insures against such a "loss of time" as immediately arises from an inability to work, and an accident and an injury do not affect the policy unless there is a "loss of time," and it must be a "loss of time" which is at once followed, or which is at once caused by the inability to work, and the insurer is liable for disability resulting from plaintiff's injury, though loss of time does not immediately follow it. Baumister v. Continental Casualty Co., 101 S. W. 152, 153, 124 Mo. App. 38.

LOSS THROUGH HIS LEAVING

An agreement by a third person to become bound in a specified sum, in case an employé left his master during a certain season and the master sustained loss through his leaving, did not render the third person liable for a defalcation by the employé; for the words "sustained loss through his leaving" must be read in connection with what immediately precedes, and, when so read, they refer to the direct pecuniary loss that may be suffered as the result of the employé's leaving the employment during the period of his employment. Freeman v. Waxman, 88 N. Y. Supp. 129, 130, 43 Misc. Rep. 656.

LOSSES

See Claim for Losses.

All other losses, see All Other.

Sharing losses as constituting partnership, see Partnership.

LOSSES OF BUSINESS

The "losses" of a business necessarily include such accounts as are bad and uncollectible. Crawford v. Calkins, 136 N. W. 369, 370, 170 Mich. 587.

LOST

The law exempting those from payment of a poll tax who have "lost" a hand or foot does not exempt one who has lost part of his fingers or whose foot is useless. The word "lost" must be taken in its ordinary acceptance, and, when we speak of a person losing a limb, we mean that it is gone, and not that it is injured or mutilated. A man may lose the use of a limb and not lose the limb. If the word "lost," as used in the statute, is held to mean the absence of three fingers, it could be held to mean the loss of one finger, and so on. Bigham v. Clubb, 95 S. W. 675, 677, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 312.

Deposits

The word "lost," as used in the banking law, providing that if any banker shall fraudulently receive any money, etc., of a person not indebted to him at a time when he is insolvent whereby the deposit shall be "lost" to the depositor, the banker shall be guilty of embezzlement, etc., means a deprivation of the use of the deposit or some part thereof which may occur, though the estate is found ultimately sufficient to pay all debts. State v. Krasher, 83 N. E. 498, 500, 170 Ind. 43.

LOST ALL HOPE OF RECOVERY

The words of the statute "lost all hope of recovery," relating to dying declarations mean that it is a belief of the declarant in death which excludes any hope of recovery. Craven v. State, 90 S. W. 311, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 78, 122 Am. St. Rep. 799.

LOST CORNER

Section 2 of a circular of the United States General Land Office relative to the restoration of lost or obliterated corners defines an "obliterated corner" as one where no visible evidence remains of the work of the original surveyor in establishing it; and defines a "lost corner" as one, the position of which cannot be determined beyond reasonable doubt, either from original or reliable marks or reliable external evidence. Craven v. Lesh, 126 Pac. 774, 775, 22 Idaho, 463.

LOST HER HUSBAND

As applied to property, the word "lose" ordinarily refers to an involuntary, not a voluntary, deprivation. No man may be said to have lost that which on his motion he abandons or resigns, and in common speech the expression a woman "has lost her husband" generally refers to a loss by death, and not to a voluntary divorce by the wife. Snorgrass v. Thomas, 150 S. W. 106, 108, 166 Mo. App. 608 (citing 5 Words & Phrases, p. 4237 et seq.).

LOST PROPERTY

Accidentally leaving goods in a particular place is not a case of "lost property," and the taking would be from the owner's possession. Moxie v. State, 114 S. W. 375, 378, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 529 (citing Statum v. State, 9 Tex. App. 273).

Property to be "lost" must have been unintentionally or involuntarily parted with, and money discovered in the highway or on the ground or the floor will be considered as having been casually and unknowingly dropped, and thus lost; but where it is intentionally put down, as in a drawer or on a table, and the owner forgets where he left it and cannot find it, it is not in a legal sense lost. Foster v. Fidelity Safe Deposit Co., 145 S. W. 139, 142, 162 Mo. App. 165.

Treasure trove distinguished

"At common law a distinction was made between lost property and treasure trove. Lost property was such as was found on the surface of the earth, and with which the owner had involuntarily parted. The presumption arising from the place of finding was that the owner had intended to abandon his property, and that it had gone back to the original stock, and therefore belonged to the finder or first taker, until the owner appeared and showed that its losing was accidental, or without an intention to abandon the property. Treasure trove, on the other hand, was money or coin found hidden or secreted in the earth or other private place; the owner being unknown. It originally belonged to the finder, if the owner was not discovered, but Blackstone says it was afterwards adjudged expedient, for the purposes of state, and particularly for the coinage, that it should go to the king; and so the rule was promulgated that property found on the surface of the earth belonged to the finder until the owner appeared, but that found hidden in the earth belonged to the king. (1 Bl. Comm. *295.) In this country the law relating to treasure trove has generally been merged into the law of the finder of lost property, and it is said that the question as to whether the English law of treasure trove obtains in any state has never been decided in America." Danielson v. Roberts, 74 Pac. 913, 914, 44 Or. 108, 65 L. R. A. 526, 102 Am. St. Rep. 627.

My house and lot, see My.

As expressive of quantity

A "lot" sometimes means a great deal, but as used in a confession, stating that a short time before the alleged crime defendant drank a "lot" of blackberry wine without saying how much or what effect it had on him, it is too indefinite and unsatisfactory to authorize an instruction on the effect of drunkenness. State v. Church, 98 S. W. 16, 17, 24, 199 Mo. 605.

The word "lot," as used in an agreement under which a party purchased a quantity of apricots in the following words: "This agreement made by and between the J. K. A. Co. and the G. Fruit Company, witnesseth: That the said J. K. A. Co. has this day sold and the said G. Fruit Company has this day bought twenty-five hundred boxes apricots, more or less, consisting of: Lot A, 287 boxes, lot K, 104 boxes, lot C, 1400 boxes, lot E, 715 boxes at seven (7) cents per pound plus one per cent. net cash f. o. b. cars at Pomona, on surrender of bill of lading; shipment to be made during the month of October, 1901"—is not an ambiguous word of warranty, but a word used solely to describe and identify. All definitions of the word display its derivation from "share, portion, or parcel." Neither the grammatical construction of the language used in the contract nor the definition given to the word by the lexicographers justifies attributing to it a meaning which imports quality or warranty and to hold that the words, "lot A, 287 boxes," considered either in their ordinary use or as used in a commercial way, relate to warranty, rather than identification, would do violence to the use of language. German Fruit Co. v. J. K. Armsley Co., 96 Pac. 819, 322, 153 Cal. 585.

As distinct or separate portion of land

Milwaukee City Charter (Laws 1874, c. 184) subc. 7, § 8, authorizing the board of public works to assess the damages to lots which they deemed benefited by a change of the street grade, and section 7, speaking of such lots as lots fronting on the improvement, do not limit such an award of damages to platted lots abutting on the improvement, since parcels forming a distinct homestead or other inclosure, messuage, or unit of property fronting on the improvement, but laid out, occupied, or inclosed without regard to platted lines, may constitute a "lot" fronting on the improvement. Schmidt v. City of Milwaukee, 135 N. W. 883, 887, 149 Wis. 367.

Laws 1890, p. 876, c. 132, § 32, provides that the assessor shall actually view when practicable and determine the true and full value of each "lot" of real property listed for taxation and shall enter the value thereof in one column, etc., and the statutes further provide that the term "tract" or "lot" and "piece" or "parcel of real property," and "piece" or "parcel of land," whenever used in the act relating to revenue and taxation, shall be held to mean any contiguous quantity of land in the possession, owned by, or recorded as the property of, the same claimant, person, or company. Held, that under the statutes smaller tracts or subdivisions composing a larger tract could not be assessed as one tract, where the land was owned by different persons under recorded titles or in joint ownership, and assessments in one tract of different ownerships or estates in different tracts seem to be inhibited where the different titles are of record. State Finance Co. v. Myers, 112 N. W. 76, 78, 16 N. D. 193.

Improvements

The words "lot," "piece," and "parcel" apply peculiarly to the land itself, and are never employed to describe improvements. Canty v. Staley, 123 Pac. 252, 254, 162 Cal. 379.

That an advertisement of a mortgage sale described the premises to be sold as "lots," without mentioning the improvements upon them, was not a good objection to confirmation of the sale if the price was not grossly inadequate. Guarantee Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. Jenkins, 2 Atl. 13, 15, 40 N. J. Eq. 451.

As platted lots or blocks

The ordinary meaning of the term "lot," when used with reference to a town or city property, is a subdivision of a block according to the map or survey of such town or city. A statute relative to disconnecting territory from a town provided that it must appear that no part of the territory has been platted into lots and blocks as part of the town. Held, that where the territory in question constituted a portion of a subdivision of the town included in the town site at the time of the incorporation, and the plat of the subdivision showed the streets of the town proper running east and west, and each alternate street running north and south laid out through the subdivision, and the spaces between the streets divided into parcels of various dimensions, the parcels being numbered, the territory could not be disconnected; it being platted into lots and blocks. Town of Fruita v. Williams, 80 Pac. 132, 133, 83 Colo. 157.

The ordinary meaning of the word "lot," when used with reference to town or city property is a subdivision of a block according to the map or survey of such city, and so Acts 1859, p. 184, c. 122 (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 4394), entitled "An act to compel owners of town lots to grade and pave or plank sidewalks, and providing for proceedings to compel the same," does not authorize the fixing of a lien for such paving on large tracts of land. Town of Greendale v. Suit, 71 N. E. 658, 659, 163 Ind. 282.

A city charter defined the term "lot," as used in connection with the establishment of assessment districts for street improvements, to mean lots shown by recorded plats of additions or subdivisions, but, if there were no such recorded plat, or if the owner had disregarded the lots as platted, the whole plat should be treated as one lot. The allotment of portions of a tract in the survey of a partition suit, and the recording of such allotments with the commissioner's deed, did not constitute a division of the lots by recorded plat, as contemplated by the charter; the allotment not having been approved by the board of public improvements, nor recorded in the platbook in the recorder's office. Collier's Estate v. Western Paving & Supply Co., 79 S. W. 947, 953, 180 Mo. 362.

St. Louis City Charter, art. 6, § 14, with reference to the establishment of special assessment districts, provides that, if the property adjoining the street to be improved is divided into lots, the district line shall be so drawn as to include the entire depth of all lots fronting on the street to be improved, etc. It also declares that the word "lot" shall mean the lot as shown by recorded plats of additions or subdivisions, but if there be no such recorded plat, or if the owners of property have disregarded the lines of lots as platted, and have treated two or more lots or fractions thereof as one, then the whole parcel of ground or lots so treated as one shall be regarded as a lot for the purpose of the creation of the assessment district. Held, that the term "lot" as so used was not limited to a platted lot; and hence, where original platted lots are divided either by deed or by distinct use, each of such subdivisions constitutes a lot within such charter provision. State ex rel. Skrainka Const. Co. v. City of St. Louis, 111 S. W. 89, 94, 211 Mo. 591.

Comp. Laws, § 10,710, as amended, limits the area of land to which a mechanic's lien attaches to the "lot" or tract upon which the improved structure is erected, not exceeding 160 acres of rural land, or the "lot or lots" upon which the improvement is made if in a city. Held, that the term "lot or lots" refers to surveyed lots conforming to a plat. Adams v. Central City Granite Brick & Block Co., 117 N. W. 932, 935, 154 Mich. 448, 129 Am. St. Rep. 484.

A lot owner, to be entitled to an award of damages on account of the grading of a public street, must show that his lots abut on that part of the street graded; but the term "lot" does not mean necessarily the platted lot. In determining whether a given area of land which does not directly border on a graded street is to be regarded as a part of the abutting land for the purpose of awarding damages for a change of the grade, all of the facts and circumstances of the particular situation should be considered in ascertaining whether the area in question is so identified with the intervening land under common ownership that the two cannot be separated in use without injury to the value of each. Where plaintiff owned two lots on a corner of two streets, both lots being divided by the recorded plats into independent subdivisions, and both were separately acquired and improved, plaintiff was not entitled to an award of damages to the inside lot for an alleged change of grade of the street on which it did not abut. Burde v. City of St. Joseph, 110 S. W. 27, 28, 130 Mo. App. 453.

Const. art. 16, § 51, provides that a rural homestead shall consist of not more than 200 acres, and that an urban homestead shall consist of a "lot or lots" not to exceed in value $5,000. Land, designated as a lot in a particular block in the city plan, and within the limits of a city, was purchased and used for a residence in connection with the owner's business as a merchant, and afterwards the owner purchased land adjoining his residence property, but separated from it by the city's limits as generally recognized, which he used for pasturing the family horses or cattle, and for raising products for home consumption; both lots being valued at less than the constitutional limit for urban homesteads. The city exercised no jurisdiction over such tract and levied no taxes thereon, nor was it rendered for city taxation. Held, that the term "lot or lots" must be taken in its popular sense, and did not embrace land within the limits of the corporation not connected with the plan of the city; that the original homestead was urban in character, and the later acquisition was rural; and that, as there could be no blending of urban and rural homesteads, the tract last purchased was not a part of the owner's homestead, and hence was subject to foreclosure under a deed of trust. First Nat. Bank v. Litchfield (Tex.) 144 S. W. 350, 352.

Public street

See, also, Lots, Blocks, Tracts, and Parcels of Land.

That the fee of the street where a railroad bridge is built across it, together with the fee thereof between that point and a distant block abutting on the street, is owned by the owner of such block, and not by the owners of the lots abutting at the point of the bridge and between it and such block, does not make the land under the bridge and such block one parcel, within the rule as to damages to the residue where part of a tract is taken. Coatsworth v. Lehigh Valley Ry. Co., 131 N. Y. Supp. 300, 301, 73 Misc. Rep. 645.

As tract or parcel

When work is done and materials furnished to erect a building for the owner of a whole tract of land without visible divisions, the whole tract is one "lot" within Pub. St. c. 191, § 1, providing for a lien on the "lot of land" on which a building is situated for which labor and materials are furnished. Orr v. Fuller, 52 N. E. 1091, 172 Mass. 597.

Rev. St. 1899, § 5979, authorizes fourth-class cities to open and improve streets, make sidewalks, etc., and gives them exclusive control of all streets within their limits. Section 5981 authorizes them to repair sidewalks and levy special assessments on all lots and pieces of ground abutting such improvements. Held, that an unplatted tract within the limits of a fourth-class city can be taxed for the construction of sidewalks, provided such exercise of the taxing power is reasonable under the circumstances; the word "lot" used in section 5981 including tracts or parcels of land, even if the section did not authorize assessments on all pieces of grounds. City of Salem ex rel. Roney v. Young, 125 S. W. 557, 861, 142 Mo. App. 160.

Two or more lots

St. Louis City Charter, art. 6, § 14, relating to the assessment of property for local improvements, declares that the word "lot," as used in the section, shall mean the lots as shown by recorded plats of additions or subdivisions, but if there was no recorded plat, or if the owners had disregarded the lines of lots as platted, and have treated two or more lots or fractions thereof as one lot, then the whole parcel so treated as one shall be regarded as a lot for the purpose thereof. Held that, where the owner of a tract or lot had used the same in disregard of platted lot lines, and had occupied it in disregard of a platted street for a race track since 1878, it was properly assessed for a street improvement as a single lot, regardless of its original platted subdivisions. Granite Bituminous Paving Co. v. McManus, 129 S. W. 448, 452, 144 Mo. App. 593.

LOT LINE

The term "lot line" or "property line" has a well known and understood meaning. The fee to the streets and the sidewalks is in the city. The "property line" or "lot line" extends only to the inner edge of the sidewalk. If the walks were to be constructed one foot from the "lot line" or "property line," that description definitely defines the location. Gage v. City of Chicago, 79 N. E. 294, 295, 223 Ill. 602.

LOTS, BLOCKS, TRACTS, AND PARCELS OF LAND

The interests of a street railroad company in the part of a street improved is not subject to assessment for the improvement, under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 796, providing for assessing the "lots, blocks, tracts, and parcels of land" that will be specially benefited thereby. City of Seattle v. Seattle Electric Co., 94 Pac. 194, 195, 48 Wash. 599, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 486.

LOTTERY

Lottery or similar scheme, see Similar Scheme.
See, also, By Chance; Gift Enterprise; Prize.

A lottery is a species of gaming which may be defined as a scheme for the distribution of prizes by chance among the persons who have paid, or agreed to pay, a valuable consideration for the chance to obtain a prize. Burks v. Harris, 120 S. W. 979, 980, 91 Ark. 205, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 626, 134 Am. St. Rep. 67, 18 Ann. Cas. 566.

Every drawing, where money or property is offered as prizes to be distributed by chance according to a specified scheme or plan, and a ticket or tickets sold which entitles the holder to money or property, and which is dependent upon chance, is a "lottery." Grant v. State, 112 S. W. 1068, 1069, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 403, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 876, 130 Am. St. Rep. 897, 16 Ann. Cas. 844.

In "lottery" there must be union of three elements; consideration; chance and prize. Russell v. Equitable Loan & Security Co., 58 S. E. 881-884, 129 Ga. 154, 12 Ann. Cas. 129.

The three necessary elements of a "lottery" are the furnishing of a consideration, the offering of a prize, and the distribution of the prize by chance rather than entirely upon a basis of merit. Brooklyn Daily Eagle v. Voorhies, 181 Fed. 579, 581.

Chance is an essential element of a lottery, whether it be as to any return or merely as to the amount or value thereof, and, where there is a hazard in which sums are ventured on the chance of obtaining a greater value, the scheme partakes of the nature of a lottery; that is, something gained or won by lot. State v. Perry, 70 S. E. 387, 388, 154 N. C. 616 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4245).

"The word 'lottery' has no technical meaning. A lottery is nothing more nor less than a scheme or device of chance." State v. Willis, 2 Atl. 848, 849, 78 Me. 70.

"It has been said in some of the books and by several of the courts that, while the word 'lottery' is not a technical term of the law, and to dispose of property of any kind by lottery is not an offense which has a recognized and established legal definition, and that the meaning of the word must be determined with reference to a popular sense of the mischief intended to be redressed by the statute, yet when thus construed, it indicates a scheme for the distribution of prizes and for the obtaining of money or goods by chance. The word 'lottery' has been variously defined as a game of hazard, in which small sums are ventured for the chance of obtaining a larger value, either in money or other articles; a distribution of prizes won by lot or chance; a kind of game or hazard, wherein several lots of goods or merchandise are deposited in prizes for the benefit of the fortunate; or a sort of gaming contract, by which, for valuable consideration, one may, by favor of the lot, obtain a prize superior to the amount or value of that which he risks. Tested by any one of these approved definitions, a lottery always involves the element of chance, fortune, or hazard. It is gaming, pure and simple." City of Winston v. Beeson, 47 S. E. 457, 459, 135 N. C. 271, 65 L. R. A. 167 (citing State v. Mumford, 73 Mo. 647, 650, 39 Am. Rep. 532; State v. Clarke, 33 N. H. 329, 334, 66 Am. Dec. 723).

"Lottery" has been held to be a gaming device, and the keeping of a house for the purpose of selling lottery tickets is the keeping of a "gambling house" within the power of a city to suppress gaming and gambling houses. Portland v. Yick, 75 Pac. 706, 709, 44 Or. 439, 102 Am. St. Rep. 633.

"We approve the language used in the opinion of Ballock v. State, 20 Atl. 184, 73 Md. 1, 8 L. R. A. 671, 25 Am. St. Rep. 559, where it is said: 'Our statute does not justify a court in deciding a thing is not a "lottery" simply because there can be no loss, when there may be considerable contingent gain, or because it lacks some element of a lottery according to some particular dictionary definition when it has all the other elements, with all the pernicious tendencies which the state is seeking to prevent.'" People v. McPhee, 103 N. W. 174, 176, 139 Mich. 687, 69 L. R. A. 505, 5 Ann. Cas. 835.

The general definition of a "lottery" was declared to correspond with Gen. St. Minn. 1894, § 6576, defining it as a scheme for the distribution of property by chance, among persons who have paid or agreed to pay a valuable consideration for the chance, whether called a lottery, raffle, or gift enterprise, or by some other name. State ex rel. Hathorn v. United States Express Co., 104 N. W. 556, 558, 95 Minn. 442 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, pp. 4245-4248).

A "lottery" embraces the elements of procuring through lot or chance, by the investment of a sum of money, some greater amount of money. A contract containing a prize feature dependent on chance, the writing of new contracts and lapsation, both of which are contingencies over which the parties have no control and which they cannot forecast, is a "lottery." Fidelity Funding Co. v. Vaughn, 90 Pac. 34, 37, 18 Okl. 13, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1123.

A company operated a scheme containing investment and loan features. The opportunity to obtain a loan was determined to a large extent by the way in which the applications were received at the office of the company, and where a number of applications were received at the same time they were put on the records of the company as they were opened and recorded. The investment features were not particularly attractive, and the main feature of the scheme was the loan feature, and the proposed loan contracts contained attractive terms. Held, that the scheme was a lottery because of a consideration and because of the existence of chance, based on obtaining a low number and thereby obtaining a loan, and because the obtaining of a loan at an early date was the prize in the scheme, since to constitute a lottery there must be a consideration, chance, and prize. United States v. Purvis, 196 Fed. 618, 620.

A contract for the sale and purchase of stamps for delivery by the buyer to his customers, which contemplates that the holders thereof shall by chance dispose of an automobile furnished by the seller of the stamps, is a lottery, and the contract is void. American Copying Co. v. Thompson (Tex.) 110 S. W. 777, 779.

The derivation of the word "lottery" indicates its general definition as the "distribution of anything by lot" or "the drawing of lots," and the scheme known as "lottery" is defined as one "for raising money by selling chances to share in a distribution of prizes" or a "scheme for the distribution of prizes by chance among persons purchasing tickets; the corresponding numbered slips, or lots representing prizes or blanks, being drawn from a wheel." An indictment for using the mails to defraud, in violation of Rev. St. § 5480, by subdividing a tract of land in Louisiana of small value into lots 10 or 20 feet square, and selling certificates, each purporting to give the holder an option to purchase an interest in a lot, upon false representations that the lots were within an oil district and very valuable, and that large cash offers had been made for certain of the same, construed, and held to charge a scheme and artifice to defraud within the meaning of the statute, which, when carried on by means of correspondence through the mails, constituted a violation thereof, and not to describe a "lottery" or "gambling enterprise." Gourdain v. United States, 154 Fed. 453, 458, 83 C. C. A. 309 (quoting and adopting the definition in Century Dictionary, and citing Lottery Case, 23 Sup. Ct. 321, 188 U. S. 321, 353, 47 L. Ed. 492).

"Bishop defines a 'lottery' as 'any scheme whereby one on paying money or other valuable thing to another becomes entitled to receive from him, such a return in value or nothing, as some formula of chance may determine.'" An indictment under Rev. St. § 3894, for sending through the mails a newspaper containing an advertisement of a lottery or gift enterprise, or a complete or partial list of prizes awarded at the drawing of a lottery or gift enterprise, must aver, either specifically or by necessary intendment, the existence of a lottery or gift enterprise. United States v. Irvine, 156 Fed. 376, 377 (quoting 2 Bish. St. Crimes, § 952).

A financial co-operative scheme, which contemplates the creation of a fund out of enrollment fees and monthly dues, to be returned to the members at the end of a fixed period of membership in the shape of "realizations," the amount of which will depend upon the growth in membership, the plan being certain to involve a loss to every one interested as soon as the number of members ceases to increase, because of the absence of any provision for a reserve fund, is a lottery, or scheme for the distribution of money by lot or chance, within the meaning of the provisions of Rev. St. § 3929, as amended by Act Sept. 19, 1890, c. 908, 26 Stat. 465, and of section 4041, and of Act March 2, 1895, c. 191, § 4, 28 Stat. 964, empowering the Postmaster General to deny the privileges of the mails and the money order and registered letter service to persons engaged in certain prohibited enterprises. Public Clearing House v. Coyne, 24 Sup. Ct. 789, 796, 194 U. S. 497, 48 L. Ed. 1092.

The term "lottery" in law is of wide signification. In Horner v. United States, 13 Sup. Ct. 409, 147 U. S. 449, 37 L. Ed. 237, Mr. Justice Blatchford discussed various definitions of lottery, and among others approved that found in Worcester's Dictionary, in which it is defined to be "a game of hazard in which small sums are ventured with the chance of obtaining a large value, either in money or other articles." A scheme by which certificates are issued by a corporation, on each of which the holder agrees to pay $1 per week, subject to forfeiture for nonpayment, and about 75 per cent. of which payments are paid into a "mutual benefit credit fund" until all certificates prior in date have matured and been canceled, when his own certificate shall mature, and he shall be paid from such fund the sum of $2 for each week such certificate has been in force, provided there is so much in the fund, not exceeding however $100, is a "lottery" within the meaning of Rev. St. § 3894, and any person engaged in conducting such scheme by means of letters or circulars sent through the mails is guilty of a criminal offense under said section. Fitzsimmons v. United States, 156 Fed. 477, 479, 84 C. C. A. 287, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1005; Id., 156 Fed. 482, 84 C. C. A. 292.

Where a pecuniary consideration is paid, and it is determined by lot or chance, according to some scheme held out to the public, what and how much he who pays the money is to have for it, that is a "lottery." It is a sort of gaming contract by which, for a valuable consideration, one may, by favor of the lot, obtain a prize of a value superior to that of the amount or value of that which he risks. It is a scheme by which a result is reached by some action or means taken, and in which result man's choice or will has no part, nor can human reason, foresight, sagacity, or design enable him to know or determine such result until the same has been accomplished. However, it should not be concluded that the term "lot or chance" implies that if any element of certainty or skill enters into the scheme it therefore relieves it of its character as a "lottery" or scheme of chance. A guessing contest instituted by a newspaper company, by which persons are invited to deliver to the company 50 cents each, 24 cents of which being payment for a subscription to the newspaper and 26 cents for the privilege of making a guess upon the total vote for a state officer who is to be chosen at an approaching election, the guesser coming nearest to the actual total vote cast to receive a money prize from the fund equal to one-tenth thereof, and others next nearest to receive from the fund lesser money prizes, is within the condemnation of the statute of Ohio against "lotteries" and schemes of chance, and is an unlawful enterprise. And a similar scheme, involving the same amount of payment by each person, but differing from the former, in that there is to be no subscription to a paper, and the prizes promised are definite amounts from $5,000 down to $2, is equally within the condemnation of the statute and unlawful. Stevens v. Cincinnati Times-Star Co., 78 N. E. 1058, 1060, 72 Ohio St. 112, 106 Am. St. Rep. 586.

A guessing contest prior to the presidential election of November, 1904, by which defendant agreed to give $10,000 to the person who would make the nearest correct estimate of the total popular vote cast for the office of President of the United States, on November 8, 1904, and $5,000 for the second nearest correct estimate, persons filing guesses being required to pay small sums as a subscription to a periodical named in the advertisement, constituted a "lottery" in violation of the federal laws and also of Comp. Laws Mich. § 11,344, providing that every person who shall set up or promote within the state any "lottery" or gift enterprise for money, or shall dispose of any property, real or personal, goods, chattels, or merchandise, or any valuable thing, by way of "lottery" or gift enterprise, shall be punished, etc. Waite v. Press Pub. Ass'n, 155 Fed. 58, 59, 85 C. C. A. 576, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609, 12 Ann. Cas. 319.

Bond investment scheme

Where an investment company issues bonds, numbered consecutively in the order in which applications happen to be received by the secretary, and the time of payment of the bonds, and consequently their value, depend on the number they happen to receive, the scheme is a lottery. Siver v. Guarantee Inv. Co., 81 S. W. 1098, 1100, 183 Mo. 41.

Disposal of property by chance

Under Pen. Code, §§ 323, 327, defining a lottery as a scheme for the distribution of property by chance among persons who have paid a valuable consideration for the chance, and making advertising a lottery a misdemeanor, a scheme for the distribution of money and cigars among purchasers of certain brands of cigars who will estimate most closely the number of cigars of all brands on which taxes would be collected by the government during a named month is a "lottery," though the distribution does not depend exclusively on chance, and the advertising of the same is a misdemeanor. People ex rel. Ellison v. Lavin, 71 N. E. 753, 754, 179 N. Y. 164, 66 L. R. A. 601, 1 Ann. Cas. 165.

As gambling device

See Gambling Device.

Game of skill

"A lottery is commonly understood as a scheme for the distribution of prizes by lot or chance, especially a gaming scheme in which one or more tickets bearing particular numbers draw prizes, and the rest of the tickets are blank." A knife rack, consisting of an inclined table, with knives stuck therein, and so arranged that rings could be thrown on them, which rings are sold to customers, who endeavor to ring the knives on the table, they being entitled to any knives rung, or on which the rings caught, is not a lottery. McRea v. State, 81 S. W. 741, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 489.

Gift enterprise

Under the provisions of Rev. St. § 3394, as amended by Act Aug. 5, 1909, c. 6, § 33, that no packages of manufactured tobacco shall be permitted to have packed in them "any paper, certificate or instrument purporting to be or represent a ticket, chance, share or interest in, or dependent upon, the event of a lottery," the definition of a lottery is not limited to a scheme whereby the value of the certificate or ticket is dependent upon lot or chance, but includes as well a scheme, whereby the possession of a certificate or prize, having a fixed value, is made to depend on lot or chance, and the statute is violated by concealing in 1 out of each 100 five-cent cuts of plug tobacco a tag redeemable by the maker for 50 cents. United States v. One Box of Tobacco, "Foot Prints," 190 Fed. 731, 732, 111 C. C. A. 459.

Defendant, to induce the sale of a cereal called "Mother's Oats," placed in each package a coupon on which one of the letters which spelled the word "Mother's" was printed, and offered premiums to persons holding coupons which would spell the word "Mother's"; the letter "O" being placed on only one coupon in 500. Held, that such scheme was a lottery, within Act Cong. March 2, 1895, c. 191, providing that any person who shall cause to be carried from one state to another in the United States any paper, certificate, or instrument purporting to be or representing a ticket, chance, share, or interest in, or dependent upon the event of, a lottery, etc., or other similar enterprises offering prizes dependent upon lot or chance, shall be guilty, etc. United States v. Jefferson, 134 Fed. 299, 300.

Policy playing

A scheme, generally known as "playing policy," whereby an association sells for five cents, or any other specific sum of money, certificates or tickets which entitle the purchaser to a lead pencil of trifling value, and also permits such purchaser to select certain numbers, say 3-9-13, which, if all drawn by a blind-folded boy from a revolving wheel in which several numbers are placed, entitle the person purchasing the certificate or ticket to a prize of money much larger in amount than he has paid for his certificate or ticket, is a "lottery." State ex rel. Kellogg v. Mercantile Ass'n, 25 Pac. 984, 985, 45 Kan. 351, 11 L. R. A. 430, 23 Am. St. Rep. 727.

Pool selling

Rev. Code 1852, amended to 1893, p. 396, provides that if any person shall sell or dispose of any lottery policy, certificate, or of anything by which such person or any number of persons promises or guarantees that any particular number, character, ticket, or certificate shall, in an event or on the happening of any contingency in the nature of a lottery, entitle the purchaser or holder to receive money, property, or evidence of debt, every person so offending shall on conviction be subject to a penalty. Held, that the fact that tickets representing membership in a baseball pool did not in themselves show a promise or guaranty that on the happening of an event, the holder should be entitled to money, did not save the scheme from being a violation of the statute, since the term "lottery," as used therein, includes any scheme for the distribution of money or prizes by chance, not limited to a sale of tickets nor to the terms or promises printed or written upon them. State v. Sedgwick (Del.) 81 Atl. 472, 473, 2 Boyce, 453.

See Public or Common Nuisance.

Trading stamp business

There can be no "lottery," in the absence of the element of chance. A trading stamp business, consisting of the selling of checks or stamps to merchants, who give the same to their customers on purchases of goods, the number of stamps given being determined by the amount of the purchase, and the stamps, on presentation at the trading stamp store, entitling the holders to select any article from the assortment of articles, each article being plainly marked with its value in stamps, such value not being greater than the market value of the articles, is not a "lottery," within a statute denouncing lotteries, etc. State v. Shugart, 35 South. 28, 29, 138 Ala. 86, 100 Am. St. Rep. 17.

Three things must concur in order to constitute a "lottery": (1) There must be the purchase of a right; (2) the right must be a contingent one to receive something greater than that which is purchased; and (3) the contingent right must depend upon a lot or chance. Const. art. 18, § 2, and Mills' Ann. St. § 2927, prohibiting "lotteries" or gift enterprises, does not authorize an ordinance prohibiting gift enterprises, designed to include the giving of trading stamps, since the term "gift enterprise" as used in the Constitution and statute applied only to transactions in which the element of chance is involved. City and County of Denver v. Frueauff, 88 Pac. 389, 394, 39 Colo. 20, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1131, 12 Ann. Cas. 521 (quoting and adopting definitions in Lohman v. State, 81 Ind. 17).

LOTTERY TICKET

A "ticket" is a thing which is holder's means of making good his rights. Policy slips written by a customer to indicate a choice of numbers and delivered by him to an agent of the policy game to be forwarded by him to headquarters in another state are not within the provisions of the act of Congress making it an offense against the United States to be caused to be carried from one state to another any ticket in a "lottery." Francis v. United States, 23 Sup. Ct. 334, 335, 188 U. S. 375, 47 L. Ed. 508.

LOW

See Too Low.

LOW BRIDGE

In railroad parlance, a "low bridge" is one so low as to prevent those engaged upon box cars in the freight service from passing under the same in a standing position. Koller v. Chicago, St. P., M. & O. Ry. Co., 129 N. W. 220, 221, 118 Minn. 173.

LOW JOINT

A "low joint" in a railroad is where a tie underneath that joint has been pounded so many times by wheels passing over it that there is a little space underneath that tie, so that the rails will give when the wheels go over it. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Benton, 132 Fed. 460, 461, 65 C. C. A. 660.

LOW-WATER MARK

Ordinary Low-Water Mark.

The "low-water mark" which under Act Aug. 19, 1749, is the boundary line between York and Lancaster counties, is the line to which the water recedes at ordinary states of low water, and not the lowest line the water has ever been known to reach. Appeal of York Haven Water Power Co., 62 Atl. 97, 98, 100, 212 Pa. 622.

Where in ejectment the location of a "low-water mark" of tidewater on the easterly side of a creek is involved, it cannot be assumed without proof that that mark was not west of the center line of the creek, since one bank may have fallen sheer, and the other have been a shoal very nearly the whole width of the creek. Heiney v. Nolan, 67 Atl. 1008, 1009, 75 N. J. Law, 397.

"Low-water mark" of natural fresh water rivers is the water's edge at its lowest stage. City of Peoria v. Central Nat. Bank, 79 N. E. 296, 299, 224 Ill. 43, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 687.

Fresh rivers not subject to tide may rise and fall at certain seasons and thus have defined high and low water marks. The "low-water mark" is the point to which the river recedes at its lowest stage, while the "high-water mark" is the line which the river impresses on the soil by covering it for sufficient periods to deprive it of vegetation and to destroy its value for agriculture. State ex rel. Citizens' Electric Lighting & Power Co. v. Longfellow, 60 S. W. 374, 377, 160 Mo. 109 (citing Gould, Waters [3d Ed.] § 45).

The margin of the bed of a river which lies between high and low water mark is called the "beach" or "shore," which is actually a part of the bed of the river, and, when the river is at its full flow, whether caused by the tide or by the natural increase of waters by rains, floods, and the like, filling its natural bed to its highest reach of flow, it marks its high-water, while its lessened range of flow by summer heats shows its low-water, mark. Sun Dial Ranch v. May Land Co., 119 Pac. 758, 762, 61 Or. 205.

LOW WOMAN

The statement of a person of another that she is a "low woman" and "half negro" does not impute a want of chastity. Kenworthy v. Brown, 92 N. Y. Supp. 34, 35, 45 Misc. Rep. 292.

LOWERMOST PORTION

The words "beginning from the lowermost portion thereof" should be construed as meaning from the lowermost portion of the bed of stream; not from the lowest depths of some hole or sudden depression therein, but from the lowermost part of the general contour of the channel. Krause v. Oregon Iron & Steel Co., 77 Pac. 833, 835, 45 Or. 378.

LOWEST BIDDER

A single bid for public work made under due advertisements for bids, pursuant to an ordinance requiring such method of letting contracts, authorizes the city council to contract with the bidder; the term "lowest," in such connection, being used in its logical and practical, rather than its grammatical, sense. Hager v. Melton, 68 S. E. 13, 17, 66 W. Va. 62.

The expression "lowest bidder" necessarily implies a common standard by which to measure the respective bids, and that common standard must necessarily be previously prepared specifications of the work to be done and materials to be furnished. Where an equipment of an automatic fire alarm office for a city, as designed by the city electrician, was authorized by ordinance, a subsequent notice to bidders, after call for bids had been published, which abrogated the specifications and established in lieu thereof an equipment which the board and city electricians might deem adequate, rendered the bids void under the requirements of the city charter that public improvements made by contract should be let to the "lowest bidder" and that the contracts and specifications must at that time be on file subject to public inspection. Goshert v. Seattle, 107 Pac. 930, 862, 57 Wash. 645.

LOWEST RESPONSIBLE BIDDER

The expression "lowest bidder" necessarily implies a common standard by which to measure respective bids, which standard must necessarily be previously prepared specifications of work to be done and materials to be furnished; specifications freely accessible to all who may desire to compete, on which alone their respective bids must be based. By the phrase "lowest responsible bidder," as used in a statute relating to school buildings, it was not intended to limit the power of the board to the simple examination of the different bids tendered without reference from whom they came, and that they should blindly select one solely from the consideration that it was lowest in price, but it required the board to select that bidder who, all things being considered, had ability to respond to the requirements of the contract having full regard to the subject-matter. The word "responsible," as employed in the act when applied to contracts requiring for their execution not only pecuniary ability, but also judgment and skill, imposes not merely a ministerial duty on the city authorities, but also duties and powers deliberate and discretionary. Hannan v. Board of Education of City of Lawton, 107 Pac. 646, 650, 654, 25 Okl. 872, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 214 (citing Mazet v. City of Pittsburgh, 20 Atl. 693, 137 Pa. 548; Commonwealth ex rel. Snyder v. Mitchell, 82 Pa. 343).

The statute requiring that contracts for public improvements shall be let to the lowest responsible bidder does not require the letting of contracts to the lowest bidder, on ascertaining his financial responsibility only, but the term "responsible" includes the ability to respond by the discharge of the contractor's obligations in accordance with what may be expected or demanded under the contract, and where the board of local improvements has exercised its discretion in the award of a contract for a public improvement, the presumption arises that its action was legal, and the party asserting the contrary has the burden of overcoming the presumption by proof that the board acted without jurisdiction or fraudulently. Hallet v. City of Elgin, 98 N. E. 530, 532, 254 Ill. 343.

The word "responsible" in the phrase "lowest responsible bidder," as used in Gen.

St. 1909, § 1017, providing for competitive bids before awarding contracts for public improvements, implies skill, judgment, and integrity necessary to a faithful performance of the contract, as well as sufficient financial resources and ability. Williams v. City of Topeka, 118 Pac. 864, 866, 85 Kan. 857, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 497.

Where one whose bid for county road work was the lowest as to part of the work failed to submit samples of material to be tested as reasonably requested and the bid of the one to whom the contract was awarded was the lowest on all the work, such latter bid could be regarded and accepted by the county commissioners as the "bid of the lowest responsible bidder," as required by statute. Suburban Inv. Co. v. Hyde, 55 South. 76, 78, 61 Fla. 800.

LUCID INTERVAL

The court was well within the rule laid down by text-writers and cases, in instructing that by the term "lucid interval" is meant that period of time during which the person concerned, had so far regained the position of her faculties as to be of sound and disposing mind and memory as defined therein, and that it does not mean that there has been a simple diminution in her insanity, but that her mind has been temporarily restored to sanity, and sufficiently restored to qualify her to make a will as a person of sound and disposing mind and memory. King v. Gilson, 90 S. W. 367, 370, 191 Mo. 307.

"A 'lucid interval,' under the civil law, is not an apparent tranquility or seeming repose. It is not a simple diminution or remission of the disease, but a temporary cure—an intermission so clearly marked that it perfectly resembles a return to health. And, as the nature of the interval cannot be ascertained in an instant, it must continue during a length of time sufficient to give the certainty of the temporary return to reason. The time must in all cases be considerable. * * * The Roman jurists distinguished two classes of insane persons. One class they called 'furiosos'; the other, 'mente captos.' * * * All the Roman laws which speak of 'lucid intervals' have exclusive reference to the first class. For instance, the Law 39, Digest de Judiciis, authorized the insane of the first class to discharge judicial functions during lucid intervals. But this was never permitted in cases of simple insanity." Succession of Morere, 38 South. 435, 437, 114 La. 506 (quoting and adopting definition in Aubert v. Aubert, 6 La. Ann. 106, quoting from Coin-Deleale, Donations et Testaments, p. 82).

"By 'lucid intervals' is meant, not merely a cessation of the violent symptoms of the disorder, but a temporary restoration of reason such as to create responsibility for acts done during its continuance. Still, restoration of the mental faculties to their original condition is not necessary. It is sufficient if there be such restoration that the person is able, beyond doubt, to comprehend and to do the act with such reason, memory, and judgment as to make it a legal act." Team v. Bryant, 51 S. E. 148, 150, 71 S. C. 831.

LUCRATIVE OFFICE

The deputy auditorship of a county is a "lucrative office" within Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 9539, providing that no person holding a lucrative position shall be a notary public, and his acceptance of such office shall vacate his appointment as notary. Sharp v. State (Ind.) 99 N. E. 1072, 1075.

A "lucrative office" is one whose pay is affixed to the performance of its duties; and, when the duties of the office are fixed by statute, it is immaterial that the compensation of the officer is fixed by some other board or officer. The office of deputy sheriff, whether entitled to the compensation fixed by contract between the sheriff and the deputy, or entitled to the fees allowed by law, is a lucrative office, within Const. art. 2, § 26, declaring that no person shall hold more than one lucrative office at the same time. State v. Slagle, 89 S. W. 326, 327, 115 Tenn. 336 (citing State ex rel. Platt v. Kirk, 44 Ind. 401, 15 Am. Rep. 239; Chambers v. State ex rel. Barnard, 26 N. E. 893, 127 Ind. 365, 11 L. R. A. 613).

Rev. St. U. S. §§ 1245-1259, provide for the retirement of army officers. Section 1259 authorizes the assignment of retired officers to duty at the Soldiers' Home, and by subsequent enactments retired officers may be detailed for service with the militia of the several states or in colleges and military schools, and in time of war may be employed on active duty other than in command of troops. Act March 2, 1903, c. 975, 32 Stat. 927, 932; Act April 23, 1904, c. 1485, 33 Stat. 259; Act Nov. 3, 1893, c. 13, 28 Stat. 7; Act Aug. 6, 1894, c. 228, 28 Stat. 223, 2 Supp. Rev. St. U. S. 226; Act April 21, 1904, c. 1403, 33 Stat. 225. Held, that a retired army officer is not, by reason of such retirement, holding an office within State Const. art. 4, § 20, making any person holding any lucrative office under the United States ineligible to any civil office of profit under the state. Reed v. Schon, 88 Pac. 77, 78, 2 Cal. App. 55.

LUMBER

See Dressed Lumber; Fire Proofed Lumber; Logs, Lumber, and Other Timber; Sawed Lumber.

Merchantable lumber, see Merchantable.

The word "lumber" is in common use to describe both trees suitable to saw and the products into which they are sawed. Where a deed of standing lumber and trees suitable to saw into lumber stipulated that the lumber remaining on the premises at the end of a specified time should revert to the grantor, but not suggesting that the trees were to be sawed on the premises, it was held that the forfeiture clause applied only to standing trees, and the sawed lumber which remained on the premises after expiration of the specified time did not revert to the grantor. Tuttle v. D. W. Pingree Co., 73 Atl. 407, 408, 75 N. H. 288.

The meaning of the word "lumber" is vague and indefinite, and it has different senses according to the context in which it is used or the nature of the transactions to which the parties refer. Most often it designates materials of wood used in constructing houses, fences, and other like structures—wooden building material. The Standard Dictionary defines it as "timber sawed into merchantable form; especially boards;" the Century, as "timber sawed or split for use, such as joists, boards, planks, staves, hoops, and the like;" Webster's Unabridged, as "timber sawed or split into the form of beams, joists, boards, planks, staves, hoops, etc.; especially that which is smaller than heavy timber." Plaintiffs, who were regular shippers of "lumber," ties, and piling, wrote to defendant railroad, asking the rate on "lumber." Defendant replied, guaranteeing a rate to the point of delivery to a connecting carrier. Plaintiff shipped ties, for which defendant charged and collected a greater rate than agreed on in its letter to plaintiff. Defendant's tariff sheet did not include ties within the term "lumber," and there was no evidence that defendant understood or could have been reasonably expected to have understood, when applied to by plaintiff, that the latter intended to ship ties, when he asked the rate on "lumber." Held, that the letter written by defendant did not amount to an agreement to carry ties on the rate specified therein. Greason v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co., 86 S. W. 722, 725, 112 Mo. App. 116.

When plaintiff applied for cars for the transportation of oak cross-ties, one of defendant carriers had a joint rate to Kansas points, including the destination of the ties, applying to "lumber, car loads, all kinds," of 24 cents per 100 pounds. The other defendant carrier had a similar rate on "lumber, all kinds," but neither carrier had a specific rate on cross-ties. Held, that "lumber" being generally defined to include "any timber sawed or split for use," whether by maul, wedge, or the use of machinery in a mill, anything manufactured out of a log with saw, ax, maul, wedge, or machine, for building houses, bridges, fences, or railroads, after the product leaves the log for commercial use, it included the cross-ties within such joint-rate schedules. Classification of railway cross-ties in a different class from "lumber," imposing on them a higher rate, constitutes unjust discrimination. American Tie & Timber Co. v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 175 Fed. 28, 32, 99 O. C. A. 44.

Rev. St. 1903, c. 93, § 46, provides that whoever labors at cutting, hauling, rafting, or driving logs or lumber shall have a lien thereon for the amount due for his personal services and the service performed by his team. Held, that in view of the original provision in the statute (Laws 1848, c. 72), providing a lien for "cutting, hauling, or driving logs, masts, spars, or other lumber," meaning other lumber ejusdem generis, in a condition similar to logs, masts, and spars, that is, felled but not manufactured, but designed for ultimate manufacture, as are logs, or not to be manufactured, as are spars and masts, the word "lumber" in section 46 is not used in its broadest meaning as including both the manufactured and the unmanufactured product; but no lien is given for cutting or hauling manufactured lumber. Mitchell v. Page (Me.) 78 Atl. 570, 571.

Logs or timber distinguished

"Lumber" is to be distinguished from logs or timber, and in common parlance, as well, means more than ordinary logs. Craze v. Alabama State Land Co., 46 South. 479, 490, 155 Ala. 431 (citing definition in Webst. Dict.).

Timber synonymous

Where, in a suit by attachment the affidavit set up a lien for stumpage, under Code 1907, § 4814, for timber sold, and the complaint charged for lumber sold, but also claimed under a lien for stumpage under the statute, which gives a lien for timber sold, the word "lumber," as used therein, is synonymous with "timber," when considered in connection with all the averments of the complaint and the affidavit, as against an objection that there was a fatal variance between the pleading and proof, since it can reasonably be construed to harmonize with the affidavit and evidence showing a sale of timber, as distinguished from lumber. Sligh v. Frix, 51 South. 601, 602, 165 Ala. 230.

LUMBER AND TIMBER

Slabs are not included in the material designated as "lumber and timber" in the statute giving a lien on the lumber and timber for services in cutting logs. Engl v. Haddell, 100 N. W. 1046, 1048, 123 Wis. 407.

LUMBER DEALER OR MERCHANT

As engaged in mercantile pursuit, see Mercantile.

One engaging in the business of keeping and selling lumber in considerable quantities is properly called a "lumber merchant." Jackson v. Town of Union, 73 Atl. 773, 774, 82 Conn. 266.

LUMP SUM

Code 1899, c. 54, § 26, relating to contracts with building and loan associations, demands "that the extent of payment of premiums be definite, and to answer that demand there must be a 'lump sum,' but * * * it may be taken out in advance, or be distributed in stated periodical payments; but such lump sum need not in words be specified, and then distributed, because if the periodical payments be fixed in amount and number, they make up a 'lump sum.'" Tahaney v. Washington Nat. Bldg. & Loan Ass'n, 53 S. E. 791, 59 W. Va. 296.

LUMPER

See Lumping.

LUMPING

A charge in the items of a mechanic's lien is not a "lumping" one, where it includes only lienable items which are the subject of an express contract for a given price, which, in case of a subcontract, is also shown to be the reasonable value thereof. Holland v. Cunliff, 69 S. W. 737, 740, 96 Mo. App. 67 (citing Hilliker v. Francisco, 65 Mo. 598; Deardorff v. Roy, 50 Mo. App. 70).

The term "lumping," in the vernacular of members of a trade union is used to designate a method of doing work where the contractor is only the figurehead of the owner who purchases the material and assumes all the responsibility in connection with the contract and the "lumper" merely furnishes the labor and acts as superintendent upon an agreed compensation for his services. People v. Weinseimer, 102 N. Y. Supp. 579, 581, 117 App. Div. 603.

LUNACY

The words "lunacy" and "unsound mind" have been bent out of their technical sense in some instances, a legislative construction being given thereto in harmony with the broad views of courts that they include every phase of unsound mind rendering one incapable of caring for himself or his property. In re Streiff, 97 N. W. 189, 191, 119 Wis. 566, 100 Am. St. Rep. 903.

Under section 7, Statutory Construction law, the terms "lunatic" and "lunacy" include every kind of unsoundness of mind except idiocy. Schoenberg & Co. v. Ulman, 99 N. Y. Supp. 650, 652, 51 Misc. Rep. 83.

Under Statutory Construction Law (Laws 1892, p. 1487, c. 677) § 7, defining "lunacy" to include every kind of unsoundness of mind except idiocy, the word "lunacy" in Code Civ. Proc. § 2335, providing that, where a petition alleges that the person with respect to whom it prays for the appointment of a committee is incompetent by reason of "lunacy," the inquiry with respect to the competency must be confined to the question whether he is incompetent at the time of the inquiry, includes all phases of incompetency including imbecility arising from old age. In re Preston's Will, 99 N. Y. Supp. 312, 313, 113 App. Div. 732 (citing *Matter of Schrod*t, 67 N. Y. Supp. 244, 32 Misc. Rep. 540; Matter of Clark, 67 N. Y. Supp. 631, 57 App. Div. 5).

Rev. Laws, c. 87, §§ 6, 79, places the burden of support of insane persons on the state. Rev. Laws, c. 8, § 5, cl. 6, provides that, in construing statutes the words "insane person" and "lunatic" shall include every idiot, non compos, lunatic, and insane and distracted person. Held, that persons committed to the School for Feeble-Minded are not insane persons, and hence the state is not liable for their support. Chapin v. City of Lowell, 80 N. E. 618, 619, 194 Mass. 486.

LUTHERAN

The name "Lutheran" is a distinguishing characteristic of the churches adhering to and adopting certain writings in and shortly after the time of Martin Luther as conclusive expression of the creed, and inerrant interpretation of the Scriptures, and rejecting certain other writings which are adopted by what are called the "German Reformed Church" as correct interpretation of the Scriptures. The Lutherans prescribe certain books as necessary to be used in Sunday school and confessions of faith, and the like, and yield almost inspirational authority to the writings of Dr. Luther. Marion v. Evangelical Creed Congregation of Milwaukee, 113 N. W. 66, 67, 132 Wis. 650.

LUXURIES

Food supplies ordered by the master of a fishing schooner, who was also managing owner, for the use of the crew on a fishing voyage, under the usual lay contracts, in the absence of any showing of bad faith on his part, will be presumed to be supplies "necessary" for the employment of the vessel, within the meaning of the Maine statute giving a lien for such supplies, and the court will not undertake to determine that certain of the articles were "luxuries" for which the vessel is not liable. The term "luxuries" is an entirely relative term. The Mary F. Chisholm, 133 Fed. 598, 600.

LYCHEE

Dried lychee as edible fruit, see Edible Fruit.

LYING

LYING BETWEEN PIERS

Where an insurance policy on a vessel provided that the company should not be liable for injuries in consequence of ice except when the vessel was "lying between piers," the exception should be construed as requiring that the vessel should be placed between piers sufficiently near to each other to afford protection from floating ice on both sides; and hence, where the piers between which the vessel was moored at the time of her injuries were 2,200 feet apart, she was not "lying between piers" within the policy. Huntley v. Providence Washington Ins. Co., 79 N. Y. Supp. 35, 36, 77 App. Div. 196.

LYING IN WAIT

"Lying in wait" means hiding in ambush or concealment. It does not necessarily refer to the attitude of the body, but rather to its location, and the purpose of taking the person attacked unawares. It is the mental poise of the wild beast in quest of prey, and necessarily implies malice, premeditation, deliberation, and the willful intent. If a person, armed with a club, was hiding in the darkness with the purpose of assaulting another when unaware of danger, he was, though standing, technically "lying in wait." State v. Tyler, 97 N. W. 983, 985, 122 Iowa, 125.

LYING OR BEING WITHIN

Const. art. 8, § 5, declares that all railroad property within the limits of any city shall bear its proportionate share of municipal taxation, and, if not previously rendered, the city authorities shall have power to require its rendition and collect the usual municipal tax thereon. Section 8 declares that property of railroad companies shall be assessed and taxes collected in the several counties in which the property is situated, including so much of the roadbed and fixtures as shall be in each county; and that the rolling stock shall be assessed in gross in the county where the principal office of the company is located, and the county tax paid on it shall be apportioned by the comptroller in proportion to the distance the road may run through any such county among the several counties through which the road passes, as a part of their assets. Held that, under Rev. St. 1895, art. 5063, providing for the general taxation of the rolling stock of railroad corporations, and article 500, providing that only property situated within the limits of a city is taxable by it, a city containing the principal office of a railroad company was not, for that reason, authorized to levy municipal taxes on all the railroad's rolling stock, only a small portion of which would necessarily be within the city on the 1st day of January of each year; the term "lying or being within the limits of any city or incorporated town," etc., when applied to tangible movable property, meaning only such property as is actually and physically within the limits of the city. City of Tyler v. Coker (Tex.) 124 S. W. 729, 730.

LYNCHING

"The word 'lynching' has been defined by legal as well as other lexicographers, and according to such definitions, and as the term is generally understood, the illegal acts commonly termed 'lynching' cannot be committed by a single individual. Yet one person alone could be guilty of the crime of breaking and entering a jail with intent to kill under this statute. 'Lynching' is defined by Raphe & Lawrence as 'mob vengeance upon a person suspected of crime.' Law Dictionary, 773. It is 'a term descriptive of the action of unofficial persons, organized bands, or mobs, who seize persons charged with or suspected of crimes, or take them out of the custody of the law, and inflict summary punishment on them, without legal trial, and without warrant or authority of law.' Black's Law Dictionary, p. 737. 'A common phrase used to express the vengeance of a mob inflicting injury and committing an outrage upon a person suspected of some crime.' Worcester and Webster define the word as the infliction of punishment without legal trial by a mob or by unauthorized persons. The word derives its origin, according to Worcester, from a Virginia farmer named Lynch, who, having caught a thief, instead of delivering him to the officers of the law, tied him to a tree and flogged him with his own hands. Lynching has no technical legal meaning. It is merely a descriptive phrase, used to signify the lawless acts of persons who violate established law at the time they commit the acts, and is universally understood to signify the illegal infliction of punishment by a combination of persons for an alleged crime." State v. Lewis, 55 S. E. 600, 610, 611, 142 N. C. 626, 9 Ann. Cas. 361 (quoting Bouv. Law Dict. 287. See, also, State v. Aler, 20 S. E. 585, 39 W. Va. 558).

M

MACADAM

The word "macadam" has a variety of meanings. Thus, where plaintiff contracted to furnish for two years all the crushed stone needed by defendant in construction and repair of its streets, defendant agreeing to use said crushed stone in all street construction work and all repair work done by it where the improvement is made with "macadam," the contract was ambiguous, and plaintiff might show that the parties, when making the contract, understood that the word included river and mining gravel as well as crushed stone. Vlernow v. City of Carthage, 123 S. W. 67, 68, 139 Mo. App. 276.

MACADAMIZE

According to the Standard Dictionary, to "macadamize" is "to cover or pave, as a path or roadway, with small broken stone, on either a soft or a hard substratum." Judicially speaking, the word "macadamizing" has a fixed and definite meaning, and refers not only to the kind of material to be used in covering the street or road, but also to the manner in which it is to be laid. It means to cover a street or road by a process introduced by Macadam, which consists of the use of small stones of a uniform size, consolidated and levelled by heavy rollers. Jones v. Plummer, 118 S. W. 109, 111, 137 Mo. App. 337.

A "macadamized roadway" does not mean one made up of a mixture of clay, gravel, limestone, and slag, that will not sustain an ordinary load in wet weather. In the common practice and understanding such a roadway has been regarded as one covered with small, broken stones, so as to form a smooth, hard, convex surface, capable of sustaining ordinarily heavy traffic. Gage v. People, 65 N. E. 1084, 1085, 1086, 200 Ill. 432.

Complainants conveyed certain land to a city for a street, the city agreeing to grade and "macadamize" the street which was in an outlying district where it was well known to both parties that the city was in the habit of macadamizing only the center of the street to a width of from 14 to 16 feet, for a driveway. Held, that the contract should not be construed to require the city to macadamize the street to its full width, but only in accordance with its recognized custom. City of Versailles v. Brown (Ky.) 96 S. W. 1108, 1109.

The term "pave" in its generic sense means to place some substance on the street so as to form an artificial roadway or wearing surface which shall change the natural condition of the street. The word is much more comprehensive than the term "macadamize," but it embraces all that the term

"macadamize" covers. Ross v. Gates, 21 S. W. 1107, 1109, 183 Mo. 338.

MACHINE

See Elevating Machine; Reaming Machine; Slot Machine; Sticker Machine; Traversing Parts of a Machine; Windowing Machine.

Other machine, see Other.

"The term 'machine' includes every mechanical device or combination mechanical powers and devices to perform some function and produce a certain effect or result." A "machine" is a concrete thing consisting of parts, or of certain devices and combination of devices, and a machine is not a principle or an idea. The mere function or operation of a machine or other device, as distinguished from the machine or device itself, is not patentable. American Steel & Wire Co. v. Denning Wire & Fence Co., 160 Fed. 108, 111, 112 (quoting and adopting definitions in Corning v. Burden, 15 How. [56 U. S.] 252, 14 L. Ed. 683; Burr v. Durgess, 1 Wall. [68 U. S.] 531, 17 L. Ed. 650).

In patent law, a "machine" is a concrete thing consisting of parts or of certain devices, or combination of devices. "A machine is not a principle or an idea." United States Consol. Seeded Raisin Co. v. Sekma Fruit Co. (U. S. C. C. A.) 195 Fed. 264, 270, 115 C. C. A. 234.

Bitransit railway system

A new method of handling passengers to secure rapid transit in a large city, termed a "bitransit railway system," is not a "machine" within the patent law, and the patent therefor is void for lack of patentable novelty. Fowler v. New York, 121 Fed. 747, 58 C. C. A. 113.

Crane

The term "machine" includes every mechanical device or combination of mechanical powers and devices to perform some function and produce a certain effect or result. A crane used to lift molten metal in a manufacturing establishment, and operated by hand, is a "machine" within the factory act (Acts 1899, p. 234, c. 142, § 9; Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 70871), requiring the operator of a manufacturing establishment to guard vats, cogs, belting, etc., or machinery. Crawford & McCrimmon Co. v. Gose (Ind.) 82 N. E. 984, 985 (quoting and adopting the definition in Corning v. Burden, 15 How. 252, 14 L. Ed. 683; Green v. American Car & Foundry Co., 71 N. E. 268, 163 Ind. 135).

Drop

The term "machine" includes every mechanical device, or combination of mechanical powers and devices, to perform some function and produce a certain effect or result. A steel hammer of 1,500 pounds, resting in the center of the floor, within four large upright posts, with attachments to a power for the purpose of hauling it to the top of the frame and letting it drop, is a machine, within the meaning of Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7087, relating to the duty of an employer, and requiring that all vats, pans, saws, and machinery of every description shall be properly guarded. Green v. American Car & Foundry Co., 71 N. E. 268, 270, 163 Ind. 135 (citing Corning v. Burden, 56 U. S. [15 How.] 252, 14 L. Ed. 683).

A "drop," a device consisting of a fixed derrick which raises a large steel ball to a considerable height and allow it to fall upon scrap iron, etc., for the purpose of breaking it, is a "machine." Inland Steel Co. v. Kachwinski, 151 Fed. 219, 221, 80 C. C. A. 571.

Emery belt

An emery belt, used in a factory to polish metal, is a "machine," within Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 70871, requiring machinery of every description in factories to be properly guarded. La Porte Carriage Co. v. Sullender (Ind.) 71 N. E. 922, 924. See, also, Pein v. Miznerr, 83 N. E. 784, 786, 41 Ind. App. 255, overruling La Porte Carriage Co. v. Sullender, 75 N. E. 277, 165 Ind. 290.

Machinery distinguished

See Machinery.

Mangle

"A 'machine' is a mechanical device or combination of mechanical powers and devices to perform some function and produce a certain effect or result." A laundry mangle is within the scope of the factory act providing that "all vats, pans," etc., and "machinery of every description," shall be properly guarded. Pein v. Miznerr, 83 N. E. 784, 786, 41 Ind. App. 255.

Pile driver and engine

As used in Civ. Code, § 1970, providing that an employer shall be liable for injuries to a servant sustained through the employer's negligence or the default of a co-employee, employed on a machine or other appliance than that on which the employee injured was employed, the word "machine" means an instrument composed of one or more of the mechanical powers, and capable when set in motion of producing by its own operation certain predetermined physical effects, being distinguished from all other mechanical instruments in that its rule of action resides within itself, and hence, where a servant employed to steady piles in front of a pile driver was injured by the negligence of the engineer operating the engine by which the hammer was lifted, the pile driver and the engine being connected only by a rope by which the power was transmitted to the hammer, plaintiff and the engineer were not working on the same machine within such section. Korander v. Penn Bridge Co., 116 Pac. 384, 385, 16 Cal. App. 249.

Process distinguished

"A 'machine' is a thing. A 'process' is an act, or a mode of acting. The one is visible to the eye, an object of perpetual observation. The other is a conception of the mind, seen only by its effects when being executed or performed. Either may be the means of producing a useful result." Expanded Metal Co. v. Bradford, 29 Sup. Ct. 652, 657, 214 U. S. 366, 53 L. Ed. 1034; Eastern Extracting Co. v. Greater New York Extracting Co., 110 N. Y. Supp. 738, 739, 126 App. Div. 928 (quoting Cochrane v. Deener, 94 U. S. 780, 24 L. Ed. 139; Tilghman v. Proctor, 102 U. S. 707, 26 L. Ed. 279); Kirchberger v. American Acetylene Burner Co., 124 Fed. 764, 775.

The term "machine" includes every mechanical device or combination of mechanical powers and devices to perform some function and produce a certain effect or result. But where the result or effect is produced by chemical action, by the operation or application of some element or power of nature, of one substance to another, such modes, methods, or operations are called "processes." A new process is usually the result of a discovery; a machine, of invention. But the term "process" is often used in a more vague sense in which it cannot be the subject of a patent. Thus we say that a board is undergoing the process of being planed, grain of being ground, iron of being hammered or rolled. Here the term is used subjectively or passively as applied to the material operated on, and not to the method or mode of producing that operation, which is by mechanical means, or the use of a machine, as distinguished from a process. In this use of the term it represents the function of a machine, or the effect produced by it on the material subjected to the action of the machine. But it is well settled that a man cannot have a patent for the function or abstract effect of a machine, but only for the machine which produces it. Denning Wire & Fence Co. v. American Steel & Wire Co., 169 Fed. 795, 796, 95 C. C. A. 259.

Railroad switch

A railroad switch is not a "machine" for the construction of waterworks, within the statute providing that persons furnishing machinery to erect waterworks may have a lien thereon. Potter Mfg. Co. v. A. B. Meyer & Co., 86 N. E. 837, 839, 171 Ind. 513, 131 Am. St. Rep. 287.

As structure

See Structure.

Tram railroad

A tram railroad is not a "machine," within Rev. St. 1899, § 8486, taxing manufacturers on tools, machinery, and appliances. State ex rel. Western Tie & Timber Co. v. Pulliman, 135 S. W. 443, 444, 283 Mo. 229.

MACHINE FINISH

The term "machine finished" is used in the manufacture of paper to represent sized, glazed, and supercalendered paper. Jackson v. Grissom, 94 S. W. 263, 264, 196 Mo. 624.

MACHINERY

See Dangerous Machinery; Defective Machinery; Domestic Machinery; Patterns for Machinery; Steam Machinery; Ways, Works, Machinery, or Plant.

Other machinery, see Other.

A mortgage trust deed covering the "machinery" belonging to a cotton print works company included the copper rolls on which the designs to be printed on the cloth were engraved, which were not a part of the printing presses, but were purchased in the market separate from the presses for use therein, and were unavailable for use except in the presses. According to Bouvier's Law Dict., "machinery" is a more comprehensive term than "machine" and includes the appurtenances necessary to the working of a machine. According to Webster's International Dictionary, second definition, "machinery" is the working parts of a machine, engine, or instrument. According to the Century and the Standard Dictionaries, "machinery" is the parts of a machine considered collectively, or any construction of mechanical means designed to work together to accomplish a given end. Doty v. Oriental Print Works Co., 67 Atl. 586, 591, 28 R. I. 372 (citing Seavey v. Central Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 111 Mass. 540; Buchanan v. Exchange Fire Ins. Co., 61 N. Y. 26, 33; Brewer v. Ford, 12 N. Y. Supp. 621, 59 Hun, 17; State v. Avery, 44 Vt. 629; Brower v. Locke, 67 N. E. 1015, 31 Ind. App. 353, 358).

As all machinery

The word "machinery," in Labor Law (Laws 1897, c. 415) § 81, imposing on the owner or person in charge of a factory the duty to properly guard specified parts of "machinery," including shafting by name and "machinery of every description," means machinery which needs to be and can be guarded for the safety of the employees. Poole v. American Linseed Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 1047, 1048, 119 App. Div. 136.

The factory act, providing that "all vats, pans," etc., and "machinery of every description," shall be properly guarded, requires all dangerous machinery to be guarded, including a laundry mangle; the quoted phrase not being limited by the enumeration of vats, pans, etc., since that enumeration is not an enumeration of machines, and the genus of those words is not of the same nature as of "machinery of every description." Pein v. Miznerr, 83 N. E. 784, 41 Ind. App. 255, overruling La Porte Carriage Co. v. Sullender, 75 N. E. 277, 281, 165 Ind. 290.

A "machine" consisting of rollers and knives revolving at a high rate of speed, and set immediately below an opening in a floor, and used for the purpose of mixing sawdust, damp clay and dirt thrown into the opening, is not within the factory act, providing that in all manufacturing establishments "all vats, pans, saws, planers, cogs, gearing, belting, set screws, and machinery of every description therein" shall be guarded. National Fire Proofing Co. v. Roper, 77 N. E. 370-372, 38 Ind. App. 600.

Castings

Iron castings from 10 to 24 feet in length, known as "sill castings or channels," were furnished to a tobacco company with the necessary bolts for use in its factories, to support tobacco presses. Most of them were used for supporting presses or tables connected therewith, without being fastened to the floor and without being put under all the presses. Some were used for other purposes, such as skids, and "dunnage"; that is, were put under goods to raise them above the floor. Those under presses and tables could be readily removed, and were in fact taken from one building to another. There was no proof that they were customarily thus placed in tobacco factories, or were in any way necessary to carry on the work, or that it could not be done as well without them. Held, that the castings were not "material" or "machinery," within Rev. St. 1899, § 4203 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2277), giving a lien to a person furnishing the same for a building. Banner Iron Works v. Aetna Iron Works, 122 S. W. 762, 763, 143 Mo. App. 1.

Conveyor

A conveyor, consisting of a long, cylindrical, rotating rod, to which flanges are attached, is a shafting or "machinery," within the factory act (Acts 1899, p. 234, c. 142, § 9; Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7087i), providing that all shafting and "machinery" shall be guarded. United States Cement Co. v. Cooper (Ind.) 82 N. E. 981, 983.

Crane

Under Code Supp. 1907, § 4999a2, requiring "machinery" in factories to be guarded, a traveling crane is a machine, and, if injury is reasonably to be apprehended therefrom to those working in its vicinity, it should be provided with proper guards. McCarney v. Bettendorf, Axle Co. (Iowa) 186 N. W. 920, 925.

Derrick and appliances

Where, on the sale of a derrick, the president of the seller corporation wrote the buyer, "We fully guarantee machinery, and

If the same gives out through any fault of ours, we will replace it," the term "machinery" was sufficiently broad to include the whole of the derrick and appliances furnished by the seller. Miller v. F. R. Patch Mfg. Co., 91 N. Y. Supp. 870, 871, 101 App. Div. 22.

Emery wheel

An emery wheel used as a part of a factory equipment to grind tools is not within the phrase "machinery of every description," in the factory act (Acts 1899, p. 234, c. 142, § 9; Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 70871), providing that "all vats, pans, saws," etc., and "machinery of every description," shall be properly guarded. National Drill Co. v. Myers, 81 N. E. 1103, 40 Ind. App. 322 (citing La Porte Carriage Co. v. Sullender, 75 N. E. 277, 185 Ind. 290, 303).

Hammer

A hammer used by a track hand on a railroad was not a part of the "machinery" of the railroad company within the meaning of a statute declaring that such a company shall be liable for any damage done by the running of the locomotives or cars or other machinery thereon. Williams v. Garbutt Lumber Co., 64 S. E. 65, 70, 132 Ga. 221 (quoting Georgia Railroad & Banking Co. v. Nelms, 9 S. E. 1049, 83 Ga. 70, 20 Am. St. Rep. 308).

Harness

The harness of a horse attached to a delivery wagon which an employé was driving was not a part of the employer's "machinery," within Rev. Laws, c. 106, § 71, cl. 1, giving an employé the same right of action against his employer for personal injuries by a defect in the ways, works, and machinery connected with the employer's business, as if he had not been an employé; "machinery," only including such machines or mechanical devices as are in use, and such appurtenances thereof as are used incidental to the use of the machine. Murphy v. O'Neill, 90 N. E. 406, 407, 204 Mass. 42, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 146.

Heating boiler

Ky. St. § 2463, provides that a person who furnishes materials in the erection or repairing of a house, or for any fixture or machinery therein, or for the improvement of real estate by contract with, or by the written consent of, the owner, contractor, subcontractor, or authorized agent, shall have a lien thereon, etc. Held, that a heating boiler purchased by a contractor and installed in defendant's residence constituted a "fixture" and "machinery," within the statute, and also an improvement of the property, within the section, so as to entitle the seller to a materialman's lien therefor. Menne v. American Radiator Co., 150 S. W. 24, 25, 150 Ky. 151.

As improvement of land

See Improvement.

Kiln doors

Where a contract to furnish "machinery as follows" enumerates among other articles kiln doors, such doors are "machinery," for the purposes of the contract. Thomas China Co. v. C. W. Raymond Co., 135 Fed. 25, 29, 67 C. C. A. 629.

Machine distinguished

The word "machinery," in a fire policy insuring a laundry and machinery, included the boiler, pipes, and fittings; steam being used, not only as a motive power, but for providing heat for drying purposes, etc. According to Webster's International Dictionary a "machine" is any mechanical contrivance, while "machinery" is the means and appliances by which anything is kept in action or a desired result is obtained; a complete system of parts adapted to a purpose. More narrowly and technically, "machinery" is said to be the working parts of a machine, engine, or instrument arranged and constructed so as to apply and regulate force. Tubbs v. Mechanics' Ins. Co., 108 N. W. 324, 326, 131 Iowa, 217.

As personal property

See Personal Property.

Railroad track

Labor Law (Laws 1897, p. 480, c. 415, § 81) requires that all vats, pans, saws, planers, cogs, gearing, belting, shafting, set screws and "machinery of every description" shall be properly guarded. Held, that other mechanical appliances constituting similar hazards were included in the words "machinery of every description," but that they did not include a railroad track some three feet above the floor of a gallery in a machine shop, on which trucks were operated; there being no inherent danger in the track, nor reasonable ground to believe that an employé in falling would be injured by putting his hand in front of the wheel of a truck which was being operated on the track. Wynkoop v. Ludlow Valve Mfg. Co., 89 N. E. 827, 828, 196 N. Y. 324, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 36.

Water mains and pipes

Pipes and water mains of waterworks company are not taxable as "machinery employed in manufactures," within Rev. Laws, c. 12, § 23, providing for the taxation of such machinery within the state. Coffin v. Artesian Water Co., 79 N. E. 262, 263, 193 Mass. 274.

MACHINIST

The term "machinists" does not include plumbers, painters, plasterers, and such like artisans. Hence a plumber furnishing the labor and materials to connect a soda fountain, gas drum, and generator, etc., is not a "machinist" within Laws 1905, p. 137, c. 72, providing that every machinist who expends labor, skill, and materials on any chattel shall have a lien for his services. Modern Plumbing & Heating Co. v. American Soda

Fountain Co., 106 Pac. 628, 629, 57 Wash. 148, 135 Am. St. Rep. 975.

In an action by a passenger against a street car company, where the declaration alleged that plaintiff was a machinist when he was injured, the fact that the evidence showed that he was a tool maker did not prevent him from recovering damages for decreased earning capacity as a skilled workman, the proof showing that tool makers were machinists, as the word "machinist" was broad enough to cover skilled machinists. Fillingham v. Michigan United Rys. Co., 117 N. W. 635, 636, 154 Mich. 233.

MACKEREL

Evidence is admissible to show a trade custom construing the word "mackerel" to mean clear and not rusty mackerel. Procter v. Atlantic Fish Cos., 94 N. E. 281, 208 Mass. 351.

MADE

See Duly Given or Made; Duly Made.
See, also, Make.

The words "so made," in Code, § 549 (Gen. St. 1897, c. 95, § 590; Gen. St. 1899, § 4843), which after providing for the making and service of the case and the suggestion of amendments, provides that the case, "when so made," shall be settled, certified, and signed by the judge, making no mention of the service of the case, evidently include all the preliminary steps to the presentation of the case to the judge for settlement. Butler v. Scott, 75 Pac. 496, 497, 68 Kan. 512 (citing Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co. v. Guild, 59 Pac. 283, 61 Kan. 213).

Completion imported

The word "made," as ordinarily used, "applies to completed transactions but not necessarily so." A father's guaranty to a bank against any loss on personal loans "made" to his son or on account of any business paper discounted to amounts designated, at a time when the bank had already made personal loans to the son and discounted paper for an amount less than that fixed by the guaranty, was a continuing guaranty covering not only past but future transactions. National Bank of Chester County v. Thomas, 66 Atl. 813, 814, 220 Pa. 360.

Delivery imported

A conveyance is "made or given," within section 67e of the bankruptcy act of July 1, 1898, relating to conveyances made within four months prior to the filing of a petition, when it is delivered. Underleak v. Scott, 134 N. W. 731, 732, 117 Minn. 136.

Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 2198, provides that the board of appraisers or commissioners of public lands may review and reconsider any of its official acts relating to lands of the state until such time as the lease or contract for any of such lands shall have been made, executed, and signed by the commissioner of public lands, or by the board itself, and Pierce's Code 1905, § 8178a (Laws 1903, p. 113, c. 79), declares that any sale or lease of state lands made by mistake, or not in accordance with law or made by misrepresentation, shall be void. Held that, where affidavits alleging fraud in the sale of certain tide lands were presented to the board of public land commissioners, after the execution of a deed but before its delivery, the board had power to suspend the delivery of the deed, and investigate the charges. The court said: "Respondent contends that the expression 'made, executed, and signed' is equivalent to the words 'made, executed, and delivered,' which are commonly found in deeds of conveyance, and urges that the deed is not 'made and executed' until it is 'drafted, signed, acknowledged, and delivered,' and that it was not the intention of the Legislature to deprive the officers of the state of the power to deal with the subject as long as the deed was not actually delivered. Whether this contention of respondent can be upheld in its entirety, we are not now called upon to decide; but we think that his position is tenable, to the extent that the land commissioner or the board of state land commissioners may at any time refuse to deliver a deed when matters are brought to his or their attention which give reason to believe that said deed is being obtained by means of fraud." State ex rel. Shores v. Ross, 87 Pac. 262, 263, 44 Wash. 246.

As communicated

"Made" signifies action; but, when a person has "communicated" to another a written statement by reading it to him and delivering it to him, that statement has been "made to" such other person, within the meaning of the law. The words "made to" do not necessarily imply that the one communicating and using the statement also composed it or made it up. "Make known" is a synonym of "communicate," according to Soule's Dictionary of English Synonyms, 84. The verb "make" has many significations and conveys many meanings, among which is "to put forth; give out; deliver." Also, "to inform; apprise." Century Dictionary. Thus when a person seeking credit hands to a merchant a materially false written statement concerning his financial condition, no matter who composed and signed it, if it be one calculated to deceive, and then reads it to such merchant, and thereby obtains property from him on credit, he has obtained property on credit upon a materially false statement in writing "made to" such person. In re Aldridge, 168 Fed. 93, 98, 99.

As entered on docket

Under Pen. Code, § 1423, requiring a justice of the peace to keep a docket in which must be entered each action and all proceedings therein, an order holding accused to answer is in fact and law "made" when it is entered on the justice's docket, so that a failure to indorse the same on the complaint or depositions does not deprive the order of its validity nor affect defendant's substantial rights. People v. Sacramento Butchers' Protective Ass'n, 107 Pac. 712, 716, 12 Cal. App. 471.

As filed

The word "made," in the statute providing that where the term does not continue longer than 30 days the motion for new trial must be "made" during the term, is synonymous with "filed," and the word "made" cannot be construed as meaning simply to prepare and present to the judge such motion, and a motion which has not been so filed must be dismissed, though the judge before whom the case is tried may have granted a rule nisi during the term and within the term fixed by law for filing the motion, and this is true though counsel for the successful party may have consented to a continuance of the hearing of the motion; the same having been returnable in vacation. Hilt v. Young, 43 S. E. 76, 77, 116 Ga. 708.

The word "made," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1295, providing that the superior court of that county in which application for the appointment of an administrator is "first made" has exclusive jurisdiction of the settlement of the estate, has reference to the time of filing the application with the clerk of the superior court. Dungan v. Superior Court of Fresno County, 84 Pac. 767, 769, 149 Cal. 98, 117 Am. St. Rep. 119.

As maintained

As used in Act Cong. Feb. 25, 1885, c. 149, § 1, 23 Stat. 321 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1524), declaring illegal all inclosures made, erected, or constructed on lands to any of which the person making the same had no claim at the time the inclosure was made, and declaring unlawful "the maintenance, erection, construction or control of any such inclosure," the word "made" has a more comprehensive meaning than the words "constructed" or "erected." A person "makes" an inclosure so long as he maintains it. Since the statute was violated, where a person maintained the inclosure of land to which he had no claim, an indictment charging such an inclosure was not defective for failure to allege that, at the time the inclosure was made, defendant had no claim or color of title to the land made or acquired in good faith or a right thereto asserted with a view to entry. Bircher v. United States, 169 Fed. 589, 591, 95 C. C. A. 87.

As sworn to Act March 4, 1904, c. 394, providing that proofs, affidavits, and oaths required under the public land laws may be made before any United States Commissioner, and that the fees for entries and for final proofs when made before him shall be for each affidavit 25 cents, for each deposition of claimant or witnesses when not prepared by the officer 25 cents, and for each deposition prepared by the officer $1, and making it a misdemeanor to demand or receive a greater sum, fixes the fees of United States Commissioners for administering the oath and attaching the jurat to affidavits required under the land laws, but it is not part of their duty to draft affidavits, in whole or in part, and a United States Commissioner who drafts an affidavit or any part thereof, or who completes the application part of a combined application and affidavit under the land laws, may charge compensation therefor as services beyond his official duty; an affidavit being "made" before an officer when subscribed and sworn to before him by whomsoever drafted. In re James, 195 Fed. 981, 983.

MADE ACQUAINTED

A certificate of acknowledgment of a married woman that she was "made acquainted" with the contents of the deed is equivalent to a certificate that the contents were made known and explained to her. Chauvin v. Wagner, 18 Mo. 531, 544.

MADE OUT IN ITEMS

Civ. Code 1902, § 806, requires that all claims against counties shall be "made out in items," and section 808 provides that no claim shall be valid and payable unless it be presented to and filed with the county board during the fiscal year in which it is contracted or the next thereafter. Held, that a claim is not properly "made out in items" which does not indicate the year in which it arose, so as to indicate that it accrued within the period prescribed. State ex rel. People's Bank of Greenville v. Goodwin, 62 S. E. 1100, 1105, 81 S. C. 419.

MAGAZINE

"Magazines" are defined by Webster as pamphlets published periodically, containing miscellaneous papers or compositions. They are "periodical publications" entitled to the privileges of second-class mail matter. Houghton v. Payne, 24 Sup. Ct. 590, 592, 194 U. S. 88, 48 L. Ed. 888.

MAGISTRATE

Removal of magistrate as special proceeding, see Special Proceeding.

A "magistrate" is an "officer having power to issue a warrant for the arrest of a person charged with a public offense." People v. Swain, 90 Pac. 720, 722, 5 Cal. App. 421 (citing Pen. Code, § 807).

"A 'magistrate' is an officer having power to issue a warrant for the arrest of a person charged with the commission of a crime. The following persons are magistrates: (1) The justices of the Supreme Court; (2) the judges of the Circuit Court; (3) the county judges and justices of the peace; (4) all municipal officers authorized to exercise the powers and perform the duties of a justice of the peace." Wallowa County v. Oakes, 78 Pac. 892, 46 Or. 88.

The clerk of the county court having no authority to issue a warrant for a misdemeanor is not a "magistrate" within Snyder's Comp. Laws, § 6575, providing that a "magistrate" is an officer having power to issue a warrant for the arrest of a person charged with a public offense. Bowen v. State, 115 Pac. 376, 5 Okl. Cr. 605.

The word "magistrate," as used in Rev. St. c. 133, § 17, providing for appeals from the decisions or sentences of magistrates, includes judges of municipal courts as well as trial justices. Sprague v. Inhabitants of Androscoggin County, 71 Atl. 1090, 1091, 104 Me. 352.

Code 1907, § 7519, providing that judges of city courts, etc., are "magistrates," within the meaning of the chapter ("Proceedings to Preserve the Peace"), and authorized to require persons to give security to keep the peace, etc., refers only to affidavits and warrants under that chapter, and not in prosecutions for illegal liquor selling. Herring v. State, 48 South. 476, 477, 158 Ala. 31.

District attorney

The district attorney to whom a confession is made is not a magistrate before whom accused is brought for a judicial hearing, and required by Code Cr. Proc. §§ 188, 196, to advise him that he is entitled to the aid of counsel, and to inform him that he has the right to make a statement in relation to the affair. People v. Randazzio, 87 N. E. 112, 116, 194 N. Y. 147.

Notary public

Where a notary public was authorized by state law to issue a warrant of arrest for misdemeanor, and on such affidavit the governor of the state had instituted requisition proceedings, the notary was a "magistrate" within Rev. St. § 5278, governing interstate extradition, and providing that the same may be based on a magistrate's warrant. Compton v. State of Alabama, 29 Sup. Ct. 606, 606, 214 U. S. 1, 53 L. MAIL MATTER

A post office superintendent discovered a misboxed letter, which had been placed in a "dead" pigeonhole at the top of the case, where defendant, a clerk, was engaged in sorting mail. The letter was removed by the superintendent and handed to a post office inspector, who took it to the addressee, and, without delivering it, obtained permission to open it. He then returned it to the post office, unsealed the letter, and took from it an express order for $2, a statement of account, and a letter from the sender of the money order. After making a copy of the letter, he placed it in the envelope with two marked $1 bills, and forwarded the money order and the statement to the addressee. The envelope containing the letter and bills, having been duly sealed, was returned to the dead pigeonhole, and a short time thereafter was embezzled by defendant. Held, that the letter at the time it was returned by the inspector to the dead pigeonhole had not ceased to be "mail matter," and that defendant was therefore properly convicted of embezzling a letter containing inclosures, in violation of Rev. St. § 5467. Ennis v. United States, 154 Fed. 842, 843, 83 C. C. A. 478 (citing Montgomery v. United States, 16 Sup. Ct. 797, 162 U. S. 410, 40 L. Ed. 1020; Scott v. U. S., 19 Sup. Ct. 209, 172 U. S. 343, 43 L. Ed. 471; Goode v. U. S., 16 Sup. Ct. 136, 159 U. S. 663, 40 L. Ed. 297).

MAIL ORDER

The chief element of the "mail order" method of doing business consists in dealing directly with the customer or consumer by means of placing in his hands a printed catalogue containing a description of the articles of merchandise offered for sale and the price thereof. An association of retail dealers can lawfully agree among themselves that they will not purchase merchandise from wholesalers and jobbers who sell to mail order houses and to inform each other as to what wholesalers and jobbers do sell to such houses. Montgomery Ward & Co. v. South Dakota Retail Merchants' & Hardware Dealers' Ass'n, 150 Fed. 413, 415.

MAILED

The word "mailed," as used in the specifications on which a contract for the sale of coal was made, requiring notice of a failure to deliver to be "mailed," being used in its ordinary sense, referred to mailing in accordance with the ordinary method of business, and did not contemplate the sending of a notice by registered mail, so that the mere delivery to the postal authorities and registration of a notice did not put the seller in default. Price v. City of New York, 93 N. Y. Supp. 967, 970, 104 App. Div. 198.

The general statement of one that he "mailed" a letter to another is sufficient evidence that he did everything necessary to raise the presumption that it was received in due course of mail, and thereby show that the addressee had notice of matters therein stated. To be properly "mailed" a letter must be addressed, stamped, and deposited in the proper place for the receipt of mail, and, since the word "mailed" implies the doing of all these acts, a general statement that a letter was "mailed" is sufficient. Ward v. D. A. Morr Transfer & Storage Co., 95 S. W. 964, 965, 119 Mo. App. 83 (citing Pier v. Heinrichshoffen, 67 Mo. 163, 29 Am. Rep. 501; Rolla State Bank v. Pezoldt, 95 Mo. App. 404, 69 S. W. 51).

Prepayment of postage

The word "mailed," when applied to a letter, means that it was properly prepared for transmission by mail, and was placed in the custody of the officer whose duty it was to forward the mail. Southern Engine & Boiler Works v. Vaughan, 135 S. W. 913, 915, 98 Ark. 388, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1062.

In testimony that a letter containing a notice was mailed, the word "mailed" implies the payment of the necessary postage. City of Omaha v. Yancey, 135 N. W. 1044, 1047, 91 Neb. 261.

The single word "mailed," as used by a notary in his certificate, is held to imply that the requisite postage was prepaid. Cutting v. Harrington, 71 Atl. 374, 377, 104 Me. 96, 129 Am. St. Rep. 373 (citing Rolla State Bank v. Pezoldt, 69 S. W. 51, 95 Mo. App. 404).

MAIM

"Maiming" is to deprive a person of some member of his body. Cooper v. State, 132 S. W. 355, 356, 60 Tex. Cr. R. 411.

In an affidavit, which charged that defendant unlawfully, wantonly, or maliciously killed or maimed a cow, followed the Code form for an indictment for wanton and malicious injury to animals (Code 1907, §§ 6230, 7161, form 71), except that the word "maimed" was substituted for the word "injured," the word "maim" implied a deprivation of a necessary part, a crippling, disabling, or permanent injury, and was more than equivalent in meaning to the word "injure," and included the meaning of the word "injure." Hence the affidavit sufficiently charged the statutory offense. Richmond v. State, 58 South. 973, 974, 4 Ala. App. 139 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4275).

To "maim" an animal, within the meaning of a statute making it an offense to kill or maim cattle, is to be understood in its technical signification, and the person who inflicts upon an animal injury of a character less than that which would deprive it of or render useless one or more of its useful members, is not guilty of an offense under the statute, and the owner of the animal is remitted to his action for damages. But one who injures one of the useful members of an animal, such as its members of locomotion, or such as are useful to the owner of the animal, violates the statute. Brown v. State, 56 S. E. 405, 406, 127 Ga. 287.

White's Ann. Pen. Code, art. 612, provides that "to maim" is to willfully deprive a person of the hand, arm, finger, toe, foot, leg, nose, or ear; to put out the eye, or deprive a person of any member of his body. Article 614 provides that "to disfigure" is to willfully place any mark on the face or other part of the person. Article 604 provides a punishment for assault with intent to commit the offense of maiming or disfiguring. Held, that a charge of maiming and disfiguring carries with it a charge of assault with intent to maim and disfigure. Pool v. State, 129 S. W. 1135, 1136, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 482.

MAIN

MAIN CHANNEL

The "main channel" of the Mississippi river means the principal navigable and navigated channel, the one customarily followed in steamboat navigation. Franklin v. Layland, 97 N. W. 499, 502, 120 Wis. 72. See, also, State v. Muncie Pulp Co., 104 S. W. 437, 442, 119 Tenn. 47.

MAIN LINE

The words "main line," in municipal ordinances granting, respectively, the right to construct a small extension to the Garden Street branch of the Cleveland street railway system and the right to lay a second track on a portion of that branch, to terminate with the expiration of the grant for the main line, must be deemed to refer to the rest of the Garden Street branch, and not to the Euclid Avenue line. Cleveland Electric Ry. Co. v. City of Cleveland, 27 Sup. Ct. 202-210, 204 U. S. 116, 51 L. Ed. 399.

MAIN SEA

"Main sea" and "high sea" are synonymous. United States v. Newark Meadows Imp. Co., 173 Fed. 426, 428.

MAIN SHAFT

The word "shaft," as used in connection with or applied to factories, is a revolving bar to convey the force which is generated by some prime mover to the different working machines, and a "line or main shaft" is a bar of considerable length, and usually bearing a number of pulleys by which power is transmitted to countershafts. Hohenstein-Harmetz Furniture Co. v. Matthews, 92 N. E. 198, 199, 46 Ind. App. 616.

MAIN STEM

The term "main stem," as used in the New Jersey statute relating to taxation of railroads, is expressly defined to include the roadbed not exceeding 100 feet in width with its rails and sleepers and structures thereon not including passenger or freight buildings. The original statute made passenger depots a part of the main stem. United New Jersey R. & Canal Co. v. Parker, 69 Atl. 239, 243, 75 N. J. Law, 771.

Under Act 1888 (Gen. St. p. 3325, § 214) as amended (P. L. 1906, p. 220, c. 122), defining the "main stem" of a railroad for purposes of taxation as "the 'roadbed' not exceeding one hundred feet in width with its rails and sleepers, and all structures erected thereon and used in connection therewith, not including, however, any passenger or freight buildings erected thereon," does not extend beyond the "roadbed," although such "roadbed" be less in width than 100 feet. The court said: "'Roadbed' signifies the bed or foundation upon which rests the superstructure of rails and sleepers. Giving due effect to the word 'main' in the phrase 'main stem,' the 'roadbed' that is to constitute 'main stem' must be deemed the bed or foundation of the principal tracks of the railroad at the place in question. The width of 100 feet, as used in the statute, is a measure of limitation, not of extension; and the fact that a railroad company at any place on its line owns land of the width of 100 feet or more does not extend 'main stem' to the width of 100 feet, unless the 'roadbed' of its principal tracks at the place in question extends to that width." In re New York Bay R. Co., 67 Atl. 1049, 1051, 75 N. J. Law, 389 (quoting and adopting definition in re United New Jersey Railroad & Canal Co., 67 Atl. 1075, 75 N. J. Law, 395).

The act of 1888 (Gen. St. p. 3325, par. 214), relating to the taxation of railroad and canal property, declares that the "main stem" of a railroad, the assessment of which shall be made by the state authorities, shall include "the 'roadbed,' not exceeding 100 feet in width with its rails and sleepers, (and) depot building used for passengers connected therewith." A supplement to such act (P. L. 1906, p. 220) declares that "main stem" shall hereafter be held to include the "roadbed" not exceeding 100 feet in width with its rails and sleepers, and all structures erected thereon and used in connection therewith, not including, however, any passenger or freight buildings erected thereon. The term "roadbed" is of plain import and significance, the bed or foundation on which rests the superstructure of rails and sleepers. By giving due effect to the word "main" in the phrase "main stem," the "roadbed" that is to constitute "main stem" must be deemed the bed or foundation of the principal tracks of the railroad at the place in question. In re United New Jersey R. & Canal Co., 67 Atl. 1075, 1076, 75 N. J. Law, 385.

Act April 8, 1906 (P. L. 1906, pp. 122, 220), providing a method for the taxation of railroad property, defines the "main stem" of a railroad as the roadbed, "not exceeding 100 feet in width, with its rails and sleepers, and all structures erected thereon and used in connection therewith, not including, however, any passenger or freight buildings erected thereon." The statute has made a distinction between the strictly essential right of way of a railroad, the existence of which is indispensable to its operation and the remaining land of the company used for railroad purposes, and this distinction rests upon the ground, not that these different classes of property are put to different uses, but upon the dependence of the several companies upon local police protection, and, as compensation for that protection, the local municipal governments are permitted to tax that part of the railroad property not included within the "main stem" of the railroad. Central R. Co. of New Jersey v. State Board of Assessors, 67 Atl. 672, 674, 680, 681, 75 N. J. Law, 120.

A "main stem," as the term is used in P. L. 1884, p. 142, as amended by P. L. 1888, p. 269, providing for the taxation of railroads, includes the roadbed not exceeding 100 feet in width, with its rails and sleepers, depot buildings used for passengers connected therewith, and must always exist in every incorporated railroad operated for the transportation of freight and passengers, or either. Jersey City v. State Board of Assessors, 68 Atl. 227, 228, 74 N. J. Law, 720.

Land on which railroad tracks are maintained, which originally formed a part of the main line, and which were left out of the main line by a straightening of tracks, but are continued in operation for railroad purposes, do not form parts of the "main stem" of the principal line of the railroad, and are not branch railroads having their own main stem, but are in contemplation of law the same as a "siding." Jersey City v. State Board of Assessors, 69 Atl. 200, 201, 75 N. J. Law, 571.

MAIN TRACK

A short piece of railroad track used only for freight, to which defendant's trains were deflected by a switch, admitting them to defendant's freight depot, and ending at a post, was not defendant's "main track," within Laws 1907, p. 475, § 1, relating to railroad crossings, and providing that any railroad company desiring to cross the main track of another railroad company should, before constructing any such crossing, apply to the railroad and warehouse commission for permission so to do, and comply with certain proceedings therein specified. Chicago, P. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Jacksonville Ry. & Light Co., 91 N. E. 1024, 1027, 245 Ill. 155.

In the Revenue Act, § 89 (Laws 1903, pp. 414-418, c. 73), relating to assessment of railroads, and providing that the valuation of each mile shall be determined by dividing the whole value by the number of miles of the "main track" of each road or line, the words "main track" are clearly used to distinguish from side or second track, and turnout, spur, and warehouse tracks, and not to distinguish the main line from the branch line. State ex rel. Platte County v. Sheldon, 113 N. W. 208, 210, 79 Neb. 453.

MAINLAND

The word "mainland," in Revisal 1905, § 3474, forbidding anchoring of a floathouse for fishing or hunting wild fowl in shoal water not more than 300 yards from the mainland on the west side of Currituck Sound, means the principal land, as opposed to island. State v. Barco, 63 S. E. 673, 674, 150 N. C. 792.

MAINS

Water mains as personal property, see Personal Property.

By the word "mains," in Laws 1890, c. 566, p. 1148, § 65, providing that any owner or occupant of any premises within 100 feet of any main laid down by any gas light corporation may require it to supply him with gas, were intended those pipes through which the company distributed the gas that was designed to be taken therefrom into the buildings to be lighted. Moore v. Champlain Electric Co., 85 N. Y. Supp. 37, 39, 88 App. Div. 289.

MAINTAIN

See Establish and Maintain.

Keep and maintain, see Keep.

The word "maintain" has been defined as meaning to support that which has already been brought into existence. Kendrick &

Roberts v. Warren Bros. Co., 72 Atl. 461, 464, 110 Md. 47.

"Maintain" is defined to mean to hold or keep in a particular state or condition, especially in a state of efficiency; to support, sustain, not to suffer to decline. Kovachoff v. St. Johns Lumber Co., 121 Pac. 801, 803, 61 Or. 174.

The power to "maintain and operate" waterworks and electric light plants is not necessarily incident to or implied in the power to "purchase or construct" waterworks or electric light plants. The word "maintain" does not mean to provide or construct, but to keep up and preserve. State ex rel. City of Chillicothe v. Wilder, 98 S. W. 465, 467, 200 Mo. 97.

Where a boom company agreed with a riparian owner, during the continuance of a license granted such company by the owner to use the river and maintain therein piles and booms convenient in its business and releasing the company from all claims for future damages to plaintiff's land by acts of defendant in the management of its business, to maintain a boom of logs along the bank on the owner's land to protect the banks from injury, the word "maintain," as used in the contract, meant to keep up in a particular state or condition, and did not bind the company to indemnify the landowner against loss, where such maintenance became impossible for a time because of an unprecedented flood, which carried away the boom, where the company had constructed a boom and exercised due care in its maintenance, and renewed it within a reasonable time after the flood. Coleman v. Mississippi & Rum River Boom Co., 131 N. W. 641, 642, 114 Minn. 443, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1109.

Civ. Code, § 551, which provides that no canal can be laid out, constructed, or maintained so as to obstruct any public highway, and that the one so maintaining or using such a canal must repair the bridges, etc., was enacted in its present form in 1905. Before that it provided that every water or canal corporation must construct and keep in good repair at all times for public use across their canal, flume, etc., all the bridges that the county may require. This section was based on prior statutory provisions, passed nearly half a century before. Pol. Code, § 2694, provides that when highways are laid across canals on public lands those using the canals must prepare them so that the highway may cross without danger, and section 2737, providing penalties for obstructing or injuring highways, contains provisions for bridging ditches which cross pre-existing highways. Held that, in view of these provisions the original act did not impose upon the owners of canals the duty of bridging them whenever the public should lay out a road over them, and that the present section does not impose that duty, for the word "maintain," which is the basis of the claim, should be construed merely as a prohibition against maintaining a canal in such a way that it would injure an existing highway. City of Madera v. Madera Canal & Irrigation Co., 115 Pac. 936, 938, 159 Cal. 749.

As clean

The cleaning of streets is "repairing" or "maintaining" them within Laws 1893, p. 252, c. 264, authorizing the street and park commissioners to build, construct, repair, and maintain highways in the city, in view of Laws 1893, c. 59, requiring towns to keep their highways in good repair, suitable for travel thereon, and creating a liability for fine and responsibility for damages suffered by travelers from defects in highways; for the presence of rubbish, dirt, and ashes in a street may cause it to be in a bad state of repair and in an unsuitable condition for travel, and any act that is reasonably necessary to put or keep the street in good repair suitable for travel thereon is "repairing" or "maintaining" the street. Connor v. City of Manchester, 60 Atl. 436, 437, 73 N. H. 233.

As commence an action

The word "maintained" in the Employers' Liability Act, providing that no action for injuries thereunder shall be "maintained" unless notice of the time, place, and cause of injury is given to the employer, is synonymous with the word "begun" or "commenced" and the statute makes the giving of such notice a condition precedent to the bringing of an action under it. Grasso v. Holbrook, Cabot & Daly Contracting Co., 92 N. Y. Supp. 101, 103, 102 App. Div. 49 (citing Burbank v. Inhabitants of Auburn, 31 Me. 590; Boutiller v. Steamboat Milwaukee, 8 Minn. 97, 105 [Gil. 72]; Smith v. Lyon, 44 Conn. 178; Byers v. Bourret, 64 Cal. 73, 28 Pac. 61; Mertz v. City of Brooklyn, 11 N. Y. Supp. 778, affirmed 128 N. Y. 617, 28 N. E. 253).

The word "maintain" in a statute in reference to actions comprehends the institution as well as the support of the action, though it may be used to express a meaning corresponding to its more restricted definition. National Mines Co. v. Sixth Judicial Dist. Court Humboldt County, 118 Pac. 996, 1000, 34 Nev. 67.

A prohibition against "maintaining" an action implies a prohibition against beginning it, for the beginning of the action is one of the necessary steps in maintaining it. A foreign corporation, incapacitated from suing at the time of an institution of a suit by it on the ground that it has not obtained the license required by Rev. St. 1899, §§ 1025, 1026 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 888, 890), cannot cure the incapacity by thereafter taking out a license. Amalgamated Zinc & Lead Co. v. Bay State Zinc Min. Co., 120 S. W. 31, 34, 221 Mo. 7, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 492.

As continue an action

The word "maintained," as used in section 54, c. 66, R. S., means to prosecute to a conclusion an action already begun. Shurtleff v. Redlon, 82 Atl. 645, 648, 109 Me. 62.

The verb "maintain" in pleading has a distinct technical signification. It signifies to support what has already been brought into existence. Under a statute requiring partnerships transacting business under a designation not showing the persons interested to file a certificate stating the names of all the members, and to publish it once a week for four weeks, etc., and providing that persons doing business as partners contrary to the statute shall not maintain any action until they have filed the certificate and made the publication therein required, where an action is brought by a partnership, the firm name of which does not indicate all the partners, failure to file the required certificate is matter of defense, and must be set up in the answer by way of abatement; but if the requirement as to the filing and publication are complied with before the defense is interposed, it will be sufficient, even though the publication was not completed at the time the action was commenced. Nicholson v. Auburn Gold Min. & Mill. Co., 92 Pac. 651, 6 Cal. App. 547 (quoting California Savings & Loan Soc. v. Harris, 43 Pac. 525, 111 Cal. 133, 138).

The statute requiring foreign corporations to file a designation of a person on whom process may be served within 60 days after commencing business within the state, and providing that unless it does so it shall not "maintain" any action in the courts of the state, does not deprive foreign corporations of the right at any time to commence an action for the protection of its property or the enforcement of its rights, and it is within its power at any time after the commencement of the action to comply with the statute and thereafter maintain such action. Black v. Vermont Marble Co., 82 Pac. 1060, 1062, 1 Cal. App. 718.

It was held in Carson-Rand Co. v. Stern, 31 S. W. 772, 129 Mo. 381, 32 L. R. A. 420, that the word "maintain" meant literally "to hold by the hand," and in its ordinary use, "to uphold," "to sustain," "to keep up"; and in pleading it means "to support what has already been brought into existence." Tri-State Amusement Co. v. Forest Park Highlands Amusement Co., 90 S. W. 1020, 1022, 192 Mo. 404, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 688, 111 Am. St. Rep. 511, 4 Ann. Cas. 808.

Under a statute providing that "no action shall be 'maintained'" by a foreign corporation so long as it fails to comply with the law, when considered in connection with other provisions of the act imposing penalties on officers and corporations for failing to comply with the law, and providing that a failure to comply shall not affect the validity of contracts made by such corporations, an action by a foreign corporation must be stayed during the period of its noncompliance with the law, on noncompliance being properly pleaded in abatement; the word "maintain" carrying a different meaning from "institute" or "begin," and implying that an action has been begun before it can be maintained. National Fertilizer Co. v. Fall River Five Cents Sav. Bank, 82 N. E. 671, 672, 196 Mass. 458, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 561, 13 Ann. Cas. 510.

The words "may maintain an action," as generally used, mean may successfully maintain an action. Greentree v. Wallace, 93 Pac. 598, 599, 77 Kan. 149 (citing and distinguishing In re Massey, 42 Pac. 365, 56 Kan. 120).

As having control and custody of place

A hotel porter who, for a guest of the hotel, received and stored in a room of the house a barrel of bottled beer belonging to the guest, and who afterwards, as required by the guest, iced the liquor and served it at the guest's room, where it was drunk by him and his friends, was guilty of maintaining a place where persons were permitted to resort for the purpose of drinking intoxicating liquor as a beverage, contrary to the provisions of Laws 1901, c. 232, § 1 (Gen. Stat. 1909, § 4387). State v. Ross, 121 Pac. 908, 909, 86 Kan. 799.

As erection

The word "maintain" ordinarily means to preserve something which is already in existence; but, considering that, by the use of the words "unless one of them chooses to let his land lie without fencing," Civ. Code, § 1301, declaring that coterminous owners are mutually bound equally to maintain the boundaries and monuments between them and the fences between them, unless one of them chooses to let his land lie without fencing, applies to land not fenced, it is comprehensive enough, in the light of the subject-matter, to include the erection, as well as the maintenance, of the fences. Hoar v. Hennessy, 74 Pac. 452, 454, 455, 29 Mont. 253.

Keep synonymous

See Keep.

As keep in repair

Where plaintiff, under a contract with abutting property owners, constructed a pavement and agreed to "maintain and keep it in repair" for a period of five years, and after the pavement was completed it was torn up and damaged by the bursting of a water main beneath the surface of the street, plaintiff's contract to "maintain and keep in repair" did not impose on it the duty of repairing a damage of the kind in question, but merely contemplated such repairs as use and wear might render necessary. Hence in repairing the pavement plaintiff was a mere volunteer and could not recover damages of the city. Green River Asphalt Co. v. City of St. Louis, 87 S. W. 985, 986, 189 Mo. 576.

The word "maintain," within Gen. Stat. 1902, § 388, requiring widows to "maintain" and keep in repair the property set apart to them as dower, does not mean "to provide" or "construct," but means to "keep up, not to suffer to fall or decline"; "keep in repair" and "maintain" as used in the statute being synonymous. Ferguson v. Rochford, 79 Atl. 177, 178, 84 Conn. 202, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1212.

The word "maintain" is practically the same thing as "repair," which means to restore to a sound or good state, after decay, injury, dilapidation, or partial destruction, and, when used in reference to railroad right of way, includes the idea of keeping the right of way in such a condition that it can be used for the purpose for which it was intended. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. of Texas v. Bryan (Tex.) 107 S. W. 572, 576 (citing Verdin v. City of St. Louis [Mo.] 27 S. W. 447).

As make

See Make.

As operation

The word "maintain," as used in a contract by which the owners of an adjoining office building agreed on a common entrance and hallway on the center line dividing the premises, and to pay the expense of keeping up and "maintaining" common conveniences including an elevator, was held to include the operation of such elevator, and not simply to mean to put it in and have it stand idle at the behest of one of the parties, which was contrary to the construction given the contract by sharing the expense of operation. Globe Ins. Co. v. Wayne, 80 N. E. 13, 18, 75 Ohio St. 451.

Permanence

Defendant railroad in May, 1848, covenanted with plaintiffs' predecessors, their heirs and assigns, to construct and maintain a turnout and side track at Dorsey's Run, to take up and set down at the siding by defendant's passenger cars all persons going to and from the farm then occupied by the first parties and to leave at the siding to be unloaded all freight weighing at least 3,000 pounds shipped to the first parties on which the cost of transportation had been paid at the place of loading. Defendant complied with its covenant until 1907, when it constructed a cut-off on its main stem by which a large part of the right of way over plaintiff's land was abandoned, when it discontinued the turnout, and refused longer to maintain a station at that point. Held, that the word "maintain" as used in such covenant did not require defendant to continue the turnout and station permanently, and that the length of time during which the covenant had been complied with constituted a substantial performance thereof, so that the railroad company was not liable for damages for its breach. Whalen v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 78 Atl. 166, 167, 112 Md. 187.

As rebuild or reconstruct

The word "maintain" in a contract for the extension of a railway branch from a railroad company's railroad to the mines of a mining company, whereby the mining company agreed to construct the substructure, and the railroad company to lay the track of the branch railroad, and to "maintain" and operate the same, requires the railroad company to reconstruct a bridge constructed by the mining company after the bridge was washed away by an extraordinary freshet, though the bridge would become the mining company's property after being completed under the contract which contemplated that the structure should remain the mining company's property. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. United States Iron Co., 101 S. W. 414, 419, 118 Tenn. 194.

As supplying feed

Laws 1906, p. 14, c. 13, appropriating money for "maintaining" the executive residence, does not authorize the employment of any part of the sum so appropriated for the purchase of provisions to be used there. Bailey v. Kelly, 79 Pac. 735, 70 Kan. 869.

MAINTENANCE

The Kingston city charter created a board of water commissioners, with power, with the consent of the common council, to construct and maintain a waterworks system. Section 98 provided that the moneys derived therefrom should be applied to the payment of the cost of maintaining, operating, and extending the waterworks, and to the payment of principal and interest on bonds as they fall due. The board, by section 99, was given power to keep the system in operation independent of the city council, and to fix and collect water rates, and make and enforce rules and regulations. By section 101 the moneys derived from water rates and penalties were required to be paid to the city treasurer, to be credited to the water fund and applied to the payment of expenses of ordinary maintenance and management, the balance, if any, to the payment of principal and interest on bonds, and any surplus still remaining to be used for any lawful city purpose. Held, that additional filters, requiring an expenditure of $16,235, was not an ordinary "maintenance" expense, and that the board had no power to incur such expense without the consent of the city council. Coykendall v. Harrison, 134 N. Y. Supp. 446, 450, 150 App. Div. 46.

Creation of road system

Const. art. 8, § 9, providing that the Legislature may pass local laws for the "maintenance" of public roads without the local notice ordinarily required for special laws, is applicable to the Shelby county special road law, which provides for the creation as well as maintenance of a road system. Ex parte Cooks (Tex.) 135 S. W. 139, 141.

Establishment of highway

Const. art. 3, § 56, subd. 5, declares that the Legislature shall not, except as otherwise provided in the Constitution, pass any local or special laws authorizing the laying out, opening, altering, or maintaining of roads. Article 11, § 2, declares that the laying out, constructing, and repairing of county roads shall be provided for by general laws. Article 8, § 9, declares that the Legislature may authorize an additional ad valorem tax for the further maintenance of the public roads, and that the Legislature may pass local laws for the maintenance of public roads or highways without the local notice required by special or local laws. Section 9, art. 8, was added to the other provisions by amendment. Held, that the word "maintenance" as used in article 8, § 9, included the laying out and constructing of roads, and hence Acts 24th Leg. (Laws 1895) p. 213, c. 132, creating a road system of Dallas county, was not unconstitutional. Dallas County v. Plowman, 91 S. W. 221, 222, 99 Tex. 509.

As rebuild or reconstruct

Ky. St. § 1840, giving the fiscal court power to appropriate county funds for the maintenance of highways, and section 4306, giving the fiscal court general charge and supervision of the public roads with authority to repair same, the fiscal court had power to reconstruct a turnpike road. Hanlon v. Cleary, 183 S. W. 953, 954, 142 Ky. 46.

State institution

The provision for "maintenance," in Laws 1907, p. 18, c. 28, making appropriations for the Institution of the Feeble-Minded at Grafton, does not include employé's wages, fuel, etc., for which specific sums were appropriated, but does include the cost of food and clothing of inmates; there being no specific appropriation for these items. State v. Lewis, 119 N. W. 1037, 1039, 18 N. D. 125.

MAINTENANCE (Of Manual Training School)

A will recited that it was the purpose of the husband of testatrix to found an institution wherein sound business principles might be taught, and where pupils might be fitted for manufacturing and business careers, and that to carry out his wishes she made a donation to prepare, construct, and maintain a manual training school to teach cooking, sewing, and domestic economy to girls, and all things of mechanical and other technical work to young men, and to teach both boys and girls such things as are usually taught in modern manual training schools, and required the city to raise a specified sum for the purpose, and provided that thereupon the property should be transferred to the city to perpetually maintain the school. Held, that the will contemplated the "maintenance of a manual training school" within St. 1898, § 496b, as amended by Laws 1907, c. 503, and the charter of the city (Laws 1891, c. 59), authorizing the maintenance of schools of manual training, so that the city could accept the donation and comply with the conditions. Maxcy v. City of Oshkosh, 128 N. W. 899, 905, 144 Wis. 238, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 787.

MAINTENANCE (Of Office)

Under Stock Corporation Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 59) § 33, which provides that every foreign stock corporation, having an office for the transaction of business in the state, shall keep therein a stockbook, containing the names of stockholders, the number of shares held by them, and the amounts paid thereon, which shall be open for the inspection of stockholders, judgment creditors, and certain authorized state officers, and that, if any such foreign stock corporation has a transfer agent, such stockbook may be deposited with such agent, to be open to the same inspection, subject to a penalty on refusal, imposes such duty only upon stock corporations having an office for the transaction of business in this state; and the mere fact that a foreign corporation, which does not own, rent, or occupy an office of its own within the state, has a transfer agent for the convenience of stockholders, does not constitute "the maintenance of an office for the transaction of business," and hence the transfer agent is not subject to a penalty upon refusal to allow inspection of the stockbook. Wadsworth v. Equitable Trust Co. of New York, 138 N. Y. Supp. 842, 153 App. Div. 737.

MAINTENANCE (Of Persons)

Kirby's Dig. § 3803, requiring a guardian to give bond to faithfully conduct a sale, etc., applies only to sales for reinvestment, and a sale to discharge a mortgage on other land was not a sale for reinvestment, though the petition and order for sale designated it as such; the words "education" and "maintenance" in another statute authorizing sales being broad enough to authorize a sale to protect the ward's estate. Harper v. Smith, 116 S. W. 674, 675, 89 Ark. 284, 131 Am. St. Rep. 93.

Testator devised land to her husband, with power to sell and to have the proceeds, but charging the land or its proceeds with the maintenance of a nephew, 14 years old when the will was made, and with the expense of preparing him for "any profession he may wish" or testatrix's husband might "think best," and reciting that it was supposed that the charge would take all the land or its proceeds, but that, if it did not, the remainder was left to the husband to give to the nephew or "to dispose of as he may wish." Held, that the husband took a fee-simple title subject only to the charge for the nephew's maintenance and education; that the nephew took no interest in the surplus proceeds; that the "maintenance" contemplated was maintenance during the nephew's minority; and that he, having reached his majority before testatrix's death, is only entitled to such part of the proceeds of the land on the husband's death as may be necessary to educate him for a profession, if he is good faith desires to be so educated. Knight v. Collins (Ky.) 118 S. W. 181, 133.

Permanent alimony synonyms

"Maintenance" and "permanent alimony" are synonymous terms and mean an allowance in money to be recovered on decree of divorce from the party in fault for the support of the innocent party." Huffman v. Huffman, 86 Pac. 593, 595, 47 Or. 610, 114 Am. St. Rep. 943.

As support

The "maintenance" of dependents is such support as consists in the furnishing of food, clothing, lodging, or education. "Maintenance" in the matter of clothing does not refer to occasional gifts of clothing, but such a regular supply of clothing as may be reasonably necessary to make the body comfortable. Western Commercial Travelers' Ass'n. v. Tennent, 106 S. W. 1073, 1077, 128 Mo. App. 541 (quoting Alexander v. Parker, 33 N. E. 183, 144 Ill. 355, 19 L. R. A. 187).

MAINTENANCE (Of Suits)

See, also, Champerly.

Maintenance is an officious intermeddling in a suit that in no way belongs to one by assisting either party, with money or otherwise, to prosecute or defend. It is said to be an offense against good morals, in that it keeps alive strife and perverts the remedial powers of the law into an engine of oppression. Lacey v. Davis (Iowa) 98 N. W. 366, 367 (quoting 6 Cyc. p. 850); Smith v. Hartsell, 63 S. E. 172, 174, 150 N. C. 71, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 203; Gelo v. Pfister & Vogel Leather Co., 113 N. W. 69, 70, 132 Wis. 575 (quoting and adopting definition in Andrews v. Thayer, 30 Wis. 228, 233); Mud Valley Oil & Gas Co. v. Hitchcock, 81 N. E. 111, 112, 40 Ind. App. 105 (citing Anderson's Law Dict.; 4 Black. Comm. 135). "The terms of this definition obviously do not include all kinds of aid in the prosecution of defenses of another's cause, and it has therefore always been held not to extend to persons having an interest in the thing in variance, nor to persons acting in the lawful exercise of their profession as counsel or attorneys at law. Nor does the doctrine of the common law as to maintenance apply to persons who either have a legal interest in the suit prosecuted by them, or who act under the bona fide belief that they have." Gelo v. Pfister & Vogel Leather Co., 113 N. W. 69, 70, 132 Wis. 575 (quoting and adopting definition in Davies v. Stowell, 47 N. W. 370, 78 Wis. 336, 10 L. R.

A. 190). Such contracts are unenforceable at common law, as they tend to pervert the process of the law into an engine of oppression. Mud Valley Oil & Gas Co. v. Hitchcock, 81 N. E. 111, 112, 40 Ind. App. 105.

Entire want of interest

"Maintenance" is an officious intermeddling in a suit that in no wise belongs to one, by maintaining or assisting either party with money or otherwise, to prosecute or defend it. "Champerty," which is a species of maintenance, is the unlawful maintaining of a suit in consideration of some bargain to have a part of the thing in dispute or some profit out of it; the champertor agreeing to carry on the suit at his own expense. Where, however, the person promoting the suit of another has any interest in the subject-matter, he is justified in participating and is not guilty of officious intermeddling within the definition of "champerty" or "maintenance." Finlen v. Heinze, 73 Pac. 123, 127, 28 Mont. 548.

Champerty distinguished

"Maintenance" is defined as an "officious intermeddling in a suit that no way belongs to one, by assisting either party, with money or otherwise, to prosecute or defend." The offense may be committed by stepping in after litigation has been begun, as by encouraging and aiding its origin. "Champerty" is generally treated in connection with "maintenance." The champertor has in view a profit to himself in a share of the spoils of the litigation. The maintainer is more of a voluntary intermeddler and stirs up the strife for the love of it. He is described as an officious intermeddler. In other words, he interferes where he has no business. Breeden v. Frankford Marine, Accident & Plate Glass Ins. Co., 85 S. W. 930, 931, 110 Mo. App. 312 (citing Duke v. Harper, 66 Mo. 51, 37 Am. Rep. 314).

Aiding poor man

The law of "maintenance," as I understand it, upon the modern construction, is confined to cases where a man improperly, for the purpose of stirring up litigation and strife, encourages others either to bring actions or to make defenses which they have no right to make. To give financial aid to a poor suitor who is prosecuting a meritorious cause of action does not constitute "maintenance," in the absence of any bargain to share the recovery, and is not violative of law or public policy. Jahn v. Champagne Lumber Co., 157 Fed. 407, 418 (citing Davies v. Stowell, 47 N. W. 371, 78 Wis. 334, 338, 10 L. R. A. 190).

MAJOR LEAGUE

Three organizations, the National League, the American League, and the National Association, include in their membership practically every professional baseball club in the United States. The first two are known as the "major leagues," and the last as the "minor league." Kelly v. Herrman, 155 Fed. 887, 888.

MAJORITY

See Requisite Majority.

See, also, Votes Cast.

By the word "majority" is meant the greater number; more than half of the whole number or a given number or group. A majority of voters is a greater part of such voters. Mills v. Hallgren, 124 N. W. 1077, 1079, 146 Iowa, 215.

L. O. L. § 4052, subd. 14, authorizing selection of a school building site by a "majority of the voters present" at a school meeting, requires a vote of more than one-half of those present, and not a mere plurality. Baxter v. Davis, 113 Pac. 438, 58 Or. 109 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4286).

Wherever the words "the council for the time being shall, by a majority vote of all the members elected," or words of like import, occur in the charter of a municipal corporation, relative to the members of the common council thereof, they will be construed to mean a majority of the whole number of members to which the common council is entitled under the charter. Wood v. Gordon, 52 S. E. 261, 262, 58 W. Va. 321 (distinguishing Osburn v. Staley, 5 W. Va. 85, 13 Am. Rep. 640).

In a will devising property to four trustees named "and to the survivors of them," and empowering them to act, "or the 'majority' of them," "the term 'majority' has reference to a majority of the survivors and not to a majority of the full number of trustees." Bascom v. Weed, 105 N. Y. Supp. 459, 466, 53 Misc. Rep. 496.

Under chapter 341, p. 624, Laws 1899, the word "majority" means a majority of all votes cast at the caucus, including blank ballots. State ex rel. Dietrich v. Patterson, 96 N. W. 1135, 119 Wis. 52.

As majority of entire body

As used in Ky. St. 1903 (Charter of Cities of the Second Class) § 3044, providing that a majority of members elect of both the board of aldermen and the general council shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business in joint session, a "majority of both boards" means a majority of the members taken as a whole, and not a majority of each board considered separately. Davis v. Claus, 100 S. W. 263, 265, 125 Ky. 4.

As majority of those acting as a body in session

Where a city charter provided that the mayor should nominate all appointive officers, and that his appointment should be final unless within five days thereafter a "majority of the common council" should file objections

In writing, the term "majority of the common council" did not mean the common council acting as a body in session, but the provision was satisfied by the filing of objections by a majority of the body without reference to the time or manner of their action. State ex rel. Paulette v. Bandel, 97 S. W. 222, 223, 121 Mo. App. 516.

The statute authorizing majority of the board to hire a teacher means a majority acting at a legal meeting, and not a majority of the directors acting separately. Johnson v. Dye, 127 S. W. 413, 414, 142 Mo. App. 424.

As majority of those entitled to vote

The words "majority of the qualified voters and taxpayers of any school district," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 9772 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4483), providing that when a majority of the qualified voters and taxpayers of any school district, at any annual or special meeting called for that purpose, shall deem it necessary to have additional ground for school purposes, the board of directors may proceed to condemn, etc., meant that the proposition must receive a majority of all the qualified voters and taxpayers of the district, and that a mere majority of all those present, unless it also be a majority of all the qualified voters and taxpayers of the district, is insufficient. School District Mo. 3 v. Oellien, 108 S. W. 529, 530, 209 Mo. 464.

As majority of legal votes cast

Under St. 1912, c. 559, pt. 3, § 1, revising the charter of the city of Salem, which provided that the act should be submitted to the registered voters at the state election in 1912, for a vote primarily on the question whether the present charter should be repealed, and secondarily on the question whether, if it was repealed, the new charter should be plan 1 or plan 2, and that if, on a "majority of the ballots cast," the votes should be for a repeal, the plan receiving the largest number of votes cast should be adopted as the city charter, the ballot on which the questions were printed contained, besides the names of a large number of candidates for state and national offices, questions upon the adoption of constitutional amendments, and the total number of ballots cast was 6,966, of which, on the question of repealing the charter 1,676 were blank, 2,240 were against repeal, and 3,050 were for repeal. Held that, in view of the legislative policy to make an acceptance of a city charter turn upon the affirmative votes of a majority of those voting on the question, the word "ballots" was synonymous with "votes," and that only the ballots carrying votes on the question of repeal were to be counted, and hence that, as there was a "majority of the ballots cast" in favor of repeal, the old charter was repealed, and the plan receiving the larger number of votes was adopted as the new charter. Cashman v. Entwistle, 100 N. E. 58, 59, 213 Mass. 153.

The "majority of ballots" necessary, under Rev. St. 1898, § 865, to determine the question of incorporation of a village means the majority of the legal ballots cast on the proposition and not a majority of those who vote or attempt to vote but whose ballots are properly rejected because illegal. State ex rel. Town of Holland v. Lammers, 86 N. W. 677, 679, 89 N. W. 501, 113 Wis. 398.

As majority of quorum

Under a by-law of a social corporation providing that an assessment could be made by a majority of the executive committee, which consisted of 20 members, 5 of whom constituted a quorum, by a "majority of the committee" was meant a majority of the whole committee, and not a majority of a quorum of 5. Rogers v. Boston Club, 91 N. E. 321, 322, 325, 205 Mass. 261, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 743.

Where an orphan asylum claimed, for support of children committed to its care by a county after the adoption of a resolution by a majority vote of a quorum of the board of supervisors, that such children be removed therefrom, and, after demand for the children and refusal to surrender, no recovery could be had, since Laws 1895, c. 267, § 2, authorizes a county, by a majority vote of its county board of supervisors, to remove such children, to the support of which it contributes, and Rev. St. § 665, declares that a majority of the supervisors entitled to a seat constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, and make all questions determinable by a majority of the supervisors present, unless otherwise provided. St. Emilianus Orphan Asylum v. Milwaukee County, 82 N. W. 704, 705, 107 Wis. 80.

As majority of those present and voting

Rev. St. 1899, § 9750, subd. 11 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 4470), providing that in each case a "majority vote of the voters who are resident taxpayers" of the district shall be necessary to remove a site nearer the center of the district, means a majority of the taxpayers of the district, present and voting in the election. Tucker v. McKay, 111 S. W. 867, 868, 131 Mo. App. 728.

As majority of those voting

The phrase "majority vote of legal voters," in Sp. Act Feb. 26, 1903, providing that it shall take effect when approved by a majority vote of the legal voters within the district, means, according to Act March 18, 1903, a majority vote of the legal voters voting. Foy v. Gardiner Water Dist., 56 Atl. 201, 202, 98 Me. 82.

"A majority of the registered voters of the city," as used in Acts 1889, c. 3963, § 12, means a majority of the qualified electors who actually voted at the election in question, and not a majority of all the voters who had the right to vote; those voters who are silent being supposed to assent that the question shall be determined by those who vote. Bell v. City of Ocala, 58 South. 683, 684, 62 Fla. 431.

Const. art. 10, § 9, does not provide the procedure for levying a tax for school district purposes in excess of five mills on the dollar, and not exceeding ten additional mills, but leaves the same to be provided for by the Legislature, provided that a tax in excess of five mills shall not be levied except on condition that a majority of the voters of the district voting at an election of the district vote for same. Const. art. 10, § 9, does not require that a levy in excess of five mills on the dollar in any year for school district purposes, not exceeding fifteen mills, shall receive a majority of the votes of the voters in the district, but only a majority of said voters voting at the election. Tilley v. Overton, 116 Pac. 945, 948, 29 Okl. 292.

Const. § 41, providing that no county seat shall be removed except by a "majority" vote of the qualified electors of the county, does not mean a majority of all the qualified electors, but merely a majority of the votes cast. Ex parte Owens, 42 South. 876, 148 Ala. 402, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 888, 121 Am. St. Rep. 87.

Const. art. 13, § 5, provides that no county shall incur any indebtedness or liability for a single purpose to an amount exceeding $10,000 without the approval of a majority of the electors, voting at an election to be provided by law. Rev. Codes, § 2933, declares that county boards shall not borrow money for any single purpose to an amount exceeding $10,000 without the approval of a majority of the electors of the county and without first having submitted the question of a loan to a vote of such electors; and section 2937 declares that, if a majority of the votes cast are in favor of the loan, then the board may make the loan and issue the bonds. Held, that the enactment of section 2933 was not intended to add any requirement to that prescribed by the Constitution, and that the words "majority of the electors of the county," as used therein, should be construed to mean "a majority of the votes cast." Morse v. Granite County, 119 Pac. 286, 291, 44 Mont. 78.

As majority voting on particular issue

Where the language of an act is "a majority of the votes cast," or "a majority of all votes cast," it means a majority of the votes cast on the question submitted; and that, whether the votes are cast at a general or special election. Territory ex rel. McGuire v. Board of Trustees for High School of Logan County, 76 Pac. 165, 167, 13 Okl. 605.

As used in Const. § 111, providing that county courts shall have jurisdiction of certain civil and criminal causes "whenever the voters of any county having a population of two thousand or over shall decide by a majority vote that they desire the jurisdiction of that court increased," the words "majority vote" mean a majority of all votes cast on the question of increased jurisdiction, and not a majority of all the votes cast at the election. State v. Fabrick, 121 N. W. 65, 60, 18 N. D. 402.

As used in Const. § 168, providing that changes in the boundaries of organized counties shall be submitted to the electors of the county or counties to be affected, and be adopted by a "majority of all the legal votes cast" at such election, the phrase "votes cast" means the total of the separate votes, or expressions of voters' preference for or against such a change, and should be limited to mean the votes cast on that proposition. To effect such change requires merely a majority of the votes cast upon the question of a change, and not a majority of the highest number of votes cast for any candidate, or upon any proposition voted upon at the election, since to hold otherwise would be to give as much effect to the act of an elector who did not vote on such change as that of one who voted in the negative. State v. Blaisdell, 119 N. W. 360, 361, 18 N. D. 81.

Pub. Laws 1903, p. 327, § 73, provides for submission to the voters of a city, at the next principal election after a resolution of the city council for issue of bonds, of the question of approval of the resolution, and states that the election officers shall report the number of votes in favor of issuing the bonds and the number against such issue, and that, if it shall be found that the resolution has been approved by "a majority of the voters voting at such election," the bonds may be issued. Gen. Election Law (P. L. 1898, p. 319), § 185, provides that, when the approval of a "majority of the legal voters" is required by a statute before a proceeding under it shall be lawful, the meaning of the words "legal voters" in the statute shall be "persons entitled to vote and who do vote * * * on the question or proposition submitted," and that the persons who do not vote at such election shall not be considered on the question of what is a majority of the legal voters with respect to the proposition submitted. Held, that "a majority of the voters voting at such election" required for approval of a resolution for bond issue means only a majority of the persons voting on such proposition, and not a majority of the persons voting at such election on that and other questions. Murphy v. City of Long Branch (N. J.) 61 Atl. 593, 594.

By "majority" is meant a majority of the whole number of electors voting at the election, and not a majority of the votes recorded for or against license. In re Election Contest, 136 N. W. 1031, 1032, 118 Minn. 371.

Where a question is required to be submitted at a certain regular election, and is made to depend on a "majority of the votes cast at such election," a majority of all the votes cast at the election is meant, and not merely a majority of the votes cast on that particular question. Santa Rosa v. Bower, 75 Pac. 829, 830, 142 Cal. 299.

The words "such election," as used in the section of the Constitution which provides how constitutional amendments shall be passed through the General Assembly for submission to the people, and for publication for at least six months "immediately preceding the next general election for Senators and Representatives, at which time the same shall be submitted to the electors of the state for approval or rejection, and, if a majority of the electors voting in such election adopt such amendments, the same shall become a part of the Constitution," evidently refer to the general election for Senators and Representatives, and the "majority" necessary to adopt an amendment must be the majority of electors voting at the general election for Senators and Representatives, and not a mere majority voting on the subject of the amendment. Rice v. Palmer, 96 S. W. 396, 400, 78 Ark. 432 (citing Knight v. Shelton, 134 Fed. 423; State ex rel. McClurg v. Powell, 77 Miss. 545, 27 South. 927, 48 L. R. A. 652).

Laws 1905, p. 659, c. 397, § 10, providing for submission of the proposition of establishing county high schools, and that, when "a majority of the voters voting" in any county shall be in favor of such proposition, the provisions of that act shall apply thereto, requires, where the election is a general one, a majority of all the voters voting on any office or proposition at such election. Board of Education of City of Humboldt v. Klein, 99 Pac. 222, 223, 79 Kan. 209.

As determined by casting vote of presiding officer

Stamford City Charter (13 Sp. Laws, p. 1152), § 8, creates a board of appropriation and apportionment for the condemnation of land required by the city, consisting of eight members; the mayor being a member ex officio and president of the board, with power to vote only in case of a tie. 14 Sp. Laws 1905, p. 858, § 6, provides that the taking of land for park purposes shall be by a "majority" vote of all the members of the board, both present and absent. Held, that, in case of a tie, when all the members of the board were present and voted, the mayor's vote was sufficient to make a majority. Bohannon v. City of Stamford 67 Atl. 372, 873, 80 Conn. 107.

MAJORITY OF STOCKHOLDERS

An election to be held by a "majority of stockholders" means a majority in interest. In re P. B. Mathiason Mfg. Co., 99 S. W. 502, 504, 122 Mo. App. 437 (quoting and adopting definition in 2 Cook Corp. [5th Ed.] § 609).

MAKE

See, also, Made.

As maintain

A covenant in a conveyance of land for a right of way that the railroad would "make and maintain" a wire fence on both sides of the land conveyed, "and also make" a farm crossing, in pursuance of which the railroad did supply, maintain, and keep in repair a crossing for a number of years, obligated the railroad not only to make, but also to maintain, the crossing. Pittsburg, C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Wilson, 72 N. E. 666, 668, 84 Ind. App. 324.

Compel synonymous

Where defendant's mother stated that defendant's brother said he would "make" decedent apologize, an instruction that defendant was guilty of murder if he armed himself with the intention of "compelling" decedent to apologize, and on his failing to do so killed him, was not erroneous; "compelled" being substantially synonymous with "make." Pipkins v. State, 97 S. W. 61, 63, 80 Ark. 617.

A book

See Bookmaking.

Effort

Where defendant accepted plaintiffs' offer to make ice cans at a certain price, on condition that they were made and shipped within 30 days, and plaintiffs accepted the order and promised to "make every effort" to have the cans delivered at the time indicated, the assurance must be construed as the expression of purpose to comply with the strongly emphasized requirement for shipment in 30 days, and not as a modification thereof. Wall v. St. Joseph Artesian Ice & Cold Storage Co., 87 S. W. 574, 575, 112 Mo. App. 659.

False entry

Concealment by the president of a national bank from the bookkeeper of facts necessary to enable the latter to make accurate entries in the books of the bank, by reason of which fact he made false entries, does not constitute the making of false entries by the president which is made a criminal offense by Rev. St. § 5209. United States v. McClarty, 191 Fed. 523.

False writing

There is a distinction between falsely making a certificate of acknowledgment and "making a false certificate." The former term contemplates a certificate which is not genuine, while the latter imports a genuine certificate, the contents or allegations of which are false. Territory v. Gutierrez, 84 Pac. 525, 526, 13 N. M. 312, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 375.

"Make" has many significations and conveys many meanings, among which is "to put forth; give out; deliver;" also "to inform; apprise." Cent. Dict. Thus when a person, seeking credit, hands to a merchant a materially false written statement concerning his financial condition, no matter who composed and signed it, if it be one calculated to deceive, and then reads it to such merchant, and thereby obtains property from him on credit, he has obtained property on credit upon a materially false statement in writing "made to" such person. In re Aldridge, 168 Fed. 93, 98, 99.

Promulgate distinguished

The word "make," as used in Act Cong. March 3, 1906, c. 1496, § 3, which requires the Secretary of Agriculture to "make" and "promulgate" rules and regulations governing the method and manner of shipment, inspection, and delivery of cattle from quarantined territory, is not synonymous with "promulgate," and means only the writing and official signing of such rules; the "promulgation" of them requiring notice to the officers of transportation companies, etc., and their publication in the selected newspapers within the affected district. United States v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 165 Fed. 936, 939.

Quarrel

In a trial for murder, the court instructed that it is the duty of one engaged in a quarrel to avoid an attack, and not to become the aggressor, unless other means are unavailable, and that if defendant, after being engaged in a quarrel with deceased, descended to the street, knowing that deceased was in the street, with intent to continue the quarrel, and in order to make "his quarrel effective," took with him a dangerous weapon, and sought out deceased, and stabbed him, his action was not justifiable homicide, though deceased drew a revolver, was not erroneous, whether the phrase "making the quarrel effective" meant that defendant took the weapon with intent to take the life of deceased, or meant, if defendant renewed the quarrel, whether with or without intent to take life, the killing was not justifiable. People v. Filippelli, 66 N. E. 402, 406, 173 N. Y. 509.

Record

Where a clerk of a Circuit Court makes and certifies a record in response to a writ of error or appeal, he is not merely making a transcript or copy, but is "making a record." within Rev. St. § 828, providing that a clerk of the Circuit Court shall be entitled for making a record to 15 cents a folio. Haysradt v. Delaware, L. & W. R. R., 182 Fed. 880, 882.

Rule

In Act Cong. March 3, 1906, c. 1496, § 3, requiring the Secretary of Agriculture to "make" and "promulgate" rules governing the inspection, delivery, and shipment of cattle from a quarantined state into any other state, and section 1 requiring publication of notice of quarantine and the giving of notice to the proper officers of carriers doing business in any quarantined state, the words "make" and "promulgate" are not synonymous, and the duty to "make" rules was sufficiently accomplished by writing them and signing them officially, but to "promulgate" them required the giving notice thereof to the officers of carriers, etc., and their publication in the selected newspapers within the affected district. United States v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 165 Fed. 936, 939.

Sale

The words "to sell" or "to make a sale," as used in a communication from the owner of real estate to a broker with respect to the sale thereof, are often used as meaning to negotiate or arrange for a sale. Brown v. Gilpin, 90 Pac. 267, 271, 75 Kan. 773.

Signature

Under a statute making a writing, not signed in the presence of witnesses, invalid as a will, unless testatrix acknowledged the "making thereof," the phrase quoted refers to the making of the signature in the presence of the witnesses. Manners v. Manners, 66 Atl. 583, 584, 72 N. J. Eq. 854.

MAKER

Of note

See Accommodation Maker; Comaker; Joint Maker; Principal Maker.
Indorser distinguished, see Indorser.

"One not before a party to a note, who signs his name on the back of it in blank, is prima facie a 'maker,' and assumes the same obligation as if he wrote his name upon the face of the instrument." Lyndon Savings Bank v. International Co., 62 Atl. 50, 52, 78 Vt. 169, 112 Am. St. Rep. 900 (quoting and adopting definition in Lyndon Savings Bank v. International Co., 54 Atl. 191, 75 Vt. 224).

Where a note reciting, "I promise to pay," was signed on the face by two persons, they were both "makers." Ullery v. Brohm, 79 Pac. 180, 20 Colo. App. 389.

The transferror of a nonnegotiable written contract does not, by signing his name on the back of it, make himself liable as "maker," "guarantor," or "indorser," within Rem. & Bal. Code, § 6250, providing that the discounting of commercial paper, where the borrower makes himself liable as maker, guarantor, or indorser, shall be considered as a loan for the purpose of the chapter relating to usury. Thomson v. Koch, 113 Pac. 1110, 1111, 62 Wash. 438.

MAKING

"Making" is defined as the action of one who makes. Town of Checotah v. Town of Eufaula, 119 Pac. 1014, 1017, 31 Okl. 85.

MALA FIDE PURCHASER

"A person who purchases an estate, although for a valuable consideration, with notice of a prior equitable right, makes himself a 'mala fide purchaser,' and will himself even be held a trustee for the benefit of the person whose right he sought to defeat." Mansfield v. Wardlow (Tex.) 91 S. W. 859, 863 (citing Pom. Eq. Jur. § 659).

MALA IN SE

See Contracts Mala In Se.

A distinction is made between acts which are "mala in se," which are generally regarded as absolutely void, in the sense that no right or claim can be derived from them, and acts which are mala prohibita, which are void or voidable, according to the nature or effect of the act prohibited. Pettersen v. Berry, 125 Fed. 902, 906, 60 O. C. A. 610 (citing Ewell v. Dags, 2 Sup. Ct. 408, 108 U. S. 143, 27 L. Ed. 652); In re T. H. Bunch Co., 180 Fed. 519, 527.

MALA PROHIBITA

See Mala in Se.

MALADMINISTRATION

As applied to public officers, "maladministration" is not in ordinary use distinguished from misadministration. Territory v. Sanches, 94 Pac. 954, 956, 14 N. M. 493, 20 Ann. Cas. 109.

MALCONDUCT

The reception of illegal votes at an election for a public office is not "malconduct" on the part of the election officers, within Code Civ. Proc. § 2010, authorizing an elector to contest an election for malconduct on the part of the judges of election, but constitutes a separate ground for contest under the express provisions of the section. Coleman v. Kerr, 83 Pac. 398, 394, 33 Mont. 198.

An officer who violates his public obligation, and betrays his trust by selling his official influence or vote, is guilty of "malconduct in office." Etzler v. Brown, 50 South. 416, 417, 58 Fla. 221, 138 Am. St. Rep. 113.

MALARIA

"Malaria" is "a morbid condition produced by exhalations from decaying vegetable matter in contact with moisture, giving rise to fever and ague and many other symptoms characterized by their tendency to recur at definite and usually uniform intervals." City of St. Louis v. Galt, 77 S. W. 876, 879, 179 Mo. 8, 63 L. R. A. 778 (quoting Webster Dict.).

MALFEASANCE

"'Malfeasance' is the unjust performance of some act which the party had no right, or which he had contracted not to do." Dudley v. Flemingsburg, 72 S. W. 327, 115 Ky. 5, 60 L. R. A. 575, 108 Am. St. Rep. 253, 1 Ann. Cas. 958.

"Malfeasance" is the doing of an act which a person ought not to do at all. Where an officer either through ignorance, inattention, or malice does that which he has no legal right to do at all, or acts without any authority whatever, or exceeds, ignores, or abuses his powers, he is guilty of "malfeasance." State, to Use of Cardin, v. McClellan, 85 S. W. 267, 268, 113 Tenn. 616, 8 Ann. Cas. 992.

The taking of the property of one, by a coroner, on a writ against another, is a "malfeasance in office," constituting a breach of his bond given for "the faithful performance of the duties of his office." Harris v. Hanson, 11 Mo. 241, 245.

Permission by a sheriff to a prisoner to escape is "malfeasance," within Kirby's Dig. § 7993, providing for removal of county officers on conviction of an offense amounting to malfeasance. Haupt v. State, 140 S. W. 294, 297, 100 Ark. 409, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 690.

While to convict an officer of the felony denounced by Comp. Laws 1907, § 4083, punishing every person who with intent to defraud, presents for allowance and payment a fraudulent claim, the proof must show that he presented the claim with intent to defraud, yet such proof is not essential to sustain a conviction for malfeasance in a proceeding for his removal under section 4565; the term "malfeasance" meaning the commission of an act which is positively unlawful. Law v. Smith, 98 Pac. 300, 307, 84 Utah, 394.

"While 'malfeasance in office' is defined generally to be the wrongful or unjust doing of some official act, which the doer has no right to perform, or which he has stipulated by contract not to do, it is essential that an evil intent or motive must accompany the act, or that it must have been done with such gross negligence as to be equivalent to fraud." An indictment of a county clerk for unlawfully issuing a license to sell liquor in a local option precinct, which fails to aver that his action was from a corrupt motive or fraudulent, or that he knew at the time that it was unlawful for him to issue the license, is insufficient. Commonwealth v. Wood, 76 S. W. 842, 843, 116 Ky. 748 (citing Bishop's New Cr. Law, §§ 972, 834).

"Malfeasance" is the doing of an act which is positively unlawful or wrongful which one ought not to do at all. It is an act wholly wrongful and unlawful. It is said that misconception of one's rights affords no ground for a conclusion of malfeasance. It is not malfeasance in office, for which, under Highway Law, N. Y. (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 25) § 30, a county superintendent of highways may be removed by the county supervisors, that he presents to a town, and has paid, a personal bill for preparing, under employment by it, plans and specifications for an avenue therein, the work on which was done by his private employees in his business of civil engineer, as not only under sections 83, 48, relative to his duties, is the county superintendent under no absolute duty to do such work, but, even if he cannot legally present a claim against the town, such action would be wrongful to the town only, whereas the malfeasance justifying his removal must be such as affects his performance as county superintendent, and he having at most misconceived his rights, in supposing there was no legal objection to his rendition of the account, which affords no ground for a conclusion of malfeasance. People ex rel. Seaman v. Cocks, 134 N. Y. Supp. 808, 810, 149 App. Div. 883 (citing Cent. Dict.; Bell v. Josselyn, 3 Gray [69 Mass.] 309, 63 Am. Dec. 741; Colte v. Lynes, 33 Conn. 109; Stokes v. Stokes, 48 N. Y. Supp. 722, 23 App. Div. 558).

"There is a distinction between nonfeasance and misfeasance or malfeasance; and this distinction is often of great importance in determining an agent's liability to third persons. In this connection, 'nonfeasance' means the total omission or failure of an agent to enter upon the performance of some distinct duty or undertaking, which he has agreed with his principal to do. 'Misfeasance' means the improper doing of an act which the agent might lawfully do, or, in other words, it is the performing of his duty to his principal in such a manner as to infringe upon the rights and privileges of third persons; and 'malfeasance' is the doing of an act which he ought not to do at all. It is not every omission or failure to perform a duty that will constitute a nonfeasance, but only an omission to perform such distinct duties as he owes to his principal, as distinguished from those which he owes to third persons, or the public in general as a member of society. Nonfeasance does not extend to the omission or failure to do some act, whereby a third person is injured after he has once entered upon the performance of his contractual obligations. For example, if an agent undertakes to perform certain acts for another, and he refuses or fails to enter upon such performance, it is nonfeasance; but if he once begins the performance of such acts, and in doing so fails or omits to do certain acts which he should have done, whereby a third person is injured, it is not a nonfeasance, but a misfeasance. Misfeasance may involve the omission to do something which ought to be done, as where an agent engaged in the performance of his undertaking, omits to do something which it is his duty to do under the circumstances, as when he does not exercise that degree of care which due regard for the rights of others requires." Orcutt v. Century Bldg. Co., 99 S. W. 1062, 1063, 201 Mo. 424, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 929 (quoting and adopting definition in Clark & Skyles, Law of Agency, § 596).

MALICE

See Constructive Malice; Express Malice; Implied Malice; Premeditated Malice; Universal Malice; With Malice Aforethought; Without Previous Malice.

Absence of, see Voluntary Manslaughter. Implied from willful or willfully, see Willful—Willfully.

As known to the law, "malice" is a wrongful act done intentionally, without just cause or excuse. Leavell v. Leavell, 99 S. W. 460, 461, 122 Mo. App. 654; Hathaway v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 82 S. W. 400, 402; Connell v. State, 81 S. W. 746, 747, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 259; London Guarantee & Accident Co. v. Horn, 69 N. E. 526, 530, 206 Ill. 493, 99 Am. St. Rep. 185; Schonwald v. Ragains, 122 Pac. 203, 211, 32 Okl. 223, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 854; McFadden v. Lane, 60 Atl. 865, 367, 71 N. J. Law, 624.

"Malice" is not necessarily personal hate or ill will, but is a state of mind which is reckless of law and the legal rights of citizens. Bowles v. Lowery, 59 South. 696, 697, 5 Ala. App. 555.

"Malice" in law does not, as is generally understood, mean spite or ill will, but means the intentional doing of a wrongful act. Williams v. Williams, 111 S. W. 837, 838, 132 Mo. App. 266.

An instruction defining "malice" as the doing of a wrongful act intentionally is correct. Butcher v. Hoffman, 73 S. W. 266, 268, 99 Mo. App. 239.

"'Malice' has always been divided into two kinds: Implied malice, or malice in law, and express malice, or malice in fact." Lauder v. Jones, 101 N. W. 907, 915, 13 N. D. 525 (quoting and adopting Gambrill v. Schooley, 52 Atl. 500, 508, 95 Md. 260, 63 L. R. A. 427).

"Malice" is not necessarily personal hate, but is rather an intent and disposition to do a wrongful act greatly injurious to another. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Whitten, 119 S. W. 835, 837, 90 Ark. 462, 21 Ann. Cas. 726.

"Malice" comprehends ill will, a wickedness of disposition, cruelty, recklessness, a mind regardless of social duty. Brett v. State, 47 South. 781, 783, 94 Miss. 669.

"Malice" is the expression of a wicked and depraved heart and mind and of a cruel disposition. State v. Harmon (Del.) 60 Atl. 866-868, 4 Pennewill, 580.

"Legal malice" is defined as an act growing out of the wicked or mischievous intention of the mind; an act showing a wanton inclination to mischief, an intention to injure or wrong, and a depraved inclination to disregard the rights of others. Morasca v. Item Co., 52 South. 565, 566, 126 La. 426, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 315.

"Malice" in a trespass need not be ill will or hatred; it being sufficient that the trespass be intentional and in known violation of the owner's rights. Southern Ry. Co. v. McEntire, 53 South. 158, 159, 169 Ala. 42.

"Malice" implies wickedness, or the willful and intentional doing of a wrongful act, without just cause or excuse, and is implied from an unlawful act, willfully done, till the contrary is shown. State v. Murphy, 68 S. E. 570, 86 S. C. 268.

"Malice" is implied by law from every deliberate cruel act committed by one person against another, no matter how sudden such an act may be, as the law construes that he who does a cruel act voluntarily does it maliciously. State v. Mills (Del.) 69 Atl. 841, 842, 6 Pennewill, 497.

Hatred, ill will, or actual malice towards the injured party is not a necessary ingredient of legal malice as applied to torts, nor is it necessary that the act complained of proceed from a spiteful, malignant, or revengeful disposition. If it be wrongful, unlawful, and intentional, and the natural and probable result of the act is to accomplish the injury complained of, "malice" is implied. Flandermeyer v. Cooper, 98 N. E. 102, 108, 85 Ohio St. 327, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 360, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 983.

"Legal or implied malice," as distinguished from ill will or malice in the vernacular sense of the word, is defined to be the intentional doing of a wrong act without just cause or excuse. Ickenroth v. St. Louis Transit Co., 77 S. W. 162, 166, 102 Mo. App. 597.

Where the court charged that "malice" meant wickedness, and that, when a man did a thing with a malicious heart, it meant a heart devoid of social duty and fatally bent on mischief, a charge defining malice as the willful and intentional doing of a wrongful act by one knowing the act to be against the law, and by one doing it willfully, was not objectionable as insufficiently defining "malice." State v. Crosby, 70 S. E. 440, 442, 88 S. C. 98.

"Malice," in the law, means the intentional doing of a wrongful act without justification or excuse. A "wrongful act," within the meaning of this definition, is any act which, in the ordinary course, will infringe upon the rights of another to his damage, except it be done in the exercise of an equal or superior right. Brennan v. United Hatters of North America, Local No. 17, 65 Atl. 165, 171, 73 N. J. Law, 729, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 254, 118 Am. St. Rep. 727, 9 Ann. Cas. 698.

"In 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4298, 'malice' is defined as follows: 'Malice, in common acceptation, means ill will against a person; but in its legal sense it means a wrongful act done intentionally without just cause or excuse.' Bouvier defines malice as being: 'A wicked intention to do an injury.' Webster defines the word to mean: 'Extreme enmity of heart; malevolence; a disposition to injure others without cause, from mere personal gratification, or from a spirit of revenge,' etc." Lynch v. People, 137 Ill. App. 444, 446.

In general a malicious act involves all that is usually understood by the term "willful," and is further marked by either hatred or ill will toward the party injured or by such utter recklessness and disregard of the rights of others as denotes a corrupt or malevolent disposition. It is true that "malice" may be and is often implied or presumed from the willfulness of the wrongful act. State v. Willing, 105 N. W. 355, 356, 129 Iowa, 72.

"Lawful competition that may injure the business of another, even though successfully directed to driving that other out of business, is not actionable. Nor would competition of one set of men against another set, carried on for the purpose of gain, even to the extent of intending to drive from business that other set, and actually accomplishing that result, be actionable unless there was actual malice. 'Malice,' as here used, does not merely mean intent to harm, but means an intent to do a wrongful harm and injury. An intent to do a wrongful harm and injury is unlawful, and, if a wrongful act is done to the detriment of the right of another, it is malicious, and an act maliciously done with the intent and purpose of injuring another is not lawful competition." O'Brien v. People ex rel. Kellogg Switchboard & Supply Co., 75 N. E. 108, 115, 216 Ill. 354, 108 Am. St. Rep. 219, 3 Ann. Cas. 966 (quoting and adopting definition in Doremus v. Hennessy, 52 N. E. 924, 925, 176 Ill. 608, 43 L. R. A. 797, 68 Am. St. Rep. 203); Everett Waddey Co. v. Richmond Typographical Union No. 90, 53 S. E. 273, 276, 105 Va. 188, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 792, 8 Ann. Cas. 798.

Whatever is done willfully and purposefully, whether the motive is to injure accused, to gain some advantage to prosecutor, or through mere wantonness or carelessness, if at the same time wrong or unlawful within the knowledge of the actor, is done maliciously, and personal ill will or desire for revenge is not essential to the existence of "malice." Gulsky v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 52 South. 392, 394, 167 Ala. 122.

"Malice," in legal proceedings, does not necessarily mean personal ill will or spite. It means a wrongful act done intentionally without just cause or excuse. Pittsburg, J. E. & E. R. Co. v. Wakefield Hardware Co., 50 S. E. 571, 573, 138 N. C. 174, 3 Ann. Cas. 720.

An instruction, defining legal "malice" as where a party has ill will toward another, bad feeling, bad blood, something of that kind, held proper. State v. Reeder, 51 S. E. 702, 703, 72 S. C. 223.

The term "malice," in its ordinary sense, implies hatred, spite, or ill will; but in legal parlance it is frequently used in a different sense, depending on the connection, and may mean "a wrongful act done intentionally without just cause or excuse." In legal parlance, malice "may be actually implied whenever there is a deliberate intention to do a grievous wrong without legal justification or excuse. In civil controversies, the very essence of malice is a disposition or willfulness to do a wrongful act greatly injurious to another." Kavanaugh v. McIntyre, 112 N. Y. S. 987, 990, 128 App. Div. 722 (quoting 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4298 et seq.).

Any malice which is an ingredient in a tort consisting of an act the direct object of which is to injure another's property is malice in law; that is, the intent to injure, as distinguished from the intent to do an act which may incidentally injure. Albro J. Newton Co. v. Erickson, 126 N. Y. Supp. 949, 953, 70 Misc. Rep. 291.

"Malice" in common acceptance means ill will against a person, but in its legal sense it means a wrongful act, done intentionally, without just cause or excuse. McGurk v. Cronenwett, 85 N. E. 576, 577, 199 Mass. 457, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 561.

The term "malice," as used in Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 72, § 2, authorizing the discharge of persons arrested in civil actions except when "malice" is of the gist of the action, signifies a wrong inflicted on another with an evil intent or purpose. Kellar, Ettinger & Fink v. Norton, 81 N. E. 1087, 1038, 228 Ill. 356.

"Malice" excludes passion, and passion presupposes the absence of malice. State v. Edmunds, 104 N. W. 1115, 1116, 20 S. D. 135.

"By 'malice' or 'malicious' is meant a wish or desire to vex, harass, or annoy another." Kerley v. Germscheid, 106 N. W. 136, 137, 20 S. D. 363.

"Malice" arises from the voluntary doing or saying something without just cause or excuse, which is likely to injure another, and which shows a spirit lacking in proper regard for social duty and the rights of others, even when said or done without particular ill will. Israel v. Israel, 84 S. W. 453, 456, 109 Mo. App. 366.

In an action of tort, an instruction defining "malice" as "the doing of any act" injurious to another without just cause is erroneous for omitting the word "intentional" before the word "doing." Hanley v. Blandino (Tex.) 89 S. W. 1108, 1109.

To make the conduct of a fraternal association, in expelling a member, actionably malicious it is not necessary that "malice" in the sense of hatred or ill will, on the part of the defendant toward appellant, be shown. "Malice" in such case would be sufficiently shown if it were proven that they acted knowingly and willfully in the violation of the rights of appellant and to his injury. Thompson v. Grand International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, 91 S. W. 834, 839, 41 Tex. Civ. App. 176.

"Malice," as usually understood, has its foundation in ill will, and is evidenced by an attempt wrongfully to vex, injure, or annoy another. This is "malice in fact," and is that referred to in Pen. Code, § 7, subd. 4, declaring that the words "malice" and "maliciously" import a wish to vex, annoy, or injure another person. There is another sort of malice, the presumption of the existence of which is raised by the law in certain cases on certain proofs, and this is the malice described in the same section as "an intent to do a wrongful act, established either by proof or presumption of law." This is a malice of pleading and proof made necessary by the exigencies of definitions of offenses against the law, and may exist with malice in fact, but may also exist independent thereof, and in some instances is conclusively presumed against a defendant, while in others the presumption is rebuttable. Davis v. Hearst, 116 Pac. 530, 537, 160 Cal. 143.

As justifying punitive damages

Legal malice, as distinguished from actual malice, will justify an award of punitive damages. The "malice" which would justify an award of punitive damages merely implies the intentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause or excuse. Lampert v. Judge & Dolph Drug Co., 141 S. W. 1095, 1098, 238 Mo. 409, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 533, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 351.

"Malice" essential to justify punitive damages does not mean ill will against a person, but a wrongful act done intentionally and without just cause is done with malice. McMillen v. Elder, 140 S. W. 917, 919, 160 Mo. App. 399.

Exemplary damages are allowed in enhancement merely of ordinary damages, the propriety of allowing the same depending entirely on the malice or wantonness of the defendant, "malice" in that sense meaning not general malice, nor malice exhibited in other matters or at other times, but malice in the very matter he is found liable for. Moore v. Duke, 80 Atl. 194, 197, 84 Vt. 401.

The term "malice," as used in the rule that, wherever an injury complained of had been inflicted with malice or wantonly and with circumstances of contumely or indignity, the jury are not limited to the ascertainment of a simple compensation for the wrong committed against the aggrieved person, is not merely the doing of an unlawful or injurious act, but the word implies that the act complained of was conceived in a spirit of mischief or a criminal indifference to civil obligation. Philadelphia, B. & N. R. Co. v. Green, 71 Atl. 986, 989, 110 Md. 32.

In order to justify the imputation of "malice," within the rule of punitive damages, the injury must have been conceived in a spirit of mischief and partake of a criminal or wanton nature. Baxter v. Campbell, 97 N. W. 386, 387, 17 S. D. 475.

For the purpose of determining whether exemplary damages are properly allowed, the word "malice" means that the act done must have been without right or justifiable cause. Smith v. Morgantown Ice Co., 74 S. E. 961, 963, 159 N. C. 151.

"Malice," in 2 Rap. & L. Law Dict. p. 784, is defined as follows: "'Malice,' in common acceptation, means ill will against a person; but, in its legal sense, it means a wrongful act done intentionally, without just cause or excuse." In 2 Bouv. Law Dict. (Rawle's Ed.) p. 295, it is defined as follows: "A malicious act is a wrongful act intentionally done without cause or excuse." In defining "malicious," Black, in his Law Dictionary (page 745), says: "Evinced malice; done with malice and an evil design; willful." An instruction that "by 'malicious,' as used in this instruction, is meant a doing of the wrongful act without legal right" was wrong as authorizing exemplary damages for any entry without legal right on the premises of another. The instruction should have used the word "intentional." Ohio Valley Tel. Co. v. Meyer (Ky.) 56 S. W. 678, 674.

In an action by a street car passenger for injuries caused by an assault by the conductor, the charge that, if the jury found for plaintiff, then, in assessing damages, they were not limited to physical injury inflicted, if any, but in addition thereto, if they found that the wrongful acts of the conductor were "malicious" (i. e., the intentional doing of a wrongful act without cause or excuse), they might allow such punitive damages as would be a punishment and a wholesome warning to others, in the absence of a request for a more specific instruction on the measure of damages, was not objectionable as misleading. Mills v. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co., 137 S. W. 1006, 1007, 157 Mo. App. 529.

In alienation of affections

"The term 'malice,' as applied to torts, does not necessarily mean that which must proceed from a spiteful, malignant, or revengeful disposition, but a conduct injurious to another, though proceeding from an ill-regulated mind, not sufficiently cautious before it occasions an injury to another." Hence the law implies malice, where defendant unwarrantedly alienated the affections of plaintiff's husband. Sickler v. Manix, 93 N. W. 1018, 68 Neb. 21 (citing Weckert v. Geyer [Pa.] 11 Serg. & R. 39).

In an action for alienation of a wife's affections, the term "malice" does not necessarily mean that which must proceed from a spiteful, malignant, or revengeful disposition, but, if the conduct was unjustifiable and actually caused the injury, malice in law will be implied. Boland v. Stanley, 115 S. W. 163, 166, 88 Ark. 562, 129 Am. St. Rep. 114.

In bankruptcy act

The provision of the bankruptcy act, excepting from the operation of a discharge judgments for "malicious injuries," etc., contemplates something more restricted than "malice" in the broader sense. Flanders v. Mullin, 66 Atl. 789, 80 Vt. 124, 12 Ann. Cas. 1010.

The term "malicious," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, 30 Stat. 550, providing that a discharge in bankruptcy shall relieve the bankrupt from all his provable debts, except judgments in actions for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another, means nothing more than that disregard of duty which is involved in the intentional doing of a wrongful act to the injury of another. McChristal v. Clisbee, 76 N. E. 511, 190 Mass. 120, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 702, 5 Ann. Cas. 769.

The word "willful," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 5, 32 Stat. 798 (U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1907, p. 1626), providing that a discharge in bankruptcy shall relieve the bankrupt from all provable debts except liabilities for obtaining property by false pretenses, or false representations, or for "willful and malicious" injuries to the person or property of another, means nothing more than intentional; while the word "malice," as there used, is intended to imply nothing more than a disregard of duty which is involved in the intentional doing of a willful act to the injury of another. Kavanaugh v. McIntyre, 112 N. Y. Supp. 937, 939, 128 App. Div. 722.

Where a lessee assigned his lease to his wife with the consent of the landlord, and the landlord subsequently instituted summary proceedings to dispossess the lessee without making the wife a party, and under the judgment of dispossession the landlord, through agents, took possession of the premises and removed the wife's property and forcibly removed the wife, a judgment for the wife for damages for the acts of the landlord was based on "willful" and "malicious" acts, within Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, providing that a discharge in bankruptcy does not release the bankrupt from judgments for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another; the word "willful" meaning nothing more than "intentional," and the word "malice" in its legal sense meaning a wrongful act done intentionally, without just cause or excuse. In re Munro, 195 Fed. 817, 823 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, pp. 4298-4312).

"Malice, in common acceptation, means ill will against a person; but in its legal sense it means a wrongful act, done intentionally, without just cause or excuse. If I give a perfect stranger a blow likely to produce death, I do it of malice, because I do it intentionally and without just cause or excuse. If I maim cattle without knowing whose they are, if I poison a fishery without knowing the owner, I do it of malice, because it is a wrongful act and done intentionally. If I am arraigned of felony and willfully stand mute, I am said to do it of malice, because it is intentional and without just cause or excuse. If I traduce a man, whether I know him or not, and whether I intend to do him an injury or not, I apprehend the law considers it as done of malice, because it is wrongful and intentional. It equally works an injury, whether I meant to produce an injury or not." The law will imply that degree of malice in an act of criminal conversation which is sufficient to bring a judgment for damages therefor within the exception mentioned in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 17, subd. 2, 30 Stat. 550, declaring that judgments for willful and malicious injuries to the person or property of another shall be exempted from a discharge in bankruptcy. Tinker v. Colwell, 24 Sup. Ct. 505, 508, 193 U. S. 473, 48 L. Ed. 754.

In criminal law

"Malice" is an essential ingredient of the crime of murder of either degree, and it is a condition of the mind or heart, not being restricted to spite or malevolence toward the particular person slain, but also including that general malignity and reckless disregard of human life which proceed from a heart void of a just sense of social duty and fatally bent on mischief. State v. Underhill (Del.) 69 Atl. 880, 882, 6 Pennewill, 491; State v. Wiggins (Del.) 76 Atl. 632, 634, 7 Pennewill, 127; State v. Brown (Del.) 61 Atl. 1077, 1078, 5 Pennewill, 339; State v. Watson (Del.) 82 Atl. 1086, 1087; State v. Tilghman (Del.) 63 Atl. 772, 773, 6 Pennewill, 44; State

v. Johns (Del.) 65 Atl. 763, 764, 6 Pennewill, 174; State v. Honey (Del.) 65 Atl. 764-766, 6 Pennewill, 148; State v. Powell (Del.) 61 Atl. 966, 971, 5 Pennewill, 24; State v. Brown (Del.) 80 Atl. 146, 149, 2 Boyce, 406; State v. Bell (Del.) 62 Atl. 147, 148, 5 Pennewill, 192; State v. Roberts (Del.) 78 Atl. 305, 309, 2 Boyce, 140; State v. Russo (Del.) 77 Atl. 743, 745, 1 Boyce, 538; State v. Reese (Del.) 79 Atl. 217, 220, 2 Boyce, 434; State v. Todd, 92 S. W. 674, 676, 194 Mo. 377; State v. McCarver, 92 S. W. 684, 686, 194 Mo. 717.

"Malice" is the ingredient that characterizes murder, and distinguishes it from homicide of other grades. It is express when admitted or asserted, or may be implied from any unlawful acts of the assailant which in itself denotes a wicked heart fatally bent on mischief, or a reckless disregard of human life. State v. De Paolo (Del.) 84 Atl. 213, 214.

In criminal law "malice" may denote that condition of the mind which is manifested by the intentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause or excuse. Alt v. State, 129 N. W. 432, 436, 88 Neb. 259, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1212.

"Malice," as used in the law of homicide, means a wrongful act done intentionally without just cause or excuse. State v. Kinder, 83 S. W. 964, 969, 184 Mo. 276.

"Malice" is a deliberate intention unlawfully to take human life. Robinson v. State, 58 S. E. 842, 843, 129 Ga. 386.

Legal "malice" is the intent unlawfully to take human life in cases where the law neither mitigates nor justifies the killing. Mann v. State, 53 S. E. 324, 326, 124 Ga. 760, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 934; Tucker v. Same, 66 S. E. 250, 251, 133 Ga. 470.

"Malice," which is a necessary element of murder in the first and second degrees, means a killing without legal excuse, and is presumed from killing with a deadly weapon. State v. Roberson, 64 S. E. 182, 185, 150 N. C. 837.

The law implies malice, where there is a homicide with a deadly weapon, and there are no circumstances of mitigation, justification, or excuse. Clardy v. State, 131 S. W. 46, 47, 96 Ark. 52.

"Malice," in homicide, is a condition of the mind or heart, and is not restricted to spite or malevolence toward decedent, and includes that general malignity and reckless disregard of human life which proceeds from a heart fatally bent on mischief. State v. Brooks (Del.) 84 Atl. 225, 227.

"Malice," legally speaking, in relation to murder, is a conscious violation of law to the prejudice of another; evil design in general; the dictates of a wicked, depraved, and malignant heart. United States v. Hart, 162 Fed. 192, 194.

Though one's heart may be full of sin, it is not legally malicious, unless it prompts the willful or intentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause or excuse. State v. Ferguson, 74 S. E. 502, 505, 91 S. C. 235.

"Legal malice," as applied to homicide, is not ill will or hatred, but is an unlawful intention to kill without justification or mitigation existing at the time of killing. The intention need not exist for any length of time before the killing, and a man may form the intention to kill, do the killing instantly, and regret the deed as soon as done. Long v. State, 56 S. E. 444, 446, 127 Ga. 350 (citing Bailey v. State, 70 Ga. 617 [29]; Weeks v. State, 3 S. E. 323 [4], 79 Ga. 37).

"Malice," in homicide, includes not only anger, hatred, and revenge, but every other unlawful and unjustifiable motive. Malice is not confined to ill will towards an individual, but is intended to denote an action flowing from any wicked and corrupt motive, a thing done with a wicked mind, where the fact has been attended with such circumstances as evince plain indications of a heart regardless of social duty and fatally bent on mischief. Malice is implied from any deliberate or cruel act against another, however sudden, which shows an abandoned and malignant heart. Parsons v. People, 75 N. E. 993, 996, 218 Ill. 386.

"Malice" in law does not necessarily mean hate or ill will, but is that mental condition which prompts the willful doing of an unlawful act; and so, in a prosecution for killing an officer, an instruction that if the accused, being subject to arrest, merely killed the officer to escape arrest the killing is malicious, is proper. McGuffin v. State (Ala.) 59 South. 635, 636.

"Malice" in common acceptation means ill will against a person, but in its legal sense it means a wrongful act done intentionally without just cause or excuse. Bromage v. Prosser, 10 E. C. L. 321. In law "malice" is a term of art, importing wickedness, and excluding a just cause or excuse. State v. Doig (S. C.) 2 Rich. 182. There can be no doubt that malice is presumed from an intentional killing, in the absence of facts or circumstances in evidence tending to show want of malice. State v. McDaniel, 47 S. E. 384, 387, 68 S. C. 304, 102 Am. St. Rep. 661.

"Malice" is not restricted to spite or malevolence toward the deceased in particular, but in its legal sense it is understood to mean the general malignity and recklessness of the lives and personal safety of others, which proceed from a heart void of a just sense of social duty and fatally bent on mischief. Malice is implied by law from every deliberate, cruel act committed by one person against another, no matter how sudden such act may be; for the law considers that he who does a cruel act voluntarily does it maliciously. State v. Brinte (Del.) 58 Atl. 258, 262, 4 Pennewill, 551.

In the statute declaring it murder in the first degree for any person to purposely and in his deliberate and premeditated malice kill another, "malice" is not confined to ill will toward an individual, but it is intended to denote an action flowing from any wicked and corrupt motive. A thing done with a wicked mind, and attended with such circumstances as plainly indicate a heart regardless of social duties and fully bent on mischief, indicates malice, within the meaning of the law. Malice may be either expressed or implied. Express malice may appear from all the evidence and circumstances of the alleged killing. Implied malice may appear where there is no just cause or excuse of the alleged killing. State v. Lindgrind, 74 Pac. 565, 566, 33 Wash. 440.

"Malice," which is a condition of the mind, and is not restricted to spite or malevolence toward a particular person, but includes general malignity and reckless disregard of human life, is an essential to the crime of murder. State v. Short (Del.) 82 Atl. 239, 241, 2 Boyce, 491.

"Malice" in homicide does not mean mere spite or ill will, as generally understood, but signifies an unlawful state of the mind, and such state of the mind as one is in who intentionally does an unlawful act." State v. Brown, 79 S. W. 1111, 1112, 181 Mo. 192.

"Malice," in homicide "does not mean mere spite or ill will, as it is ordinarily understood, but means that condition of the mind which prompts one person to take the life of another without just cause or justification, and it signifies a state or disposition which shows a heart regardless of social duties and fatally bent on mischief." State v. Atchley, 84 S. W. 984, 989, 186 Mo. 174.

"Malice" is a condition of the mind or heart." As used in the definition of murder, the term is not restricted to spite or malevolence toward the particular person slain, but includes that reckless disregard of human life which proceeds from a heart void of a just sense of social duty and fatally bent on mischief. Wherever the fatal act is done deliberately or without adequate cause, the law presumes that it was done with "malice," and the burden is on the prisoner to show that the act was not so done. State v. Powell (Del.) 61 Atl. 966, 971, 5 Pennewill, 24.

"Malice," in law, is manifested by the intentional doing of a wrongful act to the injury of another, without just cause or excuse; and in the law of homicide it may mean either an intent to do either serious bodily harm or to take life. State v. Silverio, 76 Atl. 1069, 1072, 79 N. J. Law, 482.

"Malice" is the chief and distinguishing characteristic of murder, is either express or implied, and may be proven by a deliberately formed design to kill, by the preparation of the weapon or other means for doing great bodily harm, by circumstances of brutality attending the act, or by previous hostility, or threats and declarations of intention to kill, or to do serious injury. Esterline v. State, 68 Atl. 269, 270, 105 Md. 629.

The "malice" essential to constitute murder is not restricted to spite or malevolence towards decedent, but means that general malignity or recklessness which proceeds from a heart devoid of a just sense of social duty and fatally bent on mischief, and is implied by law from every deliberate cruel act committed by one person against another; and where the act from which death ensues appears prima facie to have been committed deliberately, the law presumes that it was done in malice, and accused must show that the offense is of a mitigated character and does not amount to murder. State v. Blackburn (Del.) 75 Atl. 536, 539, 7 Pennewill, 479.

Under the statute making any person who willfully and maliciously burns any dwelling house, etc., guilty of arson, etc., the malice intended by the law signifies the intent from which flows the unlawful act, committed without legal justification; and when the act constituting the attempt is proved to have been done, and to have been done willfully, it is then inferred to have been done maliciously. State v. Lockwood (Del.) 74 Atl. 2, 3, 1 Boyce, 28.

The "malice" which would make an act murder may be proved by direct evidence, or may be implied from any unlawful act, indicating a wicked heart bent on mischief, or a reckless disregard of human life, such as the deliberate selection and use of a deadly weapon. State v. Jackson (Del.) 82 Atl. 824, 825.

In a prosecution for murder, "malice" may be implied from any unlawful act denoting a wicked heart bent on mischief, and so the deliberate selection and use of a deadly weapon upon another is evidence of malice. State v. Stockley (Del.) 82 Atl. 1078, 1079.

Where a killing is accomplished with a deadly weapon, malice is presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary. State v. Primrose (Del.) 77 Atl. 717, 719, 2 Boyce, 164; Same v. Russo (Del.) 77 Atl. 743, 745, 1 Boyce, 538.

Wherever murder is done deliberately or without adequate cause, the law presumes that it was done with malice; and the burden is on the prisoner to show that the act was not malicious. State v. Brown (Del.) 80 Atl. 146, 149, 2 Boyce, 405; Same v. Bell (Del.) 62 Atl. 147, 148, 5 Pennewill, 192; Same v. Primrose (Del.) 77 Atl. 717, 719, 2 Boyce, 164; Same v. Roberts (Del.) 78 Atl. 305, 309, 2 Boyce, 140; Same v. Russo (Del.) 77 Atl. 743, 745, 1 Boyce, 538.

"Malice," essential to murder of the second degree, is implied by law from every unlawful and cruel act committed by one person against another, so that, where the killing is done with a deadly weapon likely to produce death it is presumed to have been done maliciously. State v. Roberts (Del.) 78 Atl. 305, 310, 2 Boyce, 140.

"Malice," in the law of homicide, is a condition of the mind or heart, which may be shown by the deliberate selection and use of a deadly weapon, or by antecedent menaces or threats, such as disclose a purpose on the part of accused to commit the act charged. Malice, in the law of homicide, may be implied from any unlawful act, such as in itself denotes a wicked heart fatally bent on mischief, or a reckless disregard of human life, or from an act from which death ensues, unaccompanied by circumstances of justification, excuse, or mitigation, and on such act being shown it is incumbent on accused to show to the satisfaction of the jury that the killing was not malicious. State v. Johnson (Del.) 78 Atl. 605, 606, 2 Boyce, 49.

"Malice" may be implied when an act which produces death is attended by such circumstances as are the ordinary symptoms of a wicked and depraved spirit, or from attending circumstances of atrocity and cruelty, or from the unlawful use of a deadly weapon; and, where an unlawful homicide is shown and no circumstances of mitigation or excuse appear, malice will be presumed. State v. Kritchman (Conn.) 79 Atl. 75, 77.

"Under Pen. Code, art. 4, § 7, defining the words 'malice' and 'maliciously' as importing a wish to vex, annoy, or injure another person, or an intent to do a wrongful act established either by proof or presumption of law," where a defendant was on trial for assault in the first degree, the crime involved a specific intent as the gist of the offense, and it was error for the court to instruct that, when an unlawful act is shown to have been deliberately committed for the purpose of injuring another, it is presumed to have been committed with a malicious and guilty intent, and the law presumes that a person intends the ordinary consequences of any voluntary act committed by him. State v. Schaefer, 88 Pac. 792, 793, 35 Mont. 217.

A charge defining murder substantially as it is defined in Pen. Code, § 188, and stating that malice does not necessarily mean that the accused must have entertained toward the deceased feelings of spite, hatred, or ill will, but that the word meant more under the statute, and that there might be legal malice where there was no spite or hatred or ill will, and explaining that an unlawful act done intentionally, without just cause or excuse, is an act, in the contemplation of law, done with malice as that word is understood in criminal judicature, was not erroneous. People v. McRoberts, 81 Pac. 734, 736, 1 Cal. App. 25.

Where, in a prosecution for homicide, the court defined "malice," as an element of murder, as a deliberate intention unlawfully to take away the life of a fellow creature, without provocation or under circumstances showing an abandoned or malignant heart, as provided by statute, defendant was not prejudiced by the fact that the court also stated that "malice" imported a wish to vex, annoy, or injure another, or an intent to do a wrongful act, as provided by section 7; though such definition was inapplicable to "malice" as an element to murder. People v. Waysman, 81 Pac. 1087, 1 Cal. App. 246.

Rev. St. 1898, § 4053, defines "malice" and "maliciously" as importing a wish to vex, annoy, or injure another person, or an intent to do a wrongful act. Section 4427 provides that every person who willfully, unlawfully, and maliciously administers any poison to an animal, the property of another, is punishable. Under such sections, the fact that the owner of a dog poisoned by defendant was unknown to defendant did not preclude a finding that the poison was administered maliciously. State v. Coleman, 82 Pac. 465, 466, 29 Utah, 417.

On the subject of murder, and in defining "malice," the court properly charged that it was a wicked condition of the heart, a wicked purpose, a performed purpose to do a wrongful act without sufficient legal provocation. State v. Gallman, 60 S. E. 682-686, 79 S. C. 229.

"Malice" is implied when an act dangerous to others is done so recklessly or wantonly as to evince depravity of mind and disregard of human life." Where two persons fought with firearms in a public place, their reckless disregard of law amounted to malice, rendering both guilty of murder. State v. Lilliston, 54 S. E. 427, 141 N. C. 857, 115 Am. St. Rep. 705.

An instruction that malice has been defined to be a term of art importing wickedness and excluding just cause and excuse is not erroneous, on the ground that it leads the jury to believe that mere wickedness is malice. State v. Miller, 53 S. E. 426, 427, 73 S. C. 277.

An instruction was held proper which defined "malice," as applied to assault with intent to kill, as "the intent to take human life unlawfully, where there are no circumstances of justification or mitigation for the act if the life should be taken as intended. It means the deliberate, intentional use of a deadly weapon for the purpose of taking human life, from whatever motive it springs, if there are no circumstances surrounding the transaction which mitigates or justifies the act." Napper v. State, 51 S. E. 592, 593, 123 Ga. 571.

On a trial for murder, an instruction that "malice is the intentional killing of a person, knowing it to be wrong, intending to do it, knowing it to be wrong," without legal excuse, is not error, especially when followed by a full statement of the law as to manslaughter. State v. Byrd, 51 S. E. 542, 544, 72 S. C. 104.

After defining murder and malice, express and implied, in the language of the Penal Code (sections 60-62), it furnished no ground for reversal that the court added that malice was an unlawful intention to kill, without justification or mitigation. Leonard v. State, 66 S. E. 251, 253, 133 Ga. 435.

It is not error to charge that, whenever a person kills another with an intent to kill, that intent is malice, if it is a deliberate intention unlawfully to take human life. Rhodes v. State, 66 S. E. 887, 133 Ga. 723.

Where a homicide was committed by accused with an instrument which the jury found was a weapon likely to produce death, the law, from the use of such weapon, presumes malice and an intent to kill; there being evidence to authorize the finding of homicide unaccompanied with circumstances of mitigation. Flanagan v. State, 69 S. E. 171, 172, 135 Ga. 221.

In a murder trial where there was evidence furnishing a basis for implied malice, an instruction: "Malice is not confined to ill will toward an individual, but is intended to denote an action following from any wicked and corrupt motive—a thing done with a wicked mind—where the fact has been attended with such circumstances as evince plain indications of a heart regardless of social duties and fatally bent on mischief; hence malice is implied from any deliberate and cruel act against another, however sudden, which shows an abandoned and malignant heart"—was correct. People v. Lucas, 91 N. E. 659, 664, 244 Ill. 603.

It was held proper to instruct the jury that "malice," in its legal sense, denotes that condition of mind which is manifested by the intentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause or excuse. It means any willful and corrupt intent of mind, and as applied to this case, if you should be satisfied by all the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant without just cause or excuse committed the offense charged in the manner and form as charged in the indictment, then it was done with malice or maliciously." Cate v. State, 114 N. W. 942, 944, 80 Neb. 611.

An instruction defining "murder in the second degree" as the killing of a human being "willfully, premeditatedly and with malice aforethought," and then defining "willfully" to mean intentionally, not by accident, "premeditatedly" to mean thought of beforehand for any length of time, however short, and stating that "malice" did not mean mere hatred or dislike, but that condition of mind which prompted a person to intentionally take the life of another, and that "malice aforethought" meant malice with premeditation, properly defined "murder in the second degree." State v. Myers, 121 S. W. 131, 135, 221 Mo. 598.

"Malice" means that condition of the mind which prompts one to do a wrongful act intentionally, and to take the life of another without legal justification or excuse. It does not mean mere spite, hatred, or ill will, but it signifies the state of disposition which shows a heart regardless of social duty and fatally bent on mischief. Malice may be presumed from the intentional use of a deadly weapon in a manner likely to produce death. State v. Vaughan, 98 S. W. 2, 5, 200 Mo. 1.

In a prosecution for murder, the court charged that "malice is also necessary to murder in the first degree. The distinguishing feature, so far as malice is concerned, is that, in murder of the first degree, malice must be proven to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt as an existing fact, while in murder of the second degree malice will be implied from the fact of an unlawful killing." Held that, if the instructions stood alone, the latter part of the paragraph might be erroneous, but as it was followed by an instruction defining malice as being that which the law infers from certain acts, however suddenly done, as when the fact of an unlawful killing is established and the facts do not establish malice beyond a reasonable doubt, though they tend to excuse or justify the act, then the law implies malice, and the murder is murder of the second degree, and also that if the killing is unlawful and done with implied malice aforethought, it would be murder in the second degree, the instructions taken together were correct. Eggleston v. State (Tex.) 128 S. W. 1105, 1109.

The term "malice" does not mean mere hatred or ill will, as the term is commonly understood, but it means the intentional doing of a wrongful act, and signifies that state of the mind or disposition that would prompt one man to take the life of another, or do him some great bodily harm, without just cause or excuse. State v. Bond, 90 S. W. 830, 831, 191 Mo. 555.

The distinguishing feature in the degrees of murder, so far as the element of malice is concerned, is that, in murder in the first degree, "malice" must be proved to the satisfaction of the jury beyond a reasonable doubt as an existing fact, while in murder in the second degree "malice" will be implied from the fact of the unlawful killing. McLin v. State, 90 S. W. 1107, 1108, 48 Tex. Cr. R. 549.

"Malice," as used in defining murder, does not mean mere spite or ill will, as generally understood, but signifies an unlawful state of the mind, and such state of the mind as one is in who intentionally does an unlawful act. State v. Hottman, 94 S. W. 237, 239, 196 Mo. 110.

"Malice" does not mean mere spite or ill will, as the term is commonly understood, but means the intentional doing of a wrongful act, and signifies that state of mind or disposition which would prompt one person to take the life of another or do him some great bodily harm without just cause or excuse. State v. Tetrick, 97 S. W. 564, 565, 199 Mo. 100.

Where one intentionally, willfully, without justification or excuse, and while his mind was cool enough to realize the nature of his acts, shot another with intent to kill, he was actuated by "malice." Williams v. State, 135 S. W. 552, 553, 61 Tex. Cr. R. 589.

"Malice," as an element of murder, contemplates wickedness and excludes a just or legal cause of excuse. It is "expressed" where there is positive direct evidence showing that, at the time of the killing, it was really entertained and "implied," where the evidence does not directly show that the malice was entertained at that time but is necessarily indirectly implied from the circumstances and facts which have been proved. State v. Lee, 60 S. E. 524, 525, 79 S. C. 223.

A charge on a trial for murder that malice included not only anger, hatred, ill will, and desire for revenge, but every other unlawful and unjustifiable motive; that a thing done with a wicked mind and attended with such circumstances as plainly indicated a heart regardless of social duty and fully bent on mischief indicates malice within the meaning of the law; and that the existence of malice is inferred from acts committed or words spoken—was not erroneous, nor was the substitution of the word "fully" for "fatally" prejudicial. Maynard v. State, 116 N. W. 53, 57, 81 Neb. 301.

As respects the offense of willfully and maliciously burning property of another, the "malice" must have as its object some person, ordinarily the owner of the property, and not the property itself; but it is not necessary that the offender knew who the owner was, it being enough that he was bent on mischief against the owner, whoever he might be. State v. Leslie, 115 N. W. 897, 898, 138 Iowa, 104, 128 Am. St. Rep. 160.

In a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, a charge that, if the jury believed from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that accused intentionally and maliciously shot at prosecuting witness with a gun with the intent to kill her, he should be convicted, and defining malice as including not only anger, hatred, and revenge, but every unlawful and unjustifiable motive used by a person in the commission of an act, was not erroneous

In view of Snyder's Comp. Laws 1909, § 2307, providing that every person who intentionally and wrongfully shoots, shoots at, or attempts to shoot at another with any kind of a firearm, with intent to kill any person, is punishable. Bartell v. State, 111 Pac. 669, 670, 4 Okl. Cr. 135.

"Malice" in law does not necessarily mean hate or ill will, but is defined as any unlawful act, willfully done, without just cause or legal excuse. It is that mental state or condition which prompts the doing of an unlawful act without legal justification or extenuation. Patterson v. State, 47 South. 52, 54, 156 Ala. 62.

An instruction that "malice" signifies a condition of the mind void of social duty and fatally bent on mischief, or an unlawful intention to kill or do some great bodily harm to another without just cause or excuse, is correct. State v. Forsha, 88 S. W. 746, 751, 190 Mo. 296, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 576.

Where the court at the request of the jury in a homicide case, returning for further instructions, read a definition of "malice" in a law book as not necessarily hatred or ill will, but as an intentional doing of an unlawful act, and that malice, as an ingredient of murder, was the killing of a human being without justification, excuse, or extenuation, and then stated that malice, as an ingredient of murder, did not necessarily mean hatred or ill will, but was the unlawful and willful killing of a human being without any legal excuse or justification, the definition adopted by the court was proper, and the definition read from the law book was not calculated to convey to the jury the impression that it was adopted as a part of the definition requested. Coates v. State, 56 South. 6, 8, 1 Ala. App. 35.

The "malice" essential to convict of murder may be ascertained from previous threats and measures taken in preparation, and it may also arise suddenly and be implied from circumstances, as from the intentional use at the outset of a deadly weapon. Brown v. State, 54 South. 305, 98 Miss. 786, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 811.

"Malice" essential to constitute murder, as distinguished from manslaughter, includes all those states of the mind in which a homicide is committed without legal justification, extenuation, or excuse, and where an unlawful homicide is shown to have been committed, and its attending circumstances disclose nothing to mitigate, extenuate, or excuse the act, "malice" on the part of the slayer is presumed. State v. Marx, 60 Atl. 690, 692, 78 Conn. 18.

In libel and slander

"Malice" in the law of slander is used in a popular sense. Hubbard v. Allyn, 86 N. E. 356, 359, 200 Mass. 166, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 730.

While it is true that in slander "malice" is the gist of the action, yet the term "malice" is always used in such cases in a legal sense. Weller v. Western State Bank of Waukomis, 90 Pac. 877, 882, 18 Okl. 478.

The word "malice," as used in the law of libel and slander, does not mean hatred or ill will, but the want of legal excuse for the publication. Sheibley v. Nelson, 121 N. W. 458, 460, 84 Neb. 393.

"Malice" in fact may be defined as a spiteful or rancorous disposition which causes an act to be done for mischief. Implied malice is sufficient to support an action for slander, where the other elements exist. Proof of express malice authorizes punitive damages. Where one charges another with larceny, the law imputes malice. Lee v. Crump, 40 South. 609, 610, 146 Ala. 655 (quoting and adopting definition in Childers v. San Jose Printing & Publishing Co., 38 Pac. 903, 105 Cal. 284, 45 Am. St. Rep. 40).

"Malice" is presumed from the making by one person of derogatory statements with reference to another in regard to his competency or fitness for his trade or profession, and such derogatory language is slanderous per se." Vial v. Larson, 109 N. W. 1007, 132 Iowa, 208 (citing Newell, Slander & Libel [2d Ed.] 182, 393).

Malice, as used in cases of slander and libel, does not necessarily imply actual evil intent, but rather the want or absence of any legal excuse for the speaking or publication of the injurious words. Where slanderous words are actionable per se, malice is presumed. McDonald v. Nugent, 98 N. W. 506, 508, 122 Iowa, 651.

Where words are spoken which are slanderous per se, malice is presumed; but the malice which is thus presumed is known as legal malice, as distinguished from actual or express malice, or malice in fact. In an action for slander, the absence of actual malice will not defeat the action, and the party injured may recover his actual damages; but where actual malice is charged in a complaint, and more than compensatory damages are claimed for the injury, the actual motive or intent with which the publication was made becomes an important fact from which to determine the amount of damages to be awarded. Wrege v. Jones, 100 N. W. 705, 707, 13 N. D. 267, 112 Am. St. Rep. 679, 3 Ann. Cas. 482.

"The term 'malice,' as employed in the definition of libel per se, is often misunderstood by the general reader, and is sometimes misapprehended by lawyers. It does not necessarily mean personal hatred or ill will toward the person at whom the libel is directed. Legal malice in the publishing of a libel is not inconsistent with honesty of purpose and good motive. * * * In other words, malice is the want of legal excuse for an act done to the injury of another. Whoever gives currency to libelous matter (not protected as being privileged) must be prepared to prove its truth, if he would avoid liability to the party injured." Morse v. Times-Republican Printing Co., 100 N. W. 867, 871, 124 Iowa, 707.

Where, in libel for newspaper articles, some of which did not refer to plaintiff, and some of which were not libelous per se, there was no averment of extrinsic facts that the articles referred to plaintiff or any innuendo from which it could be inferred that they charged plaintiff with such conduct as to render it libelous per se, an instruction that "malice" means the intentional doing of a wrongful act without excuse, and that if the articles published were libelous in whole or in part, and were published concerning plaintiff, and were not true, the law presumed that they were published maliciously, and it was not necessary to prove any malice to warrant a verdict for plaintiff, was erroneous, because it did not confine the presumption of malice to the articles which were libelous per se. Flowers v. Smith, 112 S. W. 499, 509, 214 Mo. 98 (citing and adopting Mitchell v. Bradstreet Co., 22 S. W. 862, 116 Mo. loc. cit. 240, 20 L. R. A. 188, 38 Am. St. Rep. 592).

An averment of "malice," in an action for libel, is not equivalent to a charge that defendant wrote the libel knowing it was untrue. Dickinson v. Hathaway, 48 South. 136, 137, 122 La. 644, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 33.

"The unprivileged publication in writing or print of a false charge that another is guilty of a crime, or of a false charge which tends to expose another to public hatred or contempt, entitles the person thus defamed to recover of the publisher full compensation in damages for all the injury to his reputation, business, and feelings which the defamatory publication caused. A written or printed article of this character is libelous in itself. From its publication the conclusive presumption of actual damages to its victim, and of 'legal malice' (that is to say, of 'an act done wrongfully without legal justification or excuse'), at once arises. The fact that the publisher was without malice, in the popular acceptance of that term (that is to say, without ill will, bad motive, hatred, or intent to injure his victim), constitutes no defense to the latter's claim for compensatory damages, and no evidence to mitigate or reduce their amount, because the actual damages to the party libeled are the same whether they are inflicted by the publisher with a good or an evil intent, and the victim is as clearly entitled to full compensation for a wrong inflicted with a laudable motive, or through mistake or inadvertence, as for one perpetrated with a diabolical purpose or intent. The intent or purpose with which such a publication is made is immaterial in the trial of the claim for the actual or compensatory damages which the party injured may seek. It is important only when a claim for exemplary damages is to be considered." Post Pub. Co. v. Butler, 137 Fed. 723, 726, 71 C. C. A. 309 (quoting and adopting definition given in Palmer v. Mahen, 120 Fed. 737, 741, 57 C. C. A. 41, 45).

"By 'legal malice,' as explained by Bayley, J., in Bromage v. Prosser, 4 B. & C. 255 (E. C. L. R. vol. 10), is meant no more than the wrongful intention which the law always presumes as accompanying a wrongful act, without any proof of malice in fact. * * * In a legal sense, any act done willfully and purposely to the prejudice and injury of another, which is unlawful, is, as against that person, malicious. It is not necessary, to render an act malicious, that the party be actuated by a feeling of hatred or ill will towards the individual, or that he entertain and pursue any general bad purpose or design. On the contrary, he may be actuated by a general good purpose, and have a real and sincere design to bring about a reformation of manners; but if, in pursuing that design, he willfully inflicts a wrong on others, which is not warranted by law, such act is malicious." Star Pub. Co. v. Donahoe (Del.) 58 Atl. 513, 517, 65 L. R. A. 980 (quoting and adopting definition in Commonwealth v. Snelling [Mass.] 15 Pick. 340).

The kind of "malice" which "overcomes and destroys the privileges is, of course, quite distinct from that which the law, in the first instance, imputes with respect to every defamatory charge, irrespective of motive. It has been defined to be an 'indirect and wicked motive which induces the defendant to defame the plaintiff.'" Denver Public Warehouse Co. v. Holloway, 83 Pac. 131, 133, 34 Colo. 432, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 696, 114 Am. St. Rep. 171, 7 Ann. Cas. 840 (quoting and adopting Hemmens v. Nelson, 84 N. E. 342, 138 N. Y. 524, 20 L. R. A. 440; Odgers, L. & S. 267).

Pen. Code, § 242, defines criminal libel as a malicious publication, section 244 provides that a publication having such tendency is deemed malicious if no justification or excuse is shown, and section 718, subd. 3, provides that the terms "malice" and "malicious" each import an evil intent, wish, or design to annoy or injure another. Held, that a corporation may be convicted of criminal libel; the evil intent of its agents who published the libel being attributed to it. People v. Star Co., 120 N. Y. Supp. 498, 500, 135 App. Div. 517.

Civ. Code, § 47, defines a "privileged communication" as one without malice, to a person interested therein, by one who is also interested; one who stands in such relation to the person interested as to afford a reasonable ground for supposing the motive innocent, or who is requested by the person interested to give the information; and section 48 declares that the "malice" so referred to is not inferred from the communication or publication. Held, that "malice" as used in section 47 meant malice in fact, or a libel published with an actual, malicious intent. Davis v. Hearst, 116 Pac. 530, 540, 160 Cal. 143.

"By 'malice' is not meant, necessarily, spite or ill will, but it is also meant the doing of a wrongful act intentionally, without just cause or excuse; and if an article complained of was published of and concerning plaintiff, and was not true, and was a libel on him, then the law presumes it was published maliciously. * * * Only legal malice is exacted, and on analysis this sinks into a myth or fiction, for so much malice as is necessary to afford compensation for actual damages is inferred from the fact that a false writing was published concerning plaintiff, although in truth the publisher felt no ill will, and believed he was telling the truth. This result eliminates malice from actions for libel, as a practical factor, save as a reason for awarding more than compensative damages or overcoming the defense of privileged communication." What is meant by "malice" in these actions is that the publication of the false matter was without legal excuse, or, to present the rule in a perfectly definite and intelligible form, that it was unprivileged. If it was a privileged communication, no malice is inferred from the publication, and the case fails, unless malice is otherwise proved, and where, through a mistake as to identity, plaintiff's picture was published in connection with an article which was false and libelous as to him, it was malicious. Farley v. Evening Chronicle Pub. Co., 87 S. W. 565, 568, 113 Mo. App. 216.

In malicious mischief

Malice, as an element of malicious mischief, is not restricted to ill will or revenge against the owner or possessor of the property injured; but a wilful or wanton injury to property, under circumstances indicating a malignant spirit or mischief, is sufficient to constitute malicious mischief, and such malice may be either expressed or implied. State v. Wright (Del.) 79 Atl. 399, 400, 2 Boyce, 393.

On a trial for malicious mischief in violation of Rev. Pen. Code, § 712, an instruction that such acts in relation to the property of another as evince a disposition of wanton deviltry and reckless disregard of the rights and property of another are, in law, malice, together with the charge that to justify a conviction the jury must find not only that accused willfully and intentionally, but that he wantonly and in a spirit of revenge, injured the property of another, sufficiently describes "malice," as defined by section 811 as importing a wish to annoy or injure another. State v. Tarlton, 118 N. W. 706, 708, 22 S. D. 495.

In malicious prosecution

"Malice" is a wrongful motive which prompts a wrongful act. The institution of criminal proceedings with any other motive than that of bringing a guilty person to justice is a malicious prosecution. Rulison v. Collins, 82 S. W. 748, 750, 5 Ind. T. 282 (quoting and adopting definition in Addison, Torts [Wood's Ed.] § 853; Johns v. Marsh, 52 Md. 323; Garvey v. Wayson, 42 Md. 178; Harpham v. Whitney, 77 Ill. 32).

The malice required to be shown is the wrongful motive prompting the prosecution, and may be established by proof of any motive other than that of bringing a guilty party to justice. Moneyweight Scale Co. v. McCormick, 72 Atl. 537, 540, 109 Md. 170.

In an action for malicious prosecution, a definition of malice as a "disposition to do the person prosecuted a wrong without legal excuse" was not prejudicial to plaintiff. Gaither v. Carpenter, 55 S. E. 625, 626, 143 N. C. 240.

The malice essential to sustain an action for malicious prosecution, does not mean personal ill will, but a wrongful act, knowingly and intentionally done, without just cause, constitutes malice. Stanford v. A. F. Messick Grocery Co., 55 S. E. 815, 817, 143 N. C. 419.

"Malice" need not indicate anger or vindictiveness, but it imports bad faith in a malicious prosecution, or the want of sincere belief that the facts and circumstances justify the prosecution. Griswold v. Griswold, 77 Pac. 672, 673, 143 Cal. 617.

The fact that an action was commenced and prosecuted without probable cause may be considered by the jury on the question of malice. Actual malicious purpose or personal ill will is not essential to constitute the legal malice which must be shown to support an action for malicious prosecution. The malice required to support the action may be inferred by the jury from the want of probable cause. Connelly v. White, 98 N. W. 144, 145, 122 Iowa, 391.

"Malice," in law, is the intentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause or excuse. It is not sufficient, to sustain an action for malicious prosecution, to prove that the affidavit upon which the arrest was made was false. It must also appear that the affiant either knows it was false, or did not have reasonable and probable cause to believe it to be true. Izzo v. Viscount, 64 Atl. 933, 954, 74 N. J. Law, 65 (quoting and adopting McFadden v. Lane, 60 Atl. 367, 71 N. J. Law, 630).

"Malice," in its legal sense, as used in actions for malicious prosecution, "is not to be considered in the sense of spite or hatred against an individual, but of malus animus, and as denoting that the party is actuated by improper and indirect motives," or, as defined by Newell, Mal. Pros. c. 71, § 7, p. 239, it means "a general wickedness of intent; a depraved inclination to do harm, or to disregard the rights or safety of mankind generally." Campbell v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 55 Atl. 532, 97 Md. 341 (quoting Johns v. Marsh, 52 Md. 323).

"Legal malice," as distinguished from "express" or "actual malice," and which is sufficient to support an action for maliciously suing out process, but not to support an award of punitive damages, consists in a wrongful act intentionally done, without just and lawful cause or excuse. Wright v. Harris, 76 S. E. 489, 492, 160 N. C. 542.

In an action for malicious prosecution, an instruction that: "'Malice' is defined as any indirect motive of wrong; * * * and, in the legal sense, any unlawful act, which is done willfully and purposely to the injury of another, is, as against that person, malicious; and by malice is meant not the act, but the motive which prompts the act. It consists of a bad motive, or such reckless disregard of the rights of others as to show evil intent. It is an action based upon an improper motive, and does not necessarily presuppose personal hatred, ill will, or revenge. The improper motive or want of proper motive inferable from a wrongful act, based upon no reasonable ground, constitutes of itself all the malice deemed essential in law to the maintenance of the action. The malice necessary to be shown in order to maintain this action is not necessarily revenge or other base and malignant passion; whatever is done willfully and purposely, if it be at the same time wrong and unlawful, and that known to the party, is, in legal contemplation, malice. If, however, the accused is in fact guilty of the offense charged, that would be a complete defense in this action, and it would be immaterial whether the proceedings complained of were malicious or not"—was correct. Miles v. Walker, 92 N. W. 1014, 1016, 66 Neb. 728.

"Malice," as an element of malicious prosecution, does not necessarily mean anger, wrath, or vindictiveness, but, while any such ill feeling may constitute malice, it need be no more than the antithesis of bona fides, and hence particular malice or malicious or wrongful purpose, in the sense of personal ill will or malevolence existing toward the person prosecuted by the prosecutor is not required. Downing v. Stone, 68 S. E. 9, 10, 152 N. C. 525, 136 Am. St. Rep. 841, 21 Ann. Cas. 753.

Under Civ. Code 1910, § 4451, providing that malice may consist in personal spite, or in a general disregard of the right consideration of mankind directed by chance against the individual injured, a charge, in an action for illegal arrest and malicious prosecution, that to constitute malice it would not be necessary to show ill will or hatred to the person injured, but that malice may be inferred from any offensive act, or any act of an offensive nature, which would show disregard of the person injured and a violation of proper consideration of him, was too broad, and made the definition turn rather on whether the act was offensive to the person injured than on the intent, purpose, or state of mind of the actor. McPherson v. Chandler, 72 S. E. 948, 949, 137 Ga. 129.

In an action for malicious prosecution, held, that it was proper to instruct the jury that: "'Malice' in law means an act done wrongfully and willfully without reasonable or probable cause, and not necessarily an act done from ill feeling or spite or a desire to injure another. It is enough if defendant be actuated by improper or sinister motives. * * * If the purpose of the arrest was anything else than to vindicate the law and punish crime, then they might infer that defendant had a malicious motive in causing the same." Hackler v. Miller, 114 N. W. 274, 276, 79 Neb. 209.

Negligence distinguished

The doing of an act without that ordinary prudence and discretion which persons of mature mind and sound judgment are presumed to have constitutes "negligence," but will not alone warrant an inference of "malice." Malice is distinguishable from mere negligence in that it arises from some purpose, while negligence arises from absence of purpose. The characteristic of negligence is inadvertence or an absence of an intent to injure. This does not imply that the act was done involuntarily or unconsciously, but merely that the person doing it was not conscious that the act constituted a want of reasonable care. Jenkins v. Gilligan, 108 N. W. 237, 238, 131 Iowa, 176, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1087 (citing Pickens v. South Carolina & G. R. Co., 32 S. E. 567, 54 S. C. 498).

Lack of probable cause distinguished

"'Malice' and 'lack of probable cause' are not convertible terms. Neither follows as a legal presumption from the other. The jury may infer malice as a fact from proof of want of probable cause; but they cannot infer a lack of probable cause from proof of malice. Both must be proved. Honesty of purpose precludes malice. Malice is any improper or sinister motive for instituting the suit. It need not spring from any spirit of malevolence, or be prompted by any malignant passion." While many authorities hold that probable cause is a reasonable ground of suspicion supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant a cautious person in the belief that there were grounds for the attachment, the better rule and the one approved is that belief and reasonable grounds must unite to constitute probable cause. However, the distinction may be more metaphysical than real. Foster v. Pitts, 38 S. W. 1114, 63 Ark. 387 (citing to the quotation Lemay v. Williams, 32 Ark. 166; Cooley, Torts, p. 185; Spengler v. Davy, 15 Grat. [56 Va.] 381; Burkhart v. Jennings, 2 W. Va. 242; Commonwealth v. Snelling, 15 Pick. [32 Mass.] 337; Mitchell v. Wall, 111 Mass. 492; Stewart v. Sonneborn, 98 U. S. 187, 25 L. Ed. 116; Williams v. Hunter, 14 Am. Dec. 597, note; Bozeman v. Shaw, 37 Ark. 160; Frowman v. Smith, 12 Am. Dec. 265, notes; and citing to the rule approved Kling v. Colvin, 11 R. L. 582, 584; Newell, Mal. Pros. p. 252).

MALICE AFORETHOUGHT

As applied to murder, "malice aforethought" is a condition of the mind which shows a heart regardless of social duty and fatally bent on mischief, the existence of which is inferred from acts done or words spoken. Connell v. State, 81 S. W. 746, 747, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 259.

The term "malice aforethought" involved in second-degree murder, within Code, § 4727, providing that whoever kills any human being with malice aforethought is guilty of murder, does not necessarily require an intent to murder, and may be implied where there is no intent to kill, such as an intent to commit a felony from which death results. State v. Gibbons, 120 N. W. 474, 475, 142 Iowa, 98.

Under Code, § 4728, providing that all murder perpetrated by means of poison is murder in the first degree, the administration of poison to another unlawfully, and with bad intent, constitutes malice aforethought, without a specific intent to kill; and hence an instruction that, if defendant, with bad intent, caused poison to be taken by deceased, which caused her death, he was guilty of murder in the first degree, otherwise he was not guilty, was not objectionable on the theory that such act might constitute manslaughter. State v. Thomas, 109 N. W. 900, 902, 135 Iowa, 717.

The use of the words "malice of forethought" in place of the words "malice aforethought," as provided by the form set out in the Code, does not impair the validity of the indictment as charging murder in the first degree, under Code 1907, § 7136, declaring the use of words conveying the same meaning as those in the statute sufficient. Flowers v. State, 56 South. 98, 100, 2 Ala. App. 65.

The malice which is an essential element in the offense of murder has always been described as "malice aforethought." It is descriptive of the state of mind of the slayer preceding and at the instant of the unlawful act of killing. Although no definite or appreciable space of time in law is required to be shown for the existence of malice, yet it must be aforethought; that is, it must be related to the unlawful act in the nature of cause and effect. An indictment for murder in the second degree, charging that defendant "unlawfully and with malice aforethought did, etc.," was objectionable for failure to charge that the act was done with "malice aforethought." Etheridge v. State, 37 South. 337, 141 Ala. 29.

The phrase "malice aforethought" was properly defined as "the voluntary and intentional doing of an unlawful act, with the purpose, means, and ability to accomplish the reasonable and probable consequences of it, done in a manner showing a heart regardless of social duty and fatally bent on mischief, by one of sound mind and discretion, the evidence of which is inferred from acts committed or words spoken." Barr v. State, 120 S. W. 422, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 372.

A charge in question requiring the homicide to have been committed "unlawfully, and with a mind which shows a heart regardless of social duty and fatally bent on mischief, the existence of which may be inferred from acts committed or words spoken and in the perpetration of robbery, and with 'malice aforethought,'" etc., embraces sufficiently the definitions of "malice aforethought." Jones v. State, 96 S. W. 930, 931, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 329 (citing Martinez v. State, 16 S. W. 767, 30 Tex. App. 129, 28 Am. St. Rep. 895; Hedrick v. State, 51 S. W. 252, 40 Tex. Cr. R. 532; Rupe v. State, 61 S. W. 929, 42 Tex. Cr. R. 477).

"'Malice aforethought' means a thing done with a wicked and corrupt motive. It is not confined to anger, hatred, and revenge by one against another, although it evidences a thing done through anger, hatred, or revenge. It also evidences any other unjustifiable motive with which the act is done. Hence malice is not confined to ill will which one individual holds toward another, but it is intended to denote any action flowing from a wicked and corrupt motive. A thing done with a wicked mind, when the act has been attended with such circumstances as evince plain indications of a heart which regards not its social duty, and which is fatally bent on mischief, is done with malice." State v. Wetter, 83 Pac. 341, 346, 11 Idaho, 433.

The mere fact that a killing has been accomplished by means of poison does not show "malice aforethought," within the definition of murder as the unlawful killing of a human being with "malice aforethought." State v. Phinney, 89 Pac. 634, 13 Idaho, 307, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 935, 12 Ann. Cas. 1079.

"Malice," within the definition of murder in Pen. Code, § 187, as the unlawful killing of a human being with "malice aforethought," may be express or implied. People v. Frank, 83 Pac. 578, 579, 2 Cal. App. 283.

Deliberation or premeditation implied

"Malice aforethought" means that the act was done with malice and premeditation. State v. Vaughan, 98 S. W. 2, 5, 200 Mo. 1.

The phrase "malice aforethought" means a predetermination to do the act of killing without legal excuse, and it is immaterial how suddenly or recently before the killing such determination was formed. Hill v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 91 S. W. 1123, 1124 (quoting and adopting the definition in Clark v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 63 S. W. 740).

"Malice aforethought" means in law that it has been thought of beforehand, so that, to constitute murder, the evidence must show that the defendant thought of it beforehand, but as to the length of time it is immaterial." Green v. United States, 104 S. W. 1159, 1160, 7 Ind. T. 733.

"Express malice aforethought" is shown where one person kills another with a sedate, deliberate mind and formed design. State v. Watson (Del.) 82 Atl. 1086, 1087.

"Malice aforethought," as it exists in murder, is a deliberate and formed design to kill, which may be manifested by a lying in wait, antecedent threats, former grudge, ill will, spite, hatred, or any circumstances that show the accused's intent toward his victim at the time of the killing. State v. Primrose (Del.) 77 Atl. 717, 719, 2 Boyce, 164.

In a prosecution for murder, it was error, in attempting to define "malice aforethought," to charge the jury: "If the thought came to the mind (of the defendant), 'I will kill,' and he did kill immediately after that, it is thought of beforehand; that is, 'malice aforethought'"—since it made the conscious act of the defendant malicious, regardless of the fact whether he was acting in self-defense or otherwise. Green v. United States, 101 Pac. 112, 114, 2 Okl. Cr. 55.

To constitute an "assault with intent to murder" within Gen. St. 1146, the assault must be made with malice aforethought, and when an assault is actuated by malice, no matter how short a time it existed previous to the forming of the intent to kill, the malice is "malice aforethought." State v. McGuire, 80 Atl. 761, 765, 84 Conn. 470, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045.

An instruction, defining "malice aforethought" as a predetermination to do a wrongful act without lawful excuse, and that it was immaterial how suddenly or how recently such predetermination was formed in the mind, was not objectionable as including a predetermination to do a wrongful act in general without requiring that the wrongful act be to kill decedent. Howard v. Commonwealth, 139 S. W. 844, 845, 144 Ky. 644.

The phrase "malice aforethought," as used in an indictment charging willful murder and in the instruction defining willful murder and voluntary manslaughter, means a predetermination to do the act of killing without legal excuse, and it is immaterial at what time before the killing such a determination was formed. Ball v. Commonwealth, 101 S. W. 956, 960, 125 Ky. 601.

On a trial for murder, it is proper to advise the jury that "malice aforethought" means a predetermination to do the act of killing without a legal excuse, and it is immaterial as to what time before the killing such a determination was formed. Burns v. Commonwealth, 124 S. W. 409, 412, 136 Ky. 468.

On a trial for murder, the court should instruct that the words "malice aforethought" mean a predetermination to do the act of killing without legal excuse, and that it is immaterial how suddenly or recently before the killing such determination formed. Ewing v. Commonwealth, 111 S. W. 352, 355, 129 Ky. 237.

An instruction that the words "with malice," as used in the instruction, denoted a wrongful act intentionally done, and that the term "aforethought," as used, meant a predetermination to do the act, however suddenly or recently formed before the act was done, sufficiently defined "malice aforethought," especially when taken in connection with another instruction defining "feloniously" as meaning to proceed from an evil heart or purpose, done with the deliberate intention to commit a crime, though the definition of malice aforethought did not require that the act be done "without legal excuse." Potter v. Commonwealth, 134 S. W. 462, 142 Ky. 378.

The phrase "malice aforethought" in an instruction declaring that, where the act of killing is done willfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought, accused is guilty of murder, means a predetermination to do the act of killing without legal excuse, and it is immaterial how suddenly or recently before the killing such determination was formed. Combs v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 112 S. W. 658, 660.

Rev. Laws, c. 207, § 1, declares that murder committed with deliberately premeditated malice aforethought, or in the commission or attempt to commit any crime punishable with imprisonment for life, or committed with extreme atrocity or cruelty, is murder in the first degree, and punishable with death. In a prosecution for such offense, the court charged that the words "deliberately premeditated malice aforethought" meant simply "thought upon, resolved upon beforehand, not a thing done suddenly, not a thing that comes into the mind of a sudden, and is done before there is time to think about it, but a thing thought upon or planned some time before, or thought upon long enough before the act is done so that it can reasonably be said to have become a purpose of the mind," that "no particular length of time is necessary" and il-illustrated the same by stating that if a robber with a dirk or pistol turns a corner and meets a bank messenger with a roll of bills, and determines in one moment to get it, and the next shoots or stabs the messenger dead, takes the package, and flees, his malice was deliberately premeditated, though it occupied only a few seconds to accomplish. Held, that both the definition and illustration were proper. Commonwealth v. Tucker, 78 N. E. 127, 138, 140, 141, 189 Mass. 457, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1058.

An instruction, in a prosecution for murder, that "malice aforethought" means with malice and premeditation is correct. State v. McCarver, 92 S. W. 684, 686, 194 Mo. 717.

"Malice aforethought," as it exists in murder, is a deliberate and formed design to kill, which may be manifested by a lying in wait, antecedent threats, former grudge, ill will, spite, hatred, or any circumstances that show the accused's intent toward his victim at the time of the killing. State v. Primrose, (Del.) 77 Atl. 717, 719, 2 Boyce, 164.

Ill will implied

"Malice aforethought," either expressed or implied, is manifested by the doing of an unlawful and felonious act intentionally and without legal cause or excuse. It does not imply a pre-existing hatred or enmity toward the individual injured. People v. Balkwell, 78 Pac. 1017, 1619, 143 Cal. 259.

The intent essential to constitute an "assault with intent to murder" relates to the condition of the mind of accused, and it may arise from improper motives, as from hatred toward the person assaulted, or from an evil design in general, a wanton and depraved spirit, a mind devoid of social duty and fatally bent on mischief. To constitute an "assault with intent to murder" within Gen. St. § 1146, the assault must be made with intent to kill, and when an assault is actuated by malice, no matter how short a time it existed previous to the forming of the intent to kill, the assault committed is assault with intent to murder. State v. McGuire, 80 Atl. 761, 84 Conn. 470, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1045.

"Malice aforethought" is manifested by the doing of an unlawful or felonious act intentionally and without legal cause or excuse. It does not imply a pre-existing hatred or enmity towards the individual injured. People v. Fallon, 86 Pac. 689, 690, 149 Cal. 287.

Maliciously distinguished

In a prosecution for mayhem, a request for a charge that before the accused could be convicted, the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the act was done unlawfully, intentionally, and with malice aforethought, was properly refused, since the term "malice aforethought" is not necessarily synonymous with "maliciously," as used by the statute defining mayhem. Green v. State, 44 South. 194, 195, 151 Ala. 14, 125 Am. St. Rep. 17, 15 Ann. Cas. 81.

"Maliciously" and "malice aforethought" do not mean the same thing. Malice comprehends ill will, a wickedness of disposition, cruelty, recklessness, a mind regardless of social duty, etc., while "malice aforethought" or "premeditated" design has a more intense meaning. They comprehend, not only what is included within the term "malice," but in addition thereto mean "premeditated malice." Butt v. State, 47 South. 781, 783, 94 Miss. 669 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4304; 1 Bish. Cr. Law [8th Ed.] p. 261; Patterson v. State, 66 Ind. 185; Tutt v. Commonwealth, 46 S. W. 675, 104 Ky. 299; State v. Green, 7 South. 793, 42 La. Ann. 644; State v. Curtis, 70 Mo. 594; Cravey v. State, 35 S. W. 658, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 90, 61 Am. St. Rep. 833).

MALICE IN LAW OR FACT

Malice in law is not personal hate or ill will of one person towards another. It refers to that state of mind which is reckless of law and the legal rights of the citizens in a person's conduct towards that citizen. Foley v. Northrup, 105 S. W. 229, 230, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 277.

"Malice in fact" is a spiteful or rancorous disposition which causes an act to be done for mischief, and is always a question of fact for the jury. Walker v. Chanslor, 94 Pac. 606, 608, 153 Cal. 118, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 455, 126 Am. St. Rep. 61.

In an action for slander, "malice in law" may be implied from facts proved, while "malice in fact" is actual malice. Davies v. Starrett, 55 Atl. 516, 518, 97 Me. 568.

"Malice in fact," in common acceptation, means ill will against a person, while malice in law is a wrong done against a person intentionally. An instruction, in an action for malicious prosecution, that there are two kinds of malice, malice in fact and malice in law, that the former means ill will against a person, and the latter means the doing of a wrongful act intentionally, and that if defendants or either of them were moved by ill will against plaintiff, or the prosecution of him was wrongfully caused or maintained by them, the jury should find that the prosecution was malicious, was not erroneous, as permitting a recovery if the prosecution was wrongfully maintained, where the petition claimed damages for the malicious continuance of the prosecution. Carp v. Queen Ins. Co., 101 S. W. 78, 97, 203 Mo. 295.

"Malice," as usually understood, has its foundation in ill will, and is evidenced by an attempt wrongfully to vex, injure, or annoy another. This is "malice in fact," and is that referred to in Pen. Code, § 7, subd. 4, declaring that the words "malice" and "maliciously" import a wish to vex, annoy, or injure another person. There is another sort of malice, the presumption of the existence of which is raised by the law in certain cases on certain proofs, and this is the malice described in the same section as "an intent to do a wrongful act, established either by proof or presumption of law." This is a malice of pleading and proof made necessary by the exigencies of definitions of offenses against the law, and may exist with malice in fact, but may also exist independent thereof, and in some instances is conclusively presumed against a defendant, while in others the presumption is rebuttable. Davis v. Hearst, 116 Pac. 530, 537, 160 Cal. 143.

"Malice which is presumed," or "malice in law," as distinguished from "malice in fact," "is not personal hate or ill will of one person toward another; it refers to that state of mind which is reckless of law and of the legal rights of the citizen in a person's conduct toward that citizen." Shoemaker v. Sonju, 108 N. W. 42, 44, 15 N. D. 518, 11 Ann. Cas. 1173.

One has an inherent right to dispose of his labor, which can only be lawfully interfered with by one acting in the exercise of an equal or superior right which comes in conflict therewith, and an intentional interference with such right without lawful justification is "malicious in law," even if it springs from good motives and is without express malice. Berry v. Donovan, 74 N. E. 603, 604, 188 Mass. 353, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 899, 108 Am. St. Rep. 499, 3 Ann. Cas. 738.

In an action for alienation of a husband's affections, malice is a jury question of fact, and not one of law. Kelso v. Kelso, 86 N. E. 1001, 43 Ind. App. 115.

MALICIOUS

"The legal meaning of the term 'malicious' is the unintentional doing of a wrongful act without just cause or excuse." McNamara v. St. Louis Transit Co., 81 S. W. 880, 881, 182 Mo. 676, 66 L. R. A. 486.

Whatever is done willfully and purposely, be it at the same time wrong and unlawful, is, in legal contemplation, malicious. Anderson v. International Harvester Co. of America, 116 N. W. 101, 102, 104 Minn. 49, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 440.

Any unlawful act, done willfully and purposely, to the injury of another, as against that person is "malicious" in a legal sense, as such term is used in the law of malicious prosecution. Plummer v. Collins (Del.) 77 Atl. 750, 751, 1 Boyce, 281.

Kirby's Dig. § 1655, provides that if any person shall maliciously or contemptuously disturb or disquiet any congregation assembled in any church for religious worship, etc., he shall, on conviction, be fined, etc. Held, that the words "malicious" and "contemptuous" refer to the manner of disturbance, and not to the intent with which the disturbance was effected. Walker v. State, 146 S. W. 862, 864, 108 Ark. 836.

Under the Bankruptcy Act excepting from liability released by a discharge in bankruptcy those incurred for "malicious" injury to the property of another, a judgment for taking cattle without the consent of the owner and appropriating them to the bankrupt's own use is not released. Bever v. Swecker, 116 N. W. 704, 705, 706, 138 Iowa, 721.

In a legal sense, malice has a meaning different from its popular signification. Acts willfully and designedly done, which are unlawful, are "malicious" in respect to those to whom they are injurious. One may prosecute a laudable purpose with an honest intention, but in such a manner, and in such disregard of the rights of others, as to render his acts unlawful. Prosecutions may be instituted and pursued with pure motives, to suppress crimes, but so regardless of established forms of law, and of judicial proceedings, as to render the transactions illegal and malicious. The general motive may be upright and commendable, while the particular acts in reference to others, may be malicious, in the legal acceptance of the term, so that an act may be malicious in a legal sense, which is not prompted or characterized by malevolence or corrupt design. Page v. Cushing, 38 Me. 523, 526.

In a prosecution under a statute making willful and malicious misconduct in office a misdemeanor, the omission of the word "malicious" from the information is immaterial, when the acts complained of necessarily involve a willful disregard of the obligations owed by the officer to the public. State v. Dixon, 103 Pac. 130, 131, 80 Kan. 650.

Pen. Code, § 242, defines criminal libel as a malicious publication, section 244 provides that a publication having such tendency is deemed malicious if no justification or excuse is shown, and section 718, subd. 3, provides that the terms "malice" and "malicious" each import an evil intent, wish, or design to annoy or injure another. Held, that a corporation may be convicted of criminal libel; the evil intent of its agents who published the libel being attributed to it. People v. Star Co., 120 N. Y. Supp. 498, 500, 135 App. Div. 517.

"The term 'malicious,' used in this connection [procuring a breach of contract], is to be given a liberal meaning. The act is malicious when the thing done is with the knowledge of the plaintiff's rights, and with the intent to interfere therewith. It is a wanton interference with another's contractual rights. Ineffective persuasion to induce another to violate his contract would not of itself be actionable, but if the persuasion be used for the purpose of injuring the plaintiff or benefiting the defendant at the expense of the plaintiff, with a knowledge of the subsistence of the contract, it becomes a malicious act, and, if injury ensues from it, a cause of action accrues to the injured party." Employing Printers' Club v. Doctor Blosser Co., 50 S. E. 353, 356, 122 Ga. 509, 69 L. R. A. 90, 106 Am. St. Rep. 137, 2 Ann. Cas. 694.

The word "malicious," in Rev. St. 1899, § 1959 [Ann. St. 1906, p. 1325], which makes it a misdemeanor for any one to "willfully and maliciously, or wantonly and without right," enter the premises of another and destroy any tree, etc., means an unlawful act, willfully or purposely done to the injury of another, and to authorize the conviction of one for willfully and maliciously injuring trees of another, the malicious intent must be found. State v. Graeme, 108 S. W. 1131, 1133, 130 Mo. App. 138.

The word "malicious," as used in Cr. Code, div. 1, § 203 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1908, p. 752, c. 38), prohibiting the malicious wounding of any domestic animal, the property of another, is not used in the sense of "wrongfully, intentionally and without just cause or excuse," but as importing actual malice towards the owner, as distinguished from a spirit of cruelty toward the animal. People v. Jones, 89 N. E. 752, 756, 241 Ill. 482, 16 Ann. Cas. 332 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4307).

Under Rev. St. 1887, § 7153, making the "malicious" killing, maiming, or wounding of a dog an offense, the word "malicious," as used, is not equivalent to the word "wrongful," as used in the law of torts. The former word means more than the latter. It necessarily involves crime, while the latter does not necessarily do so. State v. Churchill, 98 Pac. 853, 857, 15 Idaho, 645, 16 Ann. Cas. 947 (citing Chappell v. State, 35 Ark. 345; State v. Hussey, 60 Me. 410, 11 Am. Rep. 209; 2 Wharton's Crim. Law, §§ 1068-1070; State v. Phipps, 64 N. W. 411, 95 Iowa, 491; United States v. Gideon, 1 Minn. 292 [Gil. 226]; State v. Rector, 34 Tex. 565).

"Willful," in a statute against libel, is covered by "malicious" in an indictment; the latter meaning all that the former does, and more. Glover v. People, 68 N. E. 464, 466, 204 Ill. 170 (quoting and adopting definition in 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. [3d Ed.] § 613).

Under section 245 of the Penal Code, providing that any malicious publication by picture, effigy, or sign, which exposes a person to contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, is a libel, "malicious" means simply "intentional and willful." Roberson v. Rochester Folding Box Co., 64 N. E. 442, 448, 171 N. Y. 538, 59 L. R. A. 478, 89 Am. St. Rep. 828.

The word "malicious," as ordinarily employed in criminal statutes, is the equivalent of wrongful, intentional, and without just cause or excuse; but, as used in many statutes directed against the unlawful destruction of property, it is held to have a restricted meaning peculiar to such statutes, implying that the act to which it relates must have resulted from actual ill will or revenge. The special meaning noted had its origin in England in prosecutions under the "Black Act" (St. 9 Geo. I, c. 22), enacted in 1722, so called because it was designed to repress the depredations of marauders calling themselves "blacks." The act provided that, if any person or persons shall unlawfully and maliciously kill or wound any cattle, etc., such persons shall be adjudged guilty of felony. It was held that in prosecutions under this act for injuries to cattle, in order to bring an offender within the law, the malice must be directed against the owner of the cattle, and not merely against the animal itself. In the United States most statutes prescribing a penalty for the malicious destruction of property are sufficiently like those of England to warrant the inference that they were modeled on them, and for this reason they have generally, but not always, been given the same construction. But the effect of Crimes Act, § 112 (Gen. St. 1901, § 2105), providing that every punishment and forfeiture imposed on any person maliciously committing any offense prohibited by the provision of preceding sections shall equally apply and be in force, whether the offense shall be committed from malice conceived against the owner of property in respect to which it shall be committed or otherwise, is to take from the word "malicious" the specific meaning that had been attributed to it in laws against the destruction of property, and restore it to the usual sense in which it is used in criminal statutes. State v. Boies, 74 Pac. 630, 68 Kan. 167, Ann. Cas. 491.

MALICIOUS ABUSE OF PROCESS

See, also, Abuse of Process.

Malicious prosecution distinguished, see Malicious Prosecution.

Regular use of civil process does not become an actionable malicious abuse of process by being used with a bad intent. To establish actionable malicious abuse of civil process, there must appear an ulterior purpose and the improper use of process. Keithley v. Stevens, 87 N. E. 375, 376, 238 Ill. 199, 128 Am. St. Rep. 120.

The "malicious suing out of an attachment" contemplates a wrongful motive in the securing of the issuance of the attachment from want of probable cause or other reason, while an "abuse of process" contemplates the use of it after its issue for a wrongful purpose, and a party cannot have damages for the latter offense unless the process issued was perverted to a purpose not intended or contemplated by the law. Wright v. Harris, 76 S. E. 489, 492, 160 N. C. 542.

The regular and legitimate use of process, though with a bad intent, is not a "malicious abuse of process." Two elements are necessary to constitute malicious abuse of legal process: First, the existence of an ulterior purpose; and, second, an act in the use of a process not proper in the regular prosecution of the proceeding. To constitute "malicious abuse of process" lawfully issued, it must be used for a purpose not intended by law. Ingalls v. Christopherson, 114 N. W. 704, 705, 21 S. D. 574 (quoting 1 Cooley, Torts [3d Ed.] 354).

An action for "malicious use of process" lies, though the process was lawfully issued on a valid judgment for a just cause, and is valid in form; the wrong being the illegal and malicious abuse of the power conferred by the judgment and the writ. Gonsoulund v. Rosomano, 176 Fed. 481, 486, 100 C. C. A. 97.

MALICIOUS ACT

In general a malicious act involves all that is usually understood by the term "willful," and is further marked by either hatred or ill will toward the party injured, or by such utter recklessness and disregard of the rights of others as denotes a corrupt or malevolent disposition. State v. Willing, 105 N. W. 355, 356, 129 Iowa, 72.

MALICIOUS ATTACHMENT

"Malicious attachment" of corporate property is not a personal tort, but gives rise to a cause of action for injury to property, which passes to the trustee in bankruptcy of the corporation. Hansen Mercantile Co. v. Wyman, Partridge & Co., 117 N. W. 926, 927, 105 Minn. 491, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 727.

MALICIOUS INJURY

See Willful and Malicious Injury.

To constitute an offense under Rev. Pen. Code, § 712, punishing the "malicious injury or destruction of property," the act must not only be done willfully, but for the purpose of avenging some wrong sustained by the person charged with the offense. One who, on becoming angry without cause, destroyed without justification and in a spirit of wantonness the property of another, violated Rev. Pen. Code, § 712, punishing the malicious injury or destruction of property. State v. Tarlton, 118 N. W. 706, 708, 22 S. D. 495.

A willful act is one done subject to the volition and will of the doer and intentionally, and a willful or malicious injury is one caused by design. Willfulness and malice alike import intent, and the characteristic element of "willful" or "malicious injury" is the design to injure, either actually entertained or to be implied from the conduct and circumstances. Sharkey v. Skilton, 77 Atl. 950, 951, 83 Conn. 503.

MALICIOUS MISCHIEF

Malice in malicious mischief, see Malice.

Malicious mischief includes all malicious physical injuries to the rights of another, which impair utility or materially diminish value. Malice, express or implied, is a necessary ingredient of the offense of malicious mischief, though the malice need not be specifically to the owner of the property destroyed or injured. Willful or wanton cruelty, or injury to or destruction of property, committed under such circumstances as to indicate a malignant spirit of mischief, is sufficient to constitute the offense of malicious mischief. In a prosecution for malicious mischief, malice may be shown by proof of willful and wanton acts, or it may be inferred from attendant facts and circumstances. The sawing down of telegraph poles by defendants themselves, or by some unknown person through their procurement, would constitute malicious mischief; but if they, either as principal or accomplice, did not destroy or injure the poles or wires of the company, acts of resistance or interference, which they may have committed, would not be sufficient to constitute the offense. State v. McCallister (Del.) 76 Atl. 226, 229, 7 Penne-will, 301.

Under Revisal 1906, § 3621, making it a felony for one to maliciously assault another with a deadly weapon by waylaying, etc., and section 3291, defining a misdemeanor as an offense not punishable by death or imprisonment in the state's prison, and Acts 1870-71, p. 94, c. 43, punishing by fine or imprisonment a person convicted of an assault, with or without intent to kill, a prosecution for an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill is a prosecution for a misdemeanor, and not for malicious mischief, defined by section 2676 as willfully injuring personal property with malice to the owner, and is barred in two years by section 3147, providing that all misdemeanors, except for "malicious mischief, and other malicious misdemeanors," shall be presented within two years after the commission of the same, the words "other malicious misdemeanors" being intended to describe an offense of which malice is a necessary ingredient, as in the case of malicious mischief. State v. Frisbee, 55 S. E. 722, 724, 142 N. C. 671.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION

Malice in malicious prosecution, see Malice.

"Malicious prosecution," as a ground of action, must be both malicious and without probable cause. Kendrick v. Cypert, 10 Humph. (29 Tenn.) 291, 294; Hegan Mantel Co. v. Alford (Ky.) 114 S. W. 290, 291.

A malicious prosecution is one begun in malice without probable cause to believe that it can succeed, and which finally fails. Schmidt v. Medical Society of New York County, 127 N. Y. Supp. 365, 367, 142 App. Div. 635; Burt v. Smith, 73 N. E. 495, 496, 181 N. Y. 1, 2 App. Cas. 576.

To recover for malicious prosecution, it must be averred and proved that the prosecution was instituted maliciously and without probable cause. Wehmeyer v. Mulvihill, 130 S. W. 681, 683, 150 Mo. App. 197.

To constitute malicious prosecution, the arrest complained of must have been made by legal process and the prosecution must have been instigated by malice and without probable cause. McIntosh v. Bullard, Earnheart & Magness, 129 S. W. 85, 87, 95 Ark. 227.

In order to recover in an action for "malicious prosecution," plaintiff must allege and prove that there was a prosecution; that it terminated in his favor; that defendants were the prosecutors; that they were actuated by malice; that there was want of probable cause, and the damages sustained by plaintiff. Russell v. Chamberlain, 85 Pac. 926, 927, 12 Idaho, 299; 9 Ann. Cas. 1173.

To maintain an action for malicious prosecution, plaintiff must show that the prosecution was instigated by defendant, that it has been determined in plaintiff's favor; that there was no probable cause, and that defendant acted from malice. Orefice v. Savarese, 113 N. Y. Supp. 175, 176, 61 Misc. Rep. 88.

To sustain a motion for "malicious prosecution," plaintiff must show that he was prosecuted for a criminal offense at the instigation of defendant, who had no probable cause for the prosecution, and who acted with malice, and that the prosecution terminated in an acquittal. A sufficient termination of the prosecution in favor of plaintiff is established when he is discharged by a magistrate, either because of insufficiency of evidence, or because defendant withdrew the prosecution or failed to make any complaint or to appear. Lack of probable cause is not shown by the abandonment of the prosecution, by the dismissal of the charge by the prosecutor, by the voluntary discontinuance of the prosecution, or by the dismissal for want of prosecution. Sasse v. Rogers, 81 N. E. 590, 591, 40 Ind. App. 197 (citing Cottrell v. Cottrell, 25 N. E. 905, 126 Ind. 184; Sayles v. Briggs, 4 Metc. [45 Mass.] 421; Moyle v. Drake, 6 N. E. 520, 141 Mass. 238; Brown v. Randall, 36 Conn. 56, 4 Am. Rep. 35; Cockfield v. Braveboy [S. C.] 2 McMul. 270, 39 Am. Dec. 123; Flickinger v. Wagner, 46 Md. 580).

"In an action for 'malicious prosecution,' it is incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that there was no probable cause for the prosecution, and also that the defendant was actuated by malice in instituting such prosecution. There must be want of probable cause and malice. If probable cause is shown, then the question of malice becomes immaterial, because, there being probable cause, one of the essential elements necessary to maintain the action is disproved." Miller v. Lai, 71 Atl. 63, 77 N. J. Law, 135.

"Malicious prosecution" is "a wanton prosecution made by a prosecutor in a criminal proceeding, without probable cause, by a regular process and proceeding, which the facts do not warrant, as appears by the result." Harrington v. Tibbet, 76 Pac. 816, 817, 143 Cal. 78 (quoting Bouv. Dict. [Rawles' Revised Ed.]).

Proof, or evidence tending to prove the following facts, is essential to authorize the submission of a cause for "malicious prosecution" to a jury: First, the institution or prosecution by the defendant of the proceedings complained of; second, that the proceedings have finally terminated in favor of the plaintiff; third, want of probable cause on the part of defendant to believe plaintiff guilty of the offense charged; fourth, malice on the part of defendant in instituting or continuing the prosecution. Where a street car passenger tendered a defaced nickel, which was all the money he had, and the conductor refused to receive it, and started to eject him, and the passenger, on reaching the door, offered resistance and prevented his removal by a scuffle, but without fighting or offering to fight, or violent language, and the conductor called a policeman and had the passenger arrested upon the charge of disturbing the peace, the question of legal malice, which might be inferred from the fact that the prosecution was intentional, wrongful, and without justification or excuse, was for the jury. Ruth v. St. Louis Transit Co., 71 S. W. 1055, 1058, 98 Mo. App. 1.

"Malice and the want of probable cause must both concur to support the charge of 'malicious prosecution.' Neither is alone sufficient." A verdict for exemplary damages for a wrongful sequestration is authorized only where the writ was sued out wrongfully, maliciously, and without probable cause. Lynch v. Burns (Tex.) 79 S. W. 1084, 1086 (quoting and adopting definition in Culbertson v. Cabeen, 29 Tex. 256).

Malice and want of probable cause are essential elements which must concur in an action for "malicious prosecution," although the former may be an inference from proof of facts establishing want of probable cause. Jordan v. Chicago & A. Ry. Co., 79 S. W. 1155, 1158, 105 Mo. App. 446 (citing Stubbs v. Mulholland, 67 S. W. 650, 168 Mo. 47; Sharpe v. Johnston, 59 Mo. 557).

"Malicious prosecution" has been defined in England as "the malicious institution against another of criminal, bankruptcy, or liquidation proceedings without reasonable and probable cause," and not confined to the malicious institution of proceedings strictly criminal. King v. D. Sullivan & Co. (Tex.) 92 S. W. 51, 52 (quoting and adopting definition in Fraser, Torts, 121).

To maintain an action for "malicious prosecution," three things are necessary to be made out by the plaintiff: First, a want of probable cause; second, malice of the defendant; and, third, damage to plaintiff—and that malice may be implied from the want of probable cause, but this implication may be explained and repelled by facts and circumstances. Jones v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.) 96 S. W. 793 (citing Wood v. Weir [Ky.] 5 B. Mon. 544).

Malice and want of probable cause must coexist to warrant an action for "malicious prosecution," and, where it is shown that the prosecutor consulted the prosecuting attorney in good faith, communicated to him all the ascertainable facts, and acted on his advice in instituting the criminal proceeding, he should be exonerated. Pinson v. Campbell, 101 S. W. 621, 624, 124 Mo. App. 280.

To support an action for "malicious prosecution," plaintiff must show that the one procuring his arrest not only acted maliciously but without probable cause. Malice may be inferred from want of probable cause, but probable cause cannot be inferred from anything else. Where one, before procuring the arrest of another, laid all the facts on which he based his prosecution before a competent attorney, obtained his advice that the prosecution was legal, and in good faith acted on the advice, it is a complete defense to an action for malicious prosecution. National Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Gibson (Ky.) 101 S. W. 895, 897, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717.

To justify an action for "malicious prosecution," it must be shown, not only that there was a lack of probable cause for the criminal prosecution complained of, but that it was instigated maliciously. Van Meter v. Bass, 90 Pac. 637, 638, 40 Colo. 78.

In a suit for malicious prosecution, the essential elements are the commencement or continuance of a criminal or civil proceeding, that defendant caused it to be instituted or continued, its bona fide termination in favor of plaintiff, the absence of probable cause, the presence of malice, and damages to defendant. Sawyer v. Shick, 120 Pac. 581, 30 Okl. 353.

In an action for malicious prosecution, plaintiff is bound to prove that there was a prosecution instituted against him by defendant as alleged, that it was malicious and without probable cause, that it terminated in plaintiff's favor, and that by reason thereof he sustained damage. Plummer v. Collins (Del.) 77 Atl. 750, 751, 1 Boyce, 281.

False imprisonment distinguished

There is a well-marked distinction between an action for false imprisonment and an action for "malicious prosecution." An action for false imprisonment may be maintained when the imprisonment is without legal authority, but, where there is a valid or apparently valid power to arrest, the remedy is by an action for malicious prosecution.

The want of lawful authority is an essential element in an action for false imprisonment. Malice and want of probable cause are the essentials in an action for malicious prosecution. Roberts v. Thomas, 121 S. W. 961, 902, 135 Ky. 63, 21 Ann. Cas. 456.

The distinction between "false imprisonment" and "malicious prosecution" is "that 'false imprisonment' is some interference with the personal liberty of the plaintiff which is absolutely unlawful and without authority. 'Malicious prosecution' is in procuring the arrest or prosecution under lawful process on the forms of law, but from malicious motives and without probable cause." A presiding judge of an election, who, without authority, arrests and detains a voter, is liable for false imprisonment, though he is a judicial officer and has a judicial discretion within prescribed limits. Smyth v. State, 106 S. W. 899, 901, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 408 (quoting and adopting the definition in Herzog v. Graham, 9 Lea [77 Tenn.] 152).

An amendment of a count of a complaint for "malicious prosecution" by striking out an allegation that plaintiff was arrested on a warrant, and substituting an allegation that she was arrested and held without a warrant, changed the cause of action stated, under the law of Alabama, from one in case for "malicious prosecution" to one in trespass for "false imprisonment," and rendered the charge of the court, based on the theory that the count was for "malicious prosecution," misleading and erroneous. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Thompson, 144 Fed. 578, 580, 75 C. C. A. 334.

"False imprisonment" is distinguished from "malicious prosecution" in that it is, as defined by Pen. Code, § 236, an unlawful violation of another's personal liberty, an unlawful arrest or detention of one without warrant or by an illegal warrant, or a warrant illegally executed, while if the imprisonment is under legal process, but the action has been commenced and carried on maliciously and without probable cause, it is a malicious prosecution. Donati v. Righetti, 97 Pac. 1128, 1129, 9 Cal. App. 45.

Where a peace officer arrests a person without process and takes him before a magistrate, before whom he files a written complaint against the prisoner, describing no offense against the law, and after hearing the person is set at liberty, an action for "malicious prosecution" does not lie, but the party has immediate cause of action for false imprisonment. Hackler v. Miller, 112 N. W. 303, 79 Neb. 206.

The two actions of "false imprisonment" and "malicious prosecution" are quite distinct and different. "False imprisonment is the unlawful violation of the personal liberty of another" (Pen. Code, § 236), the interference with the personal liberty of the plaintiff in a way which is absolutely unlawful and without authority. "Malicious prosecution" is procuring the arrest or prosecution of another under lawful process, but from malicious motives and without probable cause. The provocation, motive, and good faith of the defendant, in an action for false imprisonment, constitute no material element in the case, and can be considered only where punitive or exemplary damages are asked, and then only as affecting the measure of such damages. On the other hand, malice and want of probable cause are the gist of the action for malicious prosecution. Without allegation and proof of both, the action will fail. No one can recover damages for a legal arrest and conviction. Therefore, in cases of malicious prosecution, it becomes necessary to await the final determination of the action. But the same principle does not apply to an action for false imprisonment, as the form of action is based upon an illegal arrest, and no matter ex post facto can legalize an act which was illegal at the time it was done. From this it will be seen that one of the essential elements of a complaint for malicious prosecution is that the proceeding upon which it is based has finally terminated in favor of the plaintiff, while it is equally apparent that this is not a necessary or proper allegation in an action for false imprisonment. Neves v. Costa, 89 Pac. 860, 863, 5 Cal. App. 111.

Malicious abuse of process distinguished

An action for "malicious prosecution" is distinguished from one for abuse of process in that, in the former, malice, want of probable cause, and termination of the former proceedings must be shown, and in the latter none of these, but an ulterior purpose and an act in the use of the process not proper in the regular prosecution of the proceeding, must be shown. Pittsburg, J., E. & E. R. Co. v. Wakefield Hardware Co., 55 S. E. 422, 423, 143 N. C. 54 (citing Pittsburg, J., E. & E. R. Co. v. Wakefield Hardware Co., 50 S. E. 571, 138 N. C. 174, 3 Ann. Cas. 720; 1 Cooley, Torts [3d Ed.] 354; 1 Jaggard, Torts, § 203; Hale, Torts, § 185; Mayer v. Walter, 64 Pa. 283; Jackson v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 51 S. E. 1015, 139 N. C. 356, 70 L. R. A. 738); Pittsburg, J., E. & E. R. Co. v. Wakefield Hardware Co., 50 S. E. 571, 573, 138 N. C. 174, 3 Ann. Cas. 720.

There is a clear distinction between the malicious prosecution of an action so as to interfere with another's property or business, and the malicious abuse of process, which is the willful and wrongful use of the process itself, and does not require a termination of the suit in which the process issued to be available as a cause of action. Ludwick v. Penny, 73 S. E. 228, 231, 158 N. C. 104.

The principal distinction between an action for malicious abuse of process and one for malicious prosecution is that, while the former lies for an improper use of process after it issues, the latter is grounded on a malicious suing out of the process without probable cause. Brantley v. Rhodes-Haverty Furniture Co., 62 S. E. 222, 225, 131 Ga. 276.

MALICIOUS SEVERANCE FROM FREEHOLD

The words "malicious severance from the freehold," in Kirby's Dig. § 1901, prohibiting the malicious severance from the freehold of another of anything attached thereto, do not cover the act of a tenant in removing from the outside of a window a for rent sign placed there by the landlord, but the words refer to the severance of things attached to the freehold as a part thereof, such as produce of the soil, timber, structures, or fixtures thereto. Whipple v. Gorsuch, 101 S. W. 735, 737, 82 Ark. 252, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1133, 12 Ann. Cas. 38.

MALICIOUS TRESPASS

See Injury and Malicious Trespass to Property.

"Malicious trespass" or injury to property has been defined by the Legislature to mean a wrongful, intentional, and willful injury, and is not confined to cases where the offender is actuated by an evil animus against the owner of the property or the property itself (Rev. St. 1899, § 1989, Ann. St. 1906, p. 1332). State v. McKee, 104 S. W. 486, 487, 126 Mo. App. 524.

Crimes Act, § 107 (Gen. St. 1901, § 2100), defining "malicious trespass," reads: "Every person who shall willfully, unlawfully and maliciously break, destroy or injure the door or window of any dwelling house, shop, store or other house or building, or sever therefrom or from any gate, fence or inclosure, or any part thereof, any material of which it is formed, or sever from the freehold any produce thereof, or anything attached thereto, or shall pull down, injure or destroy any gate, post railing, or fence or any part thereof, or cut down, lop, girdle or otherwise injure or destroy any fruit or ornamental or shade trees, being the property of another, shall, on conviction, be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor." State v. Boles, 74 Pac. 630, 68 Kan. 167, 1 Ann. Cas. 491.

MALICIOUSLY

"Maliciously" means and implies an intention to do an act which is wrongful, to the detriment of another. State v. Van Pelt, 49 S. E. 177, 187, 136 N. C. 633, 68 L. R. A. 760, 1 Ann. Cas. 495.

By the word "maliciously," as used in an indictment for slander by imputing to a woman a want of chastity, is meant that the words must have been so uttered as to imply by defendant an evil intent or legal malice, or without reasonable grounds for believing that the words uttered were true. Rainwater v. State, 81 S. W. 38, 39, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 496.

Where, soon after a strike was declared, the employer secured men to take the place of the strikers, and has ever since had an adequate force, and is not taking any new men, and of the eleven men who left the employment eight soon secured other employment in the same kind of work, and three have left the commonwealth, and the international organization with which the strikers' labor union was affiliated ceased to aid their efforts any further, the strike was ended so that thereafter driving a wagon through the streets, bearing a placard announcing the existence of a strike, was manifestly intended to injure the employer, and was done "maliciously" within the legal meaning of that word. M. Steinhert & Sons Co. v. Tagen, 93 N. E. 584, 585, 207 Mass. 394, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1013.

Rev. St. 1898, § 4053, defines "malice" and "maliciously" as importing a wish to vex, annoy, or injure another person, or an intent to do a wrongful act. Section 4427 provides that every person who willfully, unlawfully, and maliciously administers any poison to an animal, the property of another, is punishable. Under such sections, the fact that the owner of a dog poisoned by defendant was unknown to defendant did not preclude a finding that the poison was administered maliciously. State v. Coleman, 82 Pac. 465, 466, 29 Utah, 417.

Under a statute providing that every person who shall maliciously administer or cause to be administered or taken any destructive substance, with intent to cause death, shall be punished, etc., and who shall use or cause to be used any instrument with the intention to procure a miscarriage shall be imprisoned, etc., the word "maliciously" is not applicable to the offense of abortion as therein defined. Johnson v. People, 80 Pac. 133, 135, 33 Colo. 224, 108 Am. St. Rep. 85.

"Under Pen. Code, art. 4, § 7, defining the words 'malice' and 'maliciously' as importing a wish to vex, annoy, or injure another person, or an intent to do a wrongful act established either by proof or presumption of law," where a defendant was on trial for assault in the first degree, the crime involved a specific intent as the gist of the offense, and it was error for the court to instruct that, when an unlawful act is shown to have been deliberately committed for the purpose of injuring another, it is presumed to have been committed with a malicious and guilty intent, and the law presumes that a person intends the ordinary consequences of any voluntary act committed by him. State v. Schaefer, 88 Pac. 792, 793, 35 Mont. 217.

The term "maliciously injuring," within Wis. St. 1898, § 4466a, which imposes punishment or fine on any two or more persons who shall combine for the purpose of willfully or "maliciously injuring" another, etc., is intended to add something to the word

"willfully," and imports doing a harm malevolently for the sake of the harm, as an end in itself, and not as a means to some further end legitimately desired. Aikens v. Wisconsin, 25 Sup. Ct. 3, 5, 195 U. S. 194, 49 L. Ed. 154.

"The word 'maliciously' imports 'an intent to do a wrongful act,'" and its absence from an accusation under Pen. Code, § 415, for disturbing the peace, is fully supplied by the charge that defendant willfully and unlawfully disturbed the peace by fighting. Larue v. Davies, 97 Pac. 903, 904, 8 Cal. App. 750.

Where a statute provides that every person who shall willfully and maliciously kill, maim, or disfigure horses, etc., shall be punished, the word "maliciously" imports a criminal motive, intent, or purpose. Roberts v. United States, 126 Fed. 897, 903, 61 C. C. A. 427 (citing Commonwealth v. Brooks, 9 Gray [75 Mass.] 303).

"Maliciously," as used in Acts 1897, p. 257, c. 106, making it a felony for any one to "maliciously" cut and remove timber, for the purpose of marketing, from the lands of another without the owner's consent, does not mean actual malice toward the owner, but is used in the broad legal sense of criminal intention to define that state of mind of a person who does a wrongful act intentionally or willfully and without legal justification or excuse. The word "feloniously" fully covers the meaning of "maliciously" as so used, and "feloniously," as defined in the Century Dictionary, means "with deliberate intent to commit a wrongful act, the act being in law such as constitutes a crime of the class termed 'felonies,'" and in Webster's Dictionary, "In a legal sense, done with the intent to commit a crime." In comparing the judicial definitions of the words "felonious" and "feloniously" in Words and Phrases Judicially Defined, vol. 3, p. 2731 et seq., with the definition of the word "malicious," in volume 5 of the same work, at page 4307, it is found that the words are often construed to have the same meaning, namely, "with criminal intent," or "with intent to commit crime." State v. Smith, 105 S. W. 68, 69, 70, 119 Tenn. 521.

In an action by an employé against a third party for wrongfully causing plaintiff's discharge in violation of contract, the declaration must show that defendant knew of the existence of such contract, and such fact cannot be inferred from an allegation that he "maliciously" caused plaintiff's discharge, which means no more than he acted willfully and intentionally. McGurk v. Cronenwett, 85 N. E. 576, 577, 199 Mass. 457, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 561.

"Maliciously" in the law means "intentionally." It is not sufficient, to sustain an action for malicious prosecution, to prove that the affidavit upon which the arrest was made was false. It must also appear that the affiant either knows it was false, or did not have reasonable and probable cause to believe it to be true. Izzo v. Viscount, 64 Atl. 953, 954, 74 N. J. Law, 95.

The words "willfully," "unlawfully," "feloniously," and "maliciously" import only that criminal intent which is the necessary part of every felony, or other crime, but they do not necessarily include the specific "purpose" to do the act which is an element of the crime charged. Whether the indictment is on a statute or at the common law, it is a rule universal and without exception that every intent, like everything else, which the law makes an element of the offense must be alleged, for otherwise no prima facie case appears. Newby v. State, 105 N. W. 1099, 1100, 75 Neb. 33.

Under 1 Mills' Ann. St. §§ 1424, 1425, providing that, if any person shall maliciously drive cattle from their usual range, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be liable to the party injured, the word "maliciously" means wrongful act done intentionally, without just cause or excuse. Richards v. Sanderson, 89 Pac. 769, 771, 39 Colo. 270, 121 Am. St. Rep. 167.

Under Rev. St. 1899, providing that it shall not be necessary to show, in the trial of an offense for malicious injury to property specified in that article, that the offense was committed from malice conceived against the owner of the property or against the animal or property itself, but, if the act was wrongfully, intentionally, and willfully done, it may be inferred it was done maliciously, the state is relieved from proving that malice was held toward either the owner or the property, but in both sections 1988 and 1989 (Ann. St. 1906, pp. 1332, 1333) general malice is retained as an element, and, though it may be inferred from certain facts, it is not necessarily to be so inferred, and the prohibited offense is not "willfully and maliciously" committed unless the animal is maimed, beaten, or tortured from an evil impulse springing from a state of mind rendering the perpetrator indifferent to the sufferings of the animal and the wrongful quality of the act. State v. Prater, 109 S. W. 1047, 1049, 130 Mo. App. 348.

Ill will implied

Rev. Codes 1905, § 9315, provides that every person who maliciously injures, defaces, or destroys any real or personal property not his own is guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that the word "maliciously," as so used, should have a restricted meaning, and imports actual ill will or revenge and an intent to annoy the owner of the property injured. State v. Minor, 117 N. W. 528, 17 N. D. 454, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 273.

As with malice aforethought

In a prosecution for mayhem, a request for a charge that, before the accused could be convicted, the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the act was done unlawfully, intentionally, and with malice aforethought, was properly refused, since the term "malice aforethought" is not necessarily synonymous with "maliciously," as used by the statute defining mayhem. Green v. State, 44 South. 194, 195, 151 Ala. 14, 125 Am. St. Rep. 17, 15 Ann. Cas. 81.

"Maliciously" and "malice aforethought" do not mean the same thing. Malice comprehends ill will, a wickedness of disposition, cruelty, recklessness, a mind regardless of social duty, etc., while "malice aforethought" or "premeditated" design has a more intense meaning. They comprehend, not only what is included within the term "malice," but in addition thereto mean "premeditated malice." Brett v. State, 47 South. 781, 783, 94 Miss. 669 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4304; 1 Bish. Cr. Law [8th Ed.] p. 261; Patterson v. State, 66 Ind. 185; Tutt v. Commonwealth, 46 S. W. 875, 104 Ky. 299; State v. Green, 7 South. 793, 42 La. Ann. 644; State v. Curtis, 70 Mo. 594; Cravey v. State, 35 S. W. 658, 38 Tex. Cr. R. 90, 61 Am. St. Rep. 833).

MALIGNANT PUSTULE

As disease, see Disease.

"Malignant pustule" is the result of an infection from coming in contact with poisonous animal matter. Delaney v. Modern Accident Club, 97 N. W. 91, 94, 121 Iowa, 528, 63 L. R. A. 603 (citing Bacon v. United States Mut. Acc. Ass'n, 25 N. E. 399, 123 N. Y. 304, 9 L. R. A. 617, 20 Am. St. Rep. 748).

MALINGER

The term "malingering" means to feign or induce sickness, and a malingerer is one who feigns or induces illness to avoid service or shirk duty, especially a soldier or sailor. Wells v. Missouri-Edison Electric Co., 84 S. W. 204, 207, 108 Mo. App. 607.

MALPRACTICE

Attorney

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 67, providing that any attorney guilty of any deceit, malpractice, crime, or misdemeanor shall be disbarred, an attorney who, to secure his fee, settles with a party against whom he was retained to enforce claims, and assigns his contracts with his clients to enforce such claims, and notifies them to settle directly with the other party, agreeing to facilitate any settlement that such other party may desire to make, is guilty of "malpractice." In re Clark, 77 N. E. 1, 184 N. Y. 222.

An attorney who persuades a client, who cannot understand English, to repudiate a settlement in an action and to verify a reply setting up the settlement, when the attorney had no reasonable expectation of supporting the pleading with proof, and before judgment is rendered against his client brings a garnishment suit against the client, who does not learn of the suit until judgment is taken against him, is guilty of "malpractice." In re Thatcher, 190 Fed. 969, 1010.

Physician

"Malpractice" is the bad, professional treatment of disease or bodily injuries, from reprehensible ignorance or carelessness or with criminal intent." Where a patient, before an operation, is not suffering from a dislocation of the hip, and the physician diagnoses the patient's trouble as a partial dislocation and treats her for such dislocation, thereby causing great pain and permanent injury, the physician is guilty of "malpractice." Granger v. Still, 85 S. W. 1114, 1119, 187 Mo. 197, 70 L. R. A. 49.

MALT

MALT LIQUOR

See Fermented and Malt Liquors; Substitute for Malt Liquor.

See, also, Spirituos Liqueurs.

Where a beverage contained no alcohol, preservatives, or saccharine, and was nonintoxicating, but did contain 5.73 per cent. malt, it was a "malt liquor," within Acts 1908, c. 115, § 1, prohibiting the sale within the state of any vinous, alcoholic, malt, intoxicating, or spirituous liquors. Purity Extract & Tonic Co. v. Lynch, 56 South. 316, 100 Miss. 650.

Ky. St. 1909, § 2557, making it unlawful, after a local option election resulting in a vote against sale of "spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors," to sell any such liquors, is not, in view of prior judicial construction of the words in prior statutes on the subject, violated by sale of malt liquor containing less than 2 per cent. of alcohol, and nonintoxicating in the largest quantity in which it may be drunk. City of Bowling Green v. McMullen, 122 S. W. 823, 134 Ky. 742, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 895.

The words "malt liquor" are words in common and ordinary use and did not require definition in a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquors. It was not necessary, in prosecution under a statute forbidding sale of malt liquor, to prove that malt liquor was intoxicating. State v. O'Connell, 58 Atl. 59, 60, 99 Me. 61.

Under a statute imposing a tax upon the business of trafficking in spirituous, vinous, malt, or other intoxicating liquors, "malt liquors," whether intoxicating or not, are subject to the tax. La Follette v. Murray, 91 N. E. 294, 295, 81 Ohio St. 474.

"Malt liquors" include nonintoxicating, as well as intoxicating, liquors. Commonwealth v. Goodwin, 64 S. E. 54, 56, 109 Va. 828.

The generic term "malt liquors" includes liquor containing any percentage of alcohol as the product of malt brewing, whether the product is intoxicating or not. La Follette v. Murray, 91 N. E. 294, 295, 81 Ohio St. 474.

"Malt rose" is a beverage made to imitate lager beer, having the same general color, taste, and appearance, and containing from .74 to 1.18 per cent. of alcohol. It is a fermented or malt liquor within liquor tax law (Laws 1897, p. 207, c. 312), regulating the sale of fermented or malt liquors. People v. Cox, 94 N. Y. Supp. 526, 529, 106 App. Div. 299.

The term "malt liquors," as used in Acts 1910 (Ex. Sess.) No. 4, to define the meaning of the term "grog or tippling shop," in prohibition districts, includes only malt liquors that are intoxicating. State v. Maroun, 55 South. 472, 473, 128 La. 829.

"Malt liquors" are the product of a process by which grain is steeped in water to the point of germination, the starch being thus converted into saccharine matter, which is kiln dried, then mixed with hops, and by a further process of brewing made into a beverage; porter, ale, beer, etc., being embraced within the expression. Marks v. State, 48 South. 864, 868, 159 Ala. 71, 133 Am. St. Rep. 20.

The term "malt liquors," as used in the provision of article 229 of the Constitution, which reads, "This restriction shall not apply to dealers in distilled, alcoholic or malt liquors," and whereby political corporations, throughout the state, are left free to impose license taxes upon the dealers thus mentioned, without regard to the action or nonaction of the state in such cases, must be regarded as applying to malt liquors which are, or may be, used as beverages, and which are intoxicating, and as having no application to malt liquors which are not, or may not be, so used, and are not intoxicating. City of Shreveport v. Smith, 57 South. 652, 653, 130 La. 126.

Act Sept. 5, 1908 (Acts 1908, p. 1112), providing a revenue for the development and conduct of the penitentiary system, and to buy farm lands and equipment as needed in the management, control, and employment of convicts by requiring a license of all persons manufacturing, selling, or distributing any imitation of beer, ale, wine, whiskey, or other spirituous or malt liquors, as used in that article providing that the tax on malt liquors shall be devoted to the support of the common schools, has reference to and is intended to include only such malt liquors as are intoxicating in their nature. Carroll v. Wright, 63 S. E. 260, 268, 131 Ga. 728.

St. 1898, c. 1565c, prohibiting the sale of any spirituous, malt, ardent, or intoxicating liquors or drinks in no-license territory, when considered in connection with section 1565, as amended by Laws 1905, p. 520, c. 341, providing that proof of the sale of any malt, spirituous, vinous, or distilled liquor shall be deemed proof of the sale of intoxicating liquors, etc., is violated by a sale of malt liquors or drinks which are the product where the alcohol, produced by fermentation, of which malting is a preliminary process, remains in the liquor drawn off from the malt, or by a sale of spirituous liquors or drinks which are the product where the alcohol is separated by distillation so that the liquor separated contains a percentage of alcohol, or by a sale of ardent liquors or drinks, or by a sale of intoxicating liquors or drinks, and hence a sale of malt liquor containing alcohol is an offense, though the beverage is a non-intoxicant. Pennell v. State, 123 N. W. 115, 116, 141 Wis. 35.

Under Ky. St. § 2557, prohibiting the sale of spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors in local option territory, a sale of malt liquor whether it intoxicates some people or not or is only a mild intoxicant, or whether accused believed that it was an innocent soft drink, is an offense. Flanders v. Commonwealth, 130 S. W. 809, 811, 140 Ky. 88.

Byrd Law (Acts 1908, pp. 275-287, c. 189) § 23½, defines "malt beverage" a nonintoxicating liquor, and requires the manufacturer to pay a special license tax and give a bond. Section 28 provides that the act shall not affect municipal charter provisions respecting licenses. Manassas Charter (Acts 1901-2, p. 216, c. 215; Acts 1906, p. 204, c. 128) § 14, requires the payment of license to sell "malt liquors." Held, that "malt beverage" is a malt liquor within the charter provision, and that compliance with the Byrd law does not avoid necessity for complying with the charter provision. Commonwealth v. Goodwin, 64 S. E. 54, 56, 109 Va. 828.

Beer

The term "beer" being presumed to refer to a malt liquor, a charge of illegally selling malt liquors is supported by evidence of the sale of beer, although the specific kind of beer is not shown. Wilson v. State, 57 South. 503, 3 Ala. App. 158.

The courts will take judicial notice that lager beer is a "malt liquor," the sale of which is prohibited by statute. Purcell v. State, 55 South. 847, 848, 61 Fla. 43.

The term "malt liquor," as used in the liquor tax law (Laws 1897, p. 207, c. 312), regulating the sale of malt liquors, includes lager beer. Cullinan v. McGovern, 94 N. Y. Supp. 525, 526.

Common beer is a malt liquor within Ky. St. § 2557, prohibiting the sale of malt liquors in local option territory, and its sale is prohibited irrespective of the label on the bottles or the name adopted. Flanders v. Commonwealth, 130 S. W. 809, 811, 140 Ky. 88.

An affidavit charging accused with the unlawful sale of a "pint of beer" sufficiently alleged a sale of malt liquor so as to render the affidavit sufficient; "beer" being a fermented liquor or a malt liquor made from malted grain or hops or other bitter flavors. Turner v. State, 93 N. E. 225, 226, 175 Ind. 1.

Under an indictment for the illegal sale of "malt liquor," where the testimony of a witness was that he bought "beer," it sufficiently appeared that the word was used by the witness in the sense of malt liquor. Locke v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 74 S. W. 654, 655; State v. Gibbs, 123 N. W. 810, 109 Minn. 247, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 449.

Cider

Cider is not a "malt liquor." Malt liquors are intoxicating but cannot be classed as spirituous. Donithan v. Commonwealth, 64 S. E. 1050, 109 Va. 845.

MAN

See Confidence Man; Reasonable Man; Signal Man.

Man in charge of train, see Conductor.

Men as meaning one, see Men.

"Man" is a term to designate a male person over 21 years of age. Hartsell v. State, 116 S. W. 1159, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 389; White v. State (Tex.) 151 S. W. 826.

An instruction, on the trial of a man for murder, that to establish the defense of self-defense it must appear that the circumstances were sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable "man" or one reasonably courageous and reasonably self-possessed, and not of a coward, is not erroneous for the use of the word "man," which is used in its generic sense. Anderson v. State, 43 S. E. 835, 836, 117 Ga. 255.

Minor

Under Pub. St. 1901, c. 278, § 15, providing that, if any man shall unlawfully and carnally know any woman child under the age of 16 years, he shall be imprisoned, etc., the word "man" includes persons of the male sex who are capable of committing rape, and is not limited to adult males. State v. Burt, 71 Atl. 30, 75 N. H. 64, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 232.

MANAGE

See Invest and Manage; Mismanage—Mismanagement.

The general power to "manage" their "real or personal estate as if sole," given to married women by Rev. St. c. 61, § 1, includes that of submitting to arbitration a question of damages for the flowage of their separate lands, and of covenanting to abide the award. Duren v. Getchell, 55 Me. 241, 248.

The phrase "managed and cared for by them" in a will whereby testator gave his residuary estate to his son to be held in trust by his executors and "managed and cared for by them" for his son's benefit, until he arrived at a designated age, etc., implies that the executors should receive the rents and profits. Higgins v. Downs, 91 N. Y. Supp. 937, 938, 101 App. Div. 119.

As conduct or carry on

The words "manage, control, invest, and reinvest," as used in a will whereby testator conferred on his executors power to "manage, control, invest, and reinvest" the residuary estate and the income thereof, and sell or convey all or any part thereof, with or without covenants, in their discretion, did not warrant the executors in carrying on the business of a corporation in which testator had invested, so that he owned nearly all of its stock and bonds, especially in view of a codicil commanding the executors to incur no debts except in liquidation of debts outstanding at testator's decease. In re Corbin's Will, 91 N. Y. Supp. 797, 799, 101 App. Div. 25.

As control

Under Civ. Code, § 857, subd. 1, authorizing a trust to sell realty and apply or dispose of the proceeds, in accordance with the trust instrument, where a trust deed, besides empowering the trustee to sell the property to obtain money for the payment of the indebtedness, also empowered him to manage the same, the word "manage" gave only such control of the property as was proper in the lawful execution of a trust created as security for an indebtedness. Younger v. Moore, 103 Pac. 221, 223, 155 Cal. 767.

The word "manage" means to direct, control, govern, administer, or oversee. Under Civ. Code, § 857, subd. 3, authorizing the creation of a trust to receive rents and profits of real property and pay them to or apply them to the use of any person, and section 863, providing that when a trust is created the whole estate is vested in the trustee, subject to the trust, a trust may be created to "manage" property and to collect the income, issues, and profits thereof and pay them to specific persons, though the word "manage" is not mentioned in the section authorizing the creation of the trust. In re Heywood's Estate, 82 Pac. 755, 757, 148 Cal. 184.

MANAGEMENT

See Exclusive Management and Control; Fraud in Management; Sole Management; Under the Control, Management, or Operation.

Intrusted with management, see Intrust.

Since a conviction of a violation of Act April 26, 1909 (Laws 1909, c. 190), punishing one who shall engage or assist in operating or managing any house of prostitution, cannot be had unless it is shown that accused had control of and conducted or assisted in the management and operation of the affairs of the house in some manner, or that he was able to bring about or assist in bringing about prostitution, a charge that if accused in any manner aided or abetted a third person in the management of the house he is guilty is erroneous; the word "management" meaning the act of managing; the manner of treating, directing, carrying on, or using for a purpose. Trozzo v. People, 117 Pac. 150, 154, 51 Colo. 823.

Management and control

The words "management and control," as used in Rev. St. 1887, § 2498, relating to the management and control by a husband of his wife's separate property, have a well-defined meaning, and under the provisions of section 15 must be construed according to the context and approved usage of the language. The power to manage implies the power to control. To manage money is to employ or invest it. The word "control" means to have authority over a particular matter or thing, and the phrase "management and control" implies the possession of the thing managed or controlled, or the right to the possession thereof. Sencerbox v. First Nat. Bank of Idaho, 93 Pac. 369, 371, 14 Idaho, 95 (citing 2 Words and Phrases, p. 1549; 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4317).

Management of vessel

The unloading of cargo in the port of discharge by stevedores has no relation to the "management of the vessel" within the meaning of the third section of the Harter Act (Act Feb. 13, 1893, c. 105, 26 St. 445), not being an act done with any view of such management, but relates to the care or delivery of cargo within the meaning of the first section. The Germanic, 124 Fed. 1, 4, 5, 59 C. C. A. 521.

The negligent failure of the master of a vessel to make proper use of the ventilating apparatus during the course of a five months' voyage, by reason of which, and the presence in the cargo of a large quantity of coke, the wicker or straw coverings on a large number of wine bottles were sweated and ruined, was not a fault or error in the management of the vessel, within the meaning of Harter Act Feb. 13, 1893, c. 105, § 3, but "negligence, fault, or failure in proper * * * care of * * * merchandise or property" within section 1, for which the owner of the vessel is liable. The Jean Bart, 197 Fed. 1002, 1005.

Where a ship was at the commencement of a voyage in all respects seaworthy and properly manned and supplied, damage to a sugar cargo from fresh water which escaped into the hold where the sugar was stowed while the cargo was being discharged, by reason of a valve having been improperly left open while water from the river was being pumped into the engine tank, was due to a fault in the "management" of the vessel, for which she is exempt from liability by section 3 of the Harter act (Act Feb. 13, 1893, c. 105, 27 Stat. 445, providing that, if the owner of any vessel transporting merchandise or property to or from any port in the United States shall exercise due diligence to make the vessel seaworthy and properly manned, equipped, and supplied, neither the vessel, her owner or owners, agent or charterers, shall be responsible for the damage resulting in the management of the vessel. The Wildcroft, 130 Fed. 521, 527, 65 C. C. A. 145; Id., 124 Fed. 631, 637.

The action of the master of a vessel in permitting whale oil, which leaked from barrels, to remain in the bilges, with the object of saving it at the end of the voyage, did not pertain to the "management of the vessel," within section 3 of the Harter act (Act Feb. 13, 1893, c. 105, 27 Stat. 445); but injury to other cargo from such oil arose from "failure in proper care of the cargo," within section 1, for which the vessel was liable. The Persiana, 185 Fed. 396, 397, 107 C. C. A. 416.

The tipping of a vessel by the head by the master while discharging cargo for the purpose of examining her propeller, and having nothing to do with the discharge of the cargo, was an act of management of the ship within section 3 of the Harter act (Act Feb. 13, 1893, c. 105, 27 Stat. 445), and, where the owner had complied with the requirements of said section at the commencement of the voyage neither he nor the vessel is liable for a resulting injury to the cargo. The Indrani, 177 Fed. 914, 915, 101 C. C. A. 194.

Operation and control synonyms

In an action against an abutting owner for injuries from defects in the cover of a coal hole, where the complaint predicates negligence of the defendant in the management, operation, and control of the sidewalk, and in keeping the coal hole in defective order, and in failing to provide proper warning as to the defective state of the coal hole cover, there is no legal differentiation between the terms "management" "operation," and "control," and any one of them would be sufficient to justify the admission of testimony to sustain a delinquency intended to be charged. Maldosky v. Germania Bank, 127 N. Y. Supp. 292, 293.

MANAGER

See General Manager; Mine Manager.

Since a conviction of a violation of Act April 28, 1909 (Laws 1909, c. 196), punishing one who shall engage or assist in operating or managing any house of prostitution, cannot be had unless it is shown that accused had control of and conducted or assisted in the management and operation of the affairs of the house in some manner, or that he was able to bring about or assist in bringing about prostitution, a charge that if accused in any manner aided or abetted a third person in the management of the house he is guilty is erroneous; the word "management" meaning the act of managing; the manner of treating, directing, carrying on, or using for a purpose; and the word "operate" meaning to put into or to continue in operation or activity; the word "manager" meaning one who has the conduct or direction of anything; and the phrase "to carry on," when applied to business, meaning to prosecute, to help forward, to continue, etc. Trozso v. People, 117 Pac. 150, 154, 51 Colo. 323.

Sess. Acts 1901, p. 219, § 1, requires the owner, proprietor, lessee, or "keeper" of office buildings, etc., more than three stories high, to provide fire escapes. Section 5 makes the owner, proprietor, lessee, or "manager" of a building, required to be equipped with fire escapes, who neglects for 60 days after the act becomes effective to comply with the act guilty of a misdemeanor. Acts 1903, pp. 251, 252, repealed the first three sections of the act and enacted new sections in their place, but section 1 of the act as amended required the owner, proprietor, lessee or keeper of such buildings to provide escapes as in the original act. Section 2 provided that, if a fire escape was found upon inspection to be unsafe, the owner, proprietor, lessee, or keeper should repair it, and section 5 remained unchanged. Held, that the words "manager of a building" did not necessarily mean the same as "keeper of a building," or denote any particular duties in relation to the building, and one charged as manager of a building with violating the act could not be convicted, in the absence of evidence showing that his duties made him a keeper of the building. State v. Cook (Mo.) 128 S. W. 212, 213.

Conductor and manager

The words "conductor" and "manager," used in Ky. St. §§ 795-800, requiring segregation of white and negro passengers, and requiring the conductor or manager to see that the statute is obeyed, mean the same person, except where one not designated as conductor is in charge of a train. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Renfro's Adm'r, 135 S. W. 266, 268, 142 Ky. 590, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 133.

Manager of corporation

The word "manager" imports agency, control, and authority presumptively sufficient to bind a corporation on a bond given on certiorari to review a judgment of a justice of the peace. The term "manager," as applied to a private corporation, indicates one who has the general direction and control of its affairs, and, when used in connection with the seal, imports authority to sign in behalf of the corporation. American Inv. Co. v. Cable Co., 60 S. E. 1037, 1039, 4 Ga. App. 106.

The president, treasurer, and secretary of a stock corporation governed by General Corporation Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 23) §§ 3, 34, 43, and Stock Corporation Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 59) § 30, vesting the management of such corporations in a board of directors with authority to appoint officers with defined powers and duties, are not in the absence of evidence of their powers and duties, within Pen. Code, § 246, making every manager of a corporation by which a libel is published chargeable with the publication thereof, though under sections 242 and 244 it may be conceded that the intent to publish a libelous article constitutes the criminal intent essential to constitute criminal liability, for the term "manager" does not embrace the officers of a corporation as such with authority to prevent a libelous publication and to publish a disavowal thereof. People ex rel. Carvalho v. Warden of City Prison, 128 N. Y. Supp. 837, 840, 144 App. Div. 24.

The term "manager" is defined as "a person appointed or elected to manage the affairs of another. The term is applied to those officers of a corporation who are authorized to manage its affairs." State v. Eyermann, 90 S. W. 1168, 1169, 115 Mo. App. 660.

Laws 1901, p. 73, provides that the manager, etc., of any building or establishment from which dense smoke is emitted shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. Held, that one who was the secretary and purchasing agent of a company, and who had charge of its manufacturing department, and exercised supervision over the engine room, and who was regarded by other employes and officers as a de facto president, was "manager" of the concern within the statute. State v. Hemenover, 87 S. W. 482, 188 Mo. 381, 483.

Manager of theater

A ticket taker at a theater is not a "person who manages the theater" in part within Pen. Code, § 290, declaring a person who permits to remain in any theater owned, kept, or managed by him in whole or in part any child under the age of 16 years, unless accompanied by its parent, guilty of a misdemeanor. People ex rel. Jacques v. Flaherty, 107 N. Y. Supp. 415, 416, 122 App. Div. 878; Id. 84 N. E. 1118, 191 N. Y. 525.

Publisher synonymous

The fact that a person making an affidavit of publication of process in a newspaper signs himself "publisher" instead of "editor," "proprietor," or "manager," does not make proof of publication defective, though the statute requires that the proof shall be made by the "editor," "proprietor," or "manager" of the newspaper; the word "publisher" being used in the sense of proprietor or manager. Stuart v. Cole, 92 S. W. 1040, 1042, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 478.

MANAGING

See Running, Conducting, or Managing.

MANAGING AGENT

"Managing" means to have under control and direction; to guide; and employes in charge of the stopping and starting of a train are "managing" it, within Mills' St. § 1508. Whittle v. Denver & R. G. R. Co., 118 Pac. 971, 972, 51 Colo. 382.

Where a domestic corporation has only one agent residing in this state, he will be held to be its "managing agent" within Rev. St. § 2637, subd. 10, providing that in an action against a domestic corporation the summons may be served on its managing agent. Wickham v. South Shore Lumber Co., 61 N. W. 287, 288, 89 Wis. 23.

Service on one as managing agent of a corporation not authorized to receive service is void, regardless of whether he delivers the process to the corporation, and defendant may insist that it will not be bound thereby, especially where it promptly repudiates such service. Kramer v. Buffalo Union Furnace Co., 116 N. Y. Supp. 1101, 1102, 132 App. Div. 415.

A "managing agent" of a foreign corporation for purpose of service of process must be some person vested by the corporation with general powers involving the exercise of judgment and discretion, as distinguished from an ordinary agent or attorney who acts in an inferior capacity, and under the direction and control of superior authority, both in regard to the extent of his duties and the manner of executing it. Ritchie v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 128 N. W. 35, 37, 87 Neb. 631 (quoting 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4320).

Where a foreign corporation has an office in the state, in charge of the person who acts for the corporation, doing business for it, he is a "managing agent," within Code Civ. Proc. § 432, on whom service of process could be had. Russell v. Pittsburgh Life & Trust Co., 115 N. Y. Supp. 950, 953, 62 Misc. Rep. 403.

One who succeeded to the business of a firm, and in its name corresponded and maintained business relations with a foreign corporation without its ever having heard of him, he renting and maintaining his own office, and merely, transferring to the corporation bucket shop business which he was unwilling or unable to handle, was not its managing agent, within Code Civ. Proc. Neb. §§ 73, 75, authorizing service of process on such an agent. Swarts v. Christie Grain & Stock Co., 166 Fed. 338, 344.

The term "managing agent," as used in section 4144, Rev. Codes, relating to the service of process on domestic corporations, is a generic term, and does not refer to any particular person or officer, like the words "president," "secretary," etc. Densel v. Atlanta Mercantile Co., 106 Pac. 2, 3, 17 Idaho, 432.

An employé of a foreign corporation engaged in the sale of merchandise under a mail order system, with the duty of delivering such orders to manufacturers and jobbers in New York City as are transmitted to him from the home office and who receives the mail of the corporation at its New York office and transmits it to the home office, and who has no supervision over the correspondence or over the business, and who is employed on a weekly salary paid by check from the home office, is not a "managing agent" of the corporation within Municipal Court Act (Laws 1902, c. 580) § 31, providing that service of a summons on a corporation may be made by delivering a copy to the president, secretary, cashier, or "managing agent." Doykos v. Montgomery, Ward & Co., 127 N. Y. Supp. 227, 228.

A "managing agent" must be in charge, and have the management of some department of the corporation's business, the management of which requires the exercise of an independent judgment and discretion. While he may be under the general direction of the corporation, yet, in the management of his particular department, he should have authority to manage and conduct it as his judgment and discretion direct. He must be in the exclusive and immediate control and management of that department or of the entire works conducted at the place where he is in charge. Federal Betterment Co. v. Reeves, 84 Pac. 560, 562, 73 Kan. 107, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 460.

An agent of a foreign corporation, whose contract of agency demands of him the exercise of judgment in the business matters of his principal, and who has charge of the business of his principal in the territory covered by his contract, is a "managing agent," within the meaning of sections 1074 and 1076, Cobbey's Ann. St. 1903, providing for the service of summons upon the "managing agent" of a foreign corporation. Ord Hardware Co. v. J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co., 110 N. W. 551, 553, 77 Neb. 847, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 770 (citing Words and Phrases, 4321).

To constitute a "managing or business agent" upon whom service of summons could be made, the agent must be one having in effect a representative capacity and derivative authority, and not one created by construction or implication contrary to the intention of the parties. Karns v. State Bank & Trust Co., 101 Pac. 564, 565, 566, 31 Nev. 170 (quoting Doe v. Springfield Boiler & Mfg. Co., 104 Fed. 687, 44 O. C. A. 130).

The term "managing agent," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 411, providing for service of summons in a civil action against a foreign corporation doing business in the state and having a managing agent within the state, by delivering a copy to such agent, means the agent who is managing that business. While plaintiff was in Oregon, he received a letter from the S. Saw Co. written from San Francisco in the name of the company signed by J. S., who was president of that corporation, offering employment as a traveling salesman for goods carried by the company. The offer was accepted. The S. Saw Co. was a dealer in manufactured articles of various kinds, which it purchased from different manufacturers; the S. Saw Co. was one. Goods purchased by the S. Saw Co. from the manufacturing company became the Saw Company's property and was sold by it for its own account, and plaintiff was employed by it to sell them for its account, and he accounted to it for whatever sales he made. His salary, however, was paid by the S. Mfg. Co., because, as it was explained, the Saw Co. might to that extent be aided in meeting the expenses of pushing the S. Mfg. Co.'s goods. Letter heads of the S. Saw Co. bearing a list of articles of different manufacturers in which it dealt, and underneath the name of the S. Mfg. Co. was the word "agencies," beneath which there were several places of address in different states, the last of which was S. Saw Co., San Francisco, Cal. Held, that the facts stated did not constitute a doing business in the state by the S. Mfg. Co., for "while it might be held that a traveling salesman engaged in selling goods for a foreign corporation for its account would be regarded as a transaction of business by such corporation, the employment under a delegated authority from such corporation to act as such salesman would not of itself be regarded as doing business by the corporation." Jameson v. Simonds Saw Co., 84 Pac. 289, 290, 2 Cal. App. 582.

General agent distinguished

See General Agency or Agent.

Director

A director, by or through the authority of his office, is not a "chief officer" or "managing agent" of a domestic corporation, within the meaning of section 5604, Comp. Laws 1909; hence service of summons on the corporation cannot be had by the delivery of a copy of the summons to such director. Oklahoma Fire Ins. Co. v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., 125 Pac. 734, 736, 34 Okl. 149.

Financial correspondent

Under the statute authorizing service on a foreign corporation by delivering a copy to one of its officers, or "a managing agent thereof, if within the state, doing business for defendant," held, that the term "managing agent" does not include a financial correspondent of an insurance company, whose business is strictly confined to soliciting and procuring applications for loans, drafting of mortgages and notes, etc., and collecting such notes and mortgage loans; the insurance commissioner of the state having also been appointed the agent of such company for service of process in the state. Bauer v. Union Central Life Ins. Co., 133 N. W. 988, 990, 22 N. D. 435.

Foreman

A foreman acting under the direction of the superintendent of a corporation is neither an "officer" nor a "managing or local agent" of the corporation, and is not a person on whom service of summons on the corporation can be made. Simmons v. Defiance Box Co., 62 S. E. 435, 436, 148 N. C. 344.

Where a foreman has charge of a local milk station or cheese factory owned by a corporation in the absence of any superior corporate authority, and is vested with powers of management, though he occasionally receives directions from the principal office and the corporate officers, but exercises discretion in transacting business, he is a "managing agent" within Code Civ. Proc. § 431, authorizing the service of process by delivery to the managing agent of a corporation. Wesley v. Beakes Dairy Co., 131 N. Y. Supp. 212, 213, 72 Misc. Rep. 260.

Manager

Under Rev. Codes, § 4144, providing that summons must be served on a domestic corporation by delivering a copy to the president, or other head of the corporation, secretary, cashier, or managing agent, where proof of service recites that the summons was served on the "manager" of the corporation named, it was prima facie evidence of service on the corporation; it being presumed that the manager was the "managing agent" thereof. Densel v. Atlanta Mercantile Co., 106 Pac. 2, 3, 17 Idaho, 432.

Railroad company

Code Civ. Proc. § 73, provides that summons against a corporation may be served upon its chief officer, or if he is not found in the county then upon its managing agent, etc. Section 75 provides that, when defendant is a foreign corporation, having a managing agent in the state service may be upon him. Comp. St. 1909, c. 72, art. 1, § 4, provides that service upon railroad companies may be made as on other corporations, or by leaving a copy of the summons with a station agent, or other officer of the company, within the state, etc. Held, that a railroad company selling a coupon ticket in the usual form, authorizing the buyer to travel over the seller's line, from a point within the state to a point in an adjoining state, and thence over the line of another railroad, the connecting line having no part of its track within the state, nor any place of business, nor agency, the railroad selling the ticket was not a "managing agent" of such connecting line upon whom service of summons on such connecting line could be made. Ritchie v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 128 N. W. 35, 36, 87 Neb. 631.

Salesman

Municipal Court Act (Laws 1902, c. 580) § 31, provides that in actions against corporations the summons must be served on the president, etc., or "managing agent." Held, that a mere salesman, who solicited and received orders and sold merchandise on behalf of defendant, was not such "managing agent," within the meaning of such section. Gleich v. Ontario Button Co., 129 N. Y. Supp. 407, 408.

Solicitor

A solicitor who had been, but at the time of service of process upon him had ceased to be, a solicitor of applications in a company which sold sick, accident, and funeral benefits, was not "a managing agent" of such company, within the meaning of the Ohio statute authorizing service of process upon the managing agent of a foreign corporation. Spiker v. American Relief Soc., 103 N. W. 611, 612, 140 Mich. 225.

Traveling agent

Under the statute permitting service of process on a "managing agent," where a foreign corporation is doing business in the state, no fixed rule or criterion can be laid down for determining who are and who are not managing agents; but where a foreign corporation has appointed no agent on whom service may be made, has no fixed place of business in the state, and does no business in the state except that of selling machinery on orders received by mail, or such as may be taken by their traveling agent, the court should certainly hold, if possible, that such agent, being the only person in the state through whom the company does business, is, for the purpose of litigation growing out of such business transacted within the state, a proper agent for the service of papers. Christierson v. Hendrie & Bolthoff Mfg. Supply Co., 128 N. W. 603, 604, 606, 26 S. D. 519.

MANDAMUS

Return to writ, see Return.

Writ, return, or demurrer as pleading, see Pleading.

The office of a writ of mandamus is to require a lower court or judge to act, and not to correct error or reverse judicial action, though it may be issued to enforce a clear right. Ex parte Dickens, 50 South. 218, 221, 162 Ala. 272.

To authorize the issuance of a writ of "mandamus," the petitioner must show: First, a legal right in himself to have the act done which is sought by the writ; and, second, that it is the plain legal duty of defendant to perform the act, without discretion to do or refuse. State ex rel. Gibson v. Malheur County Court, 81 Pac. 368, 369, 46 Or. 519.

The office of a "writ of mandamus" is to compel the performance of a duty resting upon the person to whom the writ is sent. The duty may have originated in many ways; but, no matter out of what facts or relations the duty has grown, what the law regards, and seeks to enforce, is the personal obligation of the individual to whom it addresses the writ. If he be an officer and the duty be an official one, still the writ is aimed exclusively against him as a person, and he only can be punished for disobedience. The writ does not reach the office and cannot be directed to it. It is therefore, in substance, a personal action and rests upon the averred and assumed fact that defendant has neglected or refused to perform a personal duty, to the performance of which by him the relator has a clear right. State ex rel. Stranahan v. Board of State Canvassers, 79 Pac. 402, 32 Mont. 13, 4 Ann. Cas. 73.

The function of a "writ of mandamus" is to compel the performance of a plain ministerial duty. It is not the plain ministerial duty of the board of assessors to assess a tract of land as belonging to an individual, and as having a certain measurement and as having certain boundaries, when the title exhibited by him fails to show that he owns any property answering such description. State ex rel. Burke v. Sewerage & Water Board, 37 South. 878, 880, 113 La. 924.

The "writ of mandamus" does not supersede legal remedies, but rather supplies the want of a legal remedy. Hence two requisites must exist to warrant a court in granting this extraordinary remedy: First, it must appear that the relator has a clear, legal right to the performance of particular duties by the respondent; and, second, that the law affords no other adequate or specific remedy to secure the performance of the duty which it is sought to coerce. State ex rel. Ellis v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 44 South. 230, 231, 53 Fla. 711.

A "mandamus" proceeding is one in court, as contradistinguished from a proceeding before the judge at chambers, and it is so framed that an issue of fact therein may be tried by a jury, and a money judgment for damages awarded as a part of the relief. It is a judicial investigation, the object of which is a determination of civil rights, the same as any ordinary proceeding. State ex rel. Billings v. Lamprey, 106 Pac. 501, 502, 57 Wash. 84.

"Mandamus" is an appropriate remedy at the hands of superior courts to set in motion the machinery of inferior courts. It does not direct how such courts shall act or to what effect they shall exercise their powers, but merely compels action when they refuse to act at all, and have come to a standstill. State ex rel. McDonald v. Steiner, 87 Pac. 66, 67, 44 Wash. 150.

The word "mandamus" implies superior power, the power of a superior authority to compel an official or inferior judicature to act. The writ issues only from a superior court to an inferior court to do those acts which clearly pertain to their duty. When duties are imposed on a judge of a superior court as an official, another judge of the superior court has no power to issue a mandamus compelling performance of such duties. Shreve v. Pendleton, 58 S. E. 880, 881, 129 Ga. 374, 12 Ann. Cas. 563.

"Mandamus" and certiorari rest on distinct and opposite principles. The former compels an unperformed ministerial duty, the latter reviews a performed judicial duty, while neither operates to control discretion. The former never goes to control judgment, while the latter never goes except to review and control judicial judgment. State ex rel. Rawlinson v. Ansel, 57 S. E. 185, 192, 76 S. C. 395, 11 Ann. Cas. 613.

The primary object of the writ of "mandamus" is to compel action. It neither creates nor confers power to act, but only commands the exercise of powers already existing, when it is the duty of the person or body proceeded against to act without its agency. While it may require the performance of a purely ministerial duty in a particular manner, its command is never given to compel the discharge of a duty involving the exercise of judgment or discretion in any specified way, for that would substitute the judgment or discretion of the court issuing the writ for that of the person or persons against whom the writ was issued. In such cases, the sole function is to set in motion without directing the manner of performance. People ex rel. Besserer v. Collier, 67 N. E. 309, 811, 175 N. Y. 196 (quoting People ex rel. Harris v. Commissioners of Land Office, 43 N. E. 418, 149 N. Y. 26).

The writ of "mandamus" is in the nature of a final writ issuing out of the court of law after a trial by the court, to an executive officer commanding him to do an official act, which it is claimed he has wrongfully refused and neglected to do. Hager v. New South Brewing Co. (Ky.) 90 S. W. 608, 609.

"Mandamus" is a command issuing from a court of law, in the name of the state, directed to some inferior court, officer, corporation, or person, requiring the doing of a particular thing specified, which appertains to their office or duty. Macholdt v. Pendergast, 128 N. Y. Supp. 1069, 1071, 144 App. Div. 252.

A writ of "mandamus" to an inferior court issued by a court of appellate jurisdiction is in the nature of an exercise of appellate jurisdiction. "In England the writ of mandamus is defined to be a command issued in the king's name from the Court of King's Bench, and directed to any court or corporation or inferior court of judicature within the king's dominions, requiring them to do some particular thing therein specified which appertains to their office and duty and which the Court of King's Bench has previously determined, or at least supposes to be consonant to right and justice." Blackstone adds: "That it issues to the judges of any inferior court commanding them to do justice according to the powers of their office whenever the same is delayed; for it is the peculiar business of the Court of King's Bench to superintend all other inferior tribunals, and therein to enforce the due exercise of the judicial or municipal powers with which the crown or Legislature have invested them, and this not only by restraining their excesses, but also by quickening their negligence and obviating their denial of justice." "A mandamus to an officer is held to be the exercise of original jurisdiction, but mandamus to an inferior court of the United States is in the nature of appellate jurisdiction." State ex rel. Eubanks v. Cole, 109 Pac. 736, 742, 4 Okl. Cr. 25 (quoting and adopting definition in Re Crane, 5 Pet. 190, 8 L. Ed. 92; 3 Black. Com. Jur.).

"The action of 'mandamus,' as well as every other civil action, should under the statutes of Kansas, where no special provision is otherwise made, be brought and prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest. * * * At common law the proceeding by 'mandamus' was in no sense an action by the relator. Neither the writ nor the return was in any case nor in any sense a pleading. No issues of fact were raised by the writ and the return. No trial could be had in the case, and no final judgment could be rendered therein between the parties—the relator and the respondent. The writ, whether alternative or peremptory, was merely a writ, and nothing more. It was purely a prerogative writ solely within the discretion of the court (never a writ of right), and was issued in the king's name, or in the name of the sovereign authority, commanding some particular act to be done. The return was merely an answer made by the respondent to the writ, stating that he had performed the act, or giving some excuse or justification why he had not performed it. It was never a pleading, and could never be traversed or controverted by the relator, or by any one else, but was always taken as absolutely true, however false it might be in its statements of fact. The only remedy that the relator had when he wished to controvert the truth of the return was to institute a separate and independent action on the case for a false return. In such an action the relator became the plaintiff, the respondent became the defendant, the proper pleadings were filed by the parties, the proper issues were made up, the proper trial was had, and the proper judgment was rendered in the action between the parties. If the judgment was for the plaintiff, he recovered his damages and costs, * * * and the court then issued a peremptory writ of mandamus against the defendant. If the judgment was for the defendant, he recovered his costs. * * * But this old common-law mode or procedure for mandamus has been materially changed by statute, not only in Kansas but in nearly every other state, and in England. The present action of mandamus is not only the old common-law proceeding of mandamus, but it is also the old common-law action on the case for the false return. It is the two proceedings combined. The alternative writ is now not merely a writ, as formerly, but it is also a pleading. The return is now not merely a response to the writ, as formerly (which return could not formerly be traversed or denied), but it is also a pleading; and the facts therein stated may now be controverted the same as they may on any other pleading. Issues are now made up by the writ and the return. A trial may be had on such issues, and judgment rendered for the plaintiff, or for the defendant, the same as in any other civil action; and the action is now considered almost an action of right as any other civil action. * * * Our statutes everywhere seem to recognize the present proceeding by mandamus as a civil action, with the relator as the plaintiff, and the respondent as the defendant." State ex rel. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jefferson County Com'rs, 11 Kan. 67, 68, 69 (citing and adopting State ex rel. Wells v. Marston, 6 Kan. 524, 532; Napier v. Poe, 12 Ga. 170, 178; Harrington v. Berkshire County Com'rs, 22 Pick. [39 Mass.] 263, 268, 33 Am. Dec. 741; Kendall v. Stokes, 3 How. U. S. 100; Arberry v. Beavers, 6 Tex. 457, 464, 55 Am. Dec. 791; Tidd's Prac. 949; Bacon's Abr. Mandamus: Comyn's Dig. Mandamus; Stephen's Nisi Prius, Mandamus; and Jacob's Law Dict.).

A "proceeding in mandamus" is a judicial investigation, the object of which is the determination of civil rights, the same as in ordinary proceeding—not only the determination of rights, but their determination in such a way as to culminate in an effective judgment. In the Washington practice mandamus is nothing more than one of the forms of procedure provided for the enforcement of rights and the redress of wrongs, and the procedure has in it all the elements of a civil action. The right to sue out the writ is not made to depend on the character of the dispute, but on what answer is given to the question: Can the ordinary courts of law afford a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy? If such a remedy is furnished, the writ will not issue; otherwise, it will. It was to avoid circuitry of action, thus doing away with the necessity of resorting to more than one proceeding for the enforcement of a right, that the law was framed. State ex rel. Brown v. McQuade, 79 Pac. 207, 208, 38 Wash. 579.

As an ancillary proceeding

Mandamus is a legal proceeding, and a mandamus issued, after judgment against a county, to compel the levy of a tax to pay the same, is in the nature of an execution to enforce satisfaction. Carter County v. Schmalstig, 127 Fed. 128, 127, 62 C. O. A. 78 (citing Riggs v. Johnson County, 73 U. S. [6 Wall.] 166, 18 L. Ed. 768; Heine v. Levee Com'rs, 89 U. S. [19 Wall.] 655, 22 L. Ed. 223).

As a discretionary writ

"Mandamus" is a discretionary writ, issuing only in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion. Automatic Weighing Mach. Co. v. Carter, 128 S. W. 557, 558, 95 Ark. 118; Drew v. School Township of Madison, 125 N. W. 815, 817, 146 Iowa, 721; State ex rel. Porter v. Hudson, 126 S. W. 733, 740, 228 Mo. 239; State ex rel. Mary Frances Realty Co. v. Homer, 130 S. W. 510, 512, 150 Mo. App. 325.

"Mandamus" is a discretionary writ and will be allowed in furtherance of justice upon a proper case presented, but will not be allowed where the relator has instigated, authorized, approved, or brought about the very state of things of which he complains. State ex rel. Donovan v. Barret, 81 Pac. 349, 350, 30 Mont. 203.

"Mandamus" is not a writ of right, but the granting of it rests largely in the discretion of the court, and it will not be granted when it will work injustice, or introduce confusion and disorder, nor where, if issued, it would prove unavailing. Bibb v. Gaston, 40 South. 936, 937, 146 Ala. 434.

The writ of "mandamus" is a discretionary writ, and where an information for larceny was quashed after the jury on a trial had disagreed, and where it did not appear that a different result would be reached on another trial, "mandamus" to compel the court to set aside the order quashing the information would be denied. Clute v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 102 N. W. 843, 844, 139 Mich. 837.

Whether a writ of "mandamus" be regarded as a prerogative writ or a writ of right, it will only be granted in the exercise of sound legal discretion. State ex rel. Crow v. Boonville Bridge Co., 103 S. W. 1052, 1066, 1067, 206 Mo. 74.

Mandamus lies, in the discretion of the court, to compel performance of a ministerial duty clearly imposed by law in behalf of one whose right to its performance is legally established and unquestioned, where there is no other adequate remedy. Dennett v. Acme Mfg. Co., 76 Atl. 922, 923, 106 Me. 476.

As an extraordinary remedy

"Mandamus" is an extraordinary writ, and can be resorted to only when other remedies fail. State v. Thompson, 102 S. W. 349, 351, 118 Tenn. 571, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1 (citing Ex parte Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co., 131 U. S. cxxx, appx., 26 L. Ed. 561; 2 Spelling, Inj. & Other Extra. Rem. §§ 1368, 1369; High, Extra. Leg. Rem. [3d Ed.] § 39).

A writ of mandamus is an extraordinary writ, to be issued, not to vindicate a mere abstract right, but only when necessary to secure some substantial relief or benefit. Edwards Mfg. Co. v. Farrington, 66 Atl. 309, 310, 102 Me. 140.

Mandamus is one of the extraordinary remedies. The writ may issue in those cases only "to compel the performance of any act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station," but "it cannot control judicial discretion." Davis v. Jewett, 77 Pac. 704, 705, 69 Kan. 651.

Mandamus is an emergency writ, and its purpose is to furnish a speedy remedy for some apparent wrong. It must be issued in all cases where there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of the law. State ex rel. Beach v. District Court, Department No. 1, Lewis and Clarke County, 74 Pac. 498, 501, 29 Mont. 285.

"The writ of mandamus is an extraordinary remedy, to be applied only under exceptional conditions, and is not to be extended beyond its well-established limits. It lies to compel the performance of a public duty, or one imposed by public authority, and for the nonperformance of which there is no other specific or adequate remedy at law, but not for the enforcement of merely private obligations, such as those arising from contracts." Lahiff v. St. Joseph's Total Abstinence & Benevolent Society, 57 Atl. 692, 693, 76 Conn. 648, 65 L. R. A. 92, 100 Am. St. Rep. 1012 (citing Hartford v. Hartford St. R. Co., 50 Atl. 393, 74 Conn. 194; Bassett v. Atwater, 32 Atl. 937, 65 Conn. 355, 32 L. R. A. 575; Tobey v. Hakes, 7 Atl. 551, 54 Conn. 274, 1 Am. St. Rep. 114; Parrott v. City of Bridgeport, 44 Conn. 180, 28 Am. Rep. 439; American Asylum for Education and Instruction of Deaf and Dumb v. President, etc., of Phoenix Bank, 4 Conn. 172, 10 Am. Dec. 112).

"Mandamus" is a remedy only to be applied in extraordinary cases where there is no other adequate remedy, and, where the applicant has an adequate remedy by action, the writ will not be allowed. It lies to compel the performance of a public duty prescribed by statute and to keep subordinate and inferior bodies and tribunals, exercising public functions, within their jurisdiction, and to compel in proper cases the performance of specific duties imposed by law. The writ will not be issued to enforce the performance of a contract such as the contract of an educational institute to grant a diploma on fulfillment of certain conditions by a student for which an action for breach of contract will lie. State ex rel. Burg v. Milwaukee Medical College, 106 N. W. 116, 118, 128 Wis. 7, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1115, 116 Am. St. Rep. 21, 8 Ann. Cas. 407.

Injunction distinguished

"An 'injunction' is essentially a preventive remedy; 'mandamus,' a remedial one. The former is usually employed to prevent future injury; the latter, to redress past grievances. The functions of an injunction are to restrain motion and to enforce inaction; those of a mandamus, to set in motion and to compel action. In this sense an injunction may be regarded as a conservative remedy; mandamus, as an active one. The former preserves matters in statu quo, while the very object of the latter is to change the status of affairs and to substitute action for inactivity. The one is therefore a positive or remedial process; the other a negative or preventive one. And since mandamus is in no sense a preventive remedy, it cannot take the place of an injunction, and will not be employed to restrain or prevent an improper interference with the rights of relations. * * * Mandamus and injunction should not be confounded. The latter is used to prevent action, to maintain affairs in statu quo. The former is compulsory, commanding something to be done. An injunction is preventative and protective merely, and not restorative. It interposes between the complainant and the injury he fears or seeks to avoid. If the injury be already done, the writ can have no operation, for it cannot be corrective so as to remove it. It is not used for the purpose of punishment, or to compel persons to do right, but simply to prevent them from doing wrong. * * * Mandamus is, however, compulsory, and requires doing the act." Callaghan v. McGown (Tex.) 90 S. W. 319, 324 (quoting and adopting definition in High, Extraordinary Legal Remedies [3d Ed.] § 6).

An injunction is a preventive writ which restrains motion and enforces inaction, while mandamus is a remedial writ which compels action and coerces the performance of a proper existing duty, and hence a writ whereby persons were restrained from intruding themselves on the county committee of the Democratic party, and members of the committee were restrained from attempting to include the intruders as members, is an injunction. Ware v. Welch (Tex.) 149 S. W. 263, 264.

As a prerogative writ

"The 'writ of mandamus' was originally a prerogative writ, which the Court of King's Bench was wont to issue to any part of the realm for the prevention of disorder, from failure of justice or defect of police." Hamlin v. Higgins, 67 Atl. 625, 628, 102 Me. 510.

"Mandamus" is not a prerogative writ running in the name of the sovereign, but is an ordinary process, available to any private citizen, to protect a private right when it is an appropriate remedy, and therefore the use of the name of the state in such cases is a mere form, and may be treated as surplusage. State ex rel. Watts v. Cain, 58 S. E. 937, 938, 78 S. C. 348.

The writ of "mandamus" is of most ancient origin. It issued from a common-law court to afford extraordinary legal relief in cases where the ordinary remedy at law was inadequate. Originally it was a prerogative writ, so called from the fact that it proceeded from the king himself, in his Court of King's Bench, and was granted where one was entitled to an office or function and there was no other remedy. It still preserves many of its prerogative features in England, but in this state it is a writ of right. Southern Ry. Co. v. Atlanta Stove Works, 57 S. E. 429, 433, 128 Ga. 207 (citing High, Ex. Leg. Rem. § 3).

"Mandamus" is a prerogative writ of a remedial nature, and it is issued in all cases where the party has a right to have anything done and has no other specific means of compelling performance, and it lies to restore one to the enjoyment of an office or position of trust of a public nature from which he has been wrongfully removed; but one cannot by mandamus litigate and determine title to an office. State ex rel. Gulon v. Miles, 109 S. W. 595, 606, 210 Mo. 127.

"Mandamus" is no longer treated as a purely prerogative writ. In its use in an original proceeding in modern practice the writ has come to be considered as merely an action at law between the parties. The right to the writ, and the power to issue it, has ceased to depend upon any prerogative power. It is nothing more than the ordinary process of a court of justice to which every one is entitled where it is the appropriate process for asserting the right he claims. * * * Mandamus, although it is an extraordinary legal remedy, is in the nature of an equitable interference, supplementing the deficiencies of the common law. It will ordinarily be issued where a legal duty is established and no other sufficient means exists for enforcing it. * * * Where one has a substantial right to protect or enforce, and there is no other adequate remedy at law, he is entitled, as a matter of right, to mandamus, or, at least, it is an abuse of discretion to refuse it. The courts of the state will entertain an action of mandamus by a foreign private corporation against one of its officers, resident of this state, of whom it cannot obtain jurisdiction in its own domicile, to compel such officer to turn over books, papers, etc., belonging to the corporation notwithstanding the title to the office may be incidentally involved. Potomac Oil Co. v. Dye, 102 Pac. 677, 678, 10 Cal. App. 534 (citing and adopting Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cranch, 137, 176, 2 L. Ed. 60; Kendall v. United States ex rel. Stokes, 12 Pet. 524, 615, 9 L. Ed. 1181; Kentucky v. Dennison, 24 How. 66, 98, 16 L. Ed. 717; United States ex rel. Riggs v. Johnson County, 6 Wall. 166, 198, 18 L. Ed. 768).

"Mandamus" is not a creative remedy, and does not call into existence any new liability or duty, and never commanded the performance of an act which was unauthorized in the absence of the writ. The origin of this ancient writ is very obscure. It has undergone many changes during the generations in which it has been in use. It was originally a high prerogative writ, and the king's prerogative was part of the common law of England. It was the aggregate of the king's special powers and privileges—what Bracton calls "privilegia regis," and Britton "le droit le roy"—the personal rights or powers of supreme character exercisable without question and without responsibility. In re Lauritsen, 109 N. W. 404, 408, 99 Minn. 313.

The ancient writ of "mandamus" was a writ prerogative of the king, and issued only at his pleasure. It was an attribute of sovereignty, and a citizen could not as a right invoke its aid; but even at common law its scope became enlarged, and it could be invoked by the private citizen to compel the performance of a legal duty on the part of the courts and other tribunals; but the definition of the ancient writ is inapplicable under the Code, which prescribes the use of the writ and makes it simply one of the methods of procedure for the enforcement of rights or the redress of wrongs. State ex rel. Barto v. Board of Drainage Com'rs, 90 Pac. 660, 46 Wash. 474.

Formerly "mandamus" was regarded as a prerogative right and issued, not as of right, but at the pleasure of the sovereign or state and in his or its name as an attribute of sovereignty; but we say the writ is not in any sense a prerogative writ or a writ to be issued at the discretion of the court. It is a procedure under the Code, and any person who has a cause that calls for its invocation has the same right to sue out the writ as he has to commence a civil action to redress a private wrong. State ex rel. Chealand v. Carroll, 106 Pac. 748, 750, 57 Wash.

202 (quoting and adopting definition in State ex rel. Brown v. McQuade, 79 Pac. 208, 36 Wash. 579).

"Originally the writ of mandamus was a prerogative of the English crown, and issued in its name from the Court of King's Bench, requiring the performance of some specified duty which that court had previously determined, or at least supposed, to be consonant to right and justice. In modern times it issues as a judicial process in actions, often between private parties, in which a court of competent jurisdiction has previously adjudged or commanded the performance by the defendant therein of some specified duty, which under the law he should perform, and is the means by which such judgment or command is enforced." A Circuit Court of the United States is without jurisdiction, either original or by removal from a state court, of an action for a writ of mandamus, which is not necessary for the exercise by it of a jurisdiction which it has otherwise previously acquired; the writ of mandamus not being a suit of a civil nature at law or in equity, within the meaning of the acts of Congress creating the Circuit Courts of the United States and defining their jurisdiction. Mystic Milling Co. v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 132 Fed. 289, 291.

As a civil action or proceeding

As suit of civil nature, see Suit of Civil Nature.

Mandamus is a "personal action" within Rev. Code 1852, amended to 1893, p. 787, c. 105, § 2, declaring that all personal actions with specified exceptions shall survive, and is a suit at law within Const. art. 4, § 26, providing that no suit at law shall abate at the death of a party where the cause of action survives. State v. Jessup & Moore Paper Co. (Del.) 80 Atl. 350, 351.

Mandamus is a common-law action. People ex rel. Bauman v. Gest, 148 Ill. App. 560, 565.

"Mandamus" proceedings are civil actions within Pub. Acts 1905, p. 483, No. 309, providing for changes of venue in such actions. Woodworth v. Old Second Nat. Bank, 107 N. W. 905, 144 Mich. 338, 8 Ann. Cas. 310.

A proceeding in mandamus is a civil proceeding which may be in the name of the state at the relation of an individual or simply in the name of an individual as plaintiff. Rader v. Board of Education of Beaver Dist., 50 S. E. 240, 242, 57 W. Va. 220.

A "mandamus" proceeding is an action at law, and under the practice in this state the complaint takes the place of the alternative writ, the answer takes the place of the return, and subsequent pleadings will be had until an issue is joined for trial on the merits, and the complaint, answer, and subsequent pleadings are governed by the rules of the common law and must contain in substance the essentials of good pleading in an ordinary action at law. Clement v. Graham, 63 Atl. 148, 150, 78 Vt. 290, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 1208.

"Statutes everywhere seem to recognize the present proceeding by 'mandamus' as a civil action with the relator as the plaintiff and the respondent as the defendant." State ex rel. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Jefferson County Com'rs, 11 Kan. 67, 68, 69.

Rights enforceable

Mandamus lies to compel the performance of an act which the law specifically enjoins as a duty resulting from an office. Bell v. Thomas, 111 Pac. 78, 78, 49 Colo. 78, 81 L. R. A. (N. S.) 694.

A writ of "mandamus" is a "writ issued in the name of the state to an inferior tribunal, a corporation, board, or person commanding the performance of an act which the law especially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust or station." State ex rel. Irvine v. Brooks, 84 Pac. 488, 491, 14 Wyo. 393, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 750, 7 Ann. Cas. 1108 (quoting Rev. St. 1899, § 4194).

The office of a writ of mandamus is to compel specific action in the exercise of purely ministerial functions. If the performance of an official act involves discretion, courts, although they have power to demand action, have no right to say that it must be in a particular way. People ex rel. Quinn v. Voorhis, 100 N. Y. Supp. 717, 721, 115 App. Div. 118.

Under the statute, "mandamus" is intended to compel performance of any act which the law specifically enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station. It is intended as a speedy remedy, and may be granted by the court in term time or by the judge at chambers. Beadles v. Fry, 82 Pac. 1041, 1042, 15 Okl. 428, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 855.

At common law the writ of "mandamus" is a writ of right every day made use of to oblige inferior courts to do justice but it will not be made use of to control the exercise of discretion. In general, it lies where one has been refused admittance to or turned out wrongfully from any office or franchise. Matney v. King, 93 Pac. 737, 745, 20 Okl. 22.

The remedy by "mandamus," though appropriate to compel the performance of a legal duty, cannot be invoked to compel one to complete the making of a contract. Putnam Foundry & Machine Co. v. Town Council of Town of Barrington, 67 Atl. 733, 736, 28 R. I. 422.

To support the remedy of "mandamus" a plain and unambiguous duty which it is designed to enforce must already have been imposed by law. Where any person has a right to demand the exercise of a public function, and there is an officer or set of officers authorized to exercise that function, there the right and the authority give rise to the duty; but when the right depends upon the grant of the authority, and that authority is discretionary, no legal duty is imposed. Caven v. Coleman, 101 S. W. 199, 200, 100 Tex. 467 (citing Carr v. Northern Liberties, 35 Pa. 324, 78 Am. Dec. 342).

The writ of "mandamus" will not lie except to compel performance of an act which the law specifically enjoins as a duty, resulting from an office, trust, or station, and it will not lie to compel a district judge to enter of record in the district court of a certain county in his district an alleged order admitting defendant to bail, where it appears that the same is not there properly entitled to record. State ex rel. Stevenson v. Russell, 95 Pac. 463, 1 Okl. Cr. 165.

Rev. St. 1899, § 4194, defines "mandamus" as a writ issued in the name of the state to an inferior tribunal, corporations, boards, or persons, commanding the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station. State ex rel. Wyoming Agricultural College v. Irvine, 84 Pac. 90, 91, 14 Wyo. 318.

The writ of "mandamus" is an order of a court of competent and original jurisdiction, commanding an executive or ministerial officer to perform an act, or omit to do an act, the performance or omission of which is enjoined by law; and it is granted on the motion of the party aggrieved, or of the commonwealth when the public interest is affected. It is not a proper remedy to compel a telephone company to install an instrument. Williams v. Maysville Tel. Co., 82 S. W. 995, 996, 119 Ky. 33 (quoting and adopting definition in Civil Code of Prac. § 477).

The object of a "mandamus" is to enforce specific relief, and it is the inadequacy, rather than the absence of, other legal remedies, coupled with the danger of a failure of justice without the aid of a mandamus, which usually determines the propriety of relief by mandamus. Mandamus is the proper remedy for enforcing performance by a traction company of its duty to pave a street pursuant to the terms of the ordinance granting to its predecessor the right to locate tracks in such street. Borough of Rutherford v. Hudson River Traction Co., 63 Atl. 84, 90, 73 N. J. Law, 227.

Under the express provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 1085, "mandamus" can only be issued to compel the performance of an act required by law, or to compel the admission of a party to the enjoyment of a right or office to which he is entitled and from which he is unlawfully excluded. Maxwell v. Board of Fire Com'rs of City and County of San Francisco, 72 Pac. 996, 997, 139 Cal. 229.

Under Rev. St. 1890, § 4194, defining "mandamus" as a writ issued in the name of the state to an inferior tribunal, corporation, board, or persons, commanding the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station, and section 4197, providing that the writ must not be issued where there is a plain and adequate remedy at law, "mandamus" to compel an officer of a private corporation to permit the inspection of books, papers, and effects in his possession and control, is the proper form of remedy to enforce the right of stockholders to inspect the books and records of the corporation, where the officer having the custody denies the stockholder access thereto. Wyoming Coal Min. Co. v. State ex rel. Kennedy, 87 Pac. 984, 985, 15 Wyo. 97.

Mandamus lies to compel an inferior board or person to do or not to do an act, the performance or omission of which the law enjoins as a duty from an office, trust, or station, and, when discretion is left to such board or person, mandamus may compel it to act in some way, but cannot control such discretion under the express provisions of Code, § 4341. State v. Parker, 125 N. W. 856, 864, 147 Iowa, 69.

"The province of a writ of mandamus is to afford redress where a party has a right to have anything done and has no other specific means of compelling its performance. The writ is also applicable in certain cases where a duty is imposed by statute for the benefit of an individual." State ex rel. Guenther v. Charleston Light & Water Co., 47 S. E. 979, 983, 68 S. C. 540.

"The modern writ of mandamus may be defined as a command issuing from a common-law court of competent jurisdiction, in the name of the state or sovereign, directed to some corporation, officer, or inferior court, requiring the performance of a particular duty therein specified, which duty results from the official station of the party to whom the writ is directed, or from operation of law." Milster v. City Council of Spartanburg, 47 S. E. 141, 68 S. C. 243 (quoting High, Extr. Leg. Rem. 4); State ex rel. Huebler v. Board of Police Com'rs, 82 S. W. 960, 962, 108 Mo. App. 98.

The statutory duty of the trial judge to settle and sign a bill of exceptions may be enforced by "mandamus," where he arbitrarily refuses to act, though he cannot be required to perform the duty in a particular manner by signing a particular bill. State ex rel. Columbus St. Ry. & Light Co. v. Deupree, 81 N. E. 678, 679, 40 Ind. App. 492.

Code, § 1417, provides that the board of supervisors shall direct the treasurer to refund any tax erroneously or illegally exacted or paid, with all interest actually paid thereon. Section 4341 defines "mandamus" as an action to compel an inferior board to do an act, the performance of which the law enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, and provides that mandamus cannot control discretion. Held, that there could be no recovery in mandamus to compel a board of supervisors to order the payment of interest on taxes erroneously exacted founded on section 1417; the section providing merely for the return of interest paid, and the word "refund" meaning to pay back, to restore. Home Sav. Bank v. Morris, 120 N. W. 100, 141 Iowa, 560.

"The function of 'mandamus' is to compel the performance of a legal duty, to command action, not to review action, to complete the unfinished. It is the remedy for nonfeasance. * * * It does not lie to correct mistakes that have been made or to remedy wrongs that have been done." Kenney v. State Board of Dentistry, 59 Atl. 932, 933, 26 R. I. 538 (quoting Corbett v. Naylor, 57 Atl. 304, 25 R. I. 522).

"Mandamus" will not enforce the performance of official duty, unless the duty sought to be enforced is clearly within the scope of such officer's duty." Where two petitions are pending asking for the sale of the same tract of school land, one of which requests that it be sold as leased land, and the other to an actual settler, and appraisers are appointed and qualified to appraise the land as leased land, they cannot be compelled by mandamus to act as appraisers under the other petition. Wilson v. Winfrey, 84 Pac. 123, 72 Kan. 468.

"Mandamus" is a writ issuing in the name of the people, originally instituted for the purpose of correcting official inaction and to compel the performance of some legal duty; and although it has been extended by the court from time to time, and has been held to lie where formerly it was thought not to apply, it has not been, nor should it be, extended to obtain property or to furnish evidence of title to property, that the owner may be more certainly possessed of it, or that it may be more conveniently transferred by him. People ex rel. Rottenberg v. Utah Gold & Copper Mines Co., 119 N. Y. Supp. 852, 853, 135 App. Div. 418.

"Mandamus" does not lie against a private citizen. In other words, where the writ is sought to be invoked, the proper inquiry is: Does the duty sought to be enforced clearly result from an office, trust, or station? If so, the writ should run; otherwise not. This is the common law and is embodied in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § (4884) 686, which is as follows: "The writ of mandamus may be issued by the Supreme Court or the district court, or any justice or judge thereof, during term or at chambers, to any inferior tribunal, corporation, board or person, to compel the performance of any act which the law specially enjoins as a duty, resulting from an office, trust or station. * * * Eberle v. King, 93 Pac. 748, 753, 20 Okl. 49 (citing 26 Cyc. pp. 163, 164).

According to Rev. St. 1899, § 4194, "mandamus" is a writ issued in the name of the state to an inferior tribunal, a corporation, board, or persons, demanding the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust or station," and, according to section 4197, "the writ must not be issued in a case when there is a plain and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of the law." Wyoming Coal Mining Co. v. State ex rel. Kennedy, 87 Pac. 337, 338, 15 Wyo. 97, 123 Am. St. Rep. 1014.

It is the special office of the writ of "mandamus" to compel a ministerial officer to perform the duties of his office, and the writ will lie though the duties of the officer are of a quasi judicial character, and consist of a discretion which cannot be reviewed by the courts, where the object sought is to compel an exercise of the discretion. State ex rel. Howe v. Kendall, 87 Pac. 821, 822, 44 Wash. 542.

"Mandamus" is a legal remedy, and lies for the enforcement of legal rights only, and under Burns' Ann. St. 1908, § 1225, providing that writs of mandate may be issued to any inferior tribunal, corporation, board, or person, to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins, or a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station, to justify the issuance of the writ it is essential that the relator have a clear legal right to the thing demanded, and that it be the imperative duty of the respondent to perform the required act. State ex rel. Hatfield v. Cummins, 85 N. E. 359, 360, 171 Ind. 112, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 945.

In Ohio "mandamus" is not used for the redress of private wrongs, but only in matters relating to the public. The writ is the proper remedy to restore a party to the possession of an office from which he has been illegally removed. State ex rel. Moyer v. Baldwin, 83 N. E. 907, 908, 77 Ohio St. 532, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49, 12 Ann. Cas. 10.

Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 1182, provides that "writs of mandamus may be issued to any inferior tribunal, corporation, board or person, to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins, or a duty resulting from an office, trust or station." This statute is substantially declaratory of the common-law doctrine. "Mandamus" is in no sense an equitable proceeding, but is a common-law remedy to compel performance of a legal duty, and the relator must have a clear legal right to the thing demanded, and it must be the imperative duty of the respondent to perform the act required. If either the right or the duty be doubtful, the writ will not be issued. A duty arising out of statute must not be merely permissive or discretionary, but the statute must require the act to be done, or it will not be enforced by mandamus. State v. Jackson, 81 N. E. 62, 63, 168 Ind. 384.

A "writ of mandamus" is a command issuing from a court of law of competent jurisdiction, in the name of the state, directing some inferior court, officer, corporation, or person to some particular thing therein specified which pertains to his office or duty. It will not lie against one who does not occupy an official or quasi official position, but it will lie not only against public officers, but against private officers in certain cases, and against public and private corporations. It will lie to enforce a public duty, and the officials of a railroad company can be compelled to perform certain duties by mandamus on the theory that they owe those duties to the state and are subject to its visitatorial powers. Gas, water, and telephone companies can also be compelled by mandamus to discharge their duties to the public. Rouse v. Thompson, 81 N. E. 1109, 1120, 228 Ill. 522 (citing Mechem, Public Officers & Agents, § 926; People ex rel. Hempstead v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 55 Ill. 95, 8 Am. Rep. 631; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Sufferin, 21 N. E. 824, 129 Ill. 274; People ex rel. Cantrell v. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co., 52 N. E. 292, 176 Ill. 512, 35 L. R. A. 656; Litchfield & M. Ry. Co. v. People, 78 N. E. 589, 222 Ill. 242; People v. Chicago, I. & L. Ry. Co., 79 N. E. 144, 228 Ill. 581, 7 Ann. Cas. 1; 2 Spelling, Injunctions & Other Extraordinary Remedies [2d Ed.] § 1592).

Though "mandamus" will not generally lie to compel performance of a power, the exercise of which is in the discretion of the officer against whom the writ is sought, the remedy is available if the action of the officer is capricious, arbitrary, unreasonable, or based on false information. People ex rel. Empire City Trotting Club v. State Racing Commission, 82 N. E. 723, 190 N. Y. 31.

"Mandamus" cannot be rightfully invoked to settle a doubtful claim to an office, or to have the title to an office adjudicated upon as between adverse claimants, but "information in the nature of a quo warranto" affords the proper remedy. Where the relator holds a prima facie and uncontested title to the office, or his title has been adjudicated upon and finally established by a competent tribunal, a writ of "mandamus" may be issued to put him in possession of the office as well as of the books, papers, and other property pertaining to it. Hoy v. State ex rel. Buchanan, 81 N. E. 509, 512, 168 Ind. 506, 11 Ann. Cas. 944 (citing Mannix v. State ex rel. Mitchell, 17 N. E. 585, 115 Ind. 245).

"Mandamus" does not lie to compel the payment of an unliquidated unadjudicated claim that is disputed. Howell v. State ex rel. Edwards, 45 South. 453, 454, 54 Fla. 199 (citing Whitesides v. Stuart, 20 S. W. 245, 91 Tenn. 710; Hicks v. Board of Auditors of Wayne County, 57 N. W. 188, 97 Mich. 611; State Board of Education v. West Point, 50 Miss. 638).

"Mandamus," as defined by Civ. Code Prac. § 477, and the courts, is a writ commanding the performance of some duty, in the performance of which the applicant for the writ is interested, or by the nonperformance of which he is aggrieved or injured. Louisville Home Telephone Co. v. City of Louisville, 113 S. W. 855, 857, 130 Ky. 611.

Mandamus may not be invoked to review a judicial or quasi judicial decision. The primary object of the writ of mandamus is to compel action. It neither creates nor confers power to act, but only commands the exercise of powers already existing, when it is the duty of the person or body proceeded against to act without its agency. While it may require the performance of a purely ministerial duty in a particular manner, its command is never given to compel the discharge of a duty involving the exercise of judgment or discretion in any specified way, for that would substitute the judgment or discretion of the court issuing the writ for that of the person or persons against whom the writ was issued. People ex rel. McCabe v. Matthies, 87 N. Y. S. 196, 198, 92 App. Div. 16 (citing People ex rel. Harris v. Commissioners of Land Office, 43 N. E. 418, 149 N. Y. 26).

Ky. St. § 3855, requires a personal representative of a decedent's estate to return an inventory within a certain time after qualifying. Section 3857 provides that any personal representative failing to return an inventory within six months after qualifying shall be fined by the county court, and be required to make such inventory upon a day fixed by it, and upon failure to do so, shall be fined for each subsequent delinquency, and section 3858 requires every personal representative to have his accounts settled, and all settlements and vouchers returned to the county court within a certain time, and as often thereafter as the court requires. Civ. Code Prac. § 477, defines the "writ of mandamus" as an order of a court commanding an executive or ministerial officer to perform or omit an act, the performance or omission of which is enjoined by law, which shall be granted on the motion of the party aggrieved or of the commonwealth when the public interest is affected. Held, that the duty of a county judge to require executors and administrators to file inventories and make settlements was mandatory, and not a matter of judicial discretion which could not be enforced by mandamus. Commonwealth v. Peter, 124 S. W. 896, 897, 136 Ky. 689.

"The 'writ of mandamus' is in form a command in the name of the state, directed to some tribunal, corporation, or public officer, requiring them to do some particular thing therein specified, and which the court has previously determined that it is the duty of such tribunals or other person to perform.

* * * It does not lie to correct the errors of inferior tribunals by annulling what they have done erroneously, nor to guide their discretion, nor to refrain them from exercising power not delegated to them; but it is emphatically a writ requiring the tribunal or person to whom it is directed, to do some particular act appertaining to their public duty, and which the prosecutor has a legal right to have done. * * * The 'writ of mandamus' is the counterpart of the writ of prohibition, and is so designated in some states by statute. 'Mandamus' is a legal remedy to compel action in accordance with legal duty, while 'prohibition' is a legal remedy to restrain action in excess of legal authority." State ex rel. Pelton v. Ross, 81 Pac. 865, 867, 39 Wash. 399 (quoting and adopting the definition in Dunklin County v. Dunklin County District Court, 23 Mo. 454).

"'Mandamus' is a command issued from a court of law of competent jurisdiction in name of the state directed to some inferior court, officer, corporation, or person requiring them to do some particular thing therein specified, which appertains to their office or duty." It lies in cases involving merely the performance by a county official of his plain, ministerial duty of payment of a warrant drawn by lawful and proper authority upon a fund in his custody, legally applicable to its payment, and requiring the exercise of no official discretion on his part. In view of Rev. St. 1890, c. 49, prescribing the pleading and procedure in mandamus, but not enlarging the scope or amplifying the application of the remedy, such a proceeding cannot be converted into an equitable suit by the respondent, a county treasurer, answering that he holds the fund subject to the conflicting claims of relator and others and an order of court requiring such other claimants to appear and answer. State ex rel. Hixon v. Nerby, 79 S. W. 993, 994, 995, 105 Mo. App. 458.

"The writ of 'mandamus' being justly regarded as one of the highest writs known to our system of jurisprudence, it issues only where there is a clear and specific legal right to be enforced, or a duty which ought to be and can be performed, and where there is no other specific and adequate legal remedy. Since the object of a mandamus is not to supersede legal remedies, but rather to supply the want of them, two prerequisites must exist to warrant a court in granting this extraordinary remedy: First, it must be shown that the relator has a clear, legal right to the performance of a particular act or duty at the hands of the respondent; and, second, it must appear that the law affords no other adequate or specific remedy to secure the enforcement of the right and the performance of the duty which it is sought to coerce. The test to be applied, therefore, in determining upon the right to relief by mandamus, is to inquire whether the party aggrieved has a clear, legal right, and whether he has any other adequate remedy, since the writ belongs only to those who have legal rights to enforce, who find themselves without an appropriate legal remedy." State ex rel. Gleeson v. Jumbo Extension Mining Co., 94 Pac. 74, 76, 30 Nev. 192, 133 Am. St. Rep. 715, 16 Ann. Cas. 896 (quoting and adopting definition in High, Extraordinary Legal Remedies, p. 9).

It is a fundamental principle that "mandamus" lies to compel the performance of a purely ministerial duty, involving no discretionary right and not requiring the exercise of judgment. It does not lie where performance of a trust is sought which is discretionary, or involves the exercise of judgment. It is also elementary that the writ cannot usurp the functions of a writ of error, or take the place of an appeal, nor will it lie against a court, unless it be clearly shown that such court has refused to perform some manifest duty. Under a statute providing that the writ of mandamus may be issued to an inferior tribunal to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, mandamus out of the district court would not lie to compel the county court to enter a judgment in a divorce proceeding different from the judgment which had been rendered; this being an attempt to review, annul, and modify the judgment, and being in this regard an attempt to usurp the functions of an appeal from or writ of error to such judgment, and also an attempt to control the discretion and judgment of the county court. Lindsey v. Carlton, 96 Pac. 997, 999, 44 Colo. 42.

"'Mandamus' lies to compel an inferior court to hear and determine a cause or matter properly triable before it, which the lower court fails or refuses to try on the ground that it has no jurisdiction, or that the judge is incompetent, or for other reasons." Hence mandamus is the proper remedy to compel a county court to take jurisdiction of and hear a proceeding by the state revenue agent for the reassessment or back assessment of taxes on the property of a street railway. State v. Taylor, 104 S. W. 242, 246, 119 Tenn. 229.

The process of "mandamus" will not issue against a public officer, unless to compel the performance of an act clearly defined and enjoined by law, and which is therefore ministerial in its nature and neither involves the exercise of discretion, nor leaves any alternative. Caven v. Coleman (Tex.) 96 S. W. 774, 776 (citing Glasscock v. Commissioner of General Land Office, 3 Tex. 51; Arberry v. Beavers, 6 Tex. 457, 55 Am. Dec. 791; San- som v. Mercer, 68 Tex. 492, 5 S. W. 62, 2 Am. St. Rep. 505).

While election inspectors cannot be compelled by mandamus to make their return in any particular manner, they may be compelled to make a true return of the result according to their count, if the return made was incorrect, irrespective of the provisions of the election law; "mandamus" being the proper remedy to compel a public official to perform his official duty, where he fails to do so. People ex rel. Henness v. Douglass, 126 N. Y. Supp. 908, 909, 142 App. Div. 224.

MANDATARIES

A "mandatary" whose engagement is merely gratuitous is bound only to ordinary negligence, and liable only for gross neglect or breach of good faith. Marshall v. Nashville Ry. & Light Co., 101 S. W. 419, 420, 118 Tenn. 254, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1246, 12 Ann. Cas. 675.

MANDATE

See Special Mandate.

The word "mandate," in Civ. Code, art. 2985, relating to personal mandate, whereby one person appoints another his special agent, or whereby one person gives power to another to transact for him and in his name one or several affairs, does not refer to the business of agency carried on under a charter adopted under the act of 1888. State ex rel. Le Blanc & Ralley v. Michel, 36 South. 869, 870, 113 La. 4.

MANDATE (In Practice)

Execution

An execution on a judgment is a "mandate," as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 3343, and the only mandate by which a judgment creditor is entitled to enforce it. Belfer v. Ludlow, 126 N. Y. Supp. 130, 132, 69 Misc. Rep. 486.

Mandamus

The "writ of mandate," as defined by Rev. St. 1898, §§ 3640, 3641, denominating the writ of mandamus a writ of mandate, and authorizing its issuance to any inferior tribunal to compel the performance of an act specially enjoined by law, is designed to compel action where the law enjoins it, and the tribunal refuses to act in accordance therewith. Hoffman v. Lewis, 87 Pac. 167, 170, 81 Utah, 179.

By Code Civ. Proc. § 1085, the "writ of mandate" is issued by any court, except a justice's or police court, to any inferior tribunal, corporation, board, or person, to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins, as a duty resulting from an office, trust or station. Howe v. Southrey, 78 Pac. 259, 144 Cal. 767.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 3343, subd. 2, defining the word "mandate" to include a writ issued out of a court, commanding an officer to do or to refrain from doing an act therein specified, and Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, c. 466) § 1001, authorizing the court, on application of any person to whom an award has been made in proceedings to acquire land, to require the comptroller to pay the award, and to enforce the mandate as other mandates are enforced, the court may by mandamus compel the comptroller to pay an award, and the fact that costs are more than they would be if the applicant for mandamus had been content with an order is a matter which may not be considered, when he was denied the award, to which he was legally entitled. Macholdt v. Prendergast, 128 N. Y. Supp. 1069, 1070, 144 App. Div. 252.

The word "mandate," in Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 1882, providing that in all cases in the probate court the probate judge shall have power to allow injunctions, "mandates," writs of prohibition, etc., is not synonymous with the word "mandamus" in the Organic Act of the territory conferring on the Supreme and district courts power to grant writs of mandamus and habeas corpus in all cases authorized by law, and in section 4884, providing that the writ of mandamus may be issued by the Supreme Court or the district court, or any justice or judge thereof, during term or at chambers, etc., and the probate courts of the territory are not authorized to hear and determine original proceedings in mandamus. Starkweather v. Kemp, 88 Pac. 1045, 1046, 18 Okl. 28.

Remittitur

The word "remittitur," used in Supreme Court rule 34 providing that, when a judgment of a District Court of Appeal becomes final therein, the remittitur shall not be issued until after the lapse of 30 days thereafter, unless otherwise ordered, designates the judgment of the appellate tribunal which is authenticated to the court from which the appeal is taken, and corresponds to "mandate," used in the practice of the United States Supreme Court. Noel v. Smith, 83 Pac. 167, 169, 2 Cal. App. 158.

Subpoena

Code Civ. Proc. § 8, authorizes a court to punish for criminal contempt one guilty of willful disobedience of its lawful mandate. Section 3343 provides that the word "mandate" includes a writ, process, etc., made pursuant to law by a judicial officer, and commanding the person named therein to do the act therein specified, and Code Cr. Proc. § 619, provides that disobedience of a subpoena may be punished as for a criminal contempt. Held, that a subpoena issued by the district attorney requiring a witness to appear before a grand jury was a "mandate," within section 8, so as to make one willfully advising disobedience guilty of criminal contempt. People ex rel. Drake v. Andrews, 90 N. E. 347, 348, 197 N. Y. 58, 18 Ann. Cas. 317.

MANDATORY

Directory statute distinguished from mandatory statute, see Directory Statute.

A mandatory provision of a statute is one the omission to perform which renders proceedings void; while a directory provision is one the observance of which is not necessary to the validity of proceedings. Bond v. City of Baltimore, 84 Atl. 258, 260, 118 Md. 159.

A statute providing that appointment of a special administrator may be made at any time, and must be made by entry upon the minutes of the court specifying the powers to be exercised by him, was not "mandatory" as to entry of a minute order, and the appointment was complete when the order was signed, and failure of the clerk to enter it on the minutes would not invalidate it. McNeil v. Morgan, 108 Pac. 69, 71, 157 Cal. 373.

The term "mandatory" is applicable almost entirely to statutory requirements intended for the protection of the citizen and to prevent a sacrifice of his property, and by a disregard of which his rights might be, and generally would be, injuriously affected. It does not apply to statutory requirements intended for the guide of officers in the conduct of business devolved on them and designed to secure order, system and dispatch in proceedings, and by a disregard of which the rights of the parties cannot be injuriously affected. French v. Edwards, 13 Wall. 506, [80 U. S.] 511, 20 L. Ed. 702.

MANDATORY INJUNCTION

Injunctions are "mandatory" or preventive, according as they command the defendant to do or refrain from doing a particular thing. The issuance of a "mandatory injunction" is exercised with extreme caution, and is confined to cases where courts of law are unable to afford adequate redress, or where the injury cannot be compensated in damages. In determining whether to grant relief by way of "mandatory injunction," courts of equity will take into consideration the relative convenience or inconvenience which would result to the parties from granting or withholding relief, and will be governed accordingly. Mason v. Byrley (Ky.) 84 S. W. 767, 770 (citing High, Inj. § 2).

A "mandatory injunction" is one which compels affirmative action by defendant. If an injunction compels one affirmatively to surrender a possession which under the facts alleged by him he is entitled to hold, it is a "mandatory." Clute v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 99 Pac. 362, 368, 155 Cal. 15, 132 Am. St. Rep. 54.

It is error, on an interlocutory hearing of an equitable petition seeking specific performance and injunction, to order the delivery by defendant of the personal property in controversy to the petitioner; such order being in legal effect a mandatory injunction. Rudolph Wurlitzer Co. v. Jackson, 67 S. E. 879, 880, 134 Ga. 333.

A "mandatory injunction" compels the affirmative performance, while a preventive injunction restrains the commission of an act. Carver v. San Pedro, etc., R. Co., 151 Fed. 334, 338.

MANGANESE

See Borate of Manganese.

MANGANESE ALLOY

See Iron and Manganese Alloy.

MANGE

"Mange" is a cattle disease, otherwise known as splenic or Spanish fever. State v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 81 Pac. 212, 213, 71 Kan. 613.

MANGLE

As machine, see Machine.

A "mangle" is a large roller, used in a laundry, through which the clothes are run. Ross-Paris Co. v. Brown, 90 S. W. 568, 121 Ky. 821.

MANHATTAN COCKTAIL

See Cocktail.

As intoxicating liquor, see Intoxicating Liquors.

MANHOLES

A "manhole" is a round opening into a sewer large enough to permit a man to enter for the purpose of cleaning or repairing. Comstock v. City of Eagle Grove, 111 N. W. 51, 52, 133 Iowa, 589.

MANIFEST

The word "evident" means "clear to the vision, especially clear to the understanding, and satisfactory to the judgment." Its synonyms are: "Manifest; plain; clear; obvious; visible; apparent; conclusive; indubitable; palpable; notorious." State v. Kauffman, 108 N. W. 246, 20 S. D. 620 (quoting with approval from Webster's Dict.).

MANIFEST DANGER

Even if the claims of the plaintiff were of such a character that the property in controversy was either legally or equitably charged with their payment, the fact that the building is insured, and in the event of its destruction by fire the land could not be sold for a sum sufficient to pay the amount claimed by the plaintiff, does not constitute such a "manifest danger of loss or destruction" of the property as would warrant the appointment of a receiver to take charge of the same and impound the rents therefrom. Ray v. Carlisle, 54 S. E. 119, 120, 125 Ga. 816.

MANIFEST ERROR

A manifest clerical error in a liquidation made within one year after original entry cannot be corrected more than one year after such entry, because not within the provision in Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 24, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to correct such errors "within one year from the date of such entry," as the term "entry," as there used, refers to the document filed by the importer on entry. Inasmuch as Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 24, relating to the correction of "manifest clerical errors," is the latest deliverance on that subject and relates most specifically thereto, it controls over Act June 22, 1874, c. 391, § 21, relative to the "settlement of duties," and Act March 3, 1875, c. 136, § 1, relative to the "correction of errors in liquidation." Where, in liquidation, the clerk miscalculated the number of square yards in an imported fabric, this constituted a "manifest clerical error," within the meaning of Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 24. United States v. F. B. Vandegriff & Co., 175 Fed. 772, 773, 99 C. C. A. 598.

Section 16 of the county law (Consol. Laws, c. 11), providing that the board of supervisors could correct any "manifest clerical or other error" in any assessment, and cause to be refunded taxes illegally or improperly assessed, refers to such errors as are manifest from an inspection of the assessment roll itself without argument or evidence. In re Trustees of Village of Delhi, 124 N. Y. Supp. 487, 489, 139 App. Div. 412.

MANIFESTLY

The term "manifestly" is a common word which may be assumed to be understood in the common meaning by an ordinary jury without definition. Commonwealth v. Buckley, 86 N. E. 910, 911, 200 Mass. 346, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 225, 128 Am. St. Rep. 425.

MANIFESTLY DANGEROUS

That one has committed homicide and been acquitted on the ground of insanity justifies the conclusion that he is "manifestly dangerous," within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 6959 (Pierce's Code, § 2208), providing for the commitment of persons who are deemed manifestly dangerous after having been acquitted of crime on the ground of insanity. State ex rel. Thompson v. Snell, 89 Pac. 931, 933, 46 Wash. 327, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1191.

MANIFESTLY INTEND

Section 70 of the Georgia Penal Code of 1895 justifies the killing, in defense of one's person, of one who is "manifestly intending" or endeavoring by violence or surprise to commit a felony on the person of the slayer. "To 'manifestly intend' an act implies more than mental resolution to do the act. The mental resolution must find some form of expression before it becomes manifest. In cases involving force, the slightest manifestation of intent to do the act would be an attempt in the accomplishment of the act." Taylor v. State, 49 S. E. 303, 307, 121 Ga. 348.

MANIPULATE

Where a petition in an action for injuries to a servant by defects in an elevator alleged that the cable would often catch and become fast so that it would not respond to the usual and proper force necessary to move it, that at the time of the injury plaintiff found the cable fast, and while attempting to "manipulate" it the cable, because of the elevator's defective condition, suddenly became loose, and caused the elevator to suddenly and violently start, etc., the term "manipulate" should be construed as including both the ordinary pull first applied by plaintiff in his effort to move the elevator and the more forcible one which followed, so that an instruction that if, when plaintiff undertook to use the elevator, the cable had become caught owing to its defective condition, so that it became necessary for him to pull on the cable, and while so pulling the cable suddenly loosened and moved, causing him to fall, etc., was not erroneous as presenting issues not specified in the petition. Zongker v. People's Union Mercantile Co., 86 S. W. 486, 488, 110 Mo. App. 382.

MANNER

See Best Manner; Due Manner; Forcible Manner; Good and Workmanlike Manner; In a Manner; In Due Manner; Same Manner.

Any manner, see Any.

In like manner, see Like Manner.

No general definition of the word "manner," as used in a contract or statute, can be framed. Its meaning must be determined in the light of the particular contract or statute in which it is used. "The 'manner' of doing a thing has reference to the way of doing—to the method of procedure—and the element of time does not seem to be involved." Melshelmer v. McKnight, 46 South. 827, 829, 92 Miss. 386 (quoting definition in Bankers' Life Ins. Co. v. Robbins, 80 N. W. 484, 59 Neb. 170).

"The word 'manner' is usually defined as meaning 'way of performing or executing, method, custom, habitual practice,' etc." Livesley v. Litchfield, 83 Pac. 142, 143, 47 Or. 248, 114 Am. St. Rep. 920 (quoting and adopting People ex rel. Ahrens v. English, 29 N. E. 678, 139 Ill. 622, 15 L. R. A. 131).

Amendatory Act of 1872, No. 31, p. 79, prescribing the "manner" of adopting children, was intended to cover the whole subject-matter. It says so expressly in its title, "An act providing for the manner of adopting children." Succession of Dupré, 41 South. 324, 326, 116 La. 1090.

The use of the word "manner," in Laws 1907, p. 426, c. 267, § 1 (Gen. St. 1901, § 5974), empowering the board of railroad commissioners to determine whether there is any necessity for a railroad crossing by a street car line and, if so, the place thereof, and in other respects the "manner" of such crossing, fairly implies the right to make any reasonable requirement having relation to the safe crossing of both roads. State v. Parsons St. Ry. & Electrical Co., 105 Pac. 704, 705, 81 Kan. 430, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1082 (citing 38 Cyc. p. 296).

Under Rev. St. Ohio 1890, §§ 8270, 3281, 3283, which invest railroad companies directly with the right to appropriate and use the streets of a city for railroad purposes by condemnation proceedings, unless the company and the municipal authorities agree "upon the manner, terms, and conditions upon which the same may be used or occupied," construed in the light of the settled rule in Ohio that municipal corporations possess such powers only as are expressly granted by statute or are implied as essential to the exercise of granted powers, and of section 3375, authorizing railroad companies for hauls of less than 30 miles to receive such rates as may be from time to time fixed by the company or by law, the power given to a municipal corporation by section 3283 to agree upon the manner, terms, and conditions upon which streets may be used is limited to such agreement as relates directly to such use and occupation, and a provision in an ordinance prescribing rates to be charged by a belt line road for hauls over its entire line, less than 30 miles long, as a condition to granting right of way over the streets for a part of its line, is ultra vires and void. T. B. Townsend Brick & Contracting Co. v. Central Trust Co. of New York, 187 Fed. 63, 67, 109 O. C. A. 381.

As extent

The term "extent" does not ordinarily mean "manner." Hence under Laws 1901, p. 294, c. 125, § 3, providing that, if any purchaser of public land shall fail to reside upon and improve it in good faith, he shall forfeit it and all payments to the same extent as for non payment of interest, the mere failure to reside on and improve the land does not work a forfeiture ipso facto, as was held under Laws 1895, c. 47, § 11, p. 67, providing that, if such purchaser shall fail to reside upon and improve in good faith public land purchased by him, he shall forfeit it in the same manner as for nonpayment of interest. Adams v. Terrell, 107 S. W. 537, 538, 101 Tex. 331.

As method or way

The word "manner" in the Australian ballot law, regulating the "manner" of holding elections, has the ordinary meaning of mode, method, way of effecting a result. Getty v. Holcomb, 99 Pac. 218, 219, 79 Kan. 224.

In Const. art. 7, § 6, providing that each county may sell or dispose of its lands in whole or in part in manner to be provided by the commissioner's court of the county, "manner" is the controlling word in the phrase and designates what the commissioner's court might provide for. Webster defines "manner" as "mode of action, way of performing or effecting anything, method"; and the courts have given to that word its signification as defined by Webster." Logan v. Stephens County, 83 S. W. 365, 367, 98 Tex. 283 (citing People ex rel. Ahrens v. English, 29 N. E. 678, 139 Ill. 629, 15 L. R. A. 131; Wells v. Bain, 75 Pa. 54, 15 Am. Rep. 563; Brown v. O'Connell, 36 Conn. 447, 4 Am. Rep. 89).

Rev. St. 1899, § 5498, provides that it is not permissible to question the correctness of the action of the grand jury in finding a bill of indictment, or of a petit jury in the trial of a case, or of any court or judge while acting within their legitimate province in a lawful manner, by habeas corpus. Held, that the word "manner" had reference to the method of acting, and not to the degree of perfection or correctness in the results arrived at, unless the judgment pronounced was absolutely void. Hovey v. Sheffner, 93 Pac. 305, 306, 18 Wyo. 254, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 227, 125 Am. St. Rep. 1037, 15 Ann. Cas. 318.

Webster defines "manner" as: "Mode of action; way of performing or effecting anything; method; style; form or fashion." The Century Dictionary, as: "The way in which an action is performed; method of doing anything; mode of proceeding in any case or situation; mode; way; method." In a statute the expression in permitting introduction of an instrument whether proved or acknowledged in such "manner" or not was intended to have the same force and effect as the same expression had in an old statute which was superseded, where it had been held to apply not only to the formality of certifying what was done by the officer but as well to the power of the officer to take the acknowledgment. Bledsoe v. Haney, 122 S. W. 455, 457, 57 Tex. Civ. App. 235.

The word "manner," in a will authorizing testator's daughter by her will to dispose of a fund to and among his grandchildren in such shares and in such manner as she shall think right and proper, does not imply a power of selecting, but has reference to the way in which it shall be enjoyed, whether directly or in trust, immediately or at a postponed date, and other like matters, and hence the provision of her will excluding two grandchildren in a per capita distribution of the fund was invalid. Cameron v. Crowley, 65 Atl. 875, 877, 72 N. J. Eq. 681.

The word "manner" means the handling of a thing, and, as used in the constitutional provision which directs the allowance of appeals from justices "in such manner as may be prescribed by law," means that appeals from judgments of justices shall be allowed by such handling of the subject as may be prescribed by law. Duncan v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 69 S. E. 1004, 1006, 68 W. Va. 293, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 272.

The petition in an action for injuries to a servant by derailment of a train alleged that plaintiff's injuries were caused by defendant's negligence, in that the engine and train were old, worn, out of repair, and unsuited for the purposes for which they were being used, and also in the manner and way the engine and cars were being operated. Held, that the words "manner and way" imported either the speed of the train, or something connected with the management and operation thereof, and that the words "were being operated" necessarily referred to that which was being done by the employes on the engine and cars at the time of the accident, so that such allegations were insufficient to justify the submission of an issue of negligence on defendant's part in directing the train to be run over the road as fast as 10 miles an hour. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Poole (Tex.) 133 S. W. 239, 240.

The word "manner," in the specifications of an article sought to be patented that "in making brushes by my improved method above described, the brush-back or frame may be made of any desired material and in any known 'manner,'" refers to the form and shape of the brush-back or frame when completed, and not solely to the way in which it is made. Universal Brush Co. v. Sonn, 146 Fed. 517, 520.

An information charging that defendant unlawfully, in the presence and hearing of D., did curse and swear at him, and did abuse him "in a manner" reasonably calculated to provoke a breach of the peace, sufficiently charged an offense under Pen. Code 1895, art. 599, prohibiting any person from abusing another, "under circumstances" reasonably calculated to provoke a breach of the peace. Trezevant v. State, 84 S. W. 828, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 502.

Of appointment or expulsion

The legislative authority given by Const. Or. art. 6, § 7, to prescribe the time and "manner" in which municipal officers may be elected or appointed, does not include the power to determine the qualifications of a legal voter authorized to vote for such officers. Livesley v. Litchfield, 88 Pac. 142, 144, 47 Or. 248, 114 Am. St. Rep. 920.

In insurance law, § 70, providing that the charter of an insurance company shall state the mode and "manner" in which its corporate powers are to be exercised, the "manner" of electing its directors, officers, etc., the word "manner," while more comprehensive in its meaning and uses than either the word "method" or "mode," may with much reason be held to mean in that connection the procedure of electing directors and officers, rather than a definition of the classes in whom the suffrage should lie. Lord v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc., 96 N. Y. Supp. 10, 27, 109 App. Div. 252.

Gen. St. 1901, § 7502, provides that all property not expressly exempted shall be subject to taxation "in the manner provided in this act." Laws 1907, c. 408, § 1, defines the word "property" as used in the act relating to taxation to include every kind of property subject to ownership. Held, that the clause "in the manner provided in this act" relates to the method of imposing taxes upon property already declared to be subject to taxation, and does not limit the taxation to the kinds of property specially named in the act, and the finished product of manufacturers, not being exempted, is taxable though not mentioned in the act. State v. Holcomb, 106 Pac. 1030, 1033, 81 Kan. 879, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 251.

As applicable to time

The word "manner," in Court and Practice Act 1905, p. 139, § 490, providing that notice of the filing of bills of exceptions shall be given to the adverse part "in such manner" as the court shall by rule prescribe, is broad enough to include "time." Court and Practice Act 1905, p. 139, § 490, provides that notice of the filing of bills of exceptions shall be given to the adverse party "in such manner" as the court shall by rule prescribe, and section 34 authorizes the Supreme and superior court to promulgate rules regulating practice in matters not expressly provided for by law. Superior Court Rule 32 declares that notice in writing of the filing of a bill of exceptions shall be given by the party filing the same to the adverse party within two days thereafter, which shall be served on the adverse party's attorney of record in the manner specified. Held, that a failure to serve notice of the filing of a bill of exceptions within the time prescribed by rule 32 was a jurisdictional defect justifying a dismissal of the bill under section 491, p. 140, declaring that, in any case of default in taking such procedure, judgment shall be entered or sentence imposed as if notice of intention to prosecute a bill of exceptions had not been filed. Smith v. William H. Haskell Mfg. Co., 65 Atl. 610, 611, 28 R. I. 91.

In Const. §§ 15, 16, art. 7 (Bunn's Ed. §§ 187, 188), providing that appeals shall be taken from the county court to the Supreme Court in the same "manner" as appeals from the district court, the word "manner" as so used, as well as in different provisions of the Constitution and the statutes, may mean "time" or would include "time." Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Love, 99 Pac. 1081, 1086, 23 Okl. 192.

Whether the word "manner" or the phrase in the same manner may include the elements of time has been answered by the courts both in the affirmative and in the negative. The word as used in the phrase "in the same manner," in Act Cong. March 3, 1905, c. 1479, § 12, does not include the element of time. Porter v. Brook, 97 Pac. 645, 647, 648, 21 Okl. 885.

The phrase "manner of performance" as used in the labor law (Laws 1906, p. 1395, c. 506) § 3, limiting a day's work on public work by or for municipal corporations to eight hours, and prohibiting municipal officers from paying "for work done upon any contract, which in its form or manner of performance violates the provisions of" said section, refers among other things, to the number of hours per diem that laborers are allowed to work. People ex rel. Williams Engineering & Contracting Co. v. Metz, 85 N. E. 1070, 1073, 193 N. Y. 148, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 201, order affirmed on rehearing (1909) 86 N. E. 986, 194 N. Y. 145.

Act Cong. Feb. 20, 1907, c. 1134, § 2, provides for the exclusion from the United States of various classes of persons, including idiots, insane persons, beggars, persons afflicted with dangerous contagious diseases, persons having been convicted of crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude, polygamists, anarchists, prostitutes, or persons coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution, and persons who are supported by or receive part of the proceeds of prostitution. Section 3 in the original act, and as amended (Act March 26, 1910, c. 128, § 2), relates exclusively to the importation of aliens for the purposes of prostitution, or other immoral purposes, the holding of such persons for such purposes in pursuance of such importation, and aliens found inmates of houses of prostitution after they have entered the United States, or who derive benefit from the earnings of the same. Sections 20 and 21 provide that such persons shall be deported if proceedings therefor are begun within three years, and both sections 2 and 3 contain the remedy to be applied, viz., deportation "in the manner provided" in sections 20 and 21. Held, that the words "in the manner provided" did not include the three-year limitations contained in sections 20 and 21, and, Congress having eliminated such limitation from section 3, aliens within such section were subject to deportation.

though arrested after they had been in the country more than three years. Chomel v. United States, 192 Fed. 117, 118, 112 C. C. A. 461.

Of voting

The constitutional authority given the Legislature to prescribe the "time and manner" in which municipal officers may be elected or appointed does not include the power to determine what shall constitute a legal voter. Livesley v. Litchfield, 83 Pac. 142, 143, 47 Or. 248, 114 Am. St. Rep. 920.

MANNER DIRECTED OR PRESCRIBED BY LAW

Under Code 1904, art. 98, § 38, which declares that in granting administration with the will annexed the residuary legatee or legatees shall be preferred, and directs the orphans' court to proceed in the manner directed by law with respect to executors within the state before administration with the will annexed shall be granted to any other person, the phrase "in the manner directed by law" relates to the provisions of sections 32 and 33, relative to notice; and, where the executor named in the will declined to act, the residuary legatee was the person next entitled, and a person who, in addition to a bequest of the residue of the estate after the death of another, was given a remainder in a specific part of the estate, is a "residuary legatee," and hence on petitions by such legatee and by a creditor the court could not grant administration to the creditor. McCaughy v. Byrne, 80 Atl. 653, 654, 115 Md. 85.

The term "manner prescribed by law," as used in the Constitution of Washington, giving the owner of property sought to be condemned the right to have the amount of his compensation determined by a jury, unless a jury be waived, as in other civil cases, in the "manner prescribed by law," means that the law in force at the time the condemnation proceedings are instituted, and not that in force at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, is to be resorted to in determining whether a jury trial is waived or not. Cheilan County v. Navarre, 80 Pac. 845, 847, 38 Wash. 684.

"Manslaughter" is defined to be the unlawful killing of another without malice, either express or implied, and without premeditation. State v. Brinte (Del.) 58 Atl. 258, 262, 4 Pennewill, 551.

The term "manslaughter" has become a generic term, covering two specific offenses or degrees of homicide, punishable, the one under the statute by confinement in the penitentiary, and the other under the common law, by fine and imprisonment in jail. The common-law learning of the text-writers upon the offense of "manslaughter" can have no place in the definition of the two degrees of homicide which have been carved out of manslaughter by the effect of our statute, however apt such learning may have been under the ancient practice, when the punishment of both grades was a matter resting in the discretion of the judge. Brown v. Commonwealth, 92 S. W. 542, 544, 122 Ky. 626.

Rev. St. 1899, § 1825, declaring any one who shall administer drugs to, or shall employ an instrument on, a pregnant woman, with intent to destroy the fœtus or child of said pregnant woman, guilty of manslaughter, is invalid in so far as it attempts to declare manslaughter, which necessarily imports a homicide to have been committed, when the death of neither the child nor the mother results from the act charged. State v. Hartley, 84 S. W. 910, 185 Mo. 669, 105 Am. St. Rep. 608.

See Felonious Homicide.

Voluntary killing

"Manslaughter" is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice either express or implied, and must be voluntary upon a sudden heat of passion, caused by a provocation apparently sufficient to make the passion irresistible. Duckworth v. State, 97 S. W. 280, 281, 80 Ark. 360; State v. Primrose (Del.) 77 Atl. 717, 719, 2 Boyce, 164; State v. Brown, 60 S. E. 945, 946, 79 S. C. 390; State v. Borrelli (Del.) 76 Atl. 605, 607, 1 Boyce, 349; Commonwealth v. Curcio, 65 Atl. 792-794, 216 Pa. 880; State v. Foster, 45 S. E. 1, 3, 66 S. C. 469.

"Manslaughter" is where one person kills another without malice, as in a sudden affray, in the heat of blood, or in a transport of passion, without cooling time or time for reflection. State v. Russo (Del.) 77 Atl. 743, 746, 1 Boyce 538; State v. Roberts (Del.) 78 Atl. 305, 310, 2 Boyce, 140; State v. Adams (Del.) 65 Atl. 510, 511, 6 Pennewill, 178; State v. Underhill (Del.) 69 Atl. 880, 882, 6 Pennewill, 491; State v. Jackson (Del.) 82 Atl. 824, 825.

"Manslaughter" is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, express or implied, and without any mixture of deliberation whatever. It must be voluntary, upon a sudden heat of passion, caused by a provocation apparently sufficient to make the passion irresistible. In "voluntary manslaughter" there must be a serious and highly provoking injury inflicted upon the person killing, sufficient to excite an irresistible passion in a reasonable person, or an attempt by the person killed to commit a serious personal injury on the person killing. The killing must be the result of that sudden, violent impulse of passion supposed to be irresistible. People v. Bissett, 92 N. E. 949, 951, 246 Ill. 516.

Where the act of killing another is done in sudden heat and passion, or sudden affray, and without previous malice and not in necessary self-defense, accused is guilty of manslaughter. Combs v. Commonwealth (Ky.) 112 S. W. 658, 659.

"Manslaughter" is voluntary homicide committed under the immediate influence of sudden passion arising from an adequate cause, but neither justified nor excused by law. Sue v. State, 105 S. W. 804, 809, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 122.

A homicide in sudden passion excited by sufficient provocation without malice is "manslaughter," not because the law supposes that the passion made the slayer unconscious of what he was about to do, but because it presumes that passion disturbs his reason. McBryde v. State, 47 South. 302, 305, 156 Ala. 44.

Every killing upon a rash and inconsiderate impulse is not "manslaughter"; an adequate cause rendering the mind incapable of cool reflection being essential to reduce an unlawful killing to manslaughter. Potts v. State, 118 S. W. 535, 538, 56 Tex. Cr. R. 39.

To reduce a killing which would otherwise be murder to manslaughter, there must, under the statute, have been both passion and adequate cause to produce it. Hatchell v. State, 84 S. W. 234, 236, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 380.

Under Pen. Code, § 264, homicide is "manslaughter," when perpetrated without a design to effect death, and in heat of passion. State v. Stumbaugh, 132 N. W. 666, 668, 28 S. D. 50.

A killing wholly the result of passion and without malice is manslaughter. Brewer v. State, 49 South. 836, 839, 160 Ala. 66.

If there was a sudden, impulsive killing, due to passion suddenly aroused—furor brevis—it was "manslaughter." State v. Taylor, 50 S. E. 247, 252, 57 W. Va. 228.

Manslaughter is where the homicide is willful and unlawful, but is committed under such circumstances of provocation or alleviation as to rebut the implication of malice. State v. Harmon (Del.) 60 Atl. 866-868, 4 Pennewill, 580.

"The distinguishing quality of 'manslaughter' is that the mind must be so agitated by reason of the conduct that it is incapable of cool reflection." Venters v. State, 83 S. W. 832, 836, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 280.

"Manslaughter" is defined by the statute in Indian Territory as a voluntary act upon a sudden heat of passion caused by provocation apparently sufficient to make the passion irresistible, and it is further described as a killing in the commission of an unlawful act without malice or in the prosecution of a lawful act without due caution and circumspection. Carney v. United States, 104 S. W. 606, 7 Ind. T. 247.

"Intentional killing is 'manslaughter' if it is committed under and by reason of a passion caused by what the law deems sufficient provocation. The law does not merely look to see if a man was provoked and enraged, and, if so, reduce his crime to manslaughter; but it also looks at the provocation, and does not excuse him at all if it was inadequate to excite his passion. The provocation must be sufficient, in the eye of the law, or it is murder." State v. White, 51 S. E. 44, 50, 138 N. C. 704 (quoting and adopting definition in Clark, Cr. Law, p. 198).

An instruction that "manslaughter" is the unlawful killing of another without malice, express or implied, and that the person committing the act must not be in fault, is not erroneous, where the judge further charged, in other words, that the killing must be on sufficient provocation. State v. Reeder, 51 S. E. 702, 703, 72 S. C. 223.

"Manslaughter" is the killing of another in the heat of passion without malice by the use of a dangerous weapon without authority of law and not a necessary self-defense. This was the definition given by the trial court and held not erroneous on appeal. Moore v. State, 38 South. 504, 505, 86 Miss. 160.

Where one, under the influence of sudden passion arising from some adequate cause, and not actuated by malice, while not acting in self-defense, and intending to kill another, kills a different person, the offense is manslaughter. McCullough v. State, 136 S. W. 1055, 1056, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 126.

Under Pen. Code 1911, art. 1128, defining "manslaughter" as voluntary homicide, committed under the immediate influence of sudden passion arising from adequate cause, if either sudden passion or adequate cause, is lacking, the homicide is not manslaughter. Burns v. State (Tex.) 145 S. W. 356, 364.

The true nature of "manslaughter" is that it is a homicide mitigated out of tenderness to the frailty of human nature. Every man, when assailed with violence or great rudeness, is inspired with a sudden impulse of anger, which puts him upon resistance before time for cool reflection. If during that period he attacks his assailant with a weapon likely to endanger life, and death ensues, it is regarded as done through heat of blood, and violence of anger and not through malice. The same rule applies to a homicide in mutual combat, which is attributed to sudden and violent anger occasioned by the combat, and not to malice. Where two meet, not intending to quarrel, and angry words suddenly arise, and a conflict springs up, in which blows are given on both sides, it is a mutual combat, without much regard to who is the assailant; and if no unfair advantage be taken in the outset, and an occasion is not sought for the purpose of gratifying malice, and one seizes a weapon and strikes a deadly blow, it is regarded as homicide in the heat of blood, and under our statute is manslaughter in the first degree. Robinson v. Territory, 85 Pac. 451, 456, 16 Okl. 241.

In a prosecution for homicide, where the court discussed at length the difference between murder and "manslaughter" resulting in defense of one's dwelling, and gave numerous illustrations so that the jury could not have been misled, an instruction that "it is 'manslaughter' if sudden heat and passion be aroused because of the wrongful trespass of another upon his home, and if he slays in sudden heat and passion that is 'manslaughter,'" if not technically correct, is harmless error. State v. Kibler, 60 S. E. 438, 440, 79 S. C. 170.

One who provokes a difficulty without any intention of killing or doing any serious bodily harm, and suddenly and without deliberation and under the immediate influence of sudden passion arising from an adequate cause kills another, is guilty of "manslaughter." Cornelius v. State, 112 S. W. 1050, 1055, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 173.

A charge defining "manslaughter" as voluntary homicide committed under the immediate influence of sudden passion arising from an adequate cause, but neither justified nor excused by law, defining the meaning of its phrases, and stating what was necessary to reduce voluntary homicide to the grade of manslaughter, is not erroneous. Pratt v. State, 127 S. W. 827, 831, 59 Tex. Cr. R. 167.

"Manslaughter" was properly defined as "the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, without that black condition of the heart, * * * but in sudden heat of passion, on a legal provocation offered by deceased. That is to say, if deceased assaulted defendant, and defendant became hot and passionate, and in that condition of the heart he struck and killed deceased, in sudden heat and passion, the law denominates that sort of killing 'manslaughter.'" State v. Hunter, 68 S. E. 685, 687, 82 S. C. 153.

"Manslaughter" exists where one person unlawfully kills another without malice, as where one in a sudden affray, in the heat of blood, or in a transport of passion, without malice, inflicts a mortal wound, without time for reflection or for the passion to cool. State v. Brelawski (Del.) 84 Atl. 950, 952.

Where the evidence showed that accused struck decedent, riding in a wagon, with a six-foot binding pole, and that decedent was either knocked off the wagon or fell from it and was fatally injured by a wheel running over him, the court properly charged on manslaughter in the language of the statute, and that the jury could convict accused if they believed that he struck decedent and knocked him off the wagon, or caused decedent to fall from the wagon, and that a wheel ran over him, and that he died in consequence of such striking and being run over. Gilmore v. State, 122 S. W. 493, 494, 92 Ark. 205.

In the prosecution of an officer for killing deceased while resisting arrest, an instruction that if defendant in good faith believed that he had a right to execute a capias pro fine under which he was seeking to arrest deceased on Sunday, then they should find defendant guilty of manslaughter, was erroneous. Kammerer v. Commonwealth, 125 S. W. 723, 724, 137 Ky. 815.

An instruction that if accused was in such a state of excitement that his reason was dethroned, that he was driven by an uncontrollable impulse so that he was not morally or legally accountable for his conduct, so that he did not realize his crime or what he was doing or where he was, and had gone some distance from the scene before he was able to recover himself and his senses, then he would be guilty of no higher crime than manslaughter, was erroneous, as the degree of mental disturbance required was equivalent to insanity. People v. Poole, 123 N. W. 1093, 1094, 159 Mich. 350, 184 Am. St. Rep. 722.

Under Rev. St. U. S. § 5341, declaring that every person who unlawfully and willfully but without malice shoots at or otherwise injures another, of which shooting or other injury the person dies, is guilty of manslaughter, an instruction defining manslaughter and omitting the word "willfully" was erroneous. O'Barr v. United States, 105 Pac. 988, 989, 3 Okl. Cr. 819, 139 Am. St. Rep. 959.

A charge on manslaughter in the language of the statute that every person who shall unlawfully kill any human being, without malice, express or implied, either voluntarily upon a sudden heat or involuntarily, but in the commission of some unlawful act, shall be guilty of manslaughter is sufficient; the statute containing no technical terms, and being plain and unambiguous, and easily understood by a juror of ordinary intelligence. State v. Quinn, 105 Pac. 818, 821, 56 Wash. 295.

Defendant, a frail feeble man 62 years of age, after having been severely beaten by deceased, went to his residence, obtained a pistol, and, returning, fired two shots, the second of which struck deceased while he was advancing. Deceased took the pistol away from defendant, and beat him with it into insensibility, after which deceased died from his wound. Held, that an instruction that if defendant with a deadly weapon or instrument reasonably calculated to produce death by the mode or manner of its use, in a sudden transport of passion aroused by adequate cause, and not in defense of himself against an unlawful attack reasonably producing a rational fear or expectation of death or serious bodily harm, shot deceased as charged, he was guilty of manslaughter, was proper and warranted by the evidence. Sartin v. State, 103 S. W. 875, 876, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 571.

Defendant, keeper of a bagnio, had trouble with a man therein, and he went out, being immediately followed by deceased and his party. The testimony for the state was that the defendant then called for a pistol, aimed it towards the party, and fired, saying, "Run you * * * run," and that on her going inside, being asked if they ran, she said, "Yes." She and her witnesses testified that no shot was fired from the house. Held, that "negligent homicide" was not in the case, but "manslaughter," of which she was convicted, was the lowest grade of homicide of which she could be found guilty; so that any error in the instruction thereon was harmless. Clifton v. State, 84 S. W. 237, 239, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 472.

The mere belief by defendant that he was in danger of having some injury inflicted upon him, without any reasonable grounds for entertaining such belief, has never been recognized by the courts of this state or any other state to which our attention has been called as being sufficient to reduce the grade of the crime from "murder" in the first or second degree to "manslaughter." State v. Clay, 100 S. W. 439, 442, 201 Mo. 679.

"Manslaughter," as defined by the statutes of the United States, consists in the unlawful and willful killing of another by striking, stabbing, wounding, shooting, or otherwise injuring him, resulting in his death, without malice. State v. Collingsworth, 92 N. E. 22, 82 Ohio St. 154, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 770, 137 Am. St. Rep. 775; Miller v. State, 107 Pac. 948, 3 Okl. Cr. 575.

Same—Cooling time

"Manslaughter" is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, either express or implied, and is committed when the death wound is given by accused without malice, on sudden provocation, in the heat of blood or in a transport of passion, on sufficient provocation without time for reflection and deliberation and for the blood to cool. State v. Moore (Del.) 74 Atl. 1112, 1114, 1 Boyce, 142.

If there should appear to have been an interval between the assault or provocation given and the killing sufficient for the voice of reason to be heard, the killing shall be attributed to deliberate revenge, and punished as murder. People v. Bissett, 92 N. E. 949, 951, 246 Ill. 516.

In determining whether a homicide is reduced from murder to manslaughter, the question is not only whether accused's passion, engendered by a sufficient provocation, did in fact cool, but also whether the time intervening between the giving of the provocation and the killing was sufficient for the passion of a reasonable man to cool; an affirmative answer to either question precluding a reduction to manslaughter. A killing committed upon a provocation given 9 or 10 months before is not reduced to manslaughter by the passion engendered by such provocation. Ex parte Fraley, 109 Pac. 295, 296, 3 Okl. Cr. 719, 139 Am. St. Rep. 988.

To reduce homicide from the degree of murder to that of manslaughter it must have been committed upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion, and, where a person who is sufficiently wronged by another to arouse in him that heat of passion which, if life were taken immediately, would make the crime manslaughter, after sufficient cooling time has intervened, kills deceased, the homicide will be deemed the result of deliberation; and where defendant was informed by his wife that she had committed adultery with deceased, the first time under violence, searched for deceased, took a journey by train to his home, and shot him 17 hours after he had been first informed, there had been a sufficient cooling time and his acts could not be said to have been committed in such "heat of passion" as would reduce the homicide to manslaughter. People v. Ashland, 128 Pac. 798, 801, 20 Cal. App. 168.

Same—Intent

To reduce homicide to manslaughter, it is not necessary that the intent to kill be formed in a sudden transport of passion, on adequate cause, but it is enough that the mind is excited and not capable of cool resection from some adequate cause. Kannmacher v. State, 101 S. W. 238, 242, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 118.

The rule is well settled that to constitute "manslaughter" it is not necessary that the perpetrator should have intended and willed the death of the person killed. One who willfully uses a deadly weapon upon another will be deemed to intend the necessary and probable consequences of his act. The text-writers divide manslaughter into two degrees, voluntary and involuntary. Tyner v. United States, 108 Pac. 1057, 1058, 2 Okl. Cr. 689.

Intent is not an essential element of the statutory definition of "manslaughter" when committed by culpable negligence, and charges predicated upon the theory that intent is in every case essential to the statutory crime of "manslaughter" are properly refused. Kent v. State, 43 South. 774, 774, 53 Fla. 51.

Sand. & H. Dig. § 1660, providing that the killing of a human being without design to effect death, in the heat of passion, but in a cruel and unusual manner, unless it be under circumstances that would constitute excusable or justifiable homicide, shall be adjudged manslaughter, is not applicable to a killing with a pistol; the statute being evidently intended to cover a case of homicide committed unintentionally, but with such wanton savagery and cruelty, and in such an unusual manner, as to imply recklessness of design. In one sense, it is true, all killing is cruel; but, in the sense of this statute, killing with such a common or effective instrument of death as a pistol cannot be regarded as cruel; still less is this manner of death unusual. Tanks v. State, 75 S. W. 851, 852, 71 Ark. 459.

In "manslaughter" there may be an intent to kill existing in the mind of the slayer at the time the fatal shot is fired. Keigans v. State, 41 South. 886, 887, 52 Fla. 57.

Where the intent was merely to inflict chastisement, and death results from some peculiarity in decedent's constitution or other unexpected incident, the killing is manslaughter only. Rosemond v. State, 110 S. W. 229, 230, 86 Ark. 160.

"Manslaughter" is the unlawful killing of another without malice, and under certain conditions this crime may be established, though the killing has been both unlawful and intentional. State v. Baldwin, 68 S. E. 148, 151, 152 N. C. 822.

If the intention to kill was formed in defendant's mind, through passion, with adequate cause, and the homicide occurred while the mind was in that condition, it was no higher offense than manslaughter. Dixon v. State, 103 S. W. 399, 401, 51 Tex. Cr. R. 555.

Same—Provocation

"Manslaughter" is voluntary homicide committed under the immediate influence of sudden passion, arising from an adequate cause, but neither justified nor excused by law. By the expression under the immediate influence of sudden passion is meant: (1) That the provocation must arise at the same time of the commission of the offense, and that the passion is not the result of a former provocation. (2) That the act must be directly caused by the passion arising out of the provocation. It is not enough that the mind is merely agitated by passion arising from some other provocation. (3) The passion intended is either of the emotions of the mind known as anger, rage, sudden resentment, or terror rendering it incapable of cool reflection." Sue v. State, 105 S. W. 804, 809, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 122.

"Manslaughter" is where one person unlawfully kills another without malice. In order to reduce the crime to manslaughter, the provocation must be very great—so great as to produce such a transport of passion as to render the person for the time being deaf to the voice of reason." State v. Powell (Del.) 61 Atl. 966, 971, 5 Pennewill, 24; State v. Tilghman (Del.) 63 Atl. 772, 778, 6 Pennewill, 54; State v. Johns (Del.) 65 Atl. 763, 766, 6 Pennewill, 174; State v. Wiggins (Del.) 76 Atl. 632, 635, 7 Pennewill, 127.

"To reduce unlawful killing from 'murder' to 'manslaughter,' two things must concur: First, conditions must be shown to exist which would be calculated to produce, in the mind of a person of ordinary prudence and self-control, such rage, fury, or terror as would render the mind of the defendant incapable of forming a premeditated design to effect the death of the person slain, or of any other human being; second, it must also be shown that the defendant was in fact, at the time of the homicide, laboring under such rage, fury, or terror." Ex parte Smith, 99 Pac. 893, 900, 2 Okl. Cr. 24.

To reduce a homicide from murder to "manslaughter," it must be committed in a heat of passion, on a reasonable provocation, without malice and without premeditation, and under circumstances that will not be justifiable or excusable homicide. The passion which will reduce homicide to the degree of manslaughter is an excited state of mind produced by some lawful provocation, such as a blow or an assault of any kind upon the person. "Manslaughter," in the fourth degree, includes every homicide not justifiable or excusable which was manslaughter at common law, and which is not excusable or justifiable, or declared by statute to be manslaughter in some other degree. State v. Weakley, 77 S. W. 525, 527, 178 Mo. 413 (quoting and adopting the definitions in Rev. St. 1899, § 3477).

Killing, the result of passion produced by fight, is "manslaughter" if the person upon whom an assault is made with violence resent it immediately by killing the agreesor, and act therein in heat of blood and not exclusively in his own defense. State v. Quick, 64 S. E. 168, 169, 170, 150 N. C. 820 (citing State v. Miller, 17 S. E. 167, 112 N. C. 878; State v. Crane, 95 N. C. 619; State v. Tackett, 8 N. C. 210).

The mere belief by defendant that he was in danger of having some injury inflicted upon him, without any reasonable grounds for entertaining such belief, has never been recognized by the courts of this state or any other state to which our attention has been called, as being sufficient to reduce the grade of the crime from "murder" in the first or second degree to "manslaughter." State v. Clay, 100 S. W. 439, 442, 201 Mo. 679.

A slight assault does not excuse the killing of an assailant with a deadly weapon, so as to reduce the offense from the grade of murder to that of manslaughter. State v. Wiggins (Del.) 76 Atl. 632, 635, 7 Pennewill, 127; Same v. Borrelli (Del.) 76 Atl. 605, 607, 1 Boyce, 349.

When words of decedent are accompanied by acts showing a purpose to commit violence on accused, as by raising and pointing at him a gun, accused is entitled to an instruction on manslaughter. State v. Crawford, 66 S. E. 110, 115, 66 W. Va. 114.

If the prisoner willingly engaged in a fight with the deceased, and the deceased threw his hand to his hip pocket, and advanced upon the prisoner in a threatening manner, and the prisoner, being willing to fight, seized a pistol, and shot the deceased, and the deceased died from the wound then inflicted by the prisoner, the prisoner would be guilty of "manslaughter," provided the appearance and manner of the deceased were such as to cause the prisoner to believe that the deceased was armed with a deadly weapon, and that the prisoner did believe he was armed with a deadly weapon and was about to harm him with it. State v. Exum, 50 S. E. 283, 289, 138 N. C. 599.

If a convict, while attempting to prevent his punishment by the warden, which amounted to an assault, slew a fellow convict aiding the warden, who was the warden's abettor in committing the assault, the homicide may be reduced to voluntary manslaughter; and it was error to omit to charge on that offense in a prosecution of the convict for murder. Westbrook v. State, 66 S. E. 788, 791, 133 Ga. 578, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 591, 18 Ann. Cas. 295.

Where decedent slapped accused, but did not accompany the act by angry or insulting words, a charge on manslaughter that, if accused killed decedent under the immediate influence of sudden passion arising from the act of decedent rendering the mind of accused incapable of cool reflection, he was guilty of manslaughter only, properly submitted the issue of manslaughter. Best v. State, 125 S. W. 909, 913, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 327.

Provocation caused by words only is not sufficient to reduce a homicide from murder to "manslaughter." Petty v. State, 89 S. W. 465, 467, 76 Ark. 515.

Testimony of a statement made by deceased to defendant and to some of defendant's sisters, who were present, that they were bitches, or damn bitches, does not raise the issue of insulting conduct toward a family relative of defendant. Johnson v. State, 84 S. W. 824, 826, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 523.

Where accused killed another under the immediate influence of passion arising in his mind from information given him by his wife to the effect that deceased had used insulting language to her, defendant believing and in good faith acting on the information, such information was to him an adequate cause, reducing the crime to manslaughter, whether the insults had been in fact offered or not. Melton v. State, 83 S. W. 822, 824, 47 Tex. Cr. R. 451.

In a prosecution for manslaughter, where in it appeared accused killed deceased while endeavoring to gain possession of a house occupied by the deceased, there was evidence that accused, just before the killing, sent his wife to demand possession, and that when she did so deceased asked her if she was going to take the place of her husband, or if she was attending to his business, and said that there was no law that could put him out, and that then her husband called her, and deceased and his brother followed her, cursing accused and calling him vile names. Held not to raise the issue of manslaughter by reason of insulting conduct towards her, so as to require a charge thereon. Gay v. State, 125 S. W. 896, 901, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 472.

In a prosecution for homicide, an instruction was erroneous which required that, before defendant would be entitled to a reduction of his offense to manslaughter, the jury must believe both that he was led to commit the homicide from learning that decedent had insulted his wife, and also that the decedent had used violent language to and threatened him with bodily harm, since, where the law makes any given fact, adequate cause for homicide, a defendant is entitled to an unequivocal instruction that, if such fact is proven, it is adequate cause, and where any one or more issues are raised by the evidence, either of which, if found to be true, would as a fact constitute adequate cause, the jury should be so instructed, and it is error to blend the two and require that the affirmative of both be proved. Barbee v. State, 124 S. W. 961, 967, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 129.

Where a person committing a homicide did so in the belief that decedent had insulted defendant's sisters, the homicide was "manslaughter," if committed upon the first meeting after defendant was apprised of the outrage, whether decedent actually committed the insult or not, if the homicide was committed while defendant was acting under the belief that decedent was guilty and while laboring under a passion aroused by that belief which rendered his mind incapable of cool reflection. Gillespie v. State, 109 S. W. 158, 159, 53 Tex. Cr. R. 167.

If, when he killed decedent, accused was incapable of cool reflection because of decedent's insulting language and conduct toward accused's wife, knowledge of which had just come to him, or if the unwarranted ejection of accused from decedent's house, accompanied by kicks from decedent, infuriated accused beyond cool reflection, resulting in the killing, the killing was "manslaughter." Holcomb v. State, 113 S. W. 754, 756, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 486.

"If a husband finds his wife committing adultery and under the provocation instantly takes her life, the homicide is only 'manslaughter.'" Thomas v. State, 43 South. 371, 374, 150 Ala. 31 (citing Hooks' Case, 13 South. 787, 99 Ala. 166; McNeill v. State, 15 South. 352, 102 Ala. 121, 48 Am. St. Rep. 17; Dabney v. State, 21 South. 211, 113 Ala. 38, 59 Am. St. Rep. 92; Williams v. State, 30 South. 484, 130 Ala. 107, 112).

A charge that to reduce a killing to "manslaughter," where passions have been suddenly aroused on a sufficient provocation, it must have been done under the influence of passion promptly acted upon, is not erroneous. Harrison v. State, 40 South. 568, 570, 144 Ala. 20.

The unlawful killing of another without malice is "manslaughter," as where one kills another in a sudden quarrel, in the heat of blood, or in a transport of passion, without malice, inflicts a mortal wound, without time for reflection or for the passions to cool; but to reduce the offense to manslaughter the provocation must be very great, so great as to produce such a transport of passion as to render the person for the time being deaf to the voice of reason. State v. Brooks (Del.) 84 Atl. 225, 228.

Voluntary or involuntary killing

"Manslaughter" is the unlawful killing of another, without malice, upon a sudden heat, or inadvertently, but in the commission of some unlawful act. Boche v. State, 122 N. W. 72, 75, 84 Neb. 845.

"Manslaughter" is the unlawful killing of another without malice, either express or implied, and without premeditation, and is either voluntary or involuntary. State v. Blackburn (Del.) 75 Atl. 536, 539, 7 Pennewill, 479; State v. Morahan (Del.) 77 Atl. 488, 489, 7 Pennewill, 494; State v. Woods (Del.) 77 Atl. 490, 491, 7 Pennewill, 499.

"Manslaughter," as defined by Rev. St. § 5341, is the offense of unlawfully and willfully, but without malice, striking, stabbing, wounding, or shooting at or otherwise injuring another person in any fort, arsenal, etc., of which striking, etc., such person dies. "Manslaughter" has been defined to be the killing of another without malice, express or implied, which may be voluntary upon sudden heat, or involuntary in the commission of some lawful act. Any unlawful and willful killing of a human being without malice is manslaughter, and thus defined it includes a negligent killing which is also willful. 'Manslaughter' occupies the middle ground between excusable, or justifiable, homicide on the one hand, and murder on the other." United States v. Hart, 162 Fed. 192, 194, 195.

Gross carelessness in the handling of firearms which results in killing a human being is at least "manslaughter." State v. Clardy, 53 S. E. 493, 500, 73 S. C. 340.

Under Pen. Code, defining "manslaughter" as the unlawful killing of a human being without malice and dividing it into two kinds: (1) Voluntary, upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion; (2) involuntary in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death in an unlawful manner or without due caution or circumspection—in a prosecution for assault in the first degree, it was error to instruct that, if the jury believed that defendant would have been guilty of manslaughter in case death had resulted, then they should find him guilty of assault in the first degree, since intent is not always a necessary element in the crime of manslaughter, but is the essence of the crime of assault in the first degree. State v. Schaefer, 88 Pac. 792, 793, 35 Mont. 217.

"Manslaughter" is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, and is of two kinds—voluntary (that is, upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion); involuntary, in the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, or in the commission of a lawful act, which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection. The instruction was in the language of Pen. Code, § 192. People v. Lee, 108 Pac. 738, 739, 13 Cal. App. 48.

"Manslaughter," as defined by Pen. Code, § 192, is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, first, voluntary, upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion; second, involuntary, in the commission of an unlawful act which might produce death in an unlawful manner or without due care and circumspection. The causing of death while attempting to commit an abortion does not constitute manslaughter under the statute. Huntington v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 90 Pac. 141, 144, 5 Cal. App. 288.

The approved definition of "manslaughter" as the killing of another without malice, either express or implied, "either unlawfully upon a sudden quarrel, or unintentionally while the slayer is in the unlawful commission of some act not amounting to a felony," authorizes an instruction that if defendant struck the blow that killed the deceased, and intended only to make an assault and battery upon his person, or to inflict great bodily injury thereon, but that, as a result of the assault, the deceased died without defendant having intended to kill him, defendant would be guilty of manslaughter. State v. Walker, 110 N. W. 925, 928, 133 Iowa, 489.

Where the violation of a penal ordinance of a municipality causes a death, the death is not an unlawful killing withip a statute defining the crime of "manslaughter" and providing that if any person shall unlawfully kill another without malice he shall be guilty of "manslaughter." State v. Collingsworth, 92 N. E. 22, 23, 82 Ohio St. 154, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 770, 187 Am. St. Rep. 775.

"If the killing be in the commission of an unlawful act without malice and without means calculated to produce death or the prosecution of a lawful act done without due caution or circumspection, it shall be 'manslaughter.'" Ackers v. State, 83 S. W. 909, 73 Ark. 262 (quoting Sand. & H. Dig. § 1657).

Under Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 6840, providing that an information shall contain a statement of the acts constituting the offense so as to enable a person of common understanding to know what is intended, an information charging that accused, representing himself as a physician, advised a mother employing him to give the child no food except water and the juices of fruit, and such other nourishment as he might direct, and that acting under such instruction the mother withheld all food and nourishment, except as directed by accused, and that the child died as a result of starvation, does not charge "manslaughter," defined by section 7042, punishing one who shall kill another without malice in the commission of some unlawful act, because it fails to show a connected chain of facts showing starvation as the necessary result of the directions. State v. McFadden, 93 Pac. 414, 415, 48 Wash. 259, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1140.

Under Mansf. Dig. § 1532 (Ind. T. Ann. St. 1899, § 875), defining "manslaughter" as the unlawful killing of a human being, without malice or deliberation, section 1533, providing that it must be voluntary under a sudden heat of passion caused by a provocation apparently sufficient to make the passion irresistible, and section 1534, describing the killing to be manslaughter if it be in the commission of an unlawful act without due caution, there is no such thing as involuntary manslaughter. Carney v. United States, 104 S. W. 606, 7 Ind. T. 247.

An indictment for manslaughter charging, in the language of the statute, that defendant did "feloniously kill and slay" the deceased cannot support a conviction for assault and battery. The formula did "feloniously kill and slay" charges manslaughter of either voluntary or involuntary character, and involuntary manslaughter may be committed without criminal assault and battery. State v. Thomas, 48 Atl. 1097, 1098, 65 N. J. Law, 598.

Murder distinguished

"Murder" and "manslaughter" are distinguished, in that malice is essential to the former offense, and by absence of premeditation or deliberation in the latter. Reed v. State, 145 S. W. 206, 208, 102 Ark. 525.

The unlawful killing of another with malice is "murder," as distinguished from "manslaughter," which is an unlawful killing without such malice. State v. Lee, 60 S. E. 524, 525, 79 S. C. 223.

If the slayer provoked the combat or produced the occasion in order to have a pretense for killing his adversary, or doing him great bodily harm, the killing will be "murder," no matter to what extremity he may have been reduced in the combat. But if he had no felonious intent, intending, for instance, an ordinary battery merely, the final killing in self-defense would be "manslaughter" only; the distinction being between the right of perfect and the right of imperfect self-defense. State v. Kelleher, 100 S. W. 470, 475, 201 Mo. 614 (citing State v. Partlow, 4 S. W. 14, 90 Mo. 608, 59 Am. Rep. 81).

"'Homicide' is murder unless it be attended with extenuating circumstances, which must appear to the satisfaction of the jury. If A. assaults B., giving him a severe blow, or otherwise making the provocation great, and B. strikes him with a deadly weapon, and death ensues, the law, in deference to human passion, says this is 'manslaughter.' * * * If the provocation be slight, and it can be collected from the weapon used or any other circumstances that the prisoner intended to kill or do great bodily harm, and death follows, it is 'murder.'" State v. White, 51 S. E. 44, 48, 138 N. C. 704 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. Smith, 77 N. C. 488).

While, in one sense, murder and manslaughter are separate crimes, yet, in a broader sense, they involve but one crime and are only degrees of felonious homicide. Rhea v. Territory, 105 Pac. 314, 316, 8 Okl. Cr. 280.

In an instruction correctly defining murder and manslaughter, the statement that, "You see by these definitions that in murder malice must exist, but that manslaughter is the killing of a human being without malice," made only to distinguish the two, is not reversible error. Prince v. United States, 109 Pac. 241, 242, 3 Okl. Cr. 700.

Manslaughter is distinguished from murder by the absence of malice as a contingent element. If, under the influence of some violent emotion, a sudden intent was formed, which on adequate provocation overwhelmed the reason of the appellant, then the killing was not murder, but manslaughter only. State v. Clark 77 Pac. 287, 288, 69 Kan. 576.

The chief distinction between "murder" and "manslaughter" is deliberation and malice in murder and the want thereof in manslaughter, and, where the issue was whether accused or a third person inflicted the fatal wound, the error in an instruction that if accused killed decedent without authority of law and not in necessary self-defense he was guilty of manslaughter, arising from the omission of the words "without malice and in the heat of passion," was not prejudicial. Guest v. State, 52 South. 211, 212, 96 Miss. 871.

Generally it is not "murder," but "manslaughter," to kill an officer, or other person, to prevent an illegal arrest. Consequently, shooting at an officer without killing him, if done to prevent an illegal arrest, is prima facie not an assault with intent to murder, but the statutory crime of shooting at another, described in Code 1882, § 4370. Jenkins v. State, 59 S. E. 435, 438, 3 Ga. App. 146 (quoting, with approval, from Thomas v. State, 18 S. E. 305, 91 Ga. 206).

Under Pen. Code, §§ 187, 189, defining murder as the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, and defining murder in the first and second degrees, and section 192, defining manslaughter as the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, and dividing manslaughter into voluntary and involuntary manslaughter, and section 274, making it a felony to perform a criminal abortion, an unlawful killing with malice aforethought is "murder," and is also "manslaughter," because it is the unlawful killing of a human being, though it cannot be logically classed as voluntary or involuntary manslaughter, and under a charge of murder by attempting a criminal abortion, a verdict of manslaughter may be returned. People v. Huntington, 97 Pac. 760, 762, 8 Cal. App. 612.

"Manslaughter" is an unlawful killing, which becomes "murder in the second degree" when it has the added element of malice. State v. Fowler, 66 S. E. 567, 151 N. C. 731.

"Manslaughter" consists of the unlawful killing of a human being without malice, and so, in a prosecution for assault with intent to commit murder, the accused cannot be convicted if, had his victim died, his crime would have only been manslaughter. State v. Stockley (Del.) 82 Atl. 1078, 1080.

"Manslaughter" is a homicide distinguished from murder in that it is the unlawful killing of another with malice, as in sudden affray, in the heat of blood, or in a transport of passion, without time for deliberation, reflection, or for the passions to cool. State v. De Paolo (Del.) 84 Atl. 213, 215.

"Manslaughter" is an unlawful killing in anger without malice. Proof of prior provocation may exclude the idea of malice in the homicide, but does not exclude the idea of unlawfulness. It merely substitutes the element of anger without malice for the element of malice, thus distinguishing manslaughter from murder. Cole v. State, 59 S. E. 24, 26, 2 Ga. App. 734.

Murder in the second degree consists of the killing of another without a formed design to take life, and without provocation to reduce the offense to "manslaughter," and under the influence of a wicked or depraved heart, or with cruel and wicked indifference to human life. "Manslaughter" is where one in a sudden affray, in the heat of blood, or in a transport of passion, without malice, inflicts a mortal wound, without time for reflection or for the passions to cool. It is where one person unlawfully kills another without malice. In order to reduce the crime to 'manslaughter,' the provocation must be very great, so great as to produce such a transport of passion as to render the person for the time being deaf to the voice of reason. While murder proceeds from a wicked and depraved heart and is characterized by malice, 'manslaughter' results, not from malice, but from unpremeditated and unreflecting passion." State v. Cephus (Del.) 67 Atl. 150, 151, 6 Pennell, 160.

When a killing is intentional and is not lawful, it is generally "murder"; but, under circumstances of provocation, or of mutual combat, it may be reduced to "manslaughter." State v. Goldsby, 114 S. W. 500, 503, 215 Mo. 48 (citing 2 Bishop's Crim. Law [6th Ed.] § 695).

"Murder" is where a person of sound memory and discretion unlawfully kills any human being under the peace of the state, with malice aforethought, either express or implied. The chief characteristic of this crime distinguishing it from "manslaughter" and every other kind of homicide, and therefore indispensably necessary to be proved, is malice preconceived or aforethought. State v. Brinte (Del.) 58 Atl. 258, 262, 4 Pennell, 551.

A charge that, where an officer is shot and killed by one whom he is seeking legally to arrest, the offense is "murder" and not "manslaughter," was not erroneous when taken in connection with the evidence which was sufficient to show that defendant was violating the law in the presence of the officer and that upon an effort to arrest him he drew a pistol and shot the officer. Johnson v. State, 160 S. E. 160, 161, 130 Ga. 27.

If two persons deliberately agree to fight with deadly weapons on a subsequent day at a definite time and place, and both, being armed, meet by chance near the appointed place and near the appointed time, and without any fresh cause of a quarrel or other altercation one slays the other without justification, the crime is murder, and not voluntary "manslaughter." Bundrick v. State, 54 S. E. 683, 685, 125 Ga. 753.

MANSLAUGHTER IN FIRST DEGREE

"Manslaughter in the first degree" is the unlawful killing of a human being without malice; that is, as the unpremeditated result of passion-heated blood caused by a sudden, sufficient provocation. Thomas v. State, 38 South. 734, 735, 139 Ala. 80.

To constitute "manslaughter in the first degree," there must be either an intent to kill or to do an act of violence from which ordinarily death or great bodily harm will result. Reynolds v. State, 45 South. 894, 895, 154 Ala. 14; Fowler v. Same, 49 South. 788, 789, 790, 161 Ala. 1.

Penal Code, § 189, defines "manslaughter in the first degree" as manslaughter committed without a design to effect death either (1) by a person engaged in committing, or attempting to commit, a misdemeanor, affecting the person or property, either of the person killed, or of another; or (2) in the heat of passion, but in a cruel and unusual manner, or by means of a dangerous weapon. People v. Stacy, 104 N. Y. Supp. 615, 619, 119 App. Div. 743; Same v. Huson, 79 N. E. 835, 187 N. Y. 97; Same v. Darragh, 126 N. Y. Supp. 522, 525, 141 App. Div. 408.

Rev. St. 1899, § 1822 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1266), providing that one deliberately assisting another in the commission of self-murder shall be guilty of manslaughter in the first degree, changed the common-law rule that if one counsels another to commit suicide, and such other by reason of the advice kills himself, the adviser is guilty of murder as an aider and abetter, provided he is present when his advice is carried out. State v. Webb, 115 S. W. 998, 1000, 216 Mo. 378, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1142, 129 Am. St. Rep. 518, 16 Ann. Cas. 518.

"Manslaughter in the first degree," under Crimes Acts, § 12 (Gen. St. 1901, § 1997), is defined as the killing of a human being without a design to effect death, by the act, procurement, or culpable negligence of another, while such other is engaged in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate any crime or misdemeanor, not amounting to a felony, in cases when such killing would be murder at the common law. It has been held that the act or offense which the accused commits or attempts to commit at the time of an unintentional killing includes an assault and battery, and that intentional violence to the person is not excluded. If one, without any design to effect death, assaults another with an intent only to commit assault and battery upon him, and with the use of a tin can he unintentionally kills such person, the crime would fall within this definition and constitute "manslaughter in the first degree." State v. McAnarney, 70 Pac. 137, 139, 70 Kan. 679.

Under St. 1893, § 2066 (Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 2175), defining homicide to be "manslaughter in the first degree" when perpetrated without a design to effect death, and in the heat of passion, in a cruel or unusual manner, or by means of a dangerous weapon, homicide is "manslaughter in the first degree" when perpetrated without a design to effect death and in a heat of passion, and in a cruel and unusual manner, and when committed without a design to effect death, but in a heat of passion, and by means of a dangerous weapon. Barker v. Territory, 78 P. 81, 83, 15 Okl. 22.

Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 2175, defines "manslaughter in the first degree" as follows: "First, when perpetrated without a design to effect death by a person while engaged in the commission of a misdemeanor. Second, when perpetrated without a design to effect death, and in a heat of passion, but in a cruel and unusual manner, or by means of a dangerous weapon, unless it is committed under such circumstances as constitute excusable or justifiable homicide." Under such definition, the crime of manslaughter in the first degree could not exist where the crime was committed by lying in wait and shooting deceased, and the shooting was willful and deliberate, resulting in death, and the only defense was that of alibi. The language of the second subdivision of the statute, defining "manslaughter in the first degree" perpetrated without a design to effect death, would not authorize an instruction submitting defendant's guilt of manslaughter in such degree on such facts. Regnier v. Territory, 82 Pac. 509, 15 Okl. 652.

Rev. St. § 2276, defines "manslaughter in the first degree" as where a homicide is perpetrated without design to effect death by a person while engaged in the commission of a misdemeanor, and in the heat of passion, but in a cruel or unusual manner, or by means of a dangerous weapon, or perpetrated unnecessarily either while resisting an attempt by the person killed to commit a crime or after such attempt shall have failed. Turner v. State, 126 Pac. 452, 458, 8 Okl. Cr. 11; Kent v. Same, 126 Pac. 1040, 1042, 8 Okl. Cr. 188.

Pen. Code, § 2, declares that no act or omission shall be deemed criminal or punishable save as prescribed by the Code, by some statute which it continued, or by such laws as are not in conflict with the Code, and section 241 defines manslaughter in the first degree as a killing perpetrated without a design to effect death and in a heat of passion, but in a cruel and unusual manner or by means of a dangerous weapon, unless committed under such circumstances as to constitute excusable or justifiable homicide. Held, that the phrase "when perpetrated without a design to effect death and in a heat of passion" was employed to express the distinction between homicide in the first degree and murder, and where one kills another in a cruel or unusual manner, without excuse or justification, or by means of a dangerous weapon under circumstances which do not excuse or justify the killing, the crime is at least manslaughter in the first degree. State v. Edmunds, 104 N. W. 1115, 1116, 20 S. D. 135.

MANSLAUGHTER IN SECOND DEGREE

Manslaughter in the second degree is the unlawful, involuntary killing of a human being. Neilson v. State, 40 South. 221, 222, 146 Ala. 683.

"Manslaughter in the second degree" is the unnecessary killing of another either while resisting an attempt by such other person to commit any felony or to do any unlawful act after such attempt shall have failed. State v. Stevenson, 85 Pac. 797, 798, 74 Kan. 193.

Under St. 1893, § 2090, every killing of a human being by culpable negligence which under the chapter on homicide is not murder or manslaughter in the first degree, nor excusable or justifiable homicide, is manslaughter in the second degree. Barker v. Territory, 78 Pac. 81, 83, 15 Okl. 22.

St. 1898, § 4351, makes it manslaughter in the second degree to unnecessarily kill another while resisting an attempt of the other to commit an unlawful act. Pollock v. State, 116 N. W. 851, 854, 136 Wis. 136.

Rev. St. 1899, § 1826 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 1267), defines manslaughter in the second degree to be the killing of a human being without a design to effect death in a heat of passion in a cruel or unusual manner. State v. Colvin, 126 S. W. 448, 456, 226 Mo. 446.

Where there is a want of intention or willfulness in the doing of the unlawful act causing death, resulting from a mental status incapable of forming an intent or purpose to do the act, though produced by drunkenness, the homicide is reduced to manslaughter in the second degree. Heninburg v. State, 43 South. 959, 960, 151 Ala. 26.

Under Pen. Code, § 179, defining homicide as the killing of one human being by the act, procurement, or omission of "another," and section 180, providing that homicide is either murder or manslaughter, and section 193, subd. 3, making a homicide manslaughter in the second degree when due to the act, procurement, or culpable negligence of any "person" which does not constitute murder or manslaughter in the first degree, a corporation may not be indicted for manslaughter, since the word "another" means another human being, and since the word "person" does not include a corporation. People v. Rochester Ry. & Light Co., 88 N. E. 22, 24, 195 N. Y. 102, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 998, 133 Am. St. Rep. 770, 16 Ann. Cas. 837.

Comp. Laws 1909, § 2280, defines "manslaughter in the second degree" as every killing of one human being by the act, procurement, or culpable negligence of another, which, under the provisions of the statute, is not murder or manslaughter in the first degree or excusable homicide. Turner v. State, 126 Pac. 452, 459, 8 Okl. Cr. 11; Kent v. Same, 126 Pac. 1540, 1043, 8 Okl. Cr. 188.

MANSLAUGHTER IN THIRD DEGREE

Under Rev. St. 1909, § 4462, defining manslaughter in the third degree as the killing of another with the design to effect death by a dangerous weapon, there can be no manslaughter in the third degree where the killing was with the design to effect death and was intentional, but one may be guilty of manslaughter in the third degree, when in the heat of passion he struck and killed the adversary with a dangerous weapon under circumstances authorizing a finding that he did not intend to kill the adversary by the blow. State v. Hanson, 132 S. W. 245, 248, 281 Mo. 14.

St. 1898, § 4354, declares that any person who shall kill another in the heat of passion without a design to effect death, by a dangerous weapon, in any case except such wherein the killing of another is declared to be justifiable or excusable, shall be deemed guilty of manslaughter in the third degree. Duthey v. State, 111 N. W. 222, 224, 131 Wis. 178, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1032; Bradley v. Same, 124 N. W. 1024, 1025, 142 Wis. 137.

MANSLAUGHTER IN FOURTH DEGREE

Where the killing is intentional, "manslaughter in the fourth degree" is defined as the intentional killing of a human being in the heat of passion on a reasonable provocation, without malice and without premeditation, and under circumstances which will not render the killing as justifiable or excusable homicide. State v. Sebastian, 114 S. W. 522, 523, 215 Mo. 53 (citing State v. McKenzie, 76 S. W. 1015, 177 Mo. loc. cit. 712; State v. Hermann, 23 S. W. 1071, 117 Mo. loc. cit. 637; State v. Sumpter, 55 S. W. 76, 153 Mo. 436; State v. Meadows, 56 S. W. 878, 156 Mo. 110; State v. Brown, 60 Mo. 367; State v. Diller, 70 S. W. 139, 170 Mo. 1; State v. Ashcraft, 70 S. W. 898, 170 Mo. 409; State v. Kindred, 49 S. W. 845, 148 Mo. 270; State v. Gartrell, 71 S. W. 1045, 171 Mo. 489; State v. Darling, 97 S. W. 592, 600, 199 Mo. 168; State v. Greaves, 147 S. W. 978, 975, 243 Mo. 540. As a general rule it takes an assault, with personal violence, to constitute such provocation. State v. Todd, 92 S. W. 674, 679, 194 Mo. 377 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. McKenzie, 76 S. W. 1015, 177 Mo. 699). "Manslaughter in the fourth degree," under the statutes of this state, is the intentional killing of a human being in the heat of passion, on a reasonable provocation, without malice and without premeditation, and under circumstances which will not render the provocation justifiable or excusable homicide, and as a general rule it takes an assault with personal violence to constitute such provocation. State v. Kelleher, 100 S. W. 470, 475, 201 Mo. 614 (quoting and adopting definition in State v. McKenzie, 76 S. W. 1019, 177 Mo. 712). Where deceased pursued and attacked accused, who had fled after striking deceased with a stone, accused's act in killing deceased who had assaulted him and struck him was manslaughter in the fourth degree, the assault and battery being sufficient provocation to reduce the homicide to that offense. State v. Wilson, 147 S. W. 98, 104, 242 Mo. 481.

Gen. St. 1901, § 2011 (Crimes Act, § 16), defines "manslaughter in the fourth degree" as the involuntary killing of another in the heat of passion, by means neither cruel nor unusual. State v. Knoll, 83 Pac. 622, 623, 72 Kan. 237; Same v. Moore, 100 Pac. 629, 630, 79 Kan. 688.

"Manslaughter in the fourth degree" is the involuntary killing of another in the heat of passion, or any homicide which would be manslaughter at common law, and which is not excusable nor justifiable, or is not declared to be manslaughter in some other degree. State v. Goldsby, 114 S. W. 500, 503, 215 Mo. 48 (citing 2 Bishop's Crim. Law [6th Ed.] § 695).

An instruction that: "If the defendant shot and killed deceased while in the heat of passion aroused by the striking of him with a stick produced in evidence, and without malice or premeditation, * * * and not in necessary self-defense, then he is guilty of 'manslaughter in the fourth degree' * * *"—was faulty in that it did not require the jury to find that defendant intentionally shot and killed deceased. State v. Elsey, 100 S. W. 11, 14, 201 Mo. 561.

A killing resulting from an intentional shot, though without design to effect death, is not involuntary, within Rev. St. 1898, § 4362, declaring that involuntary killing in the heat of passion, etc., shall be deemed "manslaughter in the fourth degree." Johnson v. State, 108 N. W. 55, 58, 59, 129 Wis. 146, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 809, 9 Ann. Cas. 923.

Where accused shot his wife with a pistol in an alleged insane frenzy, resulting from her alleged misconduct, the case did not present a killing within St. 1898, § 4363, declaring that every other killing of a human being by the act, procurement, or culpable negligence of another, where such killing is not justifiable or excusable, or is not declared to be murder or manslaughter in some other degree, shall be deemed manslaughter in the fourth degree. Duthey v. State, 111 N. W. 222, 224, 131 Wis. 178, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1032.

MANUAL DELIVERY.

"Dominion," as applied to a conveyance, means "to pass the instrument of writing from one man to another, as symbolic of his transferring the land to the person to whom it is delivered. Now the delivery must be made. It must be had. If a man draws a deed, and intends to deliver it, but never does, it is never a deed, because it is not consummated by delivery, and that delivery must be an actual delivery; that is, the maker of the deed must intend to pass it over to the grantee, the person to whom it is made. His dominion and right to the control over the property as set out in the deed passes with the delivery. Sometimes it is called 'manual delivery,' handing it over to him." Lancaster v. Lee, 51 S. E. 139, 141, 71 S. C. 280.

MANUAL GIFT

A "manual gift," which is defined by the Louisiana Code as the giving of corporeal, movable effects accompanied by real delivery, may be free, onerous, or remunerative, and, when the donor makes such a gift omnium bonorum on condition that the donation shall maintain him for the rest of his life, it will be dealt with as an onerous donation and not as a commutative contract. Ackerman v. Lerner, 40 South. 581, 587, 116 La. 101.

MANUAL LABOR

The term "manual labor," in its ordinary and usual meaning and acceptation, means labor performed by and with the hands or hand, and it implies the ability for such sustained exercise and use of the hands or hand at a labor as will enable a person thereby to earn or assist in earning a livelihood. Being able to temporarily use the hands or hand at and in some kind of labor, but without ability to sustain such ordinary exercise and use of the hands at some useful labor whereby money may be earned to substantially assist in earning a livelihood at some kind of manual labor, does not constitute ability to perform manual labor. Grand Lodge Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen v. Orrell, 69 N. E. 68, 69, 206 Ill. 208.

When a person is employed to work with his hands, as well as to exercise superintendence, the line must be drawn somewhere between what are acts of superintendence and what acts of "manual labor," or all that he does must be regarded as superintendence or as manual labor, which manifestly would be unjust. Though the principal duty of an employé at a stone quarry was that of superintendence, his putting a can of powder on the edge of the pit, whence it was accidentally knocked into the pit, causing an explosion, is not an act of superintendence, so as to render the master liable for injury to a workman from the explosion. Riou v. Rockport Granite Co., 50 N. E. 525, 171 Mass.

162 (citing McCauley v. Norcross, 30 N. E. 464, 155 Mass. 584; Cashman v. Chase, 31 N. E. 4, 156 Mass. 342; O'Brien v. Rideout, 36 N. E. 792, 161 Mass. 170; Dowd v. Boston & A. R. Co., 38 N. E. 440, 162 Mass. 185; O'Neil v. O'Leary, 41 N. E. 662, 164 Mass. 387).

The owner of horses, who hires them to a contractor, the latter using the horses in aid of hauling and banking logs, and the owner performing no "manual labor or other services" in connection with the logs, is not entitled to a lien on such logs, under Rev. Laws 1905, § 3524. McKinnon v. Red River Lumber Co., 138 N. W. 781, 782, 119 Minn. 479, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 872.

Any process by which crude opium is converted into a product fit for smoking constitutes a "manufacture" of smoking opium within the meaning of the Internal Revenue Act Oct. 1, 1890, c. 1244, §§ 36-40, which impose a tax upon all opium manufactured for smoking purposes in the United States, and prescribe regulations for such manufacture to be observed under penalty of criminal prosecution. Marks v. United States, 196 Fed. 476, 478, 116 C. C. A. 250.

MANUFACTORY

Cutting and storing ice

A foreign corporation carried on a retail ice business in a town where it had its office and transacted all its business. It sold only such ice as it cut and stored. It owned several ice houses on the shores of a pond in another town, where it had a steam engine used for cutting and storing ice there. It transacted no business in the latter town, except what was essential for the cutting and storing of ice and the delivery under orders from its office. Held, that the corporation did not "hire or occupy a manufactory, store, or shop" in the latter town, within Rev. Laws 1902, c. 12, § 23, cl. 1, providing for the taxation of personal property in the municipality in which the owner hires or occupies manufactories, etc.; but the steam engine, boiler, and ice stored in the latter town were taxable under St. 1906, p. 448, c. 437, § 71, providing that every foreign corporation shall be subject to taxation on its machinery and merchandise by the municipality in which such property is situated. Hilliard v. Fells Ice Co., 86 N. E. 773, 774, 200 Mass. 331.

Steam and gas plants

Under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7255 (Acts 1899, p. 569, c. 255), providing that contractors, etc., and all persons performing labor, etc., for the erection, altering, repairing, etc., any house, mill, manufactory, etc., may have a lien on the house, mill, manufactory, etc., a building equipped with machinery for the generation of steam to be distributed under a municipal franchise through pipes laid in the streets, and supplied for heating purposes, is a "manufactory." A gas company is also a manufactory within such act. Wells v. Christian, 76 N. E. 518, 519, 165 Ind. 662 (citing Bates Mach. Co. v. Trenton & N. B. R. Co., 58 Atl. 935, 70 N. J. Law, 684, 103 Am. St. Rep. 811; Burke v. Mead, 64 N. E. 880, 159 Ind. 252, 260; Commonwealth v. Lowell Gas Light Co., 12 Allen [94 Mass.] 75).

MANUFACTURE

See Building for Trade or Manufacture; Place of Manufacture.

Any trade manufacture or business, see Any.

As to specific industries which are engaged in manufacture, see Subtitle Manufacturer.

Contract of sale or manufacture, see Contract of Sale.

Manufacture or otherwise, see Otherwise. What constitutes manufactured articles, see Manufactures and Manufactured Articles.

The word "manufacture" is not a technical word, but has a common, ordinary meaning. Sharpe v. Hasey, 114 N. W. 1118, 1119, 134 Wis. 618.

To manufacture is to modify or to change natural substances, so that they become articles of value or use. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Cavanaugh, 71 N. E. 239, 241, 35 Ind. App. 32.

The process of manufacture is supposed to produce some new article by the application of skill and labor to the raw material. The broad interpretation which the courts have always given the word "manufacture" must include the construction of buildings and bridges. In re Niagara Contracting Co., 127 Fed. 782, 783.

The Century Dictionary defines "manufacture" as the production of articles for use from raw or unprepared materials by giving these materials new forms, qualities, properties, or combinations, whether by manual labor or machinery. State v. G. H. Tichenor Antiseptic Co., 43 South. 277, 278, 118 La. 685.

Rolling cigarettes

The word "manufacture," as used in the anti-cigarette law, is used in the sense of "to engage in and carry on the business of manufacturing." It is the manufacturing for traffic that is prohibited. The act of "rolling cigarettes" from one's own materials and for one's own use is so connected with the use as to be a part of such use, and this it was not intended to prohibit. Dempsey v. Stout, 107 N. W. 235, 76 Neb. 152.

Baling cotton

The word "manufacture," as defined in Worcester's Dictionary, is a process of making anything by art or reducing materials into a form fit for use, by hand or by machinery, and in the Standard Dictionary is "the making of wares or other products by hand or by machinery or by other agencies." Under these definitions, a cotton press, the effect of the operation of which is only to compress, rebind, re-cover original bales of cotton so as to change the form, size, and condition of the bales to make them more convenient for transportation, is not considered a "manufacture." City of Memphis v. St. Louis, & S. F. R. Co., 183 Fed. 529, 538, 106 C. C. A. 75.

Liquor

The word "manufacture" as used in act March 2, 1909 (28 St. at Large, p. 60) § 1, prohibiting the manufacture of liquor, means the process of making by art, or reducing materials into form fit for use, by hand or machinery. State v. Ravan, 74 S. E. 500, 501, 91 S. C. 285.

MANUFACTURER

See Sole Manufacturer.

A "manufacturer" is one engaged in making materials, raw or partly finished, into wares suitable for use. Chattanooga Plow Co. v. Hays, 140 S. W. 1068, 1069, 125 Tenn. 148 (citing And. Law Dict.; Webst. Dict.).

A corporation which makes something for profit is a "manufacturer" of that something within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, and it makes no difference whether the thing so made or manufactured is affixed to the realty or a part of the realty or is a mere chattel. In re Church Const. Co., 157 Fed. 298.

Code 1887, § 2485, provides that "all persons furnishing supplies to a mining or manufacturing company, necessary to the operation of the same, shall have a prior lien," etc. A corporation was empowered by its charter to acquire and operate "the works, property, franchise, stock and bonds, rights, privileges, and immunities of any individual, firm, or corporation, operating or owning a machine shop, dock, or shipyard, or manufacturing railroad or marine equipment, or machinery of any description." The corporation owned a large plant composed of various departments and shops, in which many kinds of machinery were used. The plant consisted of a machine shop, in which machinery and tools of different sorts were made and fitted for use; a punch shop, in which plates were sheared and punched for riveting; a pattern shop, in which all sorts of patterns were made from wood; a blacksmith shop, containing large steam hammers, and also a number of smiths' forges, for the forging of billets and the performance of all sorts of smith work; a furnace shop, for the bending and shaping of frames and plates; a carpenter shop, in which many kinds of woodwork was done; a joiner shop, equipped with special machinery, in which furniture was manufactured and the finer woodwork done; a paint shop, in which paints were mixed; a copper shop, in which sheet copper was manufactured into pipe, steam connections, ventilators, brass and copper castings, and other forms, and where galvanizing was done; a boiler shop, for the manufacture of boilers; a foundry, in which iron and brass castings were made out of raw materials. Large quantities of raw materials of all sorts were purchased by the company and converted into finished products. The company manufactured ships of all sorts and sizes and all necessary fittings and furniture therefor, and it also did a considerable amount of original and repair work for other manufacturing concerns. The word "manufacture" is defined by Webster's Dictionary: "To make [wares or other products] by hand, by machinery, or by other agency. To work, as raw or partly wrought materials, into suitable forms for use." By the Standard Dictionary: "To make or fashion by working on or combining material. To form or produce by some industrial process; fashion by hand or machinery, especially when done in considerable quantities and regular business. To work or fashion by labor into useful or desirable forms." And the Century Dictionary: "To make or fabricate anything for use, especially in considerable quantities or numbers, or by the aid of many hands, or by machinery; work materials into the form of." Held, that the corporation was engaged in the manufacturing business, within the meaning of the statute. First Nat. Bank of Richmond v. Wm. R. Trigg Co., 56 S. E. 158, 161, 106 Va. 327, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 744.

The term "manufacturing," as used in the bankruptcy act of 1898, authorizing involuntary bankruptcy against corporations engaged in manufacturing, embraces only such corporations as are engaged in manufacturing as a business and selling their wares on the market, doing those things usually done by those who not only manufacture their wares and goods, but place them on the market for sale either by wholesale or retail. Walker Roofing & Heating Co. v. Merchant & Evans Co., 173 Fed. 771, 773, 97 C. C. A. 495.

Evidence held to show that a corporation was principally engaged in manufacturing, and hence was subject to adjudication as a bankrupt. In re Georgia Mfg. & Public Service Co., 166 Fed. 964, 968.

Under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, providing that any corporation engaged principally in "manufacturing" or mercantile pursuits may be declared a bankrupt, a corporation organized for the purpose of manufacturing paper from wood pulp, which had purchased woodland and other property for the commencement of its business, was subject to bankruptcy proceedings, within the statute.

though it had never in fact started its factory; the intent being that "a corporation pursuing, through its formative stages, a business of the kind described by the statute should be subject to the operation of the law." In re White Mountain Paper Co., 127 Fed. 180, 182.

The term "engaged principally," as used in Bankrupt Act, providing that any corporation engaged principally in "manufacturing" pursuits may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt, refers not to the objects of pursuit set out in the charter but to those in which the company was actually engaged. In re O. Moench & Sons Co., 130 Fed. 685, 686, 66 C. C. A. 37.

In the phrase "engaged in manufacturing," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, the word "engaged" means occupied, employed, busy, and the word "manufacturing" means the making of an article, either by hand or machinery, into a new form capable of being used in ordinary life, or the fashioning of raw materials into a change of form for use; and a corporation which although authorized to manufacture an article of commerce, has not the means for such manufacture, and has taken no step in the process of manufacturing, is not engaged in any proper sense in the manufacturing of such article, and is not subject to adjudication as an involuntary bankrupt under said section. In re Toledo Portland Cement Co., 156 Fed. 83, 85.

Dealers and merchants distinguished

The term "manufacturer," in its ordinary acceptation, denotes one who, through his skill and labor, shapes or combines material into a new product, the term, under various statutes, such as tax laws, being named to include others for the purpose of such laws, and where a firm merely ordered from a foreign manufacturer a given quantity of waists of a certain pattern, a sample of which had been previously furnished them by the manufacturer, the firm was merely a dealer and not a manufacturer. Remy, Schmidt & Pleissner v. Healy, 126 N. W. 202, 203, 161 Mich. 268, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 139, 21 Ann. Cas. 74.

A "manufacturer" is one engaged in making materials, raw or partly finished, into wares suitable for use. A "merchant" is distinguished from a manufacturer, in that he sells to earn a profit, and the manufacturer sells to take profit already earned. Chattanooga Plow Co. v. Hays, 140 S. W. 1063, 1069, 125 Tenn. 148.

The words "merchants" and "dealers," according to common understanding, mean something different from the word "manufacturers." The former are generally employed to designate persons engaged in the business of buying and selling merchandise or other personal property in the usual course of trade; the latter to designate those engaged in the business of making or producing articles for use or sale. Union County Nat. Bank, Liberty, Ind., v. Ozan Lumber Co., 179 Fed. 710, 715, 103 C. C. A. 584.

Manufactures distinguished

Laws 1912, c. 157, prohibiting any person, firm, or corporation, engaged "in manufacturing or repairing," to work employes more than 10 hours per day, is sufficiently definite; for "manufacturing" is the system of industry which produces manufactured articles, and "manufacture" is the production of articles for use from raw or prepared materials, by giving them new forms, qualities, and properties, or combinations, and "repairing" is the making or restoring of an article or thing to its completeness. State v. J. J. Newman Lumber Co. (Miss.) 59 South. 923, 926; 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 851.

An information, charging accused with having in his possession nonalcoholic drinks bearing the names of "manufacturers" other than himself, is insufficient under Laws 1911, pp. 261, 262, §§ 1, 4, making it unlawful for any person to have nonalcoholic drinks bearing the name or brand of "manufacturers" other than himself; "manufactures" and "manufacturers" not being idem sonans, but separate and distinct terms with separate and distinct meanings. State v. Murphy, 147 S. W. 520, 521, 164 Mo. App. 204.

Automobile repairing company

The conducting by a corporation of a shop for the repairing of automobiles, which repairing consisted chiefly in the adjusting of parts purchased from other persons, was not a manufacturing pursuit, within the meaning of Bankr. Act 1898, c. 541, § 4b, which subjected the corporation to proceedings in bankruptcy. Cate v. Connell, 173 Fed. 445, 447, 97 C. C. A. 647.

Bakery company

A corporation organized to make bakers' goods and restaurant supplies, and sell same at wholesale and retail, was organized for "manufacturing and mercantile" purposes, as those terms are used in the revenue statute; and the act of the state board of equalization in assessing its capital stock and franchise in excess of the valuation of its tangible property, which had been assessed by the local assessors, was unauthorized. H. H. Kohlsaat & Co. v. O'Connell, 99 N. E. 689, 690, 255 Ill. 271.

Brewing company

A brewing company, which has done nothing except in preparation for its business by constructing a brewing plant, taking out a brewer's license, and hiring a brewmaster, although it has never made any beer nor bought materials therefor, is a "corporation engaged principally in manufacturing," and subject to proceedings in involuntary bankruptcy. In re Bloomsburg Brewing Co., 172 Fed. 174, 175.

The words "manufacturer," "such manufacturer," and "said manufacturer," as used in Acts 1908, p. 281, c. 189, § 15, providing that a licensed manufacturer may sell the products of his brewing at any place within the state, except where such manufactory is situated in no-license territory, but such manufacturer may sell the product of his brewing to be delivered to a common carrier to be transferred to any place where the same may be legally sold, and the said manufacturer may sell the products of his brewing in quantities not less than one gallon at the place of manufacture, except in no-license territory, mean any manufacturer, whether located in license or no-license territory; the only difference between the two classes of manufacturers intended by the statute being that the manufacturer located in license territory can sell and deliver not less than one gallon at the place of manufacture, while the manufacturer located in no-license territory can make no sale and delivery at such place. Robert Portner Brewing Co. v. Southern Express Co., 63 S. E. 6, 7, 109 Va. 22.

A corporation which has taken active steps to engage in manufacturing, and in pursuit of such business has incurred debts and committed acts of bankruptcy, is "engaged in manufacturing," in the sense contemplated by Bankruptcy Act. A corporation organized to build and equip a brewery and to manufacture and sell beer was engaged principally in manufacturing pursuits and subject to adjudication as a bankrupt before its plant had been completed or any machinery purchased or installed, and before any beer had been made. Bollinger v. Cent. Nat. Bank, 177 Fed. 609, 610, 101 C. C. A. 235 (citing In re White Mountain Paper Co., 127 Fed. 180, affirmed in White Mountain Paper Co. v. Morse, 127 Fed. 643, 62 C. C. A. 369, and In re Bloomsburg Brewing Co., 172 Fed. 174).

Building and construction companies

The word "manufacture" is ordinarily used to denote an article upon the material of which labor has been expended to make the finished product. It is hard to conceive of any human action more accurately corresponding to this description or definition than the building of a house; and one of the definitions of "build," found in the Century Dictionary, is to "form by uniting materials into a regular structure." An allegation in a petition in bankruptcy against a corporation that it "is engaged in the business and was incorporated for the purpose of building houses," as against a demurrer, is sufficient to bring the corporation within the scope of the Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, § 4b, c. 541, as one engaged in "manufacturing." In re Rutland Realty Co., 157 Fed. 296.

A corporation engaged in constructing houses on its own land was not subject to adjudication as a bankrupt under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, as amended by Act

Feb. 5, 1903, authorizing an adjudication against a corporation engaged principally in "manufacturing," the term "manufacturing" being used in its ordinary meaning, viz., the making of articles of commerce ordinarily the subject of bargain and sale, which does not include building or construction. In re Kingston Realty Co., 160 Fed. 445, 446, 87 C. C. A. 406.

A construction company engaged in constructing bridges, wharves, bulkheads, and driving piles for foundations for buildings, etc., cannot be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, as a corporation engaged in "manufacturing, trading, or mercantile pursuits." In re MacNichol Const. Co., 134 Fed. 979, 980.

A corporation whose principal business is making and constructing arches, walls, and abutments, bridges, buildings, etc., out of concrete, in carrying on which business it buys and combines together raw materials, and supplies the necessary labor, machinery, and appliances, is a "corporation engaged principally in manufacturing," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, 30 Stat. 547, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 3, 32 Stat. 797, defining the persons or corporations which may be adjudged involuntary bankrupts, although such company makes its product, and gives it form and shape, at the place where it is to remain. Friday v. Hall & Kaul Co., 30 Sup. Ct. 261, 216 U. S. 449, 54 L. Ed. 562, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 475.

The word "manufacturing" is a generic term of broad significance, used to include many species of corporations, and, as used in section 4b of the Bankruptcy Law (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 547, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 3, 32 Stat. 798), includes many species of corporations, and its comprehensive meaning ought not to be whittled away by fine distinctions. Derivatively meaning making with the hand, its ordinary significance is producing a new article of use or ornament by the application of skill and labor to the raw materials of which it is composed. Pin makers, pen makers, shoe makers, furniture makers, steel makers, boot makers, rail makers, engine makers, and cement makers are undoubtedly engaged in manufacturing, so also is a corporation which is principally engaged in building concrete arches and bridges, and dressing stone is a "manufacturing corporation," and may be adjudged a bankrupt under section 4b of the Bankruptcy Law. In re First Nat. Bank, 152 Fed. 64, 67, 81 C. C. A. 260, 11 Ann. Cas. 355 (citing Columbia Iron Works v. National Lead Co., 127 Fed. 99, 102, 62 C. C. A. 99, 102, 64 L. R. A. 645; In re Niagara Contracting Co., 127 Fed. 782; In re Marine Const. & Dry Dock Co., 130 Fed. 446, 64 C. C. A. 648; In re Matthews Consol. Slate Co., 144 Fed. 737, 738, 75 C. C. A. 603; In re Quincy Granite Quarries Co., 147 Fed. 279; In re H. R. Leigh ton & Co., 147 Fed. 311, 318; In re Troy Steam Laundering Co., 132 Fed. 286; White Mountain Paper Co. v. Morse & Co., 127 Fed. 643, 644, 62 C. C. A. 369, 370).

A construction company, whose business is the building by contract of piers and abutments for railroad bridges, made of concrete, which is mixed on the ground as the work progresses, with the necessary incidental work, is not a "corporation engaged principally in manufacturing," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, and is not subject to proceedings in involuntary bankruptcy. In re T. E. Hill Co., 148 Fed. 832, 834, 78 C. C. A. 522 (citing Columbia Iron Works v. National Lead Co., 62 C. C. A. 99, 127 Fed. 99, 102, 64 L. R. A. 645).

The word "manufacture" means "to make wares or other products by hand, by machinery, or by other agency, as to manufacture cloth, nails, glass, etc.; to work, as raw or partly wrought materials into suitable forms for use, as to manufacture wool, cotton, silk, or iron." A corporation engaged in the business of building bridges, wharves, bulkheads, and driving piles, under contract, which has no plant where it manufactures bridges for the market, but does all of its work on the ground after contracting therefor, is not engaged in manufacturing, within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, 30 Stat. 547, and is not subject to be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt thereunder. Butt v. C. F. MacNichol Const. Co., 140 Fed. 840, 841, 72 C. C. A. 252 (quoting and adopting the definition in Webst. Int. Dict.).

A corporation whose business as actually conducted consists of installing heat and power plants, constructing conduits, waterworks, and sewers, buying, selling, and erecting steam engines, and occasionally making reports with reference to the proposed construction of electric light and power plants is engaged principally in "manufacturing, trading, or mercantile pursuits," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 3, and may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. United Surety Co. v. Iowa Mfg. Co., 179 Fed. 55, 57, 102 C. C. A. 623.

Making a paving compound is the production of a new and distinct substance, which constitutes "manufacturing," within the meaning of Laws 1896, p. 857, c. 908, § 183, as amended by Laws 1897, p. 817, c. 785, exempting from the franchise tax manufacturing corporations to the extent of the capital actually employed in this state in manufacturing; but the preparation of a street for the laying of the pavement, and placing the pavement thereon, is not "manufacturing," within the meaning of such section. People ex rel. Fruin-Bambrick Pav. Co. v. Knight, 90 N. Y. Supp. 537, 538, 99 App. Div. 62 (quoting and adopting People ex rel. Eastern Bermudez Asphalt Paving Co. v. Morgan, 70 N. Y. Supp. 516, 61 App. Div. 373; People ex rel. Syracuse Imp. Co. v. Morgan, 69 N. Y. Supp. 263, 59 App. Div. 302).

A paving and construction company incorporated to do a manufacturing business and primarily engaged in making cement and asphalt floors, pavements, roadways and structural concrete, is engaged in a "manufacturing" business within Act June 8, 1893, exempting from the capital stock tax the capital stock of a manufacturing corporation. Commonwealth v. Filbert Paving & Construction Co., 78 Atl. 104, 105, 229 Pa. 231.

A corporation engaged in constructing buildings and bridges by contract, furnishing the labor while others furnish the materials, is a manufacturing corporation, and subject to be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt under Bankruptcy Act. In re Niagara Contracting Co., 127 Fed. 782, 783.

Canning company

One putting up apples in cans for sale is a "manufacturer," within the rule that where goods are sold by sample, and the seller is also the manufacturer, there is an implied warranty on his part that they are free from any latent defects that could not be discovered from examination. Nixa Canning Co. v. Lehmann-Higginson Grocer Co., 79 Pac. 141, 142, 70 Kan. 664, 70 L. R. A. 653.

Chemical company

"A 'manufacturer' * * * is one who gives new shapes, new qualities, new combinations, to matter which has already gone through some artificial process." "Nearly all artificial products of human industry, nearly all such materials as have acquired changed conditions or new and specific combinations, whether from the direct action of the human hand, from chemical processes derived and directed by human skill, or by the employment of machinery, * * * are now commonly designated as 'manufactured.'" The Century Dictionary defines "manufacture" as "the production of articles for use from raw or unprepared materials, by giving these materials new forms, qualities, properties, or combinations, whether by manual labor or machinery." Under these definitions one who, by extracting the medicinal properties from various drugs and making a chemical combination in which the ingredients lose their identity, creates a distinct product, which for years is offered to, and accepted by, the public for distinct uses, may be regarded as a "manufacturer." State v. G. H. Tichenor Antiseptic Co., 43 South. 277, 278, 118 La. 685 (quoting and adopting definition in City of New Orleans v. Le Blanc, 34 La. Ann. 596; City of New Orleans v. Ernst, 35 La. Ann. 746; quoting Carlin v. Western Assur. Co. of Toronto, 57 Md. 526, 40 Am. Rep. 440).

Whicory company

A corporation organized to "plant, harvest, store, purchase, manufacture, market, sell, and deal in chicory" is a "manufacturing corporation." Bolton v. Nebraska Chicory Co., 96 N. W. 148, 69 Neb. 681.

Cold storage company

A corporation was chartered "for the purpose of conducting the business of a cold storage warehouse, * * * furnishing cold storage for meats, produce, fruits, and other perishable merchandise." The business actually done by it was the conducting of a cold storage warehouse in which produce, etc., was preserved for others for hire, by means of brine circulated through pipes; and it also operated a pipe line running through the street and connected with storage rooms of others, which it refrigerated by means of the brine pumped through the pipes and circulated in such rooms, returning to the tank in its own plant. For this service it charged in proportion to the size of the rooms cooled, and it constituted the larger part of its business. The brine was made in its plant by mixing calcium chloride in water at a certain temperature to a certain consistency. The calcium chloride was a manufactured product sold in the market, which it purchased in cases, and the brine was made by ordinary workmen under direction of a superintendent. Held, that such corporation was not "engaged principally in manufacturing, trading, or mercantile pursuits," within the meaning of Bankruptcy Act, and was not subject to be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. In re Philadelphia Freezing Co., 174 Fed. 702, 703.

Coalyard

A coalyard, wherein coal mined by its owner is cleaned, assorted, and stored and from which it is sold, is a "mercantile institution or establishment," within Child Labor Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1911, c. 48), prohibiting the employment of a child under the age of 14 years in any mercantile institution or establishment, and is also a manufacturing establishment, factory, or workshop, since that phrase as used in the statute has the meaning given to it by the Child Labor Act of June 9, 1897 (Laws 1897, p. 90), defining the words "manufacturing establishment, factory, or workshop" to mean any place where goods or products are manufactured or repaired, dyed, cleaned or sorted, stored or packed for sale. Purtell v. Philadelphia & R. Coal & Iron Co., 99 N. E. 899, 902, 256 Ill. 110, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 193, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 335.

Cresosoting company

The process of creosoting railroad ties, which is done by pressing tar and other substances, which are formed into a concoction, two or three inches into such ties for the purpose of preservation, does not constitute a "manufacturing" of articles of wood, but is a mere process for the preservation of articles of wood already manufactured. Shreveport Creosoting Co. v. City of Shreveport, 44 South. 325, 327, 119 La. 637.

Electric company

"An electric light plant is a 'manufacturing establishment.'" Lucas v. Ashland Light, Mill & Power Co., 138 N. W. 761, 763, 92 Neb. 550 (quoting Lamborn v. Bell, 32 Pac. 989, 13 Colo. 346, 20 L. R. A. 241).

One engaged in generating electricity for distribution and sale is engaged in "manufacturing," within Const. § 170, and Ky. St. § 2980a, authorizing municipalities to exempt manufacturing establishments from taxation. Kentucky Electric Co. v. Buechel, 143 S. W. 58, 59, 146 Ky. 660, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 907, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 714.

A corporation engaged in generating electricity, transmitting it, and selling power or light to consumers, is neither a "manufacturing" nor a "mercantile" corporation within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, 30 Stat. 547, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 3, 32 Stat. 797, and is not subject to adjudication as an involuntary bankrupt. A gas and electric company, organized under the transportation laws of New York, having a franchise to maintain pipes and wires in the streets of a village and a contract for lighting its streets, which manufactures gas and purchases or generates electricity, both of which it transports or transmits and sells to its customers, its electrical business exceeding its gas business in volume and revenue, is not "engaged principally in manufacturing, etc., pursuits," within the meaning of Bankruptcy Act. In re Hudson River Electric Power Co., 173 Fed. 934, 940.

Engraver

In its business of engraving bank bills the government is a manufacturer and entitled to no more consideration than any other engraver and printer; but is entitled to no less. Harley v. United States, 39 Ct. Cl. 105, 114.

Fertiliser company

"The word 'manufacturer' has been defined substantially as the operation of making or producing an article for use from raw or prepared materials by giving these materials new form, qualities, properties, or combinations." The capital and other property employed in the manufacture of fertilizers and chemicals are exempt from parochial and municipal taxation under the Louisiana Constitution, whether at the establishment of the company or at its domicile. Planters' Fertilizer & Chemical Co. v. Board of Assessors for Parish of Orleans, 40 South. 1085, 116 La. 667.

Fish company

A corporation organized for carrying on the business of catching and preserving by salt and marketing salt water fish, and which owns and operates a plant for the preparing, preserving, and packing of such fish, is "principally engaged in manufacturing."

within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, § 4b, c. 541, and is subject to adjudication as an involuntary bankrupt. In re Alaska-American Fish Co., 162 Fed. 498.

Gas company

A "gas company" is a "manufacturing corporation" within the letter as well as the spirit of Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7255 (Acts 1899, p. 569, c. 255), providing that contractors, etc., and all persons performing labor, etc., for the erection, altering, repairing, etc., any house, mill, manufactory, etc., may have a lien on the house, mill, manufactory, etc. Wells v. Christian, 78 N. E. 518, 519, 165 Ind. 662 (citing Commonwealth v. Lowell Gas Light Co., 12 Allen [94 Mass.] 75).

Ice companies

A corporation organized to buy, gather, store, and preserve ice, to ship and vend the same, and which carried on its business by renting small bodies of water from which it cut the ice which it stored, shipped, and sold, only two or three times in a number of years buying small quantities of ice when its own supply ran short, is not engaged principally in "manufacturing, trading, or commercial pursuits," within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, 30 Stat. 547, and is not subject to involuntary proceedings in bankruptcy. In re New York & New Jersey Ice Lines, 147 Fed. 214, 215, 77 C. C. A. 440 (citing In re Woodside Coal Co. [D. C.] 105 Fed. 56; In re Keystone Coal Co., 109 Fed. 872; In re H. J. Quimby Freight Co., 121 Fed. 141; First Nat. Bank v. Wyoming Valley Ice Co., 136 Fed. 466).

Laundry company

A corporation conducting a laundry, the largest part of its business being the washing, starching and ironing, and polishing of collars, cuffs, etc., for manufacturers before they are put on the market, is engaged principally in manufacturing, within the meaning of the national bankruptcy act, and is subject to proceedings in involuntary bankruptcy. In re Troy Steam Laundering Co., 132 Fed. 266, 268.

Milk dealers

The Pioneer Pasteurizing Company, authorized by its articles of incorporation to engage in the business of buying, manufacturing, and dealing in milk, cream, butter, cheese, and other dairy products, and pasteurizing and treating said milk, and packing, storing, handling, and selling said products so pasteurized and treated, is not exclusively a manufacturing or mechanical corporation, within Const. art. 10, § 38, and its stockholders are therefore liable for its debts. Meen v. Pioneer Pasteurizing Co., 97 N. W. 140, 141, 90 Minn. 501.

Milling

The term "manufacturing" is synonymous with "milling." Lucas v. Ashland Light, Mill. & Power Co., 138 N. W. 761, 763, 92 Neb. 550 (citing Lamborn v. Bell, 32 Pac. 989, 18 Colo. 346, 20 L. R. A. 241).

Mineral water company

A corporation organized to "manufacture" and sell mineral and other waters, owning a well from which mineral water was pumped, and machinery and appliances for carrying on the business of bottling the water and carbonating it so as to form ginger ale, root beer, etc., was a "manufacturing corporation," within a statute providing that the directors of a manufacturing corporation shall have no power to incur the plant or machinery until authorized by a majority of the stockholders. Carlsbad Water Co. v. New, 81 Pac. 34, 35, 33 Colo. 389 (citing definition in Carlin v. Western Assur. Co. of Toronto, 57 Md. 515, 40 Am. Rep. 440; Schriefer v. Wood, 5 Blatchf. 215, Fed. Cas. No. 12, 481; Lamborn v. Bell, 32 Pac. 989, 18 Colo. 346, 20 L. R. A. 241).

Oleomargarine dealers

Oleomargarine Act 1886 (Act Aug. 2, 1886, c. 840, § 3, 24 Stat. 209, as amended by Act May 9, 1902, § 2, 32 Stat. 194) defines a manufacturer of oleomargarine as any person who sells, vends, or furnishes oleomargarine for use or consumption by others who shall add to or mix any artificial coloration so as to make it resemble butter. Held, that the actual selling, vending, or furnishing of oleomargarine for use and consumption by others is not one of the necessary components of a manufacturer as contemplated by such act, so as to require proof of actual selling, vending, or furnishing of some of the product to constitute the offense; the term "manufacturer" as so used being construed to mean one engaged in the business of selling, vending, or furnishing oleomargarine for consumption of others. Vermont v. United States, 174 Fed. 792, 794, 98 C. C. A. 500.

Oleomargarine Act Aug. 2, 1886, c. 840, § 17, providing that any person engaged in carrying on the business of manufacturing oleomargarine, who defrauds, or attempts to defraud, the United States of the tax on oleomargarine produced by him, etc., shall be fined and imprisoned, was applicable to one who did not manufacture white oleomargarine and therefore was not a manufacturer within the definition contained in the original act, but who mixed white oleomargarine with artificial coloration so as to make it look like butter and thereby became a "manufacturer" within the definition as extended by Act Cong. May 9, 1902, c. 784. May v. United States, 199 Fed. 42, 44, 117 C. C. A. 420.

Paper company

A corporation organized for the purpose of manufacturing and dealing in paper and pulp, which had bought large tracts of timber land and expended some $500,000 in the erection and equipment of buildings for paper and pulp mills, and which had hired cut several thousand cords of wood in lengths suitable for the use in the manufacture of paper, was "engaged in manufacturing" within Bankruptcy Act, and subject to proceedings in involuntary bankruptcy, though it had never operated its mills nor completed the manufacture of either paper or pulp, where it had engaged in no other business. White Mountain Paper Co. v. Morse & Co., 127 Fed. 643, 644.

Printing and publishing company

Within a law imposing a franchise or license tax upon certain corporations and exempting manufacturing companies, a company organized to carry on the business of printing and publishing a daily newspaper and general jobbing, printing, and publishing, whose capital is wholly employed in publishing a newspaper for circulation, is not a "manufacturing company"; but a company organized to conduct the business of book and job printing, engraving, electrotyping, and lithographing, whose capital is invested in the prosecution of that business, and which manufactures on orders only, is a "manufacturing company." State v. State Board of Assessors, 47 N. J. Law, 37, 42, 54 Am. Rep. 114 (citing and adopting Nassau Gaslight Co. v. City of Brooklyn, 89 N. Y. 409; Dudley v. Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Co., 100 Mass. 183; Byers v. Franklin Coal Co. of Lykens County, 106 Mass. 131; In re Chandler, 1 Lowell, 478, 5 Fed. Cas. 443; In re Kenyon & Fenton, 6 N. B. R. 238, 30 Fed. Cas. 90; In re Capitol Pub. Co., 18 Nat. Bank. Reg. 319; Seeley v. Gwillim, 40 Conn. 106).

Refrigerator company

Where a Massachusetts corporation was organized to deal in and manufacture refrigerators, refrigerator cars, and accessories, appliances, etc., but, at the time an involuntary bankruptcy petition was filed against it, it had never manufactured anything, or begun business, beyond authorizing its directors to make an endeavor to get contracts, it was not subject to adjudication as a corporation "engaged principally in manufacturing," within Bankruptcy Act, prior to its amendment by Act Cong. June 25, 1910, c. 412, 36 Stat. 838. In re Coolidge Refrigerator & Car Co., 190 Fed. 908, 909.

Restaurant company

A corporation engaged in operating a restaurant is not subject to adjudication as a bankrupt, under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 544, authorizing an adjudication against any corporation engaged principally in "manufacturing"; a cook not being regarded as a manufacturer within the meaning of the term as so used. In re Wentworth Lunch Co., 159 Fed. 413, 414, 86 C. C. A. 393.

Shingle company

Under Sand. & H. Dig. § 6444, relating to taxation, and providing: "Every person who shall purchase, receive or hold personal property of any description for the purpose of adding to the value thereof by process of manufacturing or by combination of different materials, with a view of making a gain or profit by so doing, shall be held to be a 'manufacturer,'" etc.—a company engaged in making shingles is a "manufacturer." Arkansas Cypress Shingle Co. v. Lonoke County, 84 S. W. 1029, 1030, 74 Ark. 28.

Ship construction company

A corporation chartered to construct and repair vessels, carry on a general shipbuilding and ship repairing business, construct and operate a marine dry dock, etc., and whose main business consisted in the building of large steel vessels and in repairing others, is a corporation engaged principally in manufacturing and mercantile pursuits, within Bankruptcy Act, providing that such a corporation may be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. Columbia Iron Works v. National Lead Co., 127 Fed. 99, 102, 62 C. C. A. 99, 64 L. R. A. 645.

A corporation incorporated to do a general manufacturing business, and to manufacture, construct, repair, and equip, and buy and sell ships and vessels of all kinds, and parts and furniture therefor, and which since its organization has carried on the business of constructing completed boats, and parts and furniture for vessels, such as boilers, masts, tanks, desks, tables, etc., for the most part made from raw material in its own shops, is engaged principally in manufacturing pursuits within Bankruptcy Act, and subject to proceedings in involuntary bankruptcy. In re Marine Const. & Dry Dock Co., 130 Fed. 446, 447, 64 C. C. A. 648.

As subcontractor

See Subcontractor.

Theatrical company

A corporation organized "to lease, produce, and exploit plays and other theatrical and dramatic productions, to produce and sell theatrical costumes and properties," and which, up to the time a petition was filed against it, had actually engaged only in producing a play, is not one "engaged principally in manufacturing, trading, * * * or mercantile pursuits," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, and is not subject to bankruptcy proceedings. In re J. J. Reisler Amusement Co., 171 Fed. 283.

Tool polishing company

A corporation engaged in "polishing" tools for those who make the tools for use or sale is as much engaged in manufacture as those who take the prior steps in forming and shaping the iron and wood into such tools. The fact that this final touch is called "polishing" does not take it out of the realm of "manufacturing." In re Troy Steam Laundering Co., 132 Fed. 266, 268.

Waterwork company.

Pipes and water mains belonging to a water company are not taxable as "machinery employed in manufactures," within Rev. Laws, c. 12, § 23, providing for the taxation of such machinery within the state, though belonging to a foreign corporation. Coffin v. Artesian Water Co., 79 N. E. 262, 263, 193 Mass. 274 (citing Dudley v. Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Corp., 100 Mass. 183; Wellington v. Inhabitants of Belmont, 41 N. W. 62, 164 Mass. 142).

MANUFACTURES — MANUFACTURED ARTICLES

See Completed Manufactured Article; Domestic Manufactures; Mining and Manufacturing; Principally Engaged. Other articles distinguished, see Other.

Whenever labor is performed upon an article which results in its assuming a new form, possessing new qualities or new combinations, the process of "manufacturing" has taken place, whether the thing produced be a small article of commerce or a structure, such as a house, road, or bridge. Dolese & Shepard Co. v. O'Connell, 100 N. E. 235, 236, 257 Ill. 43.

One definition of "manufacture" is to make or fabricate, especially in considerable quantities, or by the aid of many hands or machinery, though the primary meaning of the word is something made by hand, as distinguished from the natural growth; and a corporation organized to manufacture and sell bakers' goods was organized for manufacturing purposes, within the tax law. H. H. Kohlsaat & Co. v. O'Connell, 99 N. E. 689, 255 Ill. 271.

A "manufacture" is "anything made from raw materials by the hand, by machinery, or by art, as cloths, iron utensils, shoes, machinery, saddlery, etc. United States v. F. W. Myers & Co., 139 Fed. 344, 348 (citing Webst. Dict.; see, also, Worcest. Dict.; Brandes, Enc.; Tide Water Oil Co. v. United States, 18 Sup. Ct. 837, 171 U. S. 210, 43 L. Ed. 189; United States v. Schoverling, 13 Sup. Ct. 24, 146 U. S. 76, 36 L. Ed. 893).

"Ordinarily, the fact that an article in the process of manufacture takes a new name is indicative of a distinct manufacture. . . . A new manufacture is usually accompanied by a change of name, but a change of name does not always indicate a new manufacture. Where a manufactured article, such as sawed lumber, is usable for a dozen different purposes, it does not ordinarily become a new manufacture until reduced to a condition where it is used for one thing only." United States v. Dudley, 19 Sup. Ct. 801, 174 U. S. 672, 673, 43 L. Ed. 1129.

The term "manufactured articles" must be understood in its popular sense, and does not mean all articles produced from the raw state by manual skill or labor, but those articles only which are made in what, in popular language, are called manufactories. To call a farmer who cultivates his land and reaps and markets his crops a manufacturer, as he is in the scientific signification of the term, would do violence to language in the construction of a statute. A farm building commonly called a tobacco shed, and used by a farmer to dry, cure, and fit for market tobacco grown on the farm, is not a building for trade or manufacture, within St. 1898, § 1263, providing that no public highway shall be laid out through any building other than a building used for the purpose of trade or manufacture. Sharpe v. Hassey, 114 N. W. 1118, 1119, 184 Wis. 618.

"Nearly all artificial products of human industry, nearly all such materials as have acquired changed conditions or new and specific combinations, whether from the direct action of the human hand, from chemical processes derived and directed by human skill, or by the employment of machinery, . . . are now commonly designated as 'manufactured.'" The Century Dictionary defines "manufacture" as "the production of articles for use from raw or unprepared materials, by giving these materials new forms, qualities, properties, or combinations, whether by manual labor or machinery." State v. G. H. Tichenor Antiseptic Co., 43 South. 277, 278, 118 La. 685 (quoting from Carlin v. Western Assur. Co. of Toronto, 57 Md. 526, 4 Am. Rep. 440).

Held, that an article which has been advanced through one or more processes into a completed commercial article, known and recognized in trade by a specific and distinctive name other than the name of the material from which it is made, and is put into a completed shape, designed and adapted for a particular use to which the material in its original form is not adapted, is to be deemed a manufacture, although its component materials are unchanged. United States v. George Meier & Co., 136 F. 764, 765, 69 C. C. A. 421 (citing Erhardt v. Hahn, 55 Fed. 273, 5 C. C. A. 99; Dejonge v. Magone, 16 Sup. Ct. 119, 159 U. S. 562, 40 L. Ed. 260; Grempler v. United States, 107 Fed. 687, 46 C. C. A. 537; United States v. Binney, 82 Fed. 992, 27 C. C. A. 847; Boker v. United States, 97 Fed. 205, 38 C. C. A. 114; United States v. Leonard, 108 Fed. 42, 47 C. C. A. 181; Marsching v. United States, 113 Fed. 1006).

Small pieces of soapstone, cut in regular sizes for gas tips and burners, have been "manufactured," and are dutiable as unenumerated "manufactured" articles, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 6. M. Kirschberger & Co. v. United States, 166 Fed. 1012, 1013.

Where marble waste, a comparatively valueless material, has been converted into a commodity of use and value by a special manufacturing process, whereby it has acquired a new name and a new use, it ceases to be a crude mineral and becomes a "manufactured" one. United States v. Graser-Rothe, 164 Fed. 205, 207.

Articles produced incidentally to the manufacture of other articles, and which are themselves ready to be used for various purposes without further treatment, are under the tariff laws subject to classification as "manufactured," rather than as "waste." Shallus v. United States, 155 Fed. 213, 215.

Soluble grease, a preparation of tallow used in the process of dyeing cotton cloth for softening the fabric after the application of the dye, is not dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 32, 30 Stat. 153, as an alizarin assistant, but under section 6 (30 Stat. 205) as an "unenumerated manufactured article." Abram De Ronde & Co. v. United States, 140 Fed. 92, 93.

Orange flower water and rose water are not dutiable as medicinal preparations, under Tariff Act 1897, but as "unenumerated manufactured articles." Euler v. United States, 147 Fed. 765, 766.

Sweet crackers, known as wafers and biscuits, in which the proportion of the sweetened centers to the pastry envelopes is large, but in which flour is used to a substantial extent, are not dutiable as "confectionery," under Tariff Act 1897, but are dutiable as "unenumerated manufactured articles." United States v. Thomas Meadows & Co., 147 Fed. 757.

A liquid extract of the coffee bean held not to be dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 283, 30 Stat. 172, relating to "articles used as coffee, or as substitutes for coffee," but under section 6, 30 Stat. 205, as an "unenumerated manufactured article." E. C. Hazard & Co. v. United States, 164 Fed. 907, 908.

Articles of hone stone, which are used in polishing marble and lithographic stones, and which are not shown to be known commercially as "hones," are not free of duty as "hones," under the Tariff Act, but are dutiable as "unenumerated manufactured articles." R. J. Waddell & Co. v. United States, 135 Fed. 211, 213.

Persian berry extract, which is used in staining food products, and also as a dye-stuff for coloring fabrics, is not dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 58, 30 Stat. 154, as a color, not belonging to the "paints, colors, pigments," etc., therein enumerated, nor, by similitude, under paragraph 20 or 22, 30 Stat. 152, relating respectively to berries advanced in value and to extracts of barks, etc., used for dyeing, but is dutiable as an "unenumerated manufactured article" under section 6, 30 Stat. 205. United States v. Berlin Aniline Works, 154 Fed. 925, 926.

The Japanese alcoholic beverage known as saké is dutiable as an "unenumerated manufactured article," under section 6, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, 30 Stat. 205. United States v. Nishimiya, 137 Fed. 396, 397, 69 C. C. A. 588.

Fruit in spirits, consisting of cherries in maraschino, is not dutiable as "fruits preserved in sirup," but as "unenumerated manufactured articles." Reiss & Brady v. United States, 135 Fed. 248, 249.

As materials

See Materials.

In patents

A house, or a room in a house, is not a "manufacture," within the meaning of Rev. St. § 4886, which authorizes the granting of patents for "any new and useful art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter," and a particular form of construction of a room, or portion of a room, in a house, is not patentable. American Disappearing Bed Co. v. Arnaelsteen, 182 Fed. 324, 325, 105 C. C. A. 40.

A sarcophagus monument is a "manufacture" within the meaning of Rev. St. § 4929, and a proper subject for a design patent. Orier v. Innes, 170 Fed. 324, 326, 95 C. C. A. 508.

Of agate

Small pieces of agate, garnet, etc., advanced from their natural state by cutting process, for the purpose of fitting them for use as setting for jewelry, and known commercially as agates, garnets, etc., are more specifically provided for as "precious stones advanced," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 435, than as "manufactures of agate, garnet, etc.," under Schedule B, par. 115, 30 Stat. 159. United States v. Albert Lorsch & Co., 172 Fed. 277.

Small pieces of agate, fitted for use as scale bearings by being cut, polished, and grooved, are dutiable as manufactures of agate, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 115, and not as "precious stones," under paragraph 435, Schedule N, 30 Stat. 192. Smith v. Computing Scale Co., 147 Fed. 890, 891 (citing Erhardt v. Hahn, 55 Fed. 273, 5 C. C. A. 99; Hahn v. United States, 40 C. C. A. 622, 100 Fed. 635; Hahn v. United States, 121 Fed. 152).

The provision for precious stones cut, but not set, in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 435, is not limited to stones used otherwise than for industrial purposes; and cut pieces of agate used as scale bearings are dutiable under said provisions rather than as "manufactures of agate," under Schedule B, par. 115, 30 Stat. 159. United States v. Albert Lorsch & Co., 152 Fed. 591, 592.

Where Congress, having provided in general terms for a group of articles, which includes many different species, as "precious stones," selects by name one of those species and prescribes that manufactures of that particular species shall be dutiable at a different rate, as "manufactures of agate, not specially provided for," it has so clearly indicated its intention to withdraw the article from the general group as soon as it becomes a completed manufacture that the absence of the limiting clause, "not specially provided for," from the group provision, is not particularly significant. United States v. Albert Lorsch & Co., 158 Fed. 398, 399, 86 C. C. A. 34.

Of chalk

The article produced by the artificial precipitation of chalk, and bolting and packing it in bags, is not "manufactures" of chalk, within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 18, but is chalk itself, and is dutiable under the provision in the same paragraph for "chalk artificially precipitated." While, in the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 18, for chalk "prepared for toilet purposes," the preparation referred to is not, perhaps, such as is necessary to make a completed toilet article, there must be advancement toward use for toilet purposes, by the admixture of flavoring or other ingredients, or otherwise; and chalk that has been merely precipitated artificially, bolted, and packed in bags is not within that provision. United States v. P. E. Anderson & Co., 175 Fed. 961, 962, 99 C. C. A. 451.

Of chip

Baskets made of twisted hinoki wood shavings held dutiable as "manufactures of chip," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 449. Morimura Bros. v. United States, 167 Fed. 687.

Of cork

Small pieces of cork, which have been produced by grinding the refuse of cork bark for convenience in handling, and which need further preparation before becoming fit for its ultimate use in the manufacture of linoleum, etc., is dutiable as "waste," and not as a "manufacture" of cork. Gudewill & Bucknall v. United States, 142 Fed. 214.

Of cotton

Goods composed in part of wool, but in chief value of cotton, are more specifically enumerated in Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, c. 1244, § 1, Schedule I, par. 355, as "manufactures of cotton" than in the provision in Schedule K, par. 392, for "manufactures of every description . . . in part of wool." A provision for "all manufactures of cotton" and one for "all manufactures of every description . . . in part of wool" are not equally applicable to cloth composed in part of wool but in chief value of cotton; the latter being less specific than the former. Therefore they are not controlled by the provision in Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, c. 1244, § 5, that, "if two or more rates of duty shall be applicable to any imported article, it shall pay duty at the highest of such rates." The provision for "manufactures of cotton," in Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, c. 1244, § 1, Schedule I, par. 355, held to include materials composed in chief value of cotton and in part of another substance. Benoit v. United States, 150 Fed. 687, 688.

The provision in the Tariff Act for "labels for garments or other articles, composed of cotton," does not include strips of cotton containing certain words woven therein in silk, which are intended, when properly cut, to be attached to the top of shoes. Such articles are dutiable as "manufactures of cotton," under said act. Herzog v. United States, 135 Fed. 919.

Cotton damask dollies, napkins, and table covers or cloths, in a completed condition, ready for use, are dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule I, par. 322, as "manufactures of cotton not specially provided for," and not under paragraph 321 of said act as "cotton table damask." Douglase & Berry v. United States, 128 Fed. 993, 994.

Electricity

Electricity generated for the purpose of furnishing light, heat, and power is a product of "manufacture" and a commercial commodity. In re Charles Town Light & Power Co., 183 Fed. 160, 163.

Conceding that Flowage Act (Pub. St. 1901, c. 142) § 12, was passed to encourage the establishment of manufactories operated by water power, the production of electricity by means of water power will be deemed a "manufactured product" within the meaning of the statute, though the use of electricity was not contemplated when the act was passed. McMillan v. Noyes, 72 Atl. 759, 762, 75 N. H. 258.

Of fur

So-called "beaver strips," which are in the form of rectangular strips or bands of various sizes, consisting of rabbit fur and woolen cloth, used in the making of hats, the fur being the component material of chief value, are dutiable as a "manufacture of fur," under paragraph 450 of the Tariff Act of July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, and not under paragraph 370, Schedule K, as articles of wearing apparel composed wholly or in part of wool, nor under paragraph 432, Schedule N, as "hats or bonnets or forms therefor composed in chief value of fur." Herrmann v. United States, 135 Fed. 843, 844.

Of gelatin

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 408, for "articles . . . composed . . . in part of . . . spangles made of . . . gelatin," being more specific than that in paragraph 450, for "manufactures of gelatin," hat crowns composed chiefly of gelatin spangles are dutiable under the former provision. Louis Metzger & Co. v. United States, 146 Fed. 132, 76 C. C. A. 558.

Of glass

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 100, the term "blown glassware" includes articles blown in a mold as well as freehanded. Articles in chief value of blown glass, but in part of other glass or other material, are not within the provision for "blown glassware" in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 100, but are dutiable as manufactures of glass under paragraph 112, 30 Stat. 158. In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 100, the provision for "articles of glass * * * ornamented, decorated, or ground (except such grinding as is necessary for fitting stoppers)," is not limited to articles in which the grinding is done for ornamental or decorative purposes, but includes plain goods ground for utility purposes only. In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 99, the term "molded," as applied to glassware, is synonymous with "pressed." United States v. Hell Chemical Co., 178 Fed. 537, 540, 102 C. C. A. 47.

Merchandise consisting of thermometers is dutiable under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, par. 112, as "manufactures of glass." United States v. D. S. Hesse & Bro., 141 Fed. 492, 493.

Of india rubber

Wearing apparel, consisting of dress shields, and composed in chief value of rubber, and in part of cotton, are dutiable as manufactures in chief value of india rubber, under paragraph 460, Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, c. 1244, § 1, Schedule N, and not under paragraph 349 of said act (section 1, Schedule I), relating to wearing apparel composed of cotton, or in chief value thereof, and to such wearing apparel "having india rubber as a component material." Darlington, Runk & Co. v. United States, 136 Fed. 716, 717.

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule J, par. 339, the provision for braids "wholly or in chief value of * * * cotton, * * * whether composed in part of india rubber or otherwise," applies only to braids in which cotton is the chief or only component. Braids in part of cotton and in chief value of rubber are dutiable under Schedule N, par. 449, as "manufactures in chief value of india rubber." Horrax v. United States, 167 Fed. 526, 527, 93 C. C. A. 22.

Insurance

Insurance is not an article of merchandise, or "manufacture," or one of the necessities of life, within the laws against engrossing prohibiting combinations among dealers in merchandise, or manufacture, or necessaries of life. Harris v. Commonwealth, 73 S. E. 561, 563, 113 Va. 746, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 458, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 597.

Of iron

So-called "iron sand," a completed article produced by a series of manufacturing processes from cast iron and steel scrap, is not within the provision for "all iron in * * * forms less finished than iron in bars, and more advanced than pig iron," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 124, but is dutiable as "iron manufactured," under paragraph 193. Harrison Supply Co. v. United States, 164 Fed. 155, 156.

In construing the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 124, for "all iron in * * * forms less finished than iron in bars, and more advanced than pig iron," held, that the test is the degree of advancement in manufacture, rather than in refinement or quality, and that iron sand, a finished manufactured article, is not within said provision, but is dutiable as "manufactures of iron," under paragraph 193. Harrison Supply Co. v. United States, 171 Fed. 406, 407, 96 C. C. A. 362.

Of lumber

As lumber, see Lumber.

Of metal

The article commercially known as "filters," produced from the thin sheets which constitute the composition metal of commerce, by a process of manufacture that makes it no longer available for the uses to which composition metal of trade is put, but adapts it for other uses, is not free of duty as "composition metal," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 533, but is dutiable as manufactures of metal under paragraph 193, § 1, Schedule C, of said act. United States v. George Meier & Co., 136 Fed. 764, 765, 69 C. C. A. 421 (citing Erhardt v. Hahn, 55 Fed. 273, 5 C. C. A. 99; Dejonge v. Magone, 16 Sup. Ct. 119, 159 U. S. 562, 40 L. Ed. 260; Grempler v. United States, 107 Fed. 687, 46 C. C. A. 557; United States v. Binney, 82 Fed. 992, 27 C. C. A. 347; Boker v. United States, 97 Fed. 205, 88 C. C. O. A. 114; United States v. Leonard, 108 Fed. 42, 47 C. C. A. 181; Marsching v. United States, 113 Fed. 1006).

Slides or buckles, made of steel or a base metal, some ornamented with rhinestones and some colored in imitation of precious metals, and used in ornamenting slippers, are not dutiable, under the Tariff Act as "articles commonly known as jewelry," but are dutiable as manufactures of metal, not specially provided for. E. H. Bailey & Co. v. United States, 135 Fed. 917, 918.

"Manufactures of metal," under paragraph 107, Schedule C, § 1, c. 349, Tariff Act Aug. 27, 1894, would include bronze candelabra and bronze statues, and they were not free under paragraph 452, Free List, § 2, of said act relating to old copper fit only for manufacture, clipping from new copper, etc. Tiffany v. United States, 142 Fed. 282, 283.

Where steel parts have been assembled and united into complete window sashes, they have been too far advanced in manufacture to permit their inclusion within the provision of the Tariff Act, relating to "structural shapes" of iron or steel fitted for use, but must be rated as "manufactures of metal." Ackerson v. United States, 172 Fed. 303.

Of mother-of-pearl

Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 450, covering "manufactures" of mother-of-pearl held to include mother-of-pearl made into slabs by cutting or grinding, which are designed for use in the manufacture of knife handles and similar articles. Morris European & American Express Co. v. United States, 150 Fed. 608.

Of needles

Needle cases, in which steel needles constitute the element of chief value, should be considered as "manufactures in chief value of needles," rather than as "articles composed in part of steel," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 193, and as needles are on the free list, and there is no tariff provision for manufactures of needles, such articles are dutiable as unenumerated manufactured articles under section 6. Dieckerhoff, Raffoer & Co. v. United States, 151 Fed. 957.

Of nickel

In construing Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 185, relating to nickel, nickel oxide, and nickel alloy, "in pigs, ingots, bars, or sheets," held (1) that only nickel in one of the forms enumerated is included; (2) that the provision for "sheets," therefore, does not include anodes consisting of nickel plates about 12 inches long, 6½ inches wide, and less than a half inch thick, a "sheet" being broad, thin, and expanded; and (3) that such anodes are dutiable as manufactures of nickel under paragraph 193. Hermann Boker & Co. v. United States, 152 Fed. 589.

Of oil

The refining process which constitutes what is called the "manufacture of oil," relating to coconut oil of commerce, merely removes from it the impurities due to the manner in which the kernel is handled and dried and to its partial decay. United States v. Oriental American Co., 129 Fed. 249, 251.

Of opium

The mere mixing of smoking opium with the residue of opium that has been smoked, and heating the same, is not a "manufacture of opium for smoking purposes" within the meaning of Internal Revenue Act Oct. 1, 1890, c. 1244, §§ 36, 37, 28 Stat. 620, 621, imposing a tax on smoking opium and regulating the business of its manufacture. Shelley v. United States, 198 Fed. 88, 89, 117 C. C. A. 294.

Of palm leaf

As to palm leaves which have been subjected to processes that restore their natural appearance and prevent decay, and some of which have been arranged in wreaths on wire frames held that, as there had been no advance in manufacture that destroyed the original articles or made them useful for other purposes or altered their trade designation, they still remained dutiable as "leaves," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, par. 425, rather than as "manufactures" of palm leaf, provided for in paragraph 450. Kreshower v. United States, 152 Fed. 485.

Of paper

Paper bags with incidental printing thereon are "manufactures of paper," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 407. Kraut v. United States, 130 Fed. 392.

Articles composed of cardboard on which lithographic prints have been pasted, and which is cut into forms adapted to be folded into pockets to hang on walls, some of them having pincushions or calendars attached, are not dutiable as "lithographic prints," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 400, but as "manufactures of paper," under paragraph 407. Knauth, Nachod & Kuhne v. United States, 155 Fed. 144, 146.

So-called lace paper doilies, covers, tops, etc., used in packing confectionery, etc., which are composed of paper perforated with ornamental designs and printed with the names and addresses of merchants, are not dutiable as paper, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, par. 402, but as "manufactures of paper," under paragraph 407. United States v. Hensel, Bruckmann & Lorbacher, 152 Fed. 573, 579.

So-called duplex lithographic transfer paper, which is used in transferring decalcomania designs to pottery, and is produced by pasting together two sheets of paper, one coated with a gummy substance and the other uncoated, is "paper," rather than "manufactures of paper," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, pars. 403, 407. B. F. Drakenfeld & Co. v. United States, 167 Fed. 798, 799, 93 C. C. A. 188.

Plain paper was stamped by a single operation into shapes with lacelike effects, which are known as tops or doilies, and are used for placing on the tops of packages of candy, fruit, etc., or under finger bowls. Plain paper might have been used for the same purpose, except that it would not have been so pleasing. Held that, as the improvement of the original material had not interfered with its distinguishing characteristics, it was dutiable as "paper," rather than as "manufactures of paper," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule M, para. 403, 407. Hamilton v. United States, 167 Fed. 796, 798, 93 C. C. A. 186.

Of paste

So-called rhinestones, articles composed of metal and paste, the latter being the more valuable component, which are merely used to decorate and ornament women's outer apparel, are dutiable as manufactures of paste, not specially provided for, under the Tariff Act. B. Blumenthal & Co. v. United States, 135 Fed. 254.

Tariff legislation having distinguished between glass and form of it known as paste, articles in chief value of paste, cut, are not within the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 100, for goods in chief value of cut "glass," but are dutiable as manufactures of "paste," under paragraph 112. United States v. New York Merchandise Co., 167 Fed. 684.

Of rock crystal

In construing the provision in the Tariff Act for "precious stones advanced in condition or value from their natural state by cleaving, splitting, cutting, or other process," in reference to intaglios incised in rock crystal (a precious stone), which have been attractively and skillfully painted, the value and salability of the articles being chiefly attributable to the painting, the words "or other process" include such process of painting, and such intaglios are dutiable under said provision, rather than as "manufactures of rock crystal," not specially provided for. Benedict & Warner v. United States, 135 Fed. 242.

Of sand

Under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 671, relating to "sand, crude or manufactured," "crude sand" is such as is found in nature, and "manufactured sand" is, though manufactured, substantially the same as crude sand; and pulverized corundum, which is not produced from crude sand, is therefore not sand of either kind within the meaning of the act. F. W. Myers & Co. v. United States, 155 Fed. 502, 503.

Ground corundum ore, that has been advanced in value by processes of manufacture for a specific use, is not a "crude mineral," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 614, nor "manufactured sand," within the meaning of paragraph 671, but is dutiable as emery by similitude, under section 1, Schedule N, par. 419. F. W. Myers & Co. v. United States, 178 Fed. 462, 463.

Of silk

A powder made from raw silk, which is used in the manufacture of wall paper and artificial flowers, is dutiable under paragraph 391, Schedule L, § 1, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, as "manufactures of silk," or is at least so dutiable by similitude, under section 7 of said act. W. W. Thomas & Co. v. United States, 145 Fed. 1023, 74 C. C. A. 682.

So-called remant, in the form of ropes, braids, and mats, which has been manufactured from silk produced by carbonizing rags containing silk, held to be a "manufacture of silk," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, par. 391, Schedule L. Frank v. United States, 149 Fed. 1022, 79 C. C. A. 360.

Silk ribbons, of which some were, and others were not, in the nature of trimmings, but which, however used for trimmings, are required to be further fashioned for such use, and which are not in fact or commercially within the class of goods known as "trimmings," are not dutiable as "silk trimmings," under paragraph 390, Tariff Act 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, but as "manufactures of silk" not specially provided for, under paragraph 391, of said act. Gartner & Friedenheft v. United States, 131 Fed. 574, 575.

Ribbons composed chiefly of silk, but in part of cotton, are not "ribbons * * * of cotton, * * * whether composed in part of India rubber or otherwise," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule I, par. 320, for the word "otherwise" is there used with the meaning of "not," and not as relating to other materials than India rubber. Such ribbons are properly assessed as "manufactures of silk," under paragraph 391 of Schedule L. Gartner, Sons & Co. v. United States, 154 Fed. 957, 958.

In construing the provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 2, Free List, par. 660, for "silk, raw, or as reeled from the cocoon, but not * * * advanced in manufacture in any way," held: (1) That the provision does not cover any form of raw silk advanced beyond the condition of skeins; (2) that silk known as "singles" or "silk on tubes," which has been wound from the skeins onto tubes, the effect of this process being to advance the silk a stage in preparation for its ultimate use, has been "advanced in manufacture"; and (3) that silk in this form is not free of duty under this provision, but dutiable, under paragraph 384 (section 1, Schedule L, of said act), as "silk * * * not further advanced or manufactured than carded or combed silk." Klots v. United States, 139 Fed. 606, 607, 71 C. C. A. 590.

Raw tussah silk, in the same condition as when reeled from cocoons, except that it has been transferred from the large reels on which it was taken from the cocoons to small reels, the result of this process not being any change in the condition of the silk other than to adapt the skeins thus produced to American spinning machines, is held not to be dutiable as "silk partially manufactured from cocoons," under paragraph 384, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, but to be free of duty under paragraph 660, as "silk, raw, or as reeled from the cocoon, but not * * * advanced in any way" (chapter 11, § 2, Free List). "By the very language of paragraph 660 it will be observed that 'manufactured' silk does not refer to the method or form of putting up the raw silk, but refers to doubling or twisting, or some other process of manufacture which changes the character of the silk itself." United States v. Stewart, 183 Fed. 811, 812 (quoting from G. A. 5,432).

Of straw

Straw lace sewed with thread which constitutes a substantial element of its cost, and without which the material could not be held together or be a merchantable article, is not within the provision in paragraph 409, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule N, for lace composed "wholly" of straw, but is dutiable as a "manufacture in chief value of straw," under paragraph 449 of said act. Kurtz, Stuboeck & Co. v. United States, 136 Fed. 268, 269.

From tin plate

Disks cut as a by-product from tin plate, which are reduced by the process to only about one-fifth of the value of the plate from which they were made, are not "manufactured from tin plate," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, par. 198. "Manufacture" implies addition to, and not subtraction from, and an article cannot be said to have been manufactured which results from a process that reduces its value. Shallus v. United States, 162 Fed. 653, 656, 89 C. C. A. 445.

Of willow

Under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule D, par. 206, relating to "willow prepared for basket makers' use, * * * manufactures of * * * willow," it was the intention for the final clause to cover completed manufactures from the "prepared" willow enumerated in the preceding clause; and baskets made from willow chip would be dutiable thereunder rather than as "manufactures of chip" under Schedule N, par. 449. Theodore Ollesheimer & Bro. v. United States, 158 Fed. 977, 978, 86 C. C. A. 181.

Of wire

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule C, p. 137, the provision for "articles manufactured from * * * wire" cannot be restricted to manufactured articles which contain the round wire in its integrity; and "steel wool" consisting of filaments shaved from steel wire, and constituting a finished commercial article, is embraced in said provision. Buehne Steel Wool Co. v. United States, 159 Fed. 107, 108, 86 C. C. A. 297.

Of wood

"Fireproofed lumber" is produced by subjecting ordinary "sawed lumber" to a fireproofing process which changes its chemical construction and fits it for purposes for which it would not otherwise be suitable, but does not produce a particularly noticeable change in its appearance. Such lumber is not, however, "sawed lumber," within the Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule D, par. 195, but is a "manufacture of wood," as enumerated in paragraph 208. United States v. F. W. Myers & Co., 189 Fed. 344, 345, 347.

Manicure sticks, being completed articles of wood, several inches long, pointed at one end and beveled off at the other to form a cutting edge, are "manufactures of wood," and dutiable as such under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule D, par. 208. E. B. Estes & Sons v. United States, 176 Fed. 932.

Lumber which has been subjected to a fireproofing process that largely increases its value, but which can still be applied to the ordinary uses of sawed lumber, is not dutiable as "manufactures of wood," not specially provided for, under paragraph 208, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule D, but as "sawed lumber," under paragraph 195. F. W. Myers & Co. v. United States, 147 Fed. 204, 205, 77 C. C. A. 430.

Dyers' sticks of hard wood, which have been trimmed and peeled, and had the rough edges removed, and the ends rounded, are not dutiable as "manufactures of wood," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule D, par. 208, but as wood, unmanufactured, under paragraph 198. United States v. Knipscher & Maas Silk Dyeing Co., 152 Fed. 590, 591.

Under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, par. 387, providing for silk fabrics when "in the gum" and when "boiled off," held, that fabrics which on boiling lost from 18 to 27 per cent. in weight were classifiable under the former, rather than the latter, clause. H. Mendelson & Co. v. United States, 154 Fed. 33, 34, 83 C. C. A. 145.

The provision for "house or cabinet furniture, of wood, wholly or partly finished, and manufactures of wood," in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule D, par. 208, is intended to cover all finished manufactured wooden articles, however different they may be in nature or appearance from "house or cabinet furniture"; and wood flour, a completed product, already prepared for use, is therefore not to be excluded under the rule of ejusdem generis. Nairn Linoleum Co. v. United States, 161 Fed. 955, 956.

Of wool

Goods of silk and wool, the latter being the minor component, are within the purview of Tariff Act August 27, 1894, c. 349, § 1, Schedule K, par. 297, deferring until January 1, 1895, the reduction in duties provided in said act on "manufactures of wool." Robinson v. United States, 143 Fed. 919.

The provision in the silk schedule in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, par. 391, "that all manufactures, of which wool is a component material, shall be classified, and assessed for duty as 'manufactures of wool,'" is limited to goods of which silk is a component, and does not include flax-wool fabrics. United States v. Charles A. Johnson & Co., 157 Fed. 754, 755, 85 C. C. A. 147; Same v. Walsh, 154 Fed. 749 (citing Hartman v. Meyer, 10 Sup. Ct. 751, 135 U. S. 237, 34 L. Ed. 110).

Camel's-hair press cloth is dutiable as "manufactures of wool" under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule K, pars. 366, 383, rather than as "hair press cloth" under Schedule N, par. 431. Oberle & Henry v. United States, 165 Fed. 53, 91 C. C. A. 139.

The provision in Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, par. 391, "that all 'manufactures of which wool is a component material' shall be classified and assessed for duty as manufactures of wool" is limited to said schedule, which relates to goods containing silk, and the classification of fabrics of flax and wool should be determined without regard to said provision. United States v. E. De F. Wilkinson Co., 154 Fed. 751, 752 (citing United States v. Walsh, 154 Fed. 749; United States v. Slazenger, 113 Fed. 524).

In construing Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, par. 391, relating to "all manufactures * * * of which silk is the component material of chief value," and containing a proviso that "all manufactures of which wool is a component material shall be classified and assessed for duty as manufactures of wool," held, that the ordinary rule should be applied that a proviso at the close of an independent paragraph like this should be construed as limiting only what precedes it, and that the words "all manufactures" in the proviso have no broader relation than the same words in the beginning of the paragraph. United States v. Walsh, 154 Fed. 770, 83 C. C. A. 472 (citing United States v. G. Falk & Bros., 27 Sup. Ct. 191, 204 U. S. 143, 149, 150, 51 L. Ed. 411).

Cattle-hair goods are dutiable by similitude as "manufactures of wool," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule K, par. 366, being similar in quality, use, and texture. F. Rosenstern & Co. v. United States, 171 Fed. 71, 72, 96 C. C. A. 175.

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule L, par. 391, the proviso that "all manufactures, of which wool is a component material, shall be classified and assessed for duty as 'manufactures of wool'" is not limited to the goods containing silk which are the subject of said paragraph, but extends to all silk and wool goods; and dress goods in chief value of silk, but in part of wool, become, by virtue of this proviso, subject to the duty on wool goods, rather than that on silks. United States v. Scruggs, Vandervoort & Barney Dry Goods Co., 156 Fed. 940, 942, 84 C. C. A. 440.

MANUFACTURING AND MECHANICAL BUSINESS

A domestic corporation, formed for the purchase of the capital stock, evidences of indebtedness, and assets of another domestic corporation, and for the further purpose of manufacturing and selling implements and machinery, is one organized for a purpose other than that of carrying on any kind of "manufacturing or mechanical business," and is therefore not within the exception as to the liability of stockholders made by Const. Minn. art. 10, § 3, in favor of corporations of that kind. Bernheimer v. Converse, 27 Sup. Ct. 755, 757, 206 U. S. 518, 51 L. Ed. 1163.

MANUFACTURING ESTABLISHMENT

A sawmill at which lumber is sawed for sale on the market is a "manufacturing establishment," within Ky. St. 1903, §§ 2487, 2488, giving laborers in manufacturing establishments a lien for wages superior to that of mortgages. Graham v. Magann, Fawke Lumber Co., 80 S. W. 799, 800, 118 Ky. 192, 4 Ann. Cas. 1026 (citing Bogard v. Tyler's Adm'r, 55 S. W. 709, 119 Ky. 637).

The furnishing of electric light and power and distributing it is not manufacturing, within Pub. St. 1901, c. 55, § 11, providing that towns may, by vote, exempt for certain time from taxation any "manufacturing establishment" proposed to be erected or put in operation. Williams v. Park, 56 Atl. 463, 464, 72 N. H. 305, 64 L. R. A. 33.

Act March 2, 1899 (Acts 1899, p. 234; Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 70871; Horner's Ann. St. 1901, § 5169k), declaring that the words "manufacturing and mercantile establishments" mean any mill, factory, place of trade, or other establishment where goods are manufactured, or offered for sale, is not confined in its operation to places where goods are manufactured for or offered to the public market, and a machine shop maintained by a railway company for its own repairs and the making of materials for its own use is within the statute. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Cavanaugh, 71 N. E. 239, 241, 35 Ind. App. 32.

A plant for the generation of electricity is a "manufacturing establishment," as affecting the owner's liability for death of an employé resulting from his failure to guard machinery, as required by Burns' Ann. St. 1908, §§ 8021, 8029. Angola Ry. & Power Co. v. Butz (Ind.) 98 N. E. 818, 820.

A flouring mill is a "manufacturing establishment," within Ky. St. 1903, § 2487, giving a lien upon property of owners or operators of any rolling mill, foundry, or other manufacturing establishment assigned for the benefit of creditors, to one furnishing materials or supplies to run such business. W. H. Hall & Son v. J. T. Guthrie's Sons (Ky.) 103 S. W. 721, 722.

A concern engaged in the business of manufacturing engines, pumps, fans, and the like is a "manufacturing establishment," within the factory act (Acts 1899, p. 234, c. 142, § 9; Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 70871), requiring operators of "manufacturing establishments" to guard machinery. Crawford & McCrimmon Co. v. Gose (Ind.) 82 N. E. 984, 985.

In an action for injuries to a servant, where the complaint alleged that defendant was engaged in manufacturing brushes, and had a machine saw, which was connected with the steam power and revolved with great speed when in use, and that plaintiff was injured while operating the saw, etc., it directly averred that the saw was operated in a "manufacturing establishment within the state," and that plaintiff was engaged at work in a "manufacturing establishment" owned and operated by defendant when the injury was received, within the factory act, which requires a saw used in a manufacturing plant to be guarded. Holcomb v. Norman, 91 N. E. 625, 629, 47 Ind. App. 87.

In a statute making a place where articles in a raw, unfinished, or incomplete state are converted into a new, improved, or different form a "manufacturing establishment," the word "raw" is a relative term, and means not yet changed by some process of treatment or fabrication. The words "unfinished" and "incomplete" likewise refer to a state or condition not yet attained and mean not fully fashioned to meet some design. Factory Act (Laws 1903, c. 356) § 7, provides that an establishment wherein any natural products or other articles, in a raw, incomplete, or unfinished condition, are converted into a new improved or different form, is a manufacturing establishment, within the act. Held, that an establishment wherein railroad iron, old stoves, waste and scrap iron of every description, is cut into lengths, known as grade No. 1, grade No. 2 and busheling scrap, by machines known as alligator shears, operated by power, to meet standing specifications of mills which purchase the product, is a manufacturing establishment within the act. Caspar v. Lewin, 109 Pac. 657, 659, 82 Kan. 604.

A gasoline engine, used, in connection with machinery consisting of belts, pulleys, and cog-wheels, to pump water through pipes to supply the inhabitants of a city, is not a "manufacturing establishment" or a "mill," within the meaning of these terms in section 4682, Gen. St. 1909. Ward v. City of Norton, 122 Pac. 881, 86 Kan. 906.

Pub. Laws 1909, No. 235, § 12, which requires the owner, agent, or lessee of any manufacturing establishment to provide automatic gates for elevator shafts, imposes the duty upon an owner of a building who leases a floor of the building; the term "manufacturing establishment" as used in the section meaning premises on which a manufacturing business is conducted. Barfoot v. White Star Line, 136 N. W. 437, 441, 170 Mich. 349.

Under a statute providing that towns may, by vote, exempt from taxation any "manufacturing establishment" proposed to be erected therein and the capital to be used, the term "manufacturing establishment" refers to the property of the proprietors of the industry who receive the benefit conferred by the statute, and not the property of others having no interest in the prosecution of the business, and therefore the statute does not confer authority to exempt an owner of property who is not entitled to such exemption from taxation on the same because it is leased to another who is so entitled. Portsmouth Shoe Co. v. City of Portsmouth, 66 Atl. 1045, 74 N. H. 222.

St. 1902, c. 435, § 1, as amended by St. 1909, c. 514, § 48, prohibits the employment of women and children, except as permitted, and declares that every employer shall post in a conspicuous place in every room in which such persons are employed a printed notice stating the hours of labor, etc. The act applies only to "manufacturing and mechanical establishments," which are defined by section 17 to include those places popularly known as "mills" and "shops," where continuously operating machinery and constant service by attendants throughout the whole day are not essential to economical manufacture, and where ordinary machinery is stopped for the noon hour. Held, that such act does not extend in that respect to stores, or to branches of industry, where continuity of labor by some person is necessary from the beginning to the end of the workday; other provisions having been made for those classes of employment by chapter 514, §§ 47, 68-70. Commonwealth v. Riley, 97 N. E. 367, 370, 210 Mass. 387, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 388.

MANUFACTURING PLANT

Acts Tenn. 1903, c. 110, § 1, granting authority to any company operating a railroad in the state to build lateral roads not exceeding 15 miles in length, extending from the main stem or any branch of its line "to any mill, quarry, mine, manufacturing plant or to the bank of any navigable stream, without the making of any amendment to the charter of said railroad," does not confer the right on a railroad company to the exclusion of the municipal authorities to build a branch track within the limits of a city to a connection with the private tracks of a cotton compress company a quarter of a mile from a river, the compress being 500 feet from the river and having no track connection therewith, on the ground that it is a lateral road to the bank of a "navigable stream," nor on the ground that the compress is a "manufacturing plant," within the meaning of the statute; it not being such a plant within any just or recognized definition of the term. City of Memphis v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 183 Fed. 529, 536, 106 C. C. A. 75.

MANUFACTURING PURPOSES

See Water Furnished for Manufacturing Purposes.

The production and control of electric power by mechanical means, and its adaptation for use upon a trolley system, is a "manufacturing purpose," within the meaning of section 8 of the mechanic's lien law. Bates Mach. Co. v. Trenton & N. B. R. Co., 58 Atl. 935, 936, 70 N. J. Law, 684, 103 Am. St. Rep. 811.

Where a corporation was organized for "manufacturing purposes," such term could not be extended so as to include the power of the corporation to acquire and convey its own stock. Maryland Trust Co. v. National Mechanics' Bank, 63 Atl. 70, 74, 102 Md. 608.

MANUFACTURING PURSUITS

See Manufacturer.

MANURE

The word "manure" has no technical meaning, nor has it acquired a commercial one differing from its ordinary one. Manure is a common article, well known to all mankind, and hence an ambiguity cannot arise from the use of the term. Where defendant contracted in writing to remove all the manure that might accumulate at plaintiff's stable every day for a year, it was no defense, to an action for breach of such contract, that plaintiff changed the character of the bedding during the continuance thereof, by reason of which the manure was less valuable to defendant. Keyes & Watkins Livery Co. v. Freber, 76 S. W. 698, 699, 102 Mo. App. 315.

MANY

Four persons are sufficient to constitute "many persons," under Code Civ. Proc. § 448, providing that, "where the question is one of a common or general interest of many persons, * * * one or more may sue * * * for the benefit of all." Climax Specialty Co. v. Seneca Button Co., 103 N. Y. Supp. 822, 824, 54 Misc. Rep. 152.

As much

The word "many," in a provision of a city charter that notice of the introduction of an ordinance shall be published at least as many as ten days before the adoption of such ordinance, meant the same as though the word "much" had been used and required merely that the notice be published ten days before the action was taken, but did not require that it be published every day for ten days. Smith v. Atlanta, 51 S. E. 741, 742, 123 Ga. 877.

MANY PERSONS

See Great Many Persons.

MAP

"A 'map' means not only a delineation giving a general idea of the land taken, but also such full and accurate notes and data as are necessary to furnish complete means for identifying and ascertaining the precise position of every part, with courses and distances, so that every part can be found." Hollister v. State, 77 Pac. 339, 345, 9 Idaho, 651 (quoting Mill. Em. Dom. § 117).

MAPLE SUGAR

See Imitation Maple Sugar.

MAPLE SYRUP

The popular recognized definition of "maple syrup" is, that it is the syrup produced from boiling down the sap that flows, in the spring of the year, from live maple trees. United States v. Scanlon, 180 Fed. 485, 486.

MARASCHINO

Fruit in maraschino as edible fruit, see Edible Fruit.

MARASQUE WATER

The article known as "marasque water" or "eau de marasque," which is produced by distilling the juice of crushed cherries, diluted somewhat with water used in the distilling process, is not dutiable as cherry juice, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule H, par. 299, 30 Stat. 174, but as an unenumerated manufactured article under section 6, 30 Stat. 205. Leerburger Bros. v. United States, 141 Fed. 1023.

MARBLE

Hauteville stone, and various other stones of substantially the same character, which are susceptible of a high polish and are used as an interior decorative stone, are not the kind of limestone that is "marble," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 114, but are dutiable as "limestone," under paragraph 117. United States v. C. D. Jackson & Co., 175 Fed. 884, 885; Bockmann v. United States, 158 Fed. 807, 86 C. C. A. 67.

So-called Mexican onyx is dutiable as "onyx" rather than as "marble," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule B, par. 114. Blochman Banking Co. v. Blake, 168 Fed. 572.

MARE

Under a statute making it grand larceny to steal a "mare," the stealing of a female colt is grand larceny. Miller v. Territory, 80 Pac. 321, 322, 9 Ariz. 123.

"It is a matter of common knowledge and observation that among our people the word 'mare,' when used without a word of qualification, is understood to mean a female of the horse species. We apprehend that one rarely, if ever, hears the expression 'a mare horse' employed to describe a female of the species horse, but that the term universally used in this state for this purpose is the single word 'mare.' On the other hand, when a female of the species mule is intended, the expression used is 'a mare mule,' and, when a female of the species ass is intended, the word 'jenny' is used." McLamb & Co. v. Lambertson, 62 S. E. 107, 109, 4 Ga. App. 695 (quoting Teal v. State, 45 S. E. 904, 119 Ga. 104).

As horse

See Horse.

MARGIN

"Margin," as a brokerage term, signifies a sum of money or its value in securities deposited with the broker to protect him against loss in buying or selling for his principal. Where a broker was instructed to "hedge when margin about exhausted," the instructions covered, not only the particular margin at the time, but any margin in the hands of the broker at any time before the close of the trades. Winston v. F. A. Longshore & Co., 40 South. 517, 518, 116 La. 21 (quoting and adopting definition in Stand. Dict.).

"The meaning of the word 'margins,' as ordinarily used in connection with stock sales, has long been well understood. As most frequently employed in this state at the time of, and for many years prior to, the adoption of the Constitution, it meant the sum deposited by the purchaser of stock with his broker, being a certain percentage of the purchase price of the stock, the broker agreeing to advance the balance of the purchase price upon condition that he should hold the stock as security for his advance, with the right to sell it, in case of depreciation and failure of the purchaser to keep the 'margin' good; * * * but it was also employed to describe deposits made by sellers and purchasers of stock for future delivery in various ways." Conrad v. Lepper, 81 Pac. 307, 311, 13 Wyo. 473 (quoting and adopting the definition in Sheehy v. Shinn, 37 Pac. 393, 103 Cal. 373).

MARGIN OF RAILROAD

A deed calling for "the margin of the railroad" at a point where there is a cut means the top of the cut, and not the base or a point midway up it; and the margin of a railroad where there is cut or a fill is the top of the cut or the base of the fill. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Elliston (Ky.) 108 S. W. 858, 860.

MARINE

MARINE INSURANCE

A "marine insurance" is an insurance against risks connected with navigation to which a ship, cargo, freight, or other insurable interest in such property may be exposed during a certain voyage or a fixed period of time. Soelberg v. Western Assur. Co. of Toronto, Can., 119 Fed. 23, 28, 55 C. C. A. 601.

A contract for the insurance against fire of a vessel while lying moored and in use as a hospital is not maritime, and the measure of liability for a loss by fire, which partially destroyed the vessel, is not governed by the rules of "marine insurance," but by those of fire insurance, and is limited to the amount which the value of the property was depreciated by the fire, not exceeding the sum sued for. City of Detroit v. Grummond, 121 Fed. 963, 971, 58 C. C. A. 301.

MARINE INSURANCE BUSINESS

The business of issuing ordinary fire insurance policies upon boats navigating the Great Lakes and the high seas is "marine insurance business," within Laws 1895, p. 392, c. 175, relating to the organization of marine insurance companies. Dwinnell v. Minneapolis Fire & Marine Mut. Ins. Co., 97 N. W. 110, 111, 90 Minn. 333.

MARINE MILES

"The log was invented about the same time which inaugurated measuring of the sea or marine miles, known as 'English geographical' miles. The sea mile, knot, geographical, or marine mile measures 6,086.7 feet on the sea, on the scale of 60 geographical or sea miles to a degree." In the Musconogus Grant by the council of Plymouth in Devon, Eng., made between 1620 and 1635, after the inauguration of the geographical or "marine mile," granting certain land, etc., within three miles of the main land, the three-mile limit is to be measured by the geographical or marine mile or knot, and not by the statute mile. Lazell v. Boardman, 69 Atl. 97, 99, 103 Me. 292, 13 Ann. Cas. 673 (citing Rockland, Mt. D. & S. S. Co. v. Fessenden, 8 Atl. 550, 79 Me. 140).

MARINER'S SERVICE

See Maritime Service.

Services rendered to a domestic vessel after it has been laid up at a wharf for the winter, in pumping it out, attending to its lines, etc., are not "mariner's services" and cannot be made the basis of a maritime lien. The James T. Furber, 157 Fed. 124, 125.

MARITAL

MARITAL COMPANIONSHIP

As property, see Property.

MARITAL RIGHTS

See, also, Right Acquired by Marriage.

The rights acquired by marriage of the guilty party under a divorce decree, which are forfeited by Code, § 3181, are not limited to rights and obligations owed to the guilty party by his spouse, forfeiture of which would inure to the benefit of such spouse alone, and the section has no bearing on alimony. Hamilton v. McNeill, 129 N. W. 480, 485, 150 Iowa, 470, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 604.

MARITIME

MARITIME BELT

"The 'maritime belt' is that part of the sea which, in contradistinction to the open sea, is under the sway of the riparian states, which can exclusively reserve the fishery within their respective maritime belts for their own citizens, whether fish, or pearls, or amber, or other products of the sea." State of Louisiana v. Mississippi, 26 Sup. Ct. 408, 422, 202 U. S. 1, 50 L. Ed. 913.

MARITIME CASE

See Civil Maritime Case.

MARITIME CONTRACT

Where a storage contract is incidental to the transportation by water of the goods stored, as where they were stored by the carrier for delivery to the consignee, it is "maritime." Evans v. New York & P. S. S. Co., 145 Fed. 841, 842.

A "maritime contract" must concern transportation by sea, and relate to navigation and to maritime employment. It must be one of navigation and commerce on navigable waters. Not every contract having reference to a ship is within the admiralty jurisdiction, but only such as relate to maritime employment, such as pertain to the navigation of a ship or assist the vessel in the discharge of a maritime obligation. It is not enough that the service is to be done upon the sea or with respect to the ship. Bowers Hydraulic Dredging Co. v. Federal Contracting Co., 148 Fed. 290, 293 (citing The Richard Winslow, 71 Fed. 426, 18 C. C. A. 344; In re Hydraulic Steam Dredge No. 1, 80 Fed. 545, 25 C. C. A. 628).

To give the court jurisdiction over a contract as "maritime," it must relate to the trade or business of the sea, or must be essentially maritime in its character. The most enlarged interpretation of the term "maritime," as applied to jurisdiction, has not been extended beyond subjects or engagements which are necessarily connected with services to be rendered on tide waters, or supplies furnished to vessels in aid of a voyage, or labor, or materials, or cash advanced to obtain such supplies. The Mary F. Chisholm, 129 Fed. 814, 817 (citing Scott v. The Morning Glory, 21 Fed. Cas. 845; The Perseverance, 19 Fed. Cas. 307).

Charter party

A bond given by the charterer of a vessel to secure his performance of the conditions of the charter party, which neither requires nor authorizes the surety to perform such contract in case of the default of the principal, but merely to respond in damages for its breach, is not a "maritime contract." Pacific Surety Co. v. Leatham & Smith T. & W. Co., 151 Fed. 440, 444, 80 C. C. A. 670.

Repairs to vessel

A contract for repairs to be furnished to a canal boat engaged in navigating the Erie Canal and Hudson river is a "maritime contract," and proceedings to enforce a lien for the repairs furnished are within the exclusive admiralty jurisdiction of the federal courts, though such repairs were made in dry dock. Perry v. Haines, 24 Sup. Ct. 8, 10, 191 U. S. 17, 48 L. Ed. 73.

Wharfage contract

A contract relating to wharfage, as understood in the laws and usages of maritime affairs, is clearly a "maritime contract." The James T. Furber, 129 Fed. 808, 810.

MARITIME LIEN

A "maritime lien" enables a creditor, without notice to the debtor and without giving him the protection of the bond for illegal proceedings, to attach and seize a vessel, though she is loaded with freight and passengers and about to proceed on a voyage. One who makes repairs on a vessel in a foreign port under a contract with the known owner then present is not entitled to a maritime lien therefor, in the absence of a contract for a lien, express or implied, or a mutual understanding that the repairs were furnished on the credit of the vessel, and the burden of proving such contract of understanding rests on the party asserting the lien. The Clinton, 160 Fed. 421, 422, 87 C. C. A. 373.

A provision of a bill of lading issued by a steamship company that "the carrier shall have a lien on the goods for all freights, primages, and charges" does not affect or change the nature of the lien, which is simply the "maritime lien," as understood in the jurisprudence of the United States, to preserve which the retaining of possession is essential, although such provision may in some cases preserve the lien where it would otherwise be deemed waived by other provisions to the time and manner of paying the freight. Portland Flouring Mills Co. v. Portland & Asiatic S. S. Co., 145 Fed. 687, 692.

"Upon an ordinary contract of affreightment, the lien of the shipper is a 'maritime lien,' and a proceeding in rem to enforce it is within the exclusive original cognizance of courts of admiralty." John Meunier Gun Co. v. Lehigh Valley Transp. Co., 101 N. W. 388, 388, 123 Wis. 143 (quoting and adopting definition in The Belfast, 7 Wall. 624, 19 L. Ed. 266).

Credit of vessel

"Owing to the underlying necessities of commerce, and to the wandering character of a ship, courts of admiralty will infer, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that, where supplies necessary for the accomplishment of the ship's voyage are furnished in a foreign port on the order of the captain of a ship, or the ship's agent, and even under some circumstances by the owner, they are furnished on the credit of the ship. * * * These facts and conditions being proved, are held ground for the reasonable presumption of credit to the ship and a consequent lien. The same presumption is held to arise as to certain maritime services rendered to a ship, independently of its character as domestic or foreign. The lien to which the ship is thus subjected is created, not so much for the benefit of the creditor, but for the benefit of commerce. * * * It would be an abuse of the administration of the law of maritime lien to decree a lien for services not clearly proved to have been entirely maritime and rendered to the particular res upon which the lien is claimed. A lien does not, and should not, attach for a supposed credit given to a vessel, unless the service or supplies are clearly shown to have been rendered or furnished to the particular vessel to which the credit is given." The owner of a tug which was verbally hired by the day by the owner of three dredges to "wait upon" such dredges while engaged on certain work, the services rendered being the carrying of coal and water to the dredges, the towing of scows, and of the dredges themselves when necessary, is not entitled to a "maritime lien" on all or any of such dredges for a balance due on the contract which was not one for ordinary towage services to the vessels themselves. The Allegator, 161 Fed. 37, 39, 40, 41, 42, 88 C. C. A. 201.

Possession

In a suit to enforce a lien against a tug, the trial court in its opinion, in stating that a party could not authorize the repair of the tug in such manner as to give the person repairing it a maritime lien thereon, used the words "maritime lien" in a general or non-technical sense as being a lien, the subject-matter of which was a vessel, and not in its technical sense, as distinguished from a common-law or possessory lien. The Robert R. Kirkland, 153 Fed. 868, 865, 83 C. C. A. 45.

MARITIME SERVICE

Services in making repairs on a ship or vessel, whether in or out of the water, are "maritime services." Simmons v. The Jefferson, 30 Sup. Ct. 54, 58, 215 U. S. 130, 54 L. Ed. 125, 17 Ann. Cas. 907 (citing Peyroux v. Howard, 7 Pet. [32 U. S.] 324, 8 L. Ed. 700).

Stock

Under Pen. Code Cal. § 357, making any one guilty of a criminal offense who marks or brands, or alters or defaces the mark or brand, of horses or cattle, with intent thereby to steal the same or to prevent identification thereof by the true owner, one who slit the ears of a colt owned by another thereby "marked" the same if the act is done with intent to prevent its identification by the owner, although the mark so placed upon the animal may not be a conventional one, indicative of ownership. People v. Strombeck, 78 Pac. 472, 473, 145 Cal. 110.

MARKED BALLOT

See Distinguishing Marks.

MARKED CORNERS

"Marked corners" (i. e., those clearly identified, and which are notorious objects) are the most satisfactory evidence of the location of a patent. Morgan v. Renfro, 99 S. W. 311, 313, 124 Ky. 314.

MARKED LINE

Where bearing trees are called for at the eastern end of a northern boundary line of a survey and a stake at the western terminus, there is a presumption that the line was actually surveyed, and the corners identified by the bearing trees and the stake making the line a "marked line." Goodson v. Fitzgerald (Tex.) 135 S. W. 696, 698.

MARKED OFF

When a case is "marked off," it is meant that it would again appear on the call calendar after causes on that calendar had been disposed of. Hoberman v. Diamond, 130 N. Y. Supp. 139.

MARKERS

Side lights on a caboose, showing green in front and red behind, are designed as

"markers" for the engineer and front brakeman, so that, if the train parts at night, it can be readily discovered. Texas & N. O. R. Co. v. Stewart, 71 S. W. 330, 331, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 408.

MARKET

See Free Market; Open Market; Principal Market.

As public place for sale

The term "market" as used in Sanitary Code, City of New York, § 82, providing that no person shall kill or dress any animal or meat in any market, includes and applies to any premises exclusively devoted to market purposes, and hence applies to premises conveyed to the city of Brooklyn and known as the wallabout market lands. Bird v. Grout, 94 N. Y. Supp. 127, 128, 106 App. Div. 159.

A space under the approach of a bridge, occupied by fish peddlers pursuant to the permission of the commissioner of bridges, in consideration of payments made by them to the city of New York, is a "market," though not formally so declared, as authorized by Greater New York Charter, § 47, and it is under the control of the comptroller and his department, as authorized by section 151, and not under the management of the bridge commissioner, under sections 595 and 596. Sorgen v. Prendergast, 123 N. Y. Supp. 765, 766, 68 Misc. Rep. 189.

MARKET PRICE

See Current Market Price.

The measure of damages for breach of contract to deliver bonds of a corporation, the consideration for which has been paid, is the value of the bonds at the time they should have been delivered under the contract with interest, and such value is prima facie their face value, but "market price" stands as a criterion of value, and in such cases what is called the "market price" or the quotation of the articles for a given day is not the only evidence of value, and the true value may be drawn from other sources. Henry v. North American Ry. Const. Co., 158 Fed. 79, 81, 85 C. C. A. 409.

In the absence of a definite agreement in a contract of sale, the "market price" of goods to be delivered is the price prevailing at the time and place of delivery, but, if there is no market price at the place of delivery, the value of the goods should be determined at the nearest place where they have a market value by the addition or deduction of the difference in the cost of delivery. South Gardiner Lumber Co. v. Bradford, 53 Atl. 1110, 1111, 97 Me. 165.

The measure of damages for failure to deliver coal sold by a wholesaler to a retailer is the excess, if any, of the wholesale "market price" of the coal at the place of delivery at the date fixed for delivery, and the price agreed on between the parties, when there is a wholesale market price at the place of delivery, which market price is the wholesale price. Righter v. Clark, 60 Atl. 741, 742, 78 Conn. 9, 112 Am. St. Rep. 84.

Where plaintiff purchased coal of defendant, and defendant failed to furnish it, the "market price" was the price at which plaintiff could have obtained other coal of like kind in that region, and the measure of damages was the difference between the contract price and this market price of the coal at the time it should have been delivered, but, if there was no available market in which plaintiff could purchase coal of the same description, on defendant's refusal to perform plaintiff was entitled to recover the difference between the price at which he had contracted to buy the coal and what he was to receive therefor from his vendee. Wilmoth v. Hamilton, 127 Fed. 48, 53, 61 C. C. A. 584.

As fixed by buying and selling

The "market price" of an article is the usual standard for measuring its value; it being worth what it may be reasonably sold for. Burke Hollow Coal Co. v. Lawson, 151 S. W. 657, 151 Ky. 305.

The market price of an article commonly dealt in is the sum fixed by the consensus of buyers and sellers dealing in the article, and proof of the price obtained at an actual bona fide auction sale, though there is but one bidder, is competent on the question of market value; for the term "market" assumes the existence of trade, and price is fixed in trade by the highest bidder and the lowest offerer. Carey Lithograph Co. v. Magazine & Book Co., 127 N. Y. Supp. 300, 302, 70 Misc. Rep. 541.

As price in market with open competition

One suing for breach of contract to let to him a contract to print advertising lithographs, provided it met the market price, must show affirmatively that it met the "market price," which is the price fixed by buyer and seller in an open market in the usual and ordinary course of lawful trade and competition. Carey Lithograph Co. v. Magazine & Book Co., 127 N. Y. Supp. 300, 302, 70 Misc. Rep. 541.

MARKET PURPOSE

The erection and maintenance of a slaughter house is not a "market purpose" within the meaning of a conveyance to a city of land "for market purposes, and for ships, canals, and piers and other public works, in connection with such market purposes." Bird v. Grout, 94 N. Y. Supp. 127, 128, 106 App. Div. 159.

MARKET VALUE

See Actual Market Value; Cash Market Value; Current Market Value; Fair Market Value; Highest Market Value.

"The words 'market value' have a plain, definite, and well-understood meaning, as intelligible to the jury as to the court." Hence an attempt by the court to make them clearer by definition would tend to confuse rather than to enlighten. Atlantic Baggage Co. v. Mizo, 61 S. E. 844, 847, 4 Ga. App. 407.

"Market value" is no other than the fair value of property as between one desiring to purchase and another desiring to sell. Hetland v. Bilstad, 118 N. W. 422, 423, 140 Iowa, 411.

"Market value" is said to be such sum of money as the property is worth in the market generally to the persons who would pay the just and full value for what the property would bring at a fair sale, where one party wants to sell and the other to buy. Redhead Bros. v. Wyoming Cattle Inv. Co., 102 N. W. 144, 147, 128 Iowa, 410 (quoting and adopting definition in Little Rock Junction Ry. v. Woodruff, 5 S. W. 792, 49 Ark. 390, 4 Am. St. Rep. 51; Low v. Railroad, 3 Atl. 739, 63 N. H. 557; Esch v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 39 N. W. 129, 72 Wis. 231; Kansas City, W. & N. W. R. Co. v. Fisher, 30 Pac. 111, 49 Kan. 17; Lawrence v. City of Boston, 119 Mass. 128).

In view of the difficulty of forming a proper conception of the word "value" and of ascertaining what is called "market value," where there is no open market recording numerous transactions, courts have adopted as the equivalent of "market value" the phrase "what the property is worth or will sell for as between one who wants to purchase and one who wants to sell." Milwaukee Trust Co. v. City of Milwaukee, 138 N. W. 707, 710, 151 Wis. 224.

Since the word "market" conveys the idea of selling, the term "market value" would seem to mean the selling value. It is the price which an article will bring when offered for sale in the market. It is the highest price which those having the ability and occasion to buy are willing to pay. Brown v. W. T. Weaver Power Co., 52 S. E. 954, 955, 140 N. C. 333 (citing Little Rock Junction Ry. v. Woodruff, 5 S. W. 792, 49 Ark. 381, 4 Am. St. Rep. 51).

The "market value" of land is the price that would in all probability result from fair negotiation, where the seller is willing to sell and the buyer desires to buy. Maxon v. Gates, 116 N. W. 758, 765, 136 Wis. 270.

The term "market value," as applied to goods is the price at which the goods can be replaced for money in the market. Rosenkranz v. Jacobowitz, 99 N. Y. Supp. 469, 470, 50 Misc. Rep. 580 (citing Wehle v. Haviland, 69 N. Y. 448).

"Bouvier defines 'market value' as a price established by public sales in the way of ordinary business, and in Sloan v. Baird, 56 N. E. 753, 162 N. Y. 330, the Court of Appeals said that the market value of property is established when other property of the same kind has been the subject of purchase or sale to so great an extent and in so many instances that the value becomes fixed." Rau v. Seldenberg, 104 N. Y. Supp. 798, 799, 53 Misc. Rep. 386.

The "market value" of an article of merchandise is the price at which its owner or producer holds it for sale; the price at which it is freely offered in the market to all the world; such price as dealers in the article are willing to receive and purchasers are required to pay, when the goods are bought and sold in the ordinary course of trade. Under a clause of a charter party for a steamer, which required the charterer to pay for the coal in the vessel's bunkers at the time of her delivery at the current "market price," the price actually paid by the charterer in the port of delivery for coal bought in the open market to fill the bunkers, and also for other vessels at the same time, will be accepted as fixing the market price rather than the price given the owners on mere inquiries without any attempt to purchase. Glasgow Steam Shipping Co. v. Tweedie Trading Co., 154 Fed. 84, 85 (citing Cliquot's Champagne, 3 Wall. [70 U. S.] 114, 125, 18 L. Ed. 116).

The "market value" of goods is the price at which the owner or producer holds them for sale; the price at which they are freely offered in the market; such prices as dealers in the goods are willing to receive and purchasers are made to pay when the goods are bought in the ordinary course of trade. British & Foreign Marine Ins. Co. v. Maldonado & Co., 182 F. 744, 748, 106 C. C. A. 122.

In an action against a railroad company for burning plaintiff's grass, a witness testified that the grass had a "market value" and that the witness had a "pretty good idea" thereof. He was then asked what the market value was, and answered that, considering the number of cattle on the land at the time and what it was used for and was going to be used for, the grass was worth from $1.50 to $2 per acre. He then stated, after objection, that he wanted to state what kind of cattle plaintiff had there, and what he was using it for, and again stated that under such conditions the grass was worth from $1.50 to $2 per acre. Held, that such evidence was inadmissible as not showing "market value." Texas & P. R. Co. v. Pemberton, 95 S. W. 1089, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 291.

In an action against a railroad company for damages to a shipment of cattle, where it appeared that cattle of that kind were not, during the season of shipment, bought or sold at the point of delivery, evidence of the price paid for the cattle at the point of shipment is admissible on the question of their actual value, there being no competent evidence of their "market value," which can be established only by showing that cattle of like quality had been bought and sold at that place during the season in sufficient quantities, and often enough to establish a market price. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Crowder (Tex.) 152 S. W. 183, 184.

In an action for the destruction of a house by fire from a railroad engine, the court instructed that, as to the dwelling house, plaintiff's measure of damages was the "reasonable cash value" of the dwelling when destroyed, and the measure of damages for destruction of the household goods was the "reasonable value" of said goods at the time of the destruction. Held, that the instruction was not erroneous for using the words "cash value" instead of "market cash value"; "market value" being the cash value for which an article will sell for in cash on the market, and reasonable "cash value" being equivalent to reasonable "market cash value." Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Murray (Tex.) 150 S. W. 217, 218.

Where a wholesaler bought coal not for sale in the retail market, but to dealers only, the market value was the wholesale price and not the retail one, as between the parties to the sale. Tuttle-Chapman Coal Co. v. Coaldale Fuel Co., 113 N. W. 827, 830, 136 Iowa, 382.

The "market value" of an advertising contract probably means the net value, or the difference between the stipulated price and the cost of doing the work. In an action against a newspaper for breach of contract for the insertion of advertising matter to be used in the year as the advertiser might require, rate cards showing the rates for advertisements of a given length for a given number of times, but not showing rates for such a contract as the one in question, are inadmissible. Boston Outfitting Co. v. People & Patriot Co., 63 Atl. 229, 230, 73 N. H. 508.

Since the market value of the land condemned should be determined from sales actually made so as to necessitate a demand, it was proper for an instruction defining "market value" to include a demand for the land as a requisite to the existence of a market value. Denver N. W. & P. Ry. Co. v. Howe, 112 Pac. 779, 781, 49 Colo. 256 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4383).

The "market value of land" is generally based upon its extent, the character of the improvements, its productive qualities, and upon sales of property in the vicinity. Reed v. Pittsburg, O. & W. R. Co., 59 Atl. 1067, 1068, 210 Pa. 211 (citing Pittsburgh, V. & O. R. Co. v. Vance, 8 Atl. 764, 115 Pa. 325).

"Market value," as defined by section 19 of the customs administrative act, shall be construed to mean the export price whenever goods, wares, and merchandise are sold wholly for export, or sold in the home markets only in limited quantities, by reason of which facts there cannot be established a market value based upon the sale of such goods, wares, and merchandise in usual wholesale quantities, packed ready for shipment to the United States." United States v. Haviland & Co., 167 Fed. 414, 417.

The "market value" of merchandise imported from France, as defined in Customs Administrative Act June 10, 1890, c. 407, § 19, does not include the amount of certain internal revenue imposts of that country known as the "octroi tax" and the "droit de ville," which are not general in their application, but vary with the locality, and which are not collected if the merchandise is exported. United States v. R. F. Downing & Co., 131 Fed. 653, 654.

The "market value" of logs was the amount which buyers generally agreed to pay at the time and place in question, though all logs then being sold at that place were sold on 30, 60, and 90 days' time and not for cash. Burr's Ferry, B. & O. Ry. Co. v. Allen (Tex.) 149 S. W. 358, 361.

While dogs are regarded as property in this state, they are not generally placed on the market for sale, and ordinarily have no "market value," though they may be in some instances of value to the owner. Gulf, O. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Blake, 95 S. W. 593, 594, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 180.

As price at or near time or place

"Market value" is said to mean the price or sum for which an equivalent could be reasonably and fairly purchased at or near the place where the property should have been delivered and within a reasonable time after a refusal to deliver." Redhead Bros. v. Wyoming Cattle Inv. Co., 102 N. W. 144, 147, 126 Iowa, 410 (quoting and adopting definition in Bullard v. Stone, 8 Pac. 17, 67 Cal. 480; Little Rock Junction Ry. v. Woodruff, 5 S. W. 792, 49 Ark. 390, 4 Am. St. Rep. 51).

The market value of an article at any given time is fixed by sales made at or about that time, and the price as fixed by specific contracts previously entered into is inadmissible. Carle v. Nelson, 130 N. W. 467, 468, 145 Wis. 593.

Intrinsic value distinguished

While the term "market value" is not synonymous with "intrinsic value"—the one meaning the actual price at which the commodity is commonly sold and the other its true, inherent, and essential value, independent of accident, place or person, the same everywhere and to every one—yet the latter is so generally a factor in the former that a thing which has no intrinsic value is generally without market value, and therefore, where a party was prepared to meet an issue as to the market value of animals, the refusal of a continuance to procure evidence to meet an issue as to their intrinsic value presented by a trial amendment was not prejudicial. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Clements & Carroll, 115 S. W. 664, 665, 53 Tex. Civ. App. 143.

Price at forced sale

"The 'market value' of land is usually declared to be, not what the land would bring at a forced sale, but what it would bring in the hands of a prudent seller, at liberty to fix the time and conditions of sale. What property would bring at a fair public sale where one party wanted to sell and another wanted to buy may be taken as a criterion of its market value." Madisonville, H. & E. R. Co. v. Ross, 103 S. W. 330, 331, 126 Ky. 138, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 420.

The "market value" of land is not the price it would bring at public auction and forced sale for cash, but such price as could be obtained for it from the usual and ordinary terms of private sale. Metropolitan St. Ry. Co. v. Walsh, 94 S. W. 860, 868, 197 Mo. 392 (citing and approving the definition in Missouri Pac. Ry. Co. v. Porter, 20 S. W. 568, 112 Mo. 369).

Price at free sales

"'Market value' means the fair value as between one who wants to purchase and one who wants to sell; not what could be obtained for it under peculiar circumstances when a greater than its fair price could be obtained, nor its speculative value, nor a value obtained from necessity of another, but its present value at a sale which a prudent owner would make if he had the power of election as to the time and terms." Madisonville, H. & E. R. Co. v. Ross, 103 S. W. 330, 126 Ky. 138, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 420 (quoting and adopting the definition in 15 Cyc. p. 685).

The "market value" of property is defined as "the price which it will bring when it is offered by sale by one who desires but is not obliged to sell and is bought by one who is under no necessity of having it." Guyandotte Valley Ry. Co. v. Buskirk, 50 S. E. 521, 526, 57 W. Va. 417, 110 Am. St. Rep. 785 (citing Stewart v. Ohio River R. Co., 18 S. E. 604, 38 W. Va. 438; Lewis, Em. Dom. 478; Pittsburgh, V. & C. Ry. Co. v. Vance, 8 Atl. 764, 115 Pa. 325; Lawrence v. City of Boston, 119 Mass. 126; Little Rock Junction Ry. v. Woodruff, 5 S. W. 792, 49 Ark. 381, 4 Am. St. Rep. 51; 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4383); Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. Chamblin, 60 S. E. 727, 729, 108 Va. 42; Idaho-Western Ry. Co. v. Columbia Conference of Evangelical Lutheran Augustana Synod, 119 Pac. 60, 62, 20 Idaho, 568, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 497; In re New York, W. & B. Ry. Co., 135 N. Y. Supp. 234, 239, 151 App. Div. 50; In re Block Bounded by Avenue A & First Ave., 122 N. Y. Supp. 321, 333, 66 Misc. Rep. 483; Calor Oil & Gas Co. v. Franzell, 109 S. W. 328, 332, 128 Ky. 715, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 456.

The value which the law gives in fixing damages for the destruction of property is "market value," which is that reasonable sum which the property will bring on a fair sale when sold by a man willing, but not obliged, to sell, to a man willing, but not compelled, to buy. Allen v. Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co., 129 N. W. 1094, 1095, 145 Wis. 283.

In the absence of proof that articles in controversy furnished by claimant for decedent's funeral were not sold under fair trade conditions, or that competition had been stifled or prices otherwise inflated, their reasonable value was their "market value" at the place where they were sold, by which is meant the prices which the articles customarily brought at the time. Wagoner Undertaking Co. v. Jones, 114 S. W. 1049, 1051, 134 Mo. App. 101.

Our general tax act practically defines the "market value of land" as "the price it would sell for at a fair and bona fide sale by private contractor." Long Dock Co. v. State Board of Assessors, 73 Atl. 53, 57, 78 N. J. Law, 44.

Price in open market

The "market value" of secondhand goods is what it will cost one to purchase them in the open market, and the testimony of a secondhand dealer that he had examined secondhand furniture, and that it was worth a specified sum, when new, and a specified sum in the condition it was in, without stating whether he meant what he would give, or what he would ask for it, does not prove market value. Souther v. Hunt (Tex.) 141 S. W. 359, 361.

Code, § 1305, provides that all property subject to taxation shall be valued at its actual value, which means its value in the market in the ordinary course of trade. Held, that the market value in "ordinary course of trade" can have reference to nothing but the selling value; that is, the sum which in all probability can be realized therefrom if exposed for sale on the open market. First Nat. Bank of Estherville v. City Council of Estherville, 112 N. W. 829, 832, 136 Iowa, 203.

In the statement of the rule that, where a common carrier fails to deliver merchandise within a reasonable time, the measure of damages is the depreciation in the market value between the date on which the delivery should have been made and the date on which it was made, the term "market value" means the value at which the article would be sold in the open market in the quantities as carried, and where the articles shipped are merchandise in large quantities, it is improper to measure the damages by the market value of such merchandise when sold at retail. Chicago, R. I. & P. Ry. Co. v. Broe, 86 Pac. 441, 443, 16 Okl. 25.

"Market value" is the highest price obtainable in the open market for cash, and an instruction that the market value of land is the highest price which the land will bring in the market regardless of the causes that contribute to its value is incorrect. Lands may bring in the market under peculiar circumstances and on very favorable terms much more than a fair cash value. Dady v. Condit, 70 N. E. 1088, 1092, 209 Ill. 488.

Value synonymous

Value as importing market value, see Value.

The words "value" and "market value" are often used interchangeably, and both as being the equivalent of "actual value" and "salable value." Hetland v. Bilstad, 118 N. W. 422, 423, 140 Iowa, 411.

The words "market value," as used in Pol. Code, § 3627, providing that the proportionate value of the stock of domestic corporations for purposes of assessment or taxation should be its "market value," are synonymous with the terms "value" and "full cash value" as used in section 3617. Crocker v. Scott, 87 Pac. 102, 106, 149 Cal. 575.

"Market value" is synonymous with the terms "value" and "full cash value," defined by Pol. Code, § 3617, as the amount at which the property would be taken in payment of a just debt from a solvent debtor, and the market value of stock, fairly represents its full cash value in absence of exceptional circumstances giving it an abnormal value, so that any inference of fraud by the placing of an excessive valuation on stock, taken as a basis for assessing a corporate franchise, is rebutted by a showing that the value of the franchise was ascertained by the approved method of deducting from the aggregate market value of its stock, the value of its tangible property, and taking the difference as the franchise value. City of Los Angeles v. Western Union Oil Co., 118 Pac. 720, 721, 161 Cal. 204.

The expressions "reasonable worth" or "reasonable value" are not so broad as "market value." Alcon v. Koons, 82 N. E. 92, 95, 84 N. E. 1104, 42 Ind. App. 537.

The two expressions "reasonable selling value" and "market value" are in some measure synonymous, but the usage of trade has affixed a technical meaning to "market value." The selling value of an article is often equivalent to its actual value, and should be so regarded in the case of a seller suing to recover for stoves specially made for a buyer, and which the latter refused to accept; that being necessary in order that the seller may be reimbursed fully. St. Louis Range Co. v. Kline-Drummond Mercantile Co., 96 S. W. 1040, 1043, 120 Mo. App. 438.

When applied to property, and no qualification is expressed or implied, "value" means the price which the property could command in the market. By the term "value of stock" is usually meant market value.

Text-writers use the terms "value" and "market value" as interchangeable, and both as being equivalents of actual value, salable value, and, in proper cases, rental value. In an action against a railroad company for killing horses, plaintiff alleged that at the time they were killed "they were then and there each respectively of the reasonable value as follows, viz.: One * * * was of the value of $375, and the other * * * was of the value of $175." Held that, in the absence of an exception thereto, proof either of the market value of the horses or of the intrinsic value was admissible, but that in the absence of any showing that they had no market value nor real value, and that they cannot be reproduced or replaced, it was error to admit evidence as to the value of the horses to plaintiff. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. of Texas v. Crews, 120 S. W. 1110, 1111, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 548 (quoting and adopting definitions in 8 Words and Phrases, pp. 7278, 7279).

"Market value" is synonymous with the actual money value of property. All articles of personal property, however, do not have an established "market value" fixed by current sales of such property in the ordinary course of business, so that the price currently realized can be looked to in ascertainment of the actual value. The "market value" of property is established when other property of the same kind has been the subject of purchase or sale to so great an extent, and in so many instances, that the value becomes fixed. The damages for wrongful attachment of a stock of goods, so far as they are concerned, is not what they brought at the sale under the attachment, or what they would have sold at retail, but their actual value at the time and place of seizure, which to the extent that the goods were new, is the cost of replacing them (that is, their wholesale price, plus freight); such cost, however, being only a relevant circumstance as to the value of old and shopworn goods, which have no "market value," so that an instruction fixing the damages at the "market value," and defining this as the value of the goods when sold in the way of ordinary business for cash in the city of the seizure, is erroneous. State ex rel. Clark v. Parsons, 84 S. W. 1019, 1021, 109 Mo. App. 432 (citing State, to Use of Hayden, v. Smith, 31 Mo. 566; Walker v. Borland, 21 Mo. 289; Spencer v. Vance, 57 Mo. 427; Watson v. Harmon, 85 Mo. 443; State ex rel. Rogers v. Gage, 52 Mo. App. 464; State ex rel. Copening v. Ryley, 76 Mo. App. 412, 416; Simpson v. Alexander, 11 Pac. 171, 35 Kan. 225; 2 Joyce, Damages, § 1085; Gray v. Central R. Co., 52 N. E. 555, 157 N. Y. 483; Sloan v. Baird, 56 N. E. 752, 162 N. Y. 327).

In an action against a carrier to recover for damages to a car load of cattle, an instruction was given that the measure of damages proper to be applied was the difference between the market value of the cattle, had they been delivered in proper condition, and the market value in the condition in which they were delivered. Held, that the instruction was not erroneous as using the term "market value," for, as applied to cattle, the market value is the actual value; neither was it erroneous because it did not limit the right of recovery to such damages as were due to defendant's fault, where there was no proof that the damages were not all due to defendant's fault. Colsch v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. (Iowa) 117 N. W. 281, 284.

An instruction that the damages for land not taken should be determined by ascertaining the "market value" of the part not taken as it was when the remainder was taken, and deducting therefrom its market value after the taking, which was pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1249, except that the quoted words were substituted for "actual value" used in the statute, was not objectionable for using the substituted words; the law holding the market value as equivalent to the actual value. Sacramento Southern R. Co. v. Hellbron, 104 Pac. 979, 982, 156 Cal. 408.

In condemnation proceedings to obtain property for a bridge, an instruction—that the "market value" of the property means its actual value, independent of the location of plaintiff's bridge and approaches thereon; that is, the fair value of the property as between one who wants to purchase and the one who wants to sell it; not what it could be obtained for in peculiar circumstances, when greater than its fair price could be obtained, not its speculative value; not the value obtained through the necessities of another, nor, on the other hand, is it to be limited to that price which the property would bring when forced off at auction under the hammer—is correct. Southern Illinois & M. Bridge Co. v. Stone, 92 S. W. 475, 477, 194 Mo. 175.

Act May 20, 1890 (Ky. St. 1903, § 3915), prohibiting trusts to regulate the price of any article or to limit the amount of any article, and Acts 1906, p. 429, c. 117, legalizing the pooling of farm products, when construed in connection with Const. § 198, requiring the Legislature to pass laws to prevent trusts, pools, etc., to depreciate any article below its "real value," or to enhance its cost above its real value, are not invalid because uncertain, for the standard fixed is "real value," which is "market value," at a sale under normal conditions, unaffected by any combination or producers or dealers whose object is to create an abnormal condition in the market, and is susceptible of proof by proof of pre-existing facts. The court in distinguishing this holding from a previous decision declaring a statute prohibiting railroads from charging "more than a just and reasonable rate of toll" unconstitutional, because of uncertainty in determining what would be a just and reasonable rate of toll. "There is a marked difference between the qualities of the 'real value' of an article, and 'reasonable compensation' for a service. The latter may depend alone upon the opinion of the trier of the fact; the former is itself a fact susceptible of proof and exact ascertainment." Commonwealth v. International Harvester Co., 115 S. W. 703, 711, 712, 131 Ky. 551, 132 Am. St. Rep. 256.

Value for any use

In estimating the market value of property, all capabilities of the property and all uses to which it may be applied are to be considered. Seaboard Air Line Ry. v. Chamblin, 60 S. E. 727, 729, 108 Va. 42.

"The 'market value of property' is its value for any use to which it may be adapted, and in estimating its value all the uses of which the property is susceptible should be considered, and not merely the condition in which it may be at the time and the use to which it may have been put by the owner." In re Westlake Ave., 82 Pac. 279, 281, 40 Wash. 144 (quoting and adopting the definition in Seattle & M. R. Co. v. Murphine, 30 Pac. 720, 4 Wash. 448).

"Market value," within the meaning of the rule in expropriation proceedings by a railway company that the criterion of value is the fair market value of the property at the date of the institution of the suit, in view of any and all uses to which it may be applied or adapted, exclusive of any increase in value caused by the construction of the proposed railroad through the property, does not mean speculative value, but the fair value of the property as it stands, between one willing to purchase and one willing to sell. Opelousas, G. & N. E. R. Co. v. Bradford, 43 South. 79, 80, 118 La. 506 (citing Orleans & J. R. Co. v. Jefferson & L. P. R. Co., 26 South. 278, 51 La. Ann. 1616; Louisiana Ry. & Nav. Co. v. Xavier Realty Co., 89 South. 1, 115 La. 328).

Value determined by situation, condition, etc.

While the "market value" of property is the price for which it may be sold in the market, it is often difficult to determine "market value," because there may be no general demand for the property, or it may be such as is only valuable for a specified purpose because of its formation, location, or other specific, natural or artificial adaptability to a particular use, so that, where no general market value can be ascertained, such elements may be considered in arriving at its general value. Portneuf-Marsh Valley Irr. Co. v. Portneuf Irrigating Co., 114 Pac. 19, 20, 19 Idaho, 483.

MARKETABLE

"Marketable" and "merchantable" are practically synonymous. In an action for breach of contract to purchase hay, defendants alleged that plaintiff agreed to sell them merchantable hay, and that the hay shipped was not as represented. Held, that a request by plaintiff to an expert witness: "State whether or not this hay you saw there is considered as marketable hay here in Baker City, compared with other kind that is sold here"—was not objectionable; the persons who "considered" the hay merchantable being himself and those who, according to his previous testimony, he had seen purchasing such hay at Baker City. Eaton v. Blackburn, 88 Pac. 303, 304, 49 Or. 22 (citing Webst. Int. Dict.).

MARKETABLE TITLE

See Good and Marketable Title.

A "marketable title" is one free from reasonable doubt. Connelly v. Putnam, 111 S. W. 164, 165, 51 Tex. Civ. App. 233; Cummings v. Dolan, 100 Pac. 989, 991, 52 Wash. 496, 132 Am. St. Rep. 986; Wadick v. Mace, 103 N. Y. Supp. 889, 893, 118 App. Div. 777; Sprickerhoff v. Gordon, 105 N. Y. Supp. 586, 588, 120 App. Div. 748; Russell v. Wales, 100 N. Y. Supp. 785, 788; Howe v. Coates, 107 N. W. 397, 403, 97 Minn. 385, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1170, 114 Am. St. Rep. 723; Wanser v. De Nyse, 80 N. E. 1088, 188 N. Y. 378, 117 Am. St. Rep. 871 (quoting and adopting definition in Fleming v. Burnham, 2 N. E. 905, 100 N. Y. 1, 10).

A "marketable title" is one that is free from reasonable doubt; one that a prudent person with full knowledge of all the facts would be willing to accept. Hubachek v. Maxbass Security Bank, 134 N. W. 640, 642, 117 Minn. 163, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 187.

A "marketable title" is a title not subject to such reasonable doubt as would create a just apprehension of its validity in the mind of a reasonable, prudent, and intelligent person; one that a person of reasonable prudence and intelligence, guided by competent legal advice, would be willing to take and pay the fair value of the land for. Summy v. Ramsey, 101 Pac. 506, 507, 53 Wash. 93 (quoting Eggers v. Busch, 39 N. E. 619, 154 Ill. 604).

A "marketable title" is one that is free from reasonable doubt. There is reasonable doubt when there is uncertainty as to some defects appearing in the course of its deduction, and the doubt be such as affects the value of the land, or will interfere with its sale. Griffith v. Maxfield, 39 S. W. 852, 63 Ark. 551.

The books define a marketable title, as one that is not only good, but indubitable. Ormsby v. Graham, 98 N. W. 724, 727, 123 Iowa, 202 (citing Swayne v. Lyon, 67 Pa. [17 P. F. Smith] 436; Vought v. Williams, 24 N. E. 195, 120 N. Y. 253, 8 L. R. A. 591, 17 Am. St. Rep. 634; Tomlin v. McChord's Representatives, 28 Ky. [5 J. J. Marsh.] 135).

Promise to convey a "marketable title" in an executory land contract contemplates a title free from reasonable doubt, which is not only valid in fact, but which can be again sold to a reasonable purchaser or mortgaged to a person of reasonable prudence. A title will not be considered unmarketable unless the danger of litigation is real or apparent and to be apprehended because of some irregularity in legal proceedings or sale thereof, or because of some matter of fact the real truth as to which cannot be ascertained with reasonable certainty. Cowdery v. Greenlee, 55 S. E. 918, 920, 126 Ga. 786, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 137 (citing Swayne v. Lyon, 67 Pa. 436; Vought v. Williams, 24 N. E. 195, 120 N. Y. 253, 8 L. R. A. 591, 17 Am. St. Rep. 634).

A "marketable title" in equity is one in which there is no doubt involved either as a matter of law or fact. A title need not in fact be bad in order to make it unmarketable, and it is unmarketable if a reasonably prudent man, familiar with the facts and apprised of the question of law involved, would not accept the title in the ordinary course of business; it being sufficient that there was a doubt or uncertainty sufficient to form the basis of litigation. In an action to recover back purchase money for failure of the vendor to furnish a marketable title, where the parties whose possible claims may affect the title are not before the court, the question of law on which the title turns will not be determined, but the title will be deemed unmarketable if the question is one on which it is apparent that other courts might entertain a different opinion. Williams v. Bricker, 109 Pac. 998, 999, 83 Kan. 53, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 343.

"A 'marketable title' is one that is free from reasonable doubt. The purchaser is not compelled to take property the possession of which he may be compelled to defend by litigation. He should have title that will enable him to hold his land in peace, and, if he wishes to sell, be reasonably sure that no flaw or doubt will arise to disturb its market value." Hence a title which depends upon the part payment of interest on a mortgage and the bar of limitations is not free from reasonable doubt. Godfrey v. Rosenthal, 97 N. W. 365, 366, 17 S. D. 452 (citing Vought v. Williams, 24 N. E. 195, 120 N. Y. 253, 8 L. R. A. 591, 17 Am. St. Rep. 634).

A title is not "marketable," when it exposes the party holding it to litigation. Russell v. Wales, 100 N. Y. Supp. 785, 788 (quoting Salisbury v. Ryan, 94 N. Y. Supp. 352, 105 App. Div. 448).

As "marketable title" is one about which there can be no fair and reasonable doubt, a title in litigation is not a "marketable" one. Corbett v. McGregor (Tex.) 84 S. W. 278, 279.

To constitute "marketable title," the title should put the purchaser in all reasonable security and protect him against annoying though unsuccessful suits, and such title as will enable him not only to hold his land but to sell it and to be reasonably sure that no flaw will come up to disturb its marketable value. Hewitt v. Parsley, 60 Atl. 619, 620, 101 Md. 208.

A "marketable title" is one appearing to be such by the record of conveyances or other public memorial, and not one resting in parol. Lockhart v. Ferrey, 115 Pac. 431, 433, 59 Or. 179.

"A 'marketable title' in equity is one in which there is no doubt involved, either as to matter of law or fact." Where the vendor's title rested upon a deed executed by a foreign assignee solely by virtue of an order of a court in the state of Iowa, and before the action was tried the vendor obtained a judgment quieting his title upon service by publication against the foreign assignor, the assignee, and the party to whom the assignee had conveyed, and asked for specific performance against the purchaser, the title tendered is not a "marketable title." McNutt v. Neilans, 108 Pac. 834, 836, 82 Kan. 424.

A title is not "marketable" where error in the name of a grantee in the vendor's chain of title can be proven by parol. Walters v. Mitchell, 92 Pac. 315, 317, 6 Cal. App. 410.

Where a corporation's deed of real estate, though only prima facie evidence of title, has remained unquestioned for more than seven years, it is sufficient to evidence a "marketable title," since, to render a title marketable, it is only necessary that it shall be free from reasonable doubt, and the purchaser is not entitled to demand a title absolutely free from every technical suspicion, but can only demand such title as a reasonably well informed and intelligent purchaser acting upon business principles would be willing to accept. Milton v. Crawford, 118 Pac. 32, 36, 65 Wash. 145.

A vendor whose lands were subject to an easement to another to enter on the land and construct water ditches or water pipes from or across the land, under which a water pipe was maintained across the land, did not possess a marketable title; "marketable title" being defined as a term which, when applied to real estate, is used to designate a title free from reasonable doubt. Where a vendor agreed to convey "full fee-simple title to the land," which he could not do because of the existence of an easement, the question of "marketable title" was not involved. Wingard v. Copeland, 116 Pac. 670, 672, 64 Wash. 214.

A vendor agreed to give a "marketable title." The premises consisted of a corner lot in a city on which a building stood. The lower portion of the building was of stone. The outer surface of the stonework projected two inches over the street line and within that of the sidewalk, which might be withdrawn from the use of the public. The encroachment did not affect easements of light, air, and access possessed by adjoining property owners. The building had been standing for about five years without objection from the city. Held, that the possibility of action by the city to remove the encroachment was so remote that it should be disregarded in determining the marketability of the title. Empire Realty Corp. v. Sayre, 96 N. Y. Supp. 371, 374, 107 App. Div. 415.

Where one having a leasehold estate mortgaged the land and thereafter acquired the fee, and on foreclosure all persons who could claim under him were made parties and the surplus was distributed to all entitled to it as representing the mortgagor's interest, the foreclosure title was a "marketable" one. Hirth v. Zeller, 95 N. Y. Supp. 747, 748, 108 App. Div. 198.

A contract of sale of land, requiring a conveyance by "a good and sufficient general warranty deed, in fee simple," is satisfied by the giving of a good and "marketable title," which is a title not open to reasonable doubt; and such is a title by prescription, with irregularities in the title only prior to the commencement of the period of limitations; and an "indubitable title"—that is, one open to no possible objection, however trivial—is not required. Jackson v. Creek, 94 N. E. 416, 421, 47 Ind. App. 541.

Where a vendor tendered title under the foreclosure of a first mortgage, leaving outstanding a sheriff's deed to a third person, executed on foreclosure of the second mortgage, such deed, being a claim under judicial sale and not showing its invalidity on its face, or in connection with its first foreclosure, constituted a cloud, and rendered the vendor's title unmarketable. Stack v. Hickey, 138 N. W. 1011, 1012, 151 Wis. 347.

The pendency of an action for partition against vendors under contract to convey real estate, commenced by service of summons on them, in which a lis pendens was filed with a verified complaint, averring that the deed and will of a former owner through which the vendors derived title were induced by fraud and undue influence, is a cloud on the title of the vendors, continuing until the time has expired within which an appeal may be taken from a judgment dismissing the action or until a second action begun before the expiration of that time has been disposed of, and the purchaser is not bound to accept title from them at his peril or to seek out the evidence of the validity or invalidity of the title. Whalen v. Stuart, 108 N. Y. Supp. 355, 357, 123 App. Div. 446.

Under Acts 1896, c. 310, relative to taxation and sales for taxes by a municipal corporation, and requiring that after the sale and payment of taxes, penalties, and costs, the treasurer shall deliver to the purchaser a certificate of purchase and the mayor give a deed unless the property shall be redeemed within one year from the day of sale and there is no record of the proceedings of such sale save the certificate and deed, a title based alone on such certificate and deed is not such "marketable title" as a purchaser can be compelled to accept in a suit for specific performance. A mere possibility that notice of the sale of land for taxes was not given the owner as expressly required by Laws 1885, p. 699, c. 405, § 7, is not sufficient to render the marketability of the title doubtful. Rosenblum v. Eisenberg, 108 N. Y. Supp. 350, 352, 123 App. Div. 896 (citing Maupin, Marketability of Title, p. 707).

A notice of lis pendens reciting that an action had been commenced to foreclose a mortgage on certain land did not render the owner's title unmarketable, where the contract provided that the property was to be taken subject to the mortgage sought to be foreclosed, and where consent to the discontinuance of the foreclosure suit had been delivered to the vendor and an order of discontinuance entered. Weissberger v. Walach, 108 N. Y. Supp. 887, 888, 124 App. Div. 382.

The boundary lines of a city lot were located as early as 1822, and have since been acquiesced in by the owners of the adjacent lots on both sides. For over 50 years the owners and their predecessors in title have been in actual peaceable possession of the entire premises, and during that time nobody else has claimed any interest to any part thereof, nor, to the knowledge of the owners or of a contract purchaser, is there any person who can have any claim of title against the owners. Held, that the owners have a good and marketable title to the premises, though a deed in 1822 erroneously described the lot as one foot narrower than it really was, and the mistake was repeated in subsequent conveyances. Taub v. Spector, 108 N. Y. Supp. 723, 124 App. Div. 158 (citing Wentworth v. Braun, 79 N. Y. Supp. 489, 78 App. Div. 634, affirmed 67 N. E. 1091, 175 N. Y. 515; Well v. Radley, 52 N. Y. Supp. 398, 31 App. Div. 25, affirmed 57 N. E. 1128, 163 N. Y. 582; Katz v. Kaiser, 48 N. E. 532, 154 N. Y. 294; Meyer v. Boyd, 4 N. Y. Supp. 328, 51 Hun, 291).

Where a title depended on foreclosure proceedings, in which jurisdiction of the owners of the equity was not obtained because of failure to comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 442, prescribing the requisites of an order for publication of summons, it was unmarketable. Fink v. Wallach, 95 N. Y. Supp. 872, 873, 47 Misc. Rep. 247.

MARKETERS

The term "marketers," as used in an order for goods, reading, "If reasonable ship to-morrow Thursday four to six loads 'marketers,'" is to be construed as meaning cattle such as the person sending the order would want to sell to the retail trade. The term distinguishes the cattle for that trade from those which are to be exported. "Marketers" are supposed to weigh about 1,200 pounds and "exporters" about 1,400 pounds. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. N. Lehman & Bro., 67 Atl. 241, 242, 108 Md. 318, 14 Ann. Cas. 736.

MARRIED PHYSICALLY

The words "married physically" mean the same as the word "disfigurement." Cullen v. Higgins, 74 N. E. 698-700, 216 Ill. 78.

MARRIAGE

See Celestial Marriage; Common-Law Marriage; Contract of Marriage; Daring Marriage; Moral Marriage; Patriarchal Marriage; Plural Marriage; Polygamous Marriage; Prohibited Marriage; Putative Marriage; Right Acquired by Marriage.

See, also, Bonds of Matrimony; Matrimony.

"Marriage" is the union of opposite sexes, and sexual intercourse is the distinguishing feature of the union. Williams v. Williams, 99 S. W. 42, 44, 121 Mo. App. 349 (quoting and adopting definition in Nelson, Div. & Sep.).

"Marriage" being in its nature permanent and the most important of all civil relations, the law will not lightly allow the inducements which have led up to it to be disturbed." Welch v. Mann, 92 S. W. 98, 101, 193 Mo. 304 (quoting and adopting definition in Cohen v. Knox, 27 Pac. 215, 90 Cal. 266, 18 L. R. A. 711).

When a man and woman intend to marry and live together as husband and wife, but their intention is frustrated by the existence of some unknown impediment, and after the impediment is removed the same intent continues and the parties continue to live together as husband and wife, an actual "marriage" results. Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 62 Atl. 680, 681, 68 N. J. Eq. 736, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 244, 111 Am. St. Rep. 658, 6 Ann. Cas. 483.

As a civil contract

"Marriage" is a formal declaration or contract by which act a man and woman join in wedlock. Lynch v. Knoop, 43 South. 252, 253, 118 La. 611, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 490, 118 Am. St. Rep. 391, 10 Ann. Cas. 807.

"Marriage" in this state is a civil contract by one man and one woman competent to contract, whereby they are mutually bound to each other so long as they both shall live for the discharge to each other and to the public of the duties and obligations which by the law flow from said contract." In re Imboden's Estate, 86 S. W. 263, 265, 111 Mo. App. 220 (citing Banks v. Galbraith, 51 S. W. 105, 149 Mo. 536; State v. Bittick, 15 S. W. 325, 103 Mo. 183, 11 L. R. A. 587, 23 Am. St. Rep. 869; Dyer v. Brannock, 66 Mo. 391, 27 Am. Rep. 359).

Marriage, while from its very nature a sacred obligation, is nevertheless, in most civilized nations, a civil contract, and usually regulated by law. Upon it society may be said to be built, and out of its fruits spring social relations, and social obligations and duties, with which government is necessarily required to deal. In re De Laveaga's Estate, 75 Pac. 790, 795, 142 Cal. 158 (citing Reynolds v. United States, 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. Ed. 244).

Marriage is a civil contract, and the wife owes to the husband the same full performance of marital duties that he owes to her. Richardson v. Richardson, 114 N. Y. Supp. 912, 914.

As between the immediate parties, "marriage" is, in law, a civil contract. Nelson v. Brown, 51 South. 360, 363, 164 Ala. 397, 137 Am. St. Rep. 61.

Code, § 3139, defines "marriage" as a civil contract. Pegg v. Pegg, 115 N. W. 1027, 1028, 138 Iowa, 572.

As a civil institution

Marriage is a social institution or status, in which, because the foundations of the family and the domestic relations rest upon it, the commonwealth has a deep interest to see that its integrity is not jeopardized. Coe v. Hill, 86 N. E. 949, 950, 201 Mass. 15.

"Marriage" is an institution in which the public have an interest." This is shown by the safeguard which the statute has thrown around the contract and its dissolution. Bacon v. Bacon, 86 N. E. 1030, 43 Ind. App. 218.

As a civil relation

"The 'marriage contract' once entered into becomes a relation rather than a contract, and invests each party with a status toward the other and society at large, involving duties and responsibilities, which are no longer matter for private regulation but concern the commonwealth." Coy v. Humphreys, 125 S. W. 877, 879, 142 Mo. App. 92.

As a civil status

In Christian nations marriage is not treated as a mere contract to be suspended or dissolved, at pleasure, but rather as a status based on public necessity, and controlled by law for the benefit of society at large. People v. Case, 89 N. E. 638, 640, 241 Ill. 279, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 578.

Marriage is a status resulting from a contract to marry entered into by a man and woman capable of making such a contract, and cohabitation does not of itself constitute marriage. Compton v. Benham (Ind.) 85 N. E. 365, 367.

Under Const. art. 16, § 51, and Rev. St. 1895, art. 2396, defining a homestead, the homestead right of a married woman rests upon the fact that she has the status of a wife, and that as such she actually used and occupied the 200-acre homestead for the purpose of a home, at the time of its attempted alienation, and did not join in the execution of the conveyance or in any way assent thereto; the term "marriage" meaning the civil status of a man and woman lawfully united in the relation of husband and wife, and "wifehood" being defined as the state of being a wife. McCracken v. Taylor (Tex.) 146 S. W. 693, 695.

Contract distinguished

Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, c. 51, art. 1, § 1, par. 3482, provides that marriage is a personal relation arising out of a civil contract, differing from all other contracts to such an extent that the rule that prohibited contracts are void does not apply thereto. Hunt v. Hunt, 100 Pac. 541, 543, 23 Okl. 490, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1202.

Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, c. 51, art. 1, § 3, par. 3484, prohibits any male under the age of 18 years, and any female under the age of 15 years, to marry. Chapter 51, art. 1, § 16, par. 3497, makes it criminal to solemnize or enter into a marriage contrary to foregoing provisions. Held, that while a marriage of a youth of 16 and a girl of 14 was illegal, it was voidable only, and not void. Hunt v. Hunt, 100 Pac. 541, 543, 23 Okl. 490, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1202.

Same—Capacity of parties

"Marriage is not a civil contract, except in so far as the relation is based on the agreement of the parties. It is true the statute (section 7289, Burns' Ann. St. 1901) declares marriage to be a civil contract, but the statute itself takes it out of the clause of simple contracts by providing that it may be entered into by persons under age." Elkenbury v. Burns, 70 N. E. 837, 838, 33 Ind. App. 69.

In an action by parents to recover for the death of a child 13 years old, it is unnecessary to allege that the child was unmarried; Rev. St. 1899, § 4311, providing that marriage is in law a civil contract to which the consent of parties capable in law of contracting is essential, not giving the right to parents or guardians to contract marriages between males under the age of 14 years and females under the age of 12 years. Belamy v. Whitsett, 100 S. W. 514, 515, 123 Mo. App. 610.

Same—Interest of state

Marriage is more than a mere civil contract for the establishment and maintenance by the parties to it of certain relations to each other. It involves, except as modified by statute, an intimate personal union of those participating in it of a character unknown to any other human relation, and creates a civil status, the maintenance of which in its integrity is vital to the moral welfare of society. Taylor v. Taylor, 69 Atl. 632, 634, 108 Md. 129.

While our law defines marriage as a civil contract, it differs from all other contracts in its consequences to the body politic, and for that reason, in dealing with it, or with the status resulting therefrom, the state never stands indifferent, but is always a party whose interest must be taken into account. Willits v. Willits, 107 N. W. 379, 380, 76 Neb. 228, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 767, 14 Ann. Cas. 883.

"Marriage" is more than a civil contract, for it can only be entered into in a manner recognized by law, and can only be dissolved in a like manner. The state is the third party to the contract and has a direct interest therein. Grover v. Zook, 87 Pac. 638, 642, 44 Wash. 489, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 582, 120 Am. St. Rep. 1012, 12 Ann. Cas. 192 (citing Blank v. Nohl, 20 S. W. 477, 112 Mo. 167, 18 L. R. A. 350; State v. Bittick, 15 S. W. 325, 103 Mo. 183, 11 L. R. A. 587, 23 Am. St. Rep. 869).

The "marriage" contract, once entered into, becomes a relation, rather than a contract, and invests each party with a status towards the other, and society at large, involving duties and responsibilities which are no longer matter for private regulation, but concern the commonwealth, and in this aspect is a civil or social institution, being the foundation of the family and the origin of domestic relations of the utmost importance to civilization and social progress; hence the state is deeply concerned in its maintenance in purity and integrity. Coy v. Humphreys, 125 S. W. 877, 879, 142 Mo. App. 92.

Creation of relation—Capacity of parties

"Marriage" is a contract and nothing else, which presupposes the meeting of two minds on the subject-matter of it. If one of the parties when the ceremony was performed was so far under the influence of liquor as to be unable to understand the contracting of such marital relation, then in law the proceeding amounted to nothing, because the meeting of minds presupposes sufficient intelligence to determine whether the contract shall be made. Unless there shall be present this degree of intelligence at the time the marital relation is entered into, then there is no contract. Allen v. Allen, 110 N. Y. Supp. 303, 305, 125 App. Div. 888.

Under the express provisions of Code, § 3139, marriage is a civil contract, requiring the consent of parties capable of entering into other civil contracts, and hence without such consent no marital rights are acquired nor marital duties imposed, and, if one or both of the parties be insane and therefore incapable of giving consent, there is no marriage, but in the interest of good order the courts will assume jurisdiction to decree the annulment of the union though annulment is not necessary to clothe the parties with all the rights of unmarried persons. Floyd County v. Wolfe, 117 N. W. 32, 34, 138 Iowa, 749.

Under the statutory definition of marriage in Missouri as a civil contract to which the consent of parties capable in law of contracting is essential, there could be no marriage in legal contemplation between slaves in that state, who had no capacity to contract; and hence, where a man and woman, slaves, "took up with each other" in Missouri, with their mistress' consent, according to the custom of slaves, the relation being merely temporary and subject to termination at any time, either by their own act or that of their mistress, there was no such marriage as would permit their children to inherit from their father. In re Campbell's Estate, 108 P. 669, 673, 12 Cal. App. 707.

Same—Consent of state

"A 'marriage' is a civil contract made in due form, by which a man and woman agree to take each other for husband and wife during their joint lives, unless it is annulled by law, and to discharge towards each other the duties imposed by law upon such relation. Each must be capable of assenting, and must in fact consent to form this new relation. If a statute forbids the solemnization of marriage without a license, still, in the absence of a clause of nullity, the marriage will be good, though no license was had. No particular form of words is necessary to constitute a common-law marriage. If what is done and said evidences an intention by the parties to assume the marriage status, and the parties thereupon enter into the relation of husband and wife, that is sufficient, whatever may be the form of expression used." Heymann v. Heymann, 75 N. E. 1079, 1080, 218 Ill. 636.

Same—Solemnization

Marriage is a civil contract, the consent of the parties to it being all that is required by natural public law. It is true that in most, if not all, of the states of the Union, there are statutes regulating the manner of forming the marriage contract, providing for the performance of ceremonies, and naming those persons who can perform the ceremonies or celebrate the rites of matrimony; but it is held in a number of the states that, in the absence of positive statutes declaring all marriages void that are not performed as directed by law, any marriage made according to the common law would be a valid marriage. Such marriage may be proved by reputation, declarations, and conduct of the parties, and other circumstances usually accompanying that relation. Edelstein v. Brown, 80 S. W. 1027, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 625.

"Two essentials to a valid 'marriage' are capacity and consent. Marriage is a civil contract, and no ceremonial is indispensably requisite to its creation. A contract of marriage made per verba de presenti amounts to an actual marriage and is valid." Travers v. Reinhardt, 27 Sup. Ct. 563, 568, 205 U. S. 423, 438, 51 L. Ed. 865 (quoting Voorhees v. Voorhees, 19 Atl. 172, 173, 46 N. J. Eq. 411, 413, 414, 19 Am. St. Rep. 404, 406).

"Marriage" in a legal sense is a civil contract. It is not indispensable that a clergyman should be present to authorize and confirm the contract to give validity to the marriage. Statutes which direct that a license must be issued, that only certain persons shall perform the ceremony, that a certain number of witnesses shall be present, that a certificate of marriage shall be returned and recorded and the person violating the conditions shall be guilty of a criminal offense, are directory merely, and in no wise affect the validity of the marriage contract, unless they contain an express provision to that effect. Reaves v. Reaves, 82 Pac. 490, 492, 493, 494, 15 Okl. 240, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 353 (citing Gibson v. Gibson, 39 N. W. 450, 24 Neb. 394).

A present agreement between competent persons to take each other for husband and wife constitutes a valid "marriage," though there be no witnesses. Dietrich v. Dietrich, 112 N. Y. Supp. 968, 970, 128 App. Div. 564.

"That there may be a valid 'marriage' without solemnization by minister, priest, or officer is not questioned in this country except where the statute forbids, and it once was so understood in England. * * * Marriage is recognized as a status brought about by civil contract, and it may be contracted by the parties themselves, as any other contract, without even the presence of witnesses. * * * We have already shown * * * that it need not be followed by cohabitation, either in the sense of living together or of sexual intercourse. Mutual consent, expressed, is the requisite." "Marriage," as distinguished from an agreement to marry and from the act of becoming married, is the civil status of one man and one woman, legally united for life. "The contract makes the marriage, and the status is the marriage. Hence it is said that marriage is a status which arises out of the contract. * * * That a contract of marriage in presenti is itself a marriage—that is, produces the marriage status without anything more—is stated by all commentators on the common law and by all adjudications thereof in this country." Davis v. Stouffer, 112 S. W. 282, 285, 286, 132 Mo. App. 555 (quoting and adopting Yardley's Estate, 75 Pa. 207; 1 Bishop, Marriage & Divorce, § 11, and note; and citing and adopting Dyer v. Brannock, 66 Mo. 391, 27 Am. Rep. 359).

An instruction that "marriage" is a civil contract entered into between a man and a woman, both of whom are equally competent to enter into the relationship, and that it may be consummated by a form prescribed by statute, or by some other formal method, or by a formal agreement between the parties, and that some of these methods are necessary to constitute "marriage," is incorrect, since whatever be the form of the ceremony or if there be no ceremony, if the parties agree presently to take each other for husband and wife, and from that time on live professedly in that relation, proof of these facts would be sufficient to constitute proof of a marriage binding on the parties, which would subject them to legal penalties for a disregard of the obligation. Darling v. Dent, 100 S. W. 747, 748, 82 Ark. 76 (citing Hutchins v. Kimmell, 31 Mich. 130, 18 Am. Rep. 164).

"Where parties have cohabited together, and held themselves out as man and wife, and there are circumstances from which a present contract may be inferred, the law out of charity, and in favor of innocence and good morals, will presume matrimony. The law in general presumes against vice and immorality, and on this ground holds acknowledgment, cohabitation, and reputation presumptive evidence of marriage. Mere cohabitation is not usually considered sufficient." Bishop lays down the doctrine that 'cohabitation and the reputation of being husband and wife are usually considered together in questions concerning the proof of marriage; the one being in a certain sense the shadow of the other. Some of the authorities favor the idea that reputation of itself may be received as sufficient proof prima facie, but it must be uniform and general; if there is a conflict in the repute, it will not establish the marriage. On the other hand, its sufficiency in any case has been denied, unless there be accompanying proof of cohabitation.' 1 Bishop, Marriage & Divorce (5th Ed.) 483. 'Cohabitation and reputation are at best only presumptive proofs, and, when one of these foundations is withdrawn, what remains is too weak to build a presumption on. There is good sense in the Scotch law, by which cohabitation alone is considered insufficient, and which requires in addition habit and repute, because it is said that the parties may eat, live, and sleep together as mistress and keeper without any intention of entering into marriage.' It is well established in this state that a marriage without observing the statutory regulations, if made according to the common law, is a valid marriage, and that by the common law, if the contract be made per verba de presenti it is sufficient evidence of a marriage, or if it be made per verba de future cum copula, the cohabitation is presumed to be on the faith of the marriage promise. That is, however, merely a rule of evidence, and it is always competent, in such cases, to show by proof that the facts are otherwise. Under our law, 'marriage' is a civil contract by which a man and a woman agree to take each other for husband and wife during their joint lives, unless it is annulled by law, and to discharge towards each other the duties imposed by law upon such relation. Each must be capable of assenting and must, in fact, consent, to form this new relation. When the consent to marry is manifested by words de presenti, a present assumption of the marriage status is necessary." On the issue as to a common-law marriage, the woman testified that while she and the man were riding together he said she was his wife, and that a marriage ceremony was unnecessary, if they should hold marriage relations, and that she agreed to hold such relations, and that afterwards he acknowledged her as his wife, but that they did not live openly together until five months thereafter. It appeared that subsequently their neighbors and the woman insisted that a ceremony be performed, and that, because of the man's refusal to have a ceremony, a difficulty arose between the man and the woman's son, in which the latter killed the former. Held that the facts were insufficient to show a marriage. Topper v. Perry, 95 S. W. 203, 207, 197 Mo. 531, 114 Am. St. Rep. 777 (citing Cargile v. Wood, 63 Mo. loc. cit. 512; State v. Bittick, 15 S. W. 325, 103 Mo. loc. cit. 191, 11 L. R. A. 587, 23 Am. St. Rep. 869; State v. Cooper, 15 S. W. 327, 103 Mo. 271; Dyer v. Brannock, 66 Mo. 391, 27 Am. Rep. 359; Cartwright v. McGown, 12 N. E. 737, 121 Ill. 388, 2 Am. St. Rep. 105; Hantz v. Sealy [Pa.] 6 Bin. 405; Elzas v. Elzas, 49 N. E. 717, 171 Ill. 635).

As used in Rev. Code, § 2611, defining it as a personal relation arising out of a civil contract to which the consent of the parties is necessary, and that consent alone will not constitute it, but it must be followed by a solemnization or by mutual assumption of marital rights, duties, and obligations, was fully proven by evidence that the parties in this case had been married by a minister on authority of a certificate issued by law and had lived together for 28 years as man and wife, though at the time of the ceremony a prior spouse of one of the parties was alive; there being a presumption of divorce. Huff v. Huff, 118 Pac. 1080, 1083, 20 Idaho, 450.

Civ. Code, § 55, declaring that marriage is a personal relation arising out of a civil contract, but consent alone will not constitute a marriage, and it must be followed by a mutual admission of marital rights, does not modify the requirements of the common-law rule that the repute and cohabitation necessary to create a presumption of marriage must be uniform, general, and open, and there must be evidence that the parties assumed the relation of husband and wife, treating each other as married, and so conducting themselves as to have full repute among their friends and associates to be married. In re Baldwin's Estate, 123 Pac. 267, 275, 162 Cal. 471.

One person created

"Marriage" is a contract by which a social union is established; and the status of each spouse, and his or her rights in the common property, are fixed by special provisions of law applicable to that relation alone. It will not be just to say that, because the personal identity of the husband or wife is the same after as before marriage, there has been no loss or surrender of those legal characteristics affected by the assumption of the relation. There is in many respects a complete merger of identities and a total loss of the separate individual rights that formerly existed. Clark v. Brown (Tex.) 108 S. W. 421, 443.

MARRIAGE BOND RECORD

A book known as the "Marriage Bond Record" is a book kept in the county clerks' offices in Kentucky, containing the names of persons who obtained licenses to marry and other evidence touching their age and residence. Pace v. Cawood (Ky.) 110 S. W. 414, 415.

MARRIAGE BROKERAGE

A contract based on a money consideration to aid a woman in securing a husband, the services contracted for being in connection with efforts already being made by her to secure such man, was nothing less than that known as "marriage brokerage" and was invalid by common law as against public policy. Wenninger v. Mitchell, 122 S. W. 1130, 1132, 139 Mo. App. 420.

MARRIAGE PER VERBA DE FUTURA CUM COPULA

See, also, Common-Law Marriage.

"Marriage per verba de futuro cum copula" is not consummated, unless the copula is had in fulfillment of the future agreement. An existing agreement between a man and a woman to marry at a future day conclusively negatives the claim of a marriage per verba de presenti between the same parties. Sorensen v. Sorensen, 100 N. MARRIAGEABLE WOMAN

A woman, to be "marriageable," must at the time be able to bear children to her husband, and a representation to this effect is implied in the very nature of the contract. Baker v. Baker, 13 Cal. 87, 108.

In Domestic Relations Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 14) § 81, providing that a married woman is a joint guardian of her children with her husband, the term "married woman" does not refer to one married to another than the living father of the child after divorce from him, but only to the mother married to the father of the infant. MARRY

As used in Rev. St. 1899, § 2169, declaring that every person, having a husband or wife living, who "shall marry another person" without this state in any case where such marriage would be punishable, is contracted or solemnized within the state, or shall thereafter cohabit with such person within the state, shall be adjudged guilty of bigamy, should be taken to mean the going "through" the form and ceremony of marriage with another person, regardless as to the validity of the second marriage as a matter of law. State v. Stuart, 92 S. W. 873, 882, 194 Mo. 345, 112 Am. St. Rep. 529, 5 Ann. Cas. 963.

MARRYING AGAIN

Testator devised real estate described to his wife, and gave to another woman named other described real estate, to be held by her for the support of herself and testator's children by her, and provided that, in the event of her "marrying again," the gift to her should become void, and the property should go to such children. A provision in similar language was made in favor of a third woman. The woman so named was testator's polygamous wife. Testator and she were members of the Mormon Church and believed in its doctrines, including the doctrine of polygamy. Held, that the words "marrying again" included the entering into a polygamous marriage, and the gift to such woman was within Comp. Laws 1907, § 2795, providing that a conditional disposition is one which depends on the occurrence of some uncertain event by which it is either to take effect or be defeated, and on her entering into a polygamous marriage the gift to her terminated. In re Poppleton's Estate, 97 Pac. 138, 140, 84 Utah, 285.

MARSH LAND

The drainage act of 1881 (Laws 1881, p. 236, c. 51) confers the power upon county authorities to create drainage districts for the purpose of draining "marsh or swamp lands" alone, and does not confer power to change the channel or divert surface water drains for the purpose of relieving the lands of riparian proprietors lower down the stream from periodical overflows in seasons of freshet. The term "marsh or swamp lands," as used in said act, has a wider significance than the terms "marshes" or "swamps." The power is conferred by this act to drain lands which are not, strictly speaking, "marshes" or "swamps," but which are "marsh or swamp lands," meaning thereby lands which are so situated as to be rendered difficult or incapable of successful cultivation by reason of retaining in the soil or carrying on the surface an excessive quantity of water during certain portions of the year, even though at other times they may be as solid, dry, and firm as lands in general. Campbell v. Youngson, 114 N. W. 415, 417, 418, 80 Neb. 822.

MARSHALING ASSETS

The doctrine of "marshaling assets" is defined as follows: "It is a settled principle that when there are two classes of creditors and two funds, and one class of creditors can only go against one fund while the other can go against both, the court will marshal the assets, restricting the creditors who have a double security from touching the fund applicable to the first class of creditors until they are paid in full." In re Terens, 175 Fed. 495, 497.

The rule that he who has two funds for the satisfaction of his claim shall not, by electing to resort to the doubly charged fund, disappoint him who has that fund only to resort to, is subject to qualifications, and among them is the qualification that both funds must be within the jurisdiction and control of the court, except in the rare cases in which it is clear that the creditor of the two funds will sustain no loss, delay, or additional expense if required to resort first to the fund without the jurisdiction. Stern- berger v. Sussman, 60 Atl. 195, 196, 69 N. J. Eq. 199.

Where a creditor of A. has a right to satisfy his debt out of two funds, X and Y, to but one of which, Y, another creditor, can resort, the first creditor must be compelled to exhaust X before resorting to Y. Where a mortgagor, as further security, assigned a claim for money due under insurance policies, and the mortgagee, without knowledge of a subsequent mortgagor, and pursuant to a supplemental agreement with the mortgagor, applied the money collected on the policies to a general and unsecured indebtedness of the mortgagor, the subsequent mortgagee was not entitled to have the money applied in satisfaction of the mortgage. Weldemann v. Springfield Breweries Co., 63 Atl. 162, 164, 78 Conn. 660.

The doctrine of marshaling assets will not be applied in favor of one having an adequate remedy at law. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Kip, 85 N. E. 69, 64, 192 N. Y. 266.

MASTER

The master is the one who has the direction and control of the servant, and the test is whether in the particular service the servant continues liable to the direction and control of his master, or becomes subject to the party to whom he is loaned or hired. Grace & Hyde Co. v. Probst, 70 N. E. 12, 14, 206 Ill. 147 (citing Consolidated Fireworks Co. v. Koehl, 60 N. E. 87, 190 Ill. 145).

A "master" is one who stands to another in such relation that he not only controls the result of the work of that other, but also may direct the manner in which it shall be done. McColligan v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 63 Atl. 792, 793, 214 Pa. 229, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 544, 112 Am. St. Rep. 739.

"The fact that the party to whose wrongful or negligent act an injury may be traced was at the time in the general employment and pay of another person does not necessarily make the latter the 'master,' and responsible for his acts. The 'master' is the person in whose business he is engaged at the time, and who has the right to control and direct his conduct." Wieber v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 96 N. Y. Supp. 28, 30, 109 App. Div. 81 (quoting Higgins v. Western Union Tel. Co., 50 N. E. 500, 156 N. Y. 75, 66 Am. St. Rep. 537).

A servant is one who is employed to render personal service to his employer otherwise than in the pursuit of an independent calling, and who in such service remains entirely under the control and direction of the latter, who is called the "master." Giacomini v. Pacific Lumber Co., 89 Pac. 1059, 1060, 5 Cal. App. 218 (citing Civ. Code, § 2009).

A "master" is one who not only prescribes to the workman the end of his work, but directs or at any moment may direct the means also, or, as it has been put, retains the power of controlling the work. Kellog v. Church Charity Foundation 112 N. Y. Supp. 566, 569, 128 App. Div. 214 (citing Pol. Torts [4th Ed.] p. 72).

MASTER AND SERVANT

The common understanding of the words "master and servant" and the legal understanding are not the same. The latter is broader, and comprehends some cases in which the parties are master and servant only in a peculiar sense, and for certain purposes—perhaps only for a single purpose. In strictness, a "servant" is one who, for a valuable consideration, engages in the service of another, and undertakes to observe his directions in some lawful business.

* * * It could not all depend on whether the master was to pay anything, nor whether the service was permanent or temporary. His control of the action of the other is the important circumstance, and the particulars of his arrangement are immaterial. The plaintiff not being employed, controlled, or paid by the defendant, would seem not to be their servant, so that they would be liable for his acts, or their liability to him be governed by the rules applicable as between master and servant. Where defendant engaged J. to sink a shaft, paying him so much per foot, and J. hired plaintiff to help him, and agreed to pay him one-third of the compensation received from defendant, J. having the exclusive right to employ, control, and discharge his helpers, plaintiff was not defendant's servant. Kiser v. Suppe, 112 S. W. 1005, 1007, 133 Mo. App. 19 (quoting and adopting Cooley, Torts, pp. 531, 532).

The relation of master and servant exists where the employer has power to direct the nature of the work and the manner of doing it, with power to employ and discharge, and a switch tender, employed and controlled by defendant, but one-third of whose wages was paid by plaintiff's company, which ran over defendant's tracks at the switches, was not a servant of plaintiff's company, nor was defendant its servant; the latter only having the right to complain to defendant as to the manner of performing his duties. Yeates v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 89 N. E. 338, 341, 241 Ill. 205.

The doctrine of respondeat superior applies only where the relation of master and servant exists between the wrongdoer and the person sought to be held liable for the injury, and the master is he in whose business the servant is engaged at the time, and who has the right to control and direct the servant's conduct. Harding v. St. Louis Nat. Stockyards, 90 N. E. 205, 207, 242 Ill. 444.

"The relation of 'master and servant' exists whenever the employer retains the right to direct the manner in which the business shall be done, as well as the result to be accomplished, or, in other words, not only what shall be done, but how it shall be done." Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co. v. Dickens, 103 S. W. 750, 753, 7 Ind. T. 16 (citing Singer Mfg. Co. v. Rahn, 10 Sup. Ct. 176, 132 U. S. 518, 33 L. Ed. 440; Uppington v. City of New York, 59 N. E. 91, 165 N. Y. 222,

The relation of "master and servant" subsists between an accident insurance company and its medical officer empowered to examine the person or body of insured in respect to any injury or cause of death, in such manner and at such times as he may require, in the exercise of such right of examination, and the company is answerable for injuries resulting from the negligence or misconduct of the medical officer, and, between the medical officer and insured, the law governing the relations of physician and patient does not apply. Tompkins v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 44 S. E. 439, 444, 53 W. Va. 479, 62 L. R. A. 489, 97 Am. St. Rep. 1006.

MASTER IN CHANCERY

"A 'master in chancery' is an officer appointed by the court to assist in various proceedings incidental to the progress of a cause before it, and is usually employed to take and state accounts, to take and report testimony, and to perform such duties as require computation of interest, the value of annuities, the amount of damages in particular cases, the auditing and ascertaining of liens on property involved, and similar services. The information which he may communicate by his findings on such cases on the evidence presented to him is merely advisory to the court which it may accept and act upon or disregard in whole or in part according to its own judgment as to the weight of the evidence. In practice it is not usual for the court to reject the report of a master with his findings, where the matters refer to him unless exceptions are taken to them and brought to its attention and on examination the findings are found unsupported or defective in some essential particular. Metzker v. Bonebrake, 2 Sup. Ct. 351, 108 U. S. 66, 27 L. Ed. 654; Tilghman v. Proctor, 8 Sup. Ct. 894, 125 U. S. 136, 149, 31 L. Ed. 664; Callaghan v. Myers, 9 Sup. Ct. 177, 128 U. S. 617, 666, 32 L. Ed. 547. It is not within the general province of the master to pass on all the issues in an equity case, nor is it competent for the court to refer the entire decision of the case to him without the consent of the parties. It cannot of its own motion, or upon the request of one party, delegate its duty to determine by its own judgment the controversy presented and devolve that duty upon any of its officers; but when the parties consent to the reference of a case to a master or other officer to hear and decide all the issues therein and report his findings both of fact and of law, and such reference is entered as a rule of the court, the master is clothed with very different powers from those which he exercises upon ordinary reference without such consent, and his determinations are not subject to be set aside and disregarded at the mere discretion of the court. A reference by consent of the parties of the entire case for a determination of all its issues, though not strictly a submission of the controversy to arbitration—a proceeding which is governed by special rules—is a submission of the controversy to a tribunal of the parties' own selection to be governed in its conduct by the ordinary rules applicable to the administration of justice in controversies established by law. Its findings, like those of an independent tribunal, are to be taken as correct, subject indeed to be reviewed under the reservation contained in the consent and order of the court, when there has been manifest error in the consideration given to the evidence, or the application of the law, but not otherwise. The reference of a whole case to a master * * * has become, in late years, a matter of more common occurrence than formerly, though it has always been within the power of the court of chancery, with the consent of the parties, to order a reference." Locust v. Caruthers, 100 Pac. 520, 522, 28 Okl. 378 (quoting Kimberly v. Arms, 9 Sup. Ct. 355, 129 U. S. 355, 32 L. Ed. 764; citing Basey v. Gallagher, 20 Wall. [87 U. S.] 670, 22 L. Ed. 452; *Quimby v. MASTER PLUMBER

Laws N. Y. 1896, c. 808, after making it unlawful for any person to carry on the business of an employing or "master plumber" unless the name and address of such person shall have been registered as provided in section 6, provides that a master or employing plumber within the meaning of the act is any person who hires a person or persons to do the plumbing work. Schnaier & Co. v. Grigsby, 113 N. Y. Supp. 548, 549, 61 Misc. Rep. 325.

"Master plumbers" and "employing plumbers" are one and the same—those who do not hold themselves out as personally doing the work, but as contracting to furnish the materials and to do the work through others, while "journeyman plumbers" are those skilled in the calling and holding themselves out as able and willing to do the work themselves. *Felton v. MATERIA

See In Pari Materia.

MATERIAL

"Material" is defined by Webster to mean something essential. Faulkner v. Bridget, 86 S. W. 483, 110 Mo. App. 377.

Webster defines "material" to be something "of solid or weighty character; substantial; of consequence; not to be dispensed with; important; specific; especially law, such as does or would affect the determination of a case, the effect of an instrument, or the like; constituting a matter that is entitled to consideration; such as must be considered in deciding a case on its merits." Thompson v. State, 117 Pac. 216, 223, 6 Okl. Cr. 50.

Code Supp. 1907, § 3060a14, provides that, where a negotiable instrument is wanting in any "material particular," the person in possession has prima facie authority to complete it by filling up the blank therein, etc. Held, that the word "material" was not there used as synonymous with "necessary," so as to restrict the right to filling in an omission essential to the completion of a negotiable instrument, but included all omitted matter usually found in such instruments. Johnston v. Hoover, 117 N. W. 277, 278, 139 Iowa, 143.

To justify a reversal of a conviction on the ground of error, the error must have been of a material character, and must have deprived accused of a substantial right, the word "material" meaning something of weighty character, substantial, of consequence, not to be dispensed with. Campbell v. Territory (Ariz.) 125 Pac. 717, 721.

The words "material" and "not material" are absolutely contradictory, in that they exclude all middle ground, and together include everything thinkable. Bennett v. Ware, 61 S. E. 546, 550, 4 Ga. App. 293 (dissenting opinion by Powell, J.).

MATERIAL ALLEGATION

Under Civ. Code Prac. § 126, providing that material allegations against infants must be proved, though not denied, and section 127, defining a material allegation to be one necessary to support the action, and section 429, requiring a petition in a suit to settle a decedent's estate to state the amount of debts, the nature and value of the property of decedent, and providing that, if the personal property is insufficient to pay debts, so much of the real property as may be necessary may be sold, a sale of an entire tract before the value of the personal property had been ascertained, and before it had been ascertained, at least approximately, what the claims against decedent's estate amounted to, and without any showing that the land was indivisible, was, as to infant heirs, void. Carter v. Crow's Adm'r, 112 S. W. 1098, 1099, 130 Ky. 41.

A "material allegation" is one which is necessary for the statement or support of a cause of action or defense. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Paynter's Adm'r (Ky.) 82 S. W. 412, 413 (quoting and adopting definitions in Civ. Code Prac. § 127).

MATERIAL ALTERATION

Any alteration of a written instrument is "material," if it affects the identity of the instrument, or the rights and obligations of the parties to it. Wicker v. Jones, 74 S. E. 801, 803, 159 N. C. 102, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 69.

The test whether an instrument has been materially altered is whether the change or addition injuriously affected the complaining parties or could have under any probable circumstances enlarged their burden. Holthouse v. State, 97 N. E. 180, 182, 49 Ind. App. 178.

Whatever changes the legal effect of an instrument is a material alteration. "The test is, not whether an alteration increases or reduces a party's liability, but whether the instrument expresses the same contract—whether it will have the same legal effect and operation after the alteration as before." White v. Harris, 48 S. E. 41, 43, 69 S. C. 65, 104 Am. St. Rep. 791.

A material alteration of a written instrument is an intentional act, after it has been fully executed by one party without the consent of the other, which changes the legal effect of the instrument in any way. The cross-marking of a material provision of a written instrument, after its execution by one of the parties, without the consent of the other, with intent of erasing it, is a material alteration. O. N. Bull Remedy Co. v. Boyer, 124 N. W. 20, 21, 109 Minn. 396, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 519, 18 Ann. Cas. 413.

Under Rem. & Bal. Code, § 8514, providing that, where a negotiable instrument is materially altered without the assent of all persons liable thereon, it is avoided, except as against a party who made, authorized, or assented to the alteration and subsequent indorsers, and section 8515, providing that an alteration which changes the number or relations of the parties is a "material alteration," where, after the indorsement of a note by an accommodation party, and before it was negotiated, without his knowledge or consent, other parties signed it as maker, he was discharged of liability thereon. Handaker v. Pedersen, 128 Pac. 230, 231, 71 Wash. 218.

As a rule, any change in the personality, number, or relation of the parties to a written contract is a material alteration thereof, so as to avoid it as to the nonconsenting parties, so that the erasure of the name of one of the obligors in a contract is a material alteration. Matsch v. Jarvis (Tex.) 188 S. W. 941, 942.

The addition to a note by the payee without the knowledge of the maker of the words "with interest 6 per cent." is a material alteration of the note within Negotiable Instruments Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 38) § 206, subd. 2, declaring that any alteration changing the sum payable either for interest or principal is material. Columbia Distilling Co. v. Rech, 135 N. Y. Supp. 206, 207, 151 App. Div. 128.

It is a material alteration of an instrument to change the time from which the interest is to run, either by the insertion, alteration, or erasure of words, whether the time is thereby accelerated or delayed. Baldwin v. Haskell Nat. Bank, 133 S. W. 864, 865, 104 Tex. 122.

Where, after the delivery of a note containing an unfilled blank for the place of payment, the payee filled the blank as authorized by Code Supp. 1907, § 3060a14, such note was not within sections 3060a124 and 3060a125, providing that any alteration in the time or place of payment shall constitute a material alteration and that a material alteration will avoid the note. Johnston v. Hoover, 117 N. W. 277, 278, 139 Iowa, 143.

Whether an alteration of a note is material does not depend upon whether it increases or reduces the maker's liability, but upon whether the instrument after alteration expresses the same contract, and, if the change enlarges or lessens the liability, it is material. Commonwealth Nat. Bank of Dallas, Tex., v. Baughman, 111 Pac. 332, 333, 27 Okl. 175.

The altering of the figures in two places in an order for money, to make it read $38 instead of $30, but leaving the written amount as it originally was, was a "material alteration," tending to indicate that it was the maker's intention to pay $38, and was therefore apparently capable of effecting a fraud. White v. State, 102 S. W. 715, 716, 83 Ark. 86.

Under a statute providing that a material alteration of a negotiable instrument is one which changes the date, the sum payable, the time or place of payment, the number or relations of the parties, or the medium or currency in which payment is to be made, a valid agreement between the holder and principal debtor for an extension of time of payment is not a "material alteration" discharging an accommodation maker of a note; the statute referring to changes in the instrument itself and not the contract. Richards v. Market Exch. Bank Co., 90 N. E. 1000, 1005, 81 Ohio St. 348, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 99.

Under a statute providing that any alteration changing the date or any change which alters the effect of a negotiable instrument is a "material alteration," the drawing of a hand through the figures "1-8-9" in a note written on a blank form, dated October 24, 1892, payable one year from date, reciting that it was due October 24, 1903, and writing above the figures "1-9-0" so as to make the date October 24, 1902, was not a "material alteration," since, as the written figures control the printed ones, the alteration did not change the date. Lombardo v. Lombardini, 106 Pac. 907, 908, 57 Wash. 352, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 515.

Under Rev. St. § 3175p, declaring that a "material alteration" of a negotiable instrument consists in an alteration which changes the date, the sum payable, either for principal or interest, the time or place of payment, the number or the relation of the parties, the medium or currency in which payment is to be made, or which adds a place of payment where no place of payment was specified, or any other change or addition which alters the effect of the instrument in any respect, the term is limited to the alteration of the instrument itself and was not fulfilled by an extraneous contract between the holder and the principal maker extending the time of payment. Richards v. Market Exch. Bank Co., 90 N. E. 1000, 1005, 81 Ohio St. 348, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 99.

MATERIAL DEFENDANT

Under Code 1907, §§ 3093, 6110, providing that bills must be filed in the district in which the defendants or a material defendant reside, a material defendant being a necessary or indispensable party, the husband is the only material defendant to a suit by a wife for divorce and alimony, and hence a bill for divorce and alimony cannot be filed in a district other than that in which he resides. Puckett v. Puckett, 56 South. 585, 587, 174 Ala. 315.

A "material defendant," within the meaning of the statute, requiring that an original bill be filed in the district in which the defendants or a "material defendant" reside, has been held to be a defendant who is a necessary party, really interested in the result of the suit and against whom a decree is sought; one whose interest is antagonistic to the complainants and against whom relief is prayed. Railroad Commission of Georgia v. Palmer Hardware Co., 53 S. E. 193, 197, 124 Ga. 788 (citing Gay v. Brierfield Coal & Iron Co., 17 South. 618, 106 Ala. 615; Waddell v. Lanier, 54 Ala. 440).

MATERIAL DEGREE

One of the meanings of the term material is "in an important degree" (Webster, Dict.), and this is the meaning which would properly be attached to it as used in an instruction that a passenger on a street car could not recover if she contributed to her injury in a material degree, and hence the instruction was erroneous, because importing that there might be a degree of negligence on the part of plaintiff, contributing to the injury, which would not defeat a recovery. Root v. Des Moines Ry. Co., 98 N. W. 291, 293, 122 Iowa, 469.

The words "material degree," in an instruction, in an action for injuries, to the effect that if the plaintiff was injured as the direct result of defendant's negligence, and was "in no manner or to any material degree negligent himself, or in no manner or to any extent contributed to his own injury," he was entitled to recover, related to the amount of care required, and not to the extent of contribution to the injury by reason of failure to exercise such care, and hence the instruction was not erroneous. Camp v. Chicago Great Western Ry. Co., 99 N. W. 735, 738, 124 Iowa, 238.

MATERIAL DEPARTURE

On September 25th the court ordered the issuance of a venire of 150 names, returnable on October 5th, and names to that number were regularly drawn and the venire issued. On September 30th, the court vacated the order of September 25th, and directed that the names in the venire then in process of being served be restored to the trial jury box, and that 150 names be drawn from the trial jury box, and a venire issued for those persons to attend October 7th to complete the panel in the case; seven jurors having been passed. Thereafter on the same date the 150 names were returned to the box, and the judge and clerk of court drew therefrom 150 names to complete the panel, and a venire was issued to serve the names so drawn. Held that, conceding irregularity, there was not a "material departure" from the forms provided by statute, expressly made ground for challenge to the panel by Comp. Laws Nev. § 4288; "material departures" being only such as affect the substantial rights of a defendant in securing an impartial jury. State v. Jackman, 104 Pac. 13, 14, 16, 31 Nev. 511.

MATERIAL EVIDENCE OR TESTIMONY

Testimony of the accused, in a bastardy proceeding, that he had not had sexual intercourse with the complainant, held, to be "material" on his indictment for perjury, although he had also sworn that he was not the father of the child. State v. Brown, 79 N. C. 642, 643.

False testimony is "material," so as to be the subject of an assignment for perjury, when it is such as to be substantially important and to have influence on the issues, especially as distinguished from a mere formal requirement, and capable of properly influencing the result of the trial. People v. Schweichler, 117 Pac. 939, 940, 16 Cal. App. 738.

In Code Civ. Proc. § 870 et seq., and general rule of practice 82, requiring, for the examination of an adverse party before trial, a showing by affidavit that the testimony is material and necessary, the words "material" and "necessary" are not used synonymously, even if the word "necessary" does not mean indispensable to the making of an issue. Koplin v. Hoe, 108 N. Y. Supp. 602, 603, 123 App. Div. 827.

An instruction that the burden of proof was on plaintiff, and that she could not recover until she showed the facts by a preponderance or a material part of the evidence, was error because not the equivalent of a "preponderance." St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Woodruff, 115 S. W. 953, 956, 89 Ark. 9.

MATERIAL FACT

A fact is "material" to the risk assumed by an underwriter when it would have caused him to have refused the risk if known or would have been a reason for his demanding a higher premium. Where an affidavit of defense, in an action on a policy of insurance issued by a company which insured married women, alleged that the fact that insured was pregnant was material but did not allege in what way it was material nor that the insurer would have refused the risk or increased the premium if that fact had been known, the affidavit was insufficient. McCaffrey v. Knights & Ladies of Columbia, 63 Atl. 189, 213 Pa. 609.

The law of England, as of other countries, requires an applicant for marine insurance to make a full disclosure of all the material facts known to him at the time affecting the risk which the insurer is to assume, but he is not required to disclose facts unknown to him at the time, nor immaterial facts, nor matters of common and general knowledge among those engaged in the insurance business at the place of the contract. "Material facts" are only such as are likely to influence the mind of a reasonable underwriter in deciding whether to accept the risk and in fixing the rate of premium to be charged, and the question of materiality is one of fact to be decided upon consideration of all the circumstances and conditions affecting the transaction. Northwestern S. S. Co. v. Maritime Ins. Co., 161 Fed. 166, 178.

The existence of an unfiled chattel mortgage on a stock of goods as security for a guaranty of a debt of the mortgagor is a fact material to the risk in a contract to insure goods, though the instrument contains a clause that it shall not be valid until filed. Where an unfiled chattel mortgage on the stock of goods exists, and the applicant for insurance, when asked whether the property is mortgaged or incumbered, answers in the negative, it is a concealment of a material fact, within a policy providing that it shall be void if insured had concealed or misrepresented any material fact concerning the insurance, and avoids the contract. Madsen v.

Farmers' & Merchants' Ins. Co., 126 N. W. 1086, 1088, 87 Neb. 107, 29 L. R. A. (N. S.) 97, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 985.

As used in the law relating to fraud, requiring that false representations, in order to be actionable must relate to "material facts," means a fact or facts necessarily having some bearing on the value of the subject of the negotiation. Champion Funding & Foundry Co. v. Heskett, 102 S. W. 1050, 1054, 125 Mo. App. 516.

Under the rule that the jury may reject the whole or any part of a witness' testimony if they believe such witness has sworn falsely as to any material fact, by the term "material fact" is meant any fact which tends to prove or disprove the defendant's guilt or innocence. State v. McCarver, 92 S. W. 684, 687, 194 Mo. 717.

During a trial to a jury the legal sufficiency of the "material facts"—i. e., the facts constituting a part of plaintiff's case as he presents it—put in issue by allegations of the complaint and denials of the answer, cannot be questioned. Elie v. C. Cowles & Co., 73 Atl. 258, 259, 82 Conn. 236.

Where a person conducting a business requiring a license, but who is not alleged to be the owner of one, pays money to a person not shown to have any official relation to the bureau of licenses of New York, or to any person employed in such bureau, such fact is not "material" within Pen. Code N. Y. § 96, relating to perjury on an investigation under Greater New York Charter, § 119 (Laws 1901, p. 46, c. 466), by the commissioner of accounts, into the methods of the office of said bureau. People v. Tillman, 118 N. Y. Supp. 442, 63 Misc. Rep. 461.

MATERIAL FRAUD

The term "material," in the phrase "that fraud to be actionable must be material," means that without the fraud the transaction would not have been made, and means a statement of an alleged existing fact or facts, and not merely of some future or contingent event, or an expression of opinion, and the person to whom the statement is made must rely on its truth and must have the right as a person of ordinary business prudence to rely on it. Boulden v. Stilwell, 60 Atl. 609, 610, 100 Md. 543, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 258.

MATERIAL MATTER

Only contradictory statements as to "material matters" can be used for the purpose of impeachment, and by "material matters" are meant matters competent to prove one side or the other of the issue, and admissible for that purpose. Luke v. Cannon, 62 S. E. 110, 112, 4 Ga. App. 538.

False testimony by defendant, in a civil suit in support of a set-off for money loaned, that no negotiable note was given or accepted therefor, is testimony "to a material matter," within Rev. St. c. 123, § 1, and is perjury. Where a person charged with perjury because he set up a claim for money loaned in defense to an action by way of set-off, and testified in support of it, and the testimony was false, the fact that he need not have done so, because of another available defense, did not make the claim immaterial matter. State v. Berliawsky, 76 Atl. 938, 939, 106 Me. 506.

The words "material matter," as used in Rev. St. § 5392, which denounces as perjury the stating or subscribing to any material matter which the person does not believe to be true after he has taken oath, etc., apply to nonjudicial matters in the same general sense as to judicial matters and import some issue or right to which the oath relates rather than to a mere inquiry or investigation to be made for the detection of violations of law by third persons, and as the requirement of Oleomargarine Act May 2, 1902, § 6, that wholesale dealers shall keep such books and render such returns as the commissioner of internal revenue may, by regulation, require under prescribed penalties for its violation, has no relation to the tax to be assessed on such dealer, it is not such a "material matter" that a false return will support a prosecution for perjury though an oath is required thereto. United States v. Lamson, 165 Fed. 80, 84.

MATERIAL MISREPRESENTATION

A misrepresentation, as the basis of rescission, must be material; but it can be material only when it is of such a character that, if it had not been made, the contract would not have been entered into. The misrepresentation, it is true, need not be the sole cause of the contract; but it must be of such nature, weight, and force that the court can say, "Without it the contract would not have been made." Oppenheimer v. Clunie, 75 Pac. 899, 901, 142 Cal. 313 (citing Colton v. Stanford, 23 Pac. 16, 28, 82 Cal. 351, 399, 16 Am. St. Rep. 137).

Whether a misrepresentation is material to the risk essential to make the same available as a defense to a policy, as provided by Act Pa. June 23, 1885 (P. L. 184), depends on whether it was of such substantial importance that the insurer, but for the misrepresentation, would not have made the contract. Miller v. Maryland Casualty Co., 193 Fed. 343, 349, 113 C. C. A. 267.

MATERIAL PARTICULAR

In Code Supp. 1907, § 3060a14, providing that, where a negotiable instrument is wanting in any "material particular," the person in possession has prima facie authority to complete it by filling up the blank therein, etc., the word "material" was not used as synonymous with "necessary" so as to restrict the right to filling in an omission essential to the completion of a negotiable instrument, but included all omitted matter usually found in such instruments, and where a negotiable note was delivered to the payee complete, except for the filling of a blank left for the place of payment, the payee had prima facie authority, before indorsing it to a bona fide holder for value before maturity, to fill the blank so as to make the note payable at a place other than that where the maker resided. Johnston v. Hoover, 117 N. W. 277, 278, 139 Iowa, 143.

MATERIAL PORTION OF WILL

In Civ. Code 1910, § 3919, providing that the intention to cancel a will will be presumed from the obliteration or canceling of a material portion of the will, "material" does not mean essential, but means important; more or less necessary; having influence or effect; going to the merits; having to do with matter, as distinguished from form. Hartz v. Sobel, 71 S. E. 995, 1001, 136 Ga. 565, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 797, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 165.

MATERIAL REPRESENTATION

The word "material," as used in 2 Revisal, § 4646, providing that no representation, unless "material," shall prevent a recovery on an insurance policy, is not restricted to a misrepresentation as to a defect which contributes in some way to the loss or damage for which the indemnity is claimed, but a representation is "material" where it would naturally affect the judgment of the insurer in accepting the risk. "Every fact untruly asserted or wrongfully suppressed must be regarded as 'material' if the knowledge or ignorance of it would naturally influence the judgment of the underwriter in making the contract at all, or in estimating the degree and character of the risk, or in fixing the rate of premium." Fishblate v. Fidelity & Casualty Co., 53 S. E. 354, 356, 140 N. C. 589.

Within the meaning of Ky. St. § 639, providing that no representations in an application for an insurance policy, unless "material" or fraudulent, shall prevent recovery, a representation is material when the policy would not have been issued if the truth had been known. United States Casualty Co. v. Campbell, 146 S. W. 1121, 1123, 148 Ky. 554.

A statement in an application for life insurance that applicant had never had any disease of the kidneys is a "material representation" within Rev. N. C. 1905, § 4808, as such representation undoubtedly influenced the action of the company in accepting the risk. Alexander v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 64 S. E. 432, 433, 150 N. C. 536.

The assured's statement of his age, even though not a warranty, is, as a matter of law, a material representation in an application for an accident insurance policy. Gen- tral Acc. Ins. Co. v. Spence, 126 Ill. App. 32, 45.

A statement that insured had never had cancer is a statement material to the risk, and its falsity a good defense to the policy. Brisou v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (Ky.) 115 S. W. 785, 786.

"Representations" of the seller of a cash register that the same will save the expense of a bookkeeper, and that books can be kept thereupon in half the time that the books could otherwise be kept, and that the machine can be operated by any one of ordinary intelligence, are not "representations as to material facts," and, though false, are not ground for a rescission by the buyer of the contract of sale. National Cash Register Co. v. Townsend Grocery Store, 50 S. E. 306, 307, 137 N. C. 652, 50 S. E. 306, 70 L. R. A. 349.

MATERIAL RIGHT

The right of a defendant to challenge peremptorily is a "material right." Betts v. United States, 182 Fed. 228, 229, 235, 65 C. C. A. 452.

MATERIAL VARIANCE

A variance is not "material" unless it is so misleading as to prejudice the party in maintaining his action or defense on the merits. Ostrom v. Woodbury, 122 Pac. 825, 827.

A complaint by an injured brakeman alleged that the engineer negligently, and without any warning, applied the steam, and violently jerked the slack out of the train, causing plaintiff to miss his footing, whereby he was thrown between the cars, etc., and that when the engineer started the train he was working on top in the act of stepping from one car to another, and that as the train was started and the cars were jerked apart he fell between them and was injured. Held, that there was no variance between the complaint and evidence that the engineer started the train at a high rate of speed, and that if there was it was immaterial, in view of Revisal 1905, § 515, providing no variance shall be deemed material unless the adverse party is actually misled to his prejudice in suing on the merits. Coore v. Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co., 68 S. E. 210, 152 N. C. 702.

The variance between an indictment charging the forgery of a deed of trust set out according to its tenor, and the deed of trust offered in evidence, consisting of clerical inaccuracies, such as describing the land in one instrument as "eighty (80) acres" and in the other as "80 acres," the use of the words "party of the first part" in one instrument and the words "first party" in the other, and the word "falls" in one instrument and the word "failed" in the other, is immaterial within Rev. St. 1900, § 5114, providing that variance between the indictment and the evidence in specified cases shall not be ground for an acquittal unless the court shall find that the variance is material and prejudicial to the defense. State v. Witherspoon, 133 S. W. 323, 326, 281 Mo. 706.

The variance between an information alleging a sale to "F. H. Leslie" and the evidence of a sale to "Frank W. Leslie" is not material or prejudicial, within Comp. St. 1910, § 6166, forbidding an acquittal for a variance, unless found by the court to be "material" to the merits or "prejudicial" to defendant. Eggart v. State, 116 Pac. 454, 455, 19 Wyo. 285.

Plaintiff alleged that while she was a passenger in defendant's cab defendant negligently so managed its team and cab that the team took fright and ran with the cab, and, on account thereof, she was thrown down in the cab, and was injured in her ankle, back, etc. The answer was a general denial, with the plea of contributory negligence. Plaintiff introduced evidence without objection showing that, after she entered the cab, the team became frightened and started to run with the cab, but the testimony did not show whether the injury was caused by being thrown from her seat to the floor of the cab or while trying to get out of the cab while the team was running away, her testimony showing that she made an attempt to get out of the cab while the team was running, and that her injury might have been caused thereby. Rev. St. 1899, § 656 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 674), provides that, when the variance between pleading and the proof is not material, the court may direct the facts to be found according to the evidence, or may order an immediate amendment without costs. Held, that the variance between the allegation that she was injured by being thrown down in the cab and the evidence that she was injured while attempting to get out of the cab was immaterial, and that defendant by failing to object to the testimony waived his objection to it, so that a charge forbidding recovery if plaintiff was injured while attempting to get out of the cab while the team was running away was error. Daley v. Redburn, 127 S. W. 924, 925, 143 Mo. App. 653.

In an action against a carrier to recover for the death of one alleged to have been a passenger, there can be no recovery on the ground of ordinary negligence of defendant in injuring a person not a passenger. Where a complaint alleged that plaintiff's decedent at the time of his negligent killing by defendant carrier was in the discharge of his duties as a railway mail clerk, a recovery may be had, though the evidence establishes that decedent at the time of the fatal accident was not in the discharge of his duties as a mail clerk, but was a gratuitous passenger, as a carrier owes the same degree of care in the transportation of a gratuitous passenger as in the case of a passenger for hire; and hence the variance was not material within the meaning of Comp. Laws 1907, §§ 3001-3006, providing that no variance between the allegations and the proof is to be deemed material unless it has actually misled the adverse party to his prejudice. Schuyler v. Southern Pac. Co., 109 Pac. 458, 465, 37 Utah, 581.

The variance between a complaint setting forth a cause of action on an open, current, and mutual account, and the proof of a stated account, was immaterial within Code Civ. Proc. § 469, providing that no variance between the pleading and the proof shall be deemed material unless it has actually misled the adverse party, where defendant was not misled as disclosed by his answer in denying the existence of the account made a part of the complaint, but merely tendering an issue on the question whether the account was mutual, open, and current between himself and plaintiff's assignor. Culver v. Newhart, 123 Pac. 975, 978, 18 Cal. App. 614.

MATERIALITY

The test of "materiality" is whether the statement made could have influenced the tribunal upon the question at issue before it. Any statements made in a judicial proceeding for the purpose of affecting the decision, and upon which the judge acts, are material. McLaren v. State, 62 S. E. 138, 139, 4 Ga. App. 643 (citing 6 Words and Phrases, pp. 5309, 5310).

MATERIALLY

"Materially" is defined in Black's Law Dictionary as "immediately; more or less necessary; having influence or effect; going to the merits; having to do with matter as distinguished from form." An instruction that one may recover for injury, the proximate result of the negligence of another, providing he himself did not contribute thereto materially by negligence, is not erroneous because of the use of the word "materially." Indianapolis & M. Rapid Transit Co. v. Edwards, 74 N. E. 533, 534, 36 Ind. App. 202.

A court may at any time correct a judgment as to immaterial matters occasioned by inadvertence; but this right does not exist where such amendment materially affects the rights of litigants objecting thereto, using the word "materially" to mean affecting the rights of objecting litigants. Calkins v. Monroe, 119 Pac. 680, 17 Cal. App. 324.

In instructing upon a city's liability for damage to property by the overflow of a stream by changing the grade of a street, it is usual to instruct that the volume of water must have been "materially and unduly" increased; "unduly" meaning disproportionately, and not being synonymous with "materially." Walters v. City of Marshalltown, 120 N. W. 1046, 1048, 145 Iowa, 457, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 199.

The error, if any, in the admission of a deposition, on the ground that the party offering it had failed to show the nonresidence of the witness, was harmless; where his testimony only tended to prove a fact otherwise established by competent and uncontroverted evidence, and the error did not "materially" affect the merits of the action, and the court could not, under Rev. St. 1899, § 865, reverse the judgment on that ground. O'Keefe v. United Rys. Co. of St. Louis, 101 S. W. 1144, 1147, 124 Mo. App. 618.

MATERIALLY FALSE STATEMENT

A bankrupt, who obtained credit for additional goods on a materially false statement of his financial condition, and who subsequently to the purchase of the additional goods on credit made payments on earlier purchases, so that the amount owed by him at the time he went into bankruptcy was less than the amount of his indebtedness at the time of the making of the false statement, was guilty of making a materially false statement, defeating his right to a discharge in bankruptcy; under Bankruptcy Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 14b, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 4. In re Arenson, 195 Fed. 600, 610.

A "materially false statement," within the meaning of Bankr. Act 1898, § 14b (3) (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 550, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 4, 32 Stat. 797), which makes it a ground for denying a discharge to a bankrupt that he has obtained property on credit from any person on a materially false statement in writing made to such person for the purpose of obtaining such property on credit, must have been made with knowledge that it was untrue and with fraudulent intent; and a statement made by one partner from facts stated to him by his copartner, who was to furnish the entire capital for the business, although in fact untrue, will not defeat the right of the partner making it to a discharge, where the untruthfulness of the material statements so made was not known to him. W. S. Peck Co. v. Lowenbein, 178 Fed. 178, 180, 101 C. C. A. 498.

The term "materially false statements in writing," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 14b, subd. 3, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 4, which bars a discharge where the bankrupt obtained property on credit from any person on "a materially false statement in writing" made for the purpose of obtaining such property on credit, implies a statement knowingly false or made recklessly without an honest belief in its truth, and with a purpose to mislead or deceive and thereby obtain property upon credit from the person to whom it is made. Drafts drawn by the assistant cashier of a bankrupt, operating a private bank, after he was insolvent and without his knowledge, and which were not paid in accord with the bankrupt's custom to exchange drafts with another bank on daily settlements, do not constitute a "materially" false statement in writing within the bankruptcy act. Firestone v. Harvey, 174 Fed. 574, 577.

MATERIALMAN

The mechanic's lien act of 1883 (Acts 1883, p. 140, c. 115) and amendments thereto (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, §§ 8295-8307; Burns' Ann. St. 1901, §§ 7255-7267), giving a lien to "mechanics, laborers, and materialmen," does not give a lien to contractors or subcontractors. Fleming v. Greener, 87 N. E. 719, 90 N. E. 73, 75, 173 Ind. 260, 140 Am. St. Rep. 254, 21 Ann. Cas. 959.

The term "materialman" does include a subcontractor who excavated the cellar of a building with his teams and laborers at a specified price per cubic yard. McNab & Harlin Mfg. Co. v. Paterson Bldg. Co. (N. J.) 63 Atl. 709, 717.

Lien Law (Laws 1897, p. 516, c. 418) § 2, defines a "subcontractor" as one who enters into a contract for the improvement of real property with a contractor, and defines a "materialman" as any person other than a contractor who furnishes material for the improvement. Held, that one agreeing with contractor to install a system of temperature regulation in a building, involving both the performance of labor and furnishing of materials, was a subcontractor within the statute. A company which merely sold steam radiators to the contractors, but performed no work on the building, was a "materialman," and not a "subcontractor," within Lien Law (Laws 1897, p. 516, c. 418) § 2, defining those terms. Herman & Grace v. City of New York, 114 N. Y. Supp. 1107, 1112, 180 App. Div. 531.

A written order for oak flooring, placed with defendant by the general contractor, contained the words "Charge contract 1,981—C-5," and another order to defendant recited that it covered the furnishing and delivery at the owner's switch of oak flooring for a contract known in the contractor's office as "1,981," which was the contract between the general contractor and the owner. Lien Law (Laws 1897, p. 515, c. 418) § 2, defines a "subcontractor" as one who enters into a contract with a contractor for the improvement of real property, and defines a "materialman" as any person other than a contractor who furnishes material for such improvement. Held, that defendant was a materialman, and not a subcontractor; the mere knowledge that the material was used by the contractor in the performance of a certain contract being insufficient to make him a subcontractor. Hedden Const. Co. v. Proctor & Gamble Co., 114 N. Y. Supp. 1103, 1106, 62 Misc. Rep. 129.

Where complainant contracted with defendant, the owner of certain premises, to furnish mining machinery, appliances, and materials, and install the same in a mill to be erected at defendant's mines and constructed by defendant, without any other contractor, he was an original contractor, and not a "materialman," within Cutting's Comp. Laws Neb., § 3885, and therefore was entitled to 60 days within which to file his claim for a lien. Salt Lake Hardware Co. v. Chainman Mining & Electric Co., 128 Fed. 509, 510.

Under Laws N. Y. 1897, p. 514, c. 418, § 3, giving a lien to a "contractor, subcontractor, laborer, or materialman, who performs labor or furnishes material for the improvement of real property," the terms "contractor," "subcontractor," "laborer," and "materialman," while they refer primarily to the man who has a formal contract with the owner, or a subcontractor, with the contractor, or who performs manual labor or furnished material, also embrace the man who buys the labor and material which enter into the improvement. Kerwin v. Post, 104 N. Y. Supp. 1005, 1007, 120 App. Div. 179.

A contract for the carpenter work of a building required "Davis or other equal steel stiffeners" for window frames. The contractor sublet the contract for the installation of the window frames, and relator agreed to furnish, but not to install, the stiffeners in accordance with measurements furnished him by the subcontractor, and not in accordance with the specifications of the original contract. Held, that relator was a "materialman," and not a subcontractor, and was therefore entitled to recover on the contractor's bond given under Comp. Laws, §§ 10743-10745, requiring contractors of public buildings to give security for the payment of material furnished therefor. People, for Use of Davis, v. Campfield, 114 N. W. 659, 660, 150 Mich. 675.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1183, provides that contracts between the owner and the contractor for improvements exceeding $1,000 in cost shall be in writing and filed in the office of the county recorder, otherwise the contract shall be void, and no recovery shall be had thereon by either party. Plaintiff contracted with a lessee to raise a number of old buildings above the street level and remodel them, and "furnish all of the necessary labor and material to be used to fully complete the work," plaintiff to receive the actual cost of the materials and labor, plus 10 per cent and the reasonable value of the work, to be determined by the amount of work and labor done when it was completed. Held, that the labor to be performed was not merely incidental to the furnishing of the materials, and hence plaintiff was an original contractor within the meaning of the statute, and not a materialman, and was not entitled to a mechanic's lien where the contract was not in writing and filed with the county recorder; the fact that the contract did not specify the price or total value of the labor and materials not excusing the parties from reducing it to writing, it being apparent that the cost of the work would exceed $1,000. Peterson v. Freidermuth, 121 Pac. 299, 300, 17 Cal. App. 609.

One contracting with the agent of the owner erecting a building for decorative plaster work, supplying both labor and material, is not a materialman within Rem. & Bal. Code, § 1133, requiring a materialman to send to the owner a duplicate statement of the materials furnished to the contractor, which only covers a situation where three persons are involved, and where the owner has no contractual relation with the one furnishing materials.

A materialman who delivers materials to the owner under a contract with him through his agent need not send to the owner the duplicate statement required by Rem. & Bal. Code, § 1133. Architectural Decorating Co. v. Nicklason, 119 Pac. 177, 66 Wash. 198.

Under Lien Law (Consol. Laws, c. 33) § 2, defining a contractor as one entering into a contract with the owner of real property for the improvement thereof, and defining a materialman as any person other than the contractor furnishing materials for such improvement, and defining the term "improvement" as including the erection, alteration, or repair of any structure on real estate, and any work done on the property or materials furnished for its improvement, a contract requiring one to furnish all the window frames, sash, glass, and trim in and to buildings in course of construction for a lump sum, payable in installments as the work progressed, and requiring him to make a large part of the materials according to plans, is a contract for the permanent improvement of real estate within the lien law, and he is entitled to a lien for the materials furnished and work done. Western Sash, Door & Lumber Co. v. Gaul Const. Co., 126 N. Y. Supp. 1110, 1111.

One furnishing to a contractor sashes, doors, and glass for a building is not a subcontractor, but is a "materialman," within Laws 1909, c. 45, requiring persons furnishing materials to a contractor to deliver to the owner a duplicate statement of such materials. Finlay v. Tagholm, 113 Pac. 1083, 1084, 62 Wash. 341.

Code Civ. Proc. § 3414, makes a laborer's or materialman's lien prior to a contractor's. Lien Law (Consol. Laws, c. 33) § 2, defines a "contractor" as one who contracts with an owner of land to improve it, a "materialman" as one, other than a contractor, who furnishes material for such improvement, and an "improvement" as including work done on property or "materials furnished for its permanent improvement." Held, that the lien of one who installed plumbing, of one who furnished trim for the building under contract with the owner, and of one who sold brick and mason's building materials to the owner for use in the building, are all on equality, being entitled to preference in the order of time. Jackson v. Egan, 94 N. E. 211, 200 N. Y. 496.

Laws 1909, c. 207, § 1, requires any municipal council contracting for city work to take from the contractor a bond with sureties for the performance of the contract, and for the payment of all subcontractors and materialmen. Section 2 provides that a failure to require such bond shall make the city liable to the persons mentioned in section 1. Held, that the statute requiring municipal corporations to take such bonds from its contractors is an independent enactment, and that Mechanic's Lien Law (Laws 1909, c. 45) § 1, providing that the materialman should deliver or mail to the owner of property a duplicate statement of the material furnished or contracted for, had no application. Gate City Lumber Co. v. City of Montezano, 111 Pac. 799, 800, 60 Wash. 586.

One who furnished galvanized iron and solder to a manufacturer, which was made by the latter into guttering and spouting, and delivered to a contractor, for a building, was not a "materialman" within the meaning of a condition of the contractor's contract and bond requiring him to satisfy the claims of laborers and "materialmen." Berger Mfg. Co. v. Lloyd, 91 S. W. 468, 469, 113 Mo. App. 205.

Under Lien Law, Laws 1897, p. 515, c. 418, § 2, defining a materialman to be one other than a contractor who furnishes materials for an improvement, persons who contracted directly with the owner, though solely to furnish materials, are original independent contractors, and not "materialmen," entitled to a preference under section 13. Hall v. Thomas, 111 N. Y. Supp. 979, 982.

Materialman, as used in Mechanics' Lien Law (P. L. 1898, p. 538), is not limited to one who has furnished materials only, that is, who simply supplies to the building materials which some one else is to incorporate by his labor, but includes as well one who furnishes both labor and materials combined, or who furnishes materials installed in the building, including the labor of installation. Beckhard v. Rudolph, 68 Atl. 705, 706, 68 N. J. Eq. 740.

Subcontractors, such as plumbers, plasterers, and painters, who supply the material and put it into the building, are not "materialmen" within the meaning of Laws 1898, p. 538, c. 226, § 3, providing that when a contractor shall refuse to pay any person who has furnished materials for the erection of a building, for which contract has been filed, it shall be the duty of such "materialman" to give written notice, etc., in order to procure a lien. Beckhard v. Rudolph, 59 Atl. 253, 255, 63 N. J. Eq. 815.

Under the lien laws, generally, "material" is deemed to be something that goes into, and becomes a part of the finished structure, such as lumber, nails, glass, hardware, etc., which are necessary to the completion of a building. Gilbert Hunt Co. v. Parry, 110 Pac. 541, 543, 59 Wash. 646, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 225.

The word "material," as used in a statute declaring that every person furnishing materials has a lien thereon for the same, has a well defined and understood legal significance. It is deemed to be something that goes into and becomes a part of the finished structure, such as lumber, nails, glass, hardware, and a thousand other things that might be meant, which are necessary to the completed erection of a building or structure. Webster defines the word as the substance or matter of which anything is made or may be made. The word supplied is broader than the word "materials," but it cannot by any fair construction be construed so as to include materials furnished. Tsutakawa v. Kumamoto, 101 Pac. 869, 870, 871, 53 Wash. 231.

"Materials," within Lien Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 33) § 5, giving a lien for materials furnished to a municipal contractor, means matter intended to be used in the creation of a mechanical structure; the substance of which anything is made (citing Words and Phrases Judicially Defined). People ex rel. Troy Public Works Co. v. City of Yonkers, 129 N. Y. Supp. 920, 921, 145 App. Div. 527.

The word "materials," in a bond of a government contractor under a contract for the construction of a sewer, conditioned, as required by act of Congress, on his making payment to all persons supplying him "labor and materials" in the prosecution of the work, does not include posts, lumber, and gravel furnished him; the same being equipments used in the performance of the contract. United States to Use of Lanham v. Jacoby (Del.) 61 Atl. 871, 5 Penns. Will, 576.

"Material" is the substance or matter of which anything is made or to be made. The enumeration in paragraph 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, of "other borate material," refers only to borate materials found in nature in a raw condition, such as the "borates of lime or soda" included in the same provision, and does not embrace borate of man-ganese, or bormangan, which is a manufactured article made from manganese and borates of lime or soda, and which is held to be dutiable as a chemical compound or salt under paragraph 3 of said act. Hempstead v. Thomas, 129 Fed. 907, 908, 64 C. C. A. 339.

The word "material" has a well defined and understood legal significance. Under the lien laws generally "material" is deemed to be something that goes into and becomes a part of the finished structure, such as lumber, nails, glass, hardware, and a thousand other things that might be mentioned, which are necessary to the complete creation of a building. Webster's definition of "material" is "the substance or matter of which anything is made or may be made." Material has not the same significance as provisions, which is defined by Webster as a stock of food collected or stored, and Laws 1893, p. 32, c. 24, § 1, entitled "An act creating and providing for the enforcement of liens for labor and material," whereby a lien is given for provisions furnished to a contractor on a railroad, etc., is void, under Const. art. 2, § 19, providing that no bill shall embrace more than one subject, which shall be expressed in the title. Armour & Co. v. Western Construction Co., 78 Pac. 1106, 1107, 36 Wash. 529.

Act Aug. 13, 1894, c. 280, 28 Stat. 278, requires a contractor for a public building to give bond to promptly pay for all labor and materials supplied to him for the work. A contract provided that the contractor should furnish "materials for the construction of" certain buildings for the United States government, "all in accordance with the plans and specifications" made a part of the agreement. The condition of the contractor's bond was for performance of the covenants and agreements in the contract and for the prompt payment for all labor or materials supplied to the contractor for the work. Held, that the bond contained two distinct covenants, one for the performance of the contract and the other for the protection of persons supplying labor and materials, and the latter should be interpreted in the light of the former, and the meaning of the "materials" in the bond should be ascertained from the contract, including the specifications, construed in view of the work to be performed and in the light of the circumstances surrounding the transaction. United States, to Use of Elias Lyman Coal Co., v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 71 Atl. 1106, 1107, 82 Vt. 94.

Rev. Laws, c. 104, § 1, authorizing certain cities, for the prevention of fire, to regulate the inspection, materials, construction, alteration, and use of buildings, does not authorize an ordinance prohibiting reshingling of a roof, since the section does not comprehend repairs; the word "construction" being used to mean the erection of a new building or an addition to an old one, the word "alteration," to denote a change or substitution in a particular of one part of a building for a building different in that particular, the word "use" indicating the purpose for which the building may be occupied, and the word "materials" being a word of general signification, and necessarily ancillary to the other more definite terms employed in the statute. Commonwealth v. Hayden, 97 N. E. 783, 784, 211 Mass. 296.

Appliances

There is a wide distinction between "material" and "appliance." The term "appliance" refers to machinery and all the instruments used in operating it. "Materials" include everything of which anything is made. A master must use ordinary care in instructing a servant as to the use of materials furnished and is only required to use ordinary care in furnishing materials to be manufactured. Gallman v. Union Hardware Mfg. Co., 48 S. E. 524, 525, 65 S. C. 192 (citing in support of definition Bodie v. Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co., 39 S. E. 715, 61 S. C. 480).

Electrical appliances furnished to a light and power plant are not "materials," within Revisal 1905, § 2016, giving a lien for materials furnished in the erection and repair of buildings, where none of the appliances ever became any part of the plant, and where transformers and wires supplied were merely strung on electric light poles. Fulp & Linville v. Kernersville Light & Power Co., 72 S. E. 869, 157 N. C. 157.

Architect's plans and specifications

Plans and specifications drawn by an architect for the erection of a building are not "materials," within the purview of Revisal 1905, § 2016, giving a mechanic's lien upon buildings for materials furnished. Stephens v. Hicks, 72 S. E. 313, 315, 156 N. C. 239, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 354, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 272.

Castings

Iron castings from 10 to 24 feet in length, known as "sill castings or channels," were furnished to a tobacco company with the necessary bolts for use in its factories, to support tobacco presses. Most of them were used for supporting presses or tables connected therewith, without being fastened to the floor and without being put under all the presses. Some were used for other purposes, such as skids, and "dunnage"; that is, were put under goods to raise them above the floor. Those under presses and tables could be readily removed, and were in fact taken from one building to another. There was no proof that they were customarily thus placed in tobacco factories, or were in any way necessary to carry on the work, or that it could not be done as well without them. Held, that the castings were not "material" or "machinery," within Rev. St. 1899, § 4203 (Ann. St. 1906, p. 2277), giving a lien to a person furnishing the same for a building. Banner Iron Works v. Aetna Iron Works, 122 S. W. 762, 763, 143 Mo. App. 1.

Coal and oil

Coal used by a building contractor to heat buildings, covered by specifications requiring him to provide fuel for heating while the work is going on, is "material," within the implied terms of the contract, which he is bound to furnish, and hence within the scope of his bond, required by the federal statute (Act Aug. 13, 1894, c. 280, 28 Stat. 278), for the protection of persons supplying materials. United States, for Use of Elias Lyman Coal Co., v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 75 Atl. 280, 281, 88 Vt. 278.

A contract with the United States government to furnish all labor and materials necessary for buildings at a fort provided that all materials should be subject to the acceptance or rejection of an officer in charge, and any material rejected should be at once removed and replaced by the contractor. The contractor gave bond for performance of the contract and for the prompt payment for all labor or materials supplied to him for the work, as expressly required by Act Aug. 13, 1894, c. 280, 28 Stat. 278. Held, that coal furnished for use in the heating plants and in certain of the buildings for heating purposes while work of plastering, laying floors, painting, and varnishing was being done was not "materials" within the bond or the statute. United States, to Use of Elias Lyman Coal Co., v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 71 Atl. 1106, 1108, 82 Vt. 94.

Where a contractor for the construction of a water reservoir for a city entered into a bond conditioned that all claims for labor and materials furnished and supplied or performed in and about the work should be promptly paid, the signers of the bond were not liable on a claim for coal furnished to a subcontractor and used in generating steam to run a steam shovel and locomotive used in making excavations. City of Philadelphia v. Malone, 63 Atl. 539, 541, 214 Pa. 90.

Consumable supplies furnished to a vessel, such as gasoline for a motor boat, are not, within Code Pub. Gen. Laws Md. 1904, art. 63, § 43, giving a lien on domestic vessels "for materials furnished or work done in the building, repairing or equipping the same." The Princess, 185 Fed. 218, 219.

A claim against a railroad for furnishing coal and oil and tools was not within Sayles, Rev. Civ. St. art. 3294, giving a lien to the furnisher of "material" for the construction or repair of a railroad. Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. United States & Mexican Trust Co., 99 S. W. 212, 214, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 397.

A person furnishing coal consumed in the operation of a steam shovel used by a contractor in the construction of a railroad is not entitled to a lien on the right of way and franchises of the railroad company, under Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 7265, giving such lien for labor or "materials" used in the construction or repair of any railroad. Cincinnati, R. & M. R. v. Shera, 73 N. E. 293, 86 Ind. App. 315.

"Materials," as used in a statute giving a lien on the property of railroads for materials furnished in the construction of the road, does not include gasoline, gasoline torches, and coal oil used for lighting a railroad tunnel while in process of construction, packing, cotton waste, electric light supplies, carts, tools, shovels, spades, blacksmith tools, wagons, scrapers, plows, machines, machinery, derricks, derrick crabs, cables, and repairs for all these. The test is not whether the article furnished was consumed in its use, either instantly, as in case of explosives, or by degrees from long and hard use. If lien is allowed for tools and machinery, and horses and mules, for complete destruction, on the same principal it should be allowed for deterioration in value pro tanto, when not completely destroyed. S. B. Luttrell & Co. v. Knoxville, L. & J. R. Co., 105 S. W. 565, 571, 119 Tenn. 492.

Dump cars and derricks

Dump cars and derricks are in the nature of tools and appliances used by a contractor for his own convenience in executing the contract and are not "materials" within the provision of a contractor's bond. City of Philadelphia v. Malone, 63 Atl. 539, 540, 214 Pa. 90 (citing United States v. Morgan, 111 Fed. 474).

A claim for rental of scrapers is neither for "labor performed" nor "material furnished," within Ballinger's Ann. Codes & St. § 5802, giving one who, at the owner's request, grades, etc., land or a street in front thereof, a lien for the labor performed and the materials furnished. Hall v. Cowen, 98 Pac. 670, 671, 51 Wash. 295.

Engine

Under Revisal N. O. 1905, § 2016, which gives a lien on a vessel for all debts contracted "for work done on the same or material furnished," one who furnished an engine to be installed in a gas boat, relying on the credit of the vessel, is entitled to a lien therefor as "material," on compliance with the statute as to recording; and it is immaterial that by the contract it reserved title to the engine until paid for. The Pearl, 189 Fed. 540, 542.

Explosives

A municipal waterworks contractor's bond to secure payment for "material" under St. 1904, c. 349, covers dynamite used in the work and fuses used to explode it. E. I. Dupont De Nemours Powder Co. v. Culgin-Pace Contracting Co., 92 N. E. 1023, 1025, 206 Mass. 585.

Explosives used in blasting rock in grading and tunneling for a railroad are "materials" for which the furnisher is entitled to a lien under Acts 1883, p. 296, c. 220, as amended by Acts 1891, p. 215, c. 98. Hercules Powder Co. v. Knoxville L. & J. R. Co., 83 S. W. 354, 357, 113 Tenn. 382, 67 L. R. A. 487, 106 Am. St. Rep. 836 (citing Rapauno Chemical Co. v. Greenfield & N. R. Co., 59 Mo. App. 6; Simmons v. Carrier, 60 Mo. 581; Hazard Powder Co. v. Byrnes [N. Y.] 21 How. Prac. 189; Wood v. Donaldson [N. Y.] 17 Wend. 550; McDermott v. Palmer, 8 N. Y. 883; Keystone Mining Co. v. Gallagher, 5 Colo. 23; Elliott, Railroads, p. 1597, § 1068; Giant Powder Co. v. Oregon Pac. Ry. Co., 42 Fed. 474, 8 L. R. A. 790).

Under Laws 1897, p. 516, c. 418 (Gen. Laws, c. 49), providing that "a contractor, subcontractor, laborer, or materialman who performs labor or furnishes material for improvement of real property with the consent or at the request of the owner thereof * * * shall have a lien. * * *" A lien is authorized for dynamite furnished to and used by a subcontractor for blasting rock for the excavation and building of a roadbed of a railway, as that is included in the term "materials." Explosives used for such purpose enter into and form a part of the permanent structure, as well as the earth, rails, ties, culverts, and bridges. Schaghticoke Powder Co. v. Greenwich & J. Ry. Co., 76 N. E. 153, 154, 155, 183 N. Y. 306, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 288, 111 Am. St. Rep. 751, 5 Ann. Cas. 443.

Blasting powder, dynamite, fuse, and caps, necessarily used by contractors in building a sewer, are "materials," within the meaning of a guaranty that the contractors would pay for material used in the work. Kansas City, to Use of Kansas City Hydraulic Press Brick Co. v. Youmans, 112 S. W. 225, 232, 213 Mo. 151.

The word "materials," in Pub. St. 1882, c. 16, § 64, requiring the contractor for a public work, on which liens might attach for materials if it was for a private owner, to give bond for payment for such materials, and chapter 191, § 1, giving a lien for materials used in the erection of a structure, etc., includes gunpowder used by a contractor for an aqueduct for a water supply in blasting for the trench, where the greater part of the material excavated was used in the construction of the aqueduct, but does not include coal burned in engines used on the work. George H. Sampson Co. v. Commonwealth, 88 N. E. 911, 912, 202 Mass. 326.

Explosives used in grading a tunnel for a railroad are materials for which the furnisher is entitled to a lien, under the act conferring a lien for work and materials furnished in the construction and repair of railroads (Acts 1883, p. 297, c. 220, § 3, as amended by Acts 1891, p. 215, c. 98, § 1), giving such lien to materialmen "for the delivery of material" to a subcontractor "who performs any part of the work in grading any railroad company's roadway, or who constructs or aids in the construction or repairs of its culverts or bridges, * * * or who aids in the laying of its track." S. B. Luttrell & Co. v. Knoxville, L. & J. R. Co., 105 S. W. 585, 570, 119 Tenn. 492.

Feed

Neither an article of necessity furnished for the use of the family, nor feed for horses set apart as a part of the homestead, is "material furnished for the benefit of the homestead" within the constitutional provision that homestead property may be sold for material furnished therefor. McLamb & Co. v. Lambertson, 62 S. E. 107, 109, 4 Ga. App. 553.

Under Rev. St. 1906, § 3208, providing that a person furnishing materials for the construction of a railroad shall have a lien for the payment of the same on such railroad, the term "materials," as therein used, includes such articles only as are furnished for the construction of the road, and a person who furnishes feed to a contractor for the keep of teams employed in working on such railroad is not, within the meaning of the section, furnishing materials. Pennsylvania Co. v. Mehaffey, 80 N. E. 177, 179, 75 Ohio St. 432, 116 Am. St. Rep. 746, 9 Ann. Cas. 305.

Gravel

The charter of Lowell created a department of supplies, with a chief elected annually, and section 3 requires all materials and supplies for the city to be purchased by the head of such department, subject to the mayor's approval, and provides that, so far as practicable, such purchases shall be made after public advertisement and under contract approved by the mayor. Section 6 provides that heads of departments shall have general charge of matters relating thereto, and shall execute all contracts, except for purchase of material and supplies; and section 7 forbids the city council, or any committee or member, from making contracts, purchasing material, etc., or expending public money, except to defray incidental expenses of the council. Held, that the provision relating to purchase of supplies and material in section 3 could not be construed so as to limit the word "purchase" to a purchase for money, the word "supplies" to articles of food, or the word "material" to that which the city has on hand for manufacture of other things, so that purchase of gravel, to be removed by the city and used on the streets and paid for by other filling deposited on the lot from which it was taken, was a purchase of material, which, under section 6, the superintendent of streets had no authority to make. Bartlett v. City of Lowell, 87 N. E. 195, 196, 201 Mass. 151.

Hay and grain

Rev. St. 1906, § 3211, while it, in terms, extends the provisions of the above section 3208, to such persons as furnish hay, grain, etc., on the order of a contractor or subcontractor, for their use or for use of persons employed by them, or either of them, while furnishing material and labor for or in the construction of such railroad, does not extend or enlarge the meaning of the word "materials"; nor does it impose upon the railroad company a personal liability for the articles thus furnished, if no lien therefor be taken and perfected. Pennsylvania Co. v. Mehaffey, 80 N. E. 177, 180, 75 Ohio St. 432, 116 Am. St. Rep. 746, 9 Ann. Cas. 305.

The lighting of a candle wrapped with paper and corn husks, and placing it in some hay in a barn with intent to set fire to the hay and burn the barn, but which never set fire to the barn itself or anything in the barn, was a setting fire to "material" within Rev. St. 1860, § 4227, declaring that if any person set fire to any building, etc., or to any material with intention to burn any such building, he shall be punished. Hence a count so alleging charged a crime. State v. Johnson, 19 Iowa, 231, 232.

Hire of teams

The hire of teams furnished a subcontractor for use in repairing a railroad is not within Kirby's Dig. § 6661, giving a person who furnishes any "material, machinery, fixtures, or other things" towards the construction or equipment of a railroad a lien. St. Louis, I. M. & S. Ry. Co. v. Love, 86 S. W. 395, 397, 74 Ark. 528.

Manufactured goods

Ky. St. § 2487, provides that, when the property of the operator of a manufacturing establishment shall be assigned for the benefit of creditors, persons who shall furnish material and supplies to carry on the business shall have a lien on the assets therefor. The bankrupt was a leather manufacturer, and also conducted a jobbing business in the same line as another department, in which it bought and sold leather goods. Held, that manufactured goods so purchased for resale were not "materials and supplies" for carrying on the bankrupt's manufacturing business, and hence the creditors furnishing the same were not entitled to a lien therefor. In re Starks-Ullman Saddlery Co., 171 Fed. 834, 835, 96 C. C. A. 506.

Stationery and printing

A claim for stationery and printing is not a claim for "materials," within V. S. 3803 (P. S. 4388), relating to preferred creditors. Bell v. St. Johnsbury & L. C. R. Co., 56 Atl. 105, 76 Vt. 42.

Steam shovel

Lien Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 33) § 5, giving a lien for labor or "materials" furnished a municipal contractor, does not give a lien for the charge for a steam shovel. Troy Public Works Co. v. City of Yonkers, 129 N. Y. Supp. 920, 921, 145 App. Div. 527.

MATHEMATICAL DEMONSTRATION

A "mathematical demonstration" is wholly different from a "moral certainty." Evidence of demonstration relates to necessary truths, truths as to which the supposition of the contrary involves not merely what is not and cannot be true, but what is also absurd, whereas moral evidence is the basis of contingent truth. It follows obviously that the convictions which these distinct and dissimilar classes of evidence are capable of producing are necessarily of very different natures. In the one absolute certitude is the result, to which moral certainty, the highest degree of assurance of which truths of the latter class admit, is necessarily inferior. Wills, Cir. Ev. 5. Moral certainty is that full and complete assurance which admits of no degrees, and induces a sound mind to act without doubt upon the conclusions to which it naturally and reasonably leads. 2 Stewart's Elements, c. II, § 4. It is apparent, then, that the precision attainable in the one case is of a nature of which the other does not admit. Bowman v. Little, 61 Atl. 1084, 1086, 101 Md. 273.

MATRIMONY

See Bonds of Matrimony.

See, also, Marriage.

"Matrimony" contemplates a mutual performance of the correlate duties which the law superinduces upon the marriage, and, while one does his part, the other is not authorized to withdraw and live in separation. Massey v. Massey, 81 N. E. 732, 738, 40 Ind. App. 407 (citing Bishop, Marriage & Divorce).

Code Civ. Proc. § 46, forbidding a judge to sit or take part in the decision of a "cause or matter" in which he has been an attorney or counsel, refers only to actions or special proceedings in which a judge might take part; the word "cause" meaning a cause of action, and the word "matter" referring to some judicial proceeding which, under the Code, is included in special proceedings for the enforcement of civil rights. Keeffe v. Third Nat. Bank of Syracuse, 69 N. E. 593, 594, 177 N. Y. 305.

MATTERS ARISING SUBSEQUENT TO DECREE

Within the rule that Mills' Ann. St. § 2484, authorizing a claimant of an irrigation priority at any time within four years from a final decree in a statutory adjudication proceeding to bring a suit hitherto allowed by the proper court to determine the priority, authorizes such an action by parties to that proceeding only when their right of action accrues out of "matters arising subsequent to the decree," the quoted phrase means claims of priority for an appropriation made subsequent to the lowest appropriation included in the decree. Broad Run Inv. Co. v. Deuel O. Snyder Imp. Co., 108 Pac. 755, 758, 47 Colo. 573.

MATTER IN ABATEMENT

The defense that plaintiff, a foreign corporation, has not complied with Gen. Laws 1896, c. 253, § 37, by appointing, by written power of attorney, a competent person residing in the state as its attorney on whom to serve process, is strictly "matter in abatement," and, having been pleaded in bar, cannot be considered. Russia Cement Co. v. Whitmarsh & Brown (R. I.) 67 Atl. 450 (citing Weaver Coal & Coke Co. v. Rhode Island Co-operative Coal Co., 61 Atl. 426, 27 R. I. 194).

MATTER IN CONTROVERSY

The words "matter in controversy," as used in Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 110, § 88, authorizing the appellate court to recite in its final decree the facts as found by it, where the final determination of a cause "shall be made by the appellate court, as the result wholly or in part of the finding of the facts concerning the 'matter in controversy,' different from the finding of the court from which such cause was brought by appeal, or writ of error," means the matters of fact in controversy. Gilmore v. City of Chicago, 79 N. E. 596, 598, 224 Ill. 490.

MATTER IN DISPUTE

"By 'matter in dispute' is meant the subject of litigation—the matter for which the suit is brought—and upon which issue is joined, and in relation to which jurors are called and witnesses examined." Or, "the 'matter in dispute,' within the meaning of the statute, is not the principle involved, but the pecuniary consequence to the individual party, dependent on the litigation." Shewalter v. Lexington, 143 Fed. 161, 163 (quoting Lee v. Watson, 1 Wall. [68 U. S.] 339, 17 L. Ed. 557; Wheless v. St. Louis, 21 Sup. Ct. 402, 403, 180 U. S. 379, 382, 45 L. Ed. 583); McDaniel v. Traylor, 123 Fed. 838, 339 (quoting and adopting definition in Lee v. Watson, 1 Wall. [68 U. S.] 337, 17 L. Ed. 557); Gallagher v. Asphalt Co. of America, 55 Atl. 259, 269, 65 N. J. Eq. 258 (quoting Lee v. Watson, 1 Wall. [68 U. S.] 337, 17 L. Ed. 557); Baltimore &

O. R. Co. v. Ryan, 68 N. E. 923, 924, 81 Ind. App. 597 (quoting Lee v. Watson, 1 Wall. 337, 17 L. Ed. 557).

In a suit to enjoin railroad companies from establishing a new schedule of rates, the matter in dispute is the right of the defendants to enforce such proposed rates, and, where the value of such right exceeds $2,000, a federal court has jurisdiction. Northern Pac. Ry. Co. v. Pacific Coast Lumber Mfrs. Ass'n, 185 Fed. 1, 11, 91 O. C. A. 39.

The right to remove an action, wherein a money judgment is demanded, to the federal court is determined by the sum demanded as appears by the record at the time the petition for removal is filed; and, where an amendment is made, the sum last demanded is "the matter in dispute." McCulloch v. Southern Ry. Co., 62 S. E. 1096, 1097, 149 N. C. 305.

"By 'matter in dispute' is meant the subject of litigation, the matter upon which the action is brought and issue is joined, and in relation to which, if the issue be one of fact, testimony is taken. It is conceded that the pecuniary value of the matter in dispute may be determined, not only by the money judgment prayed, where such is the case, but in some cases by the increased or diminished value of the property directly affected by the relief prayed, or by the pecuniary result to one of the parties immediately from the judgment. Thus a suit to quiet the title to parcels of real property, or to remove a cloud therefrom, by which their use and enjoyment by the owner are impaired, is brought within the cognizance of the court, under the statute, only by value of the property affected." Way v. Clay, 140 Fed. 352, 353 (quoting and adopting the definition of Justice Field in Smith v. Adams, 9 Sup. Ct. 566, 130 U. S. 167, 32 L. Ed. 898).

"By 'matter in dispute' is meant the subject of litigation, and the matter upon which the action is brought and issue is joined and in relation to which, if the issue be one of fact, testimony is taken. It is conceded that the pecuniary value of the matter in dispute may be determined, not only by the money judgment prayed, where such is the case, but in some cases by the increased or diminished value of the property directly affected by the relief prayed, or by the pecuniary result to one of the parties immediately from the judgment." In an action to recover a piece of land on which a railroad had located its depot, the value of the land to the railroad company, according to its present situation and use, is the value to be considered in determining whether the amount involved in the litigation is sufficient to confer jurisdiction on the federal courts. King v. Southern R. Co., 119 Fed. 1016, 1017 (quoting definition in Smith v. Adams, 9 Sup. Ct. 566, 130 U. S. 167, 32 L. Ed. 895).

The phrase "matter in dispute," as used in the Code of the District of Columbia (Act March 3, 1901, c. 854, § 233 (81 Stat. 1227), providing that any final judgment of the Court of Appeals may be re-examined and affirmed, reversed, or modified by the Supreme Court of the United States, on writ of error or appeal, in all cases in which the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, shall exceed the sum of $5,000, means money, or some right the value of which can be estimated and ascertained in money, and which appears by the record to be of the requisite pecuniary value; and, assuming that the term "matter in dispute" may embrace a right to have a claim against a foreign government presented through the political department of the United States, and that the value of such a right may be gauged by the possible pecuniary injury which may be sustained if no such action is taken, it is evident that a claim for damages from the German Empire in redress of an alleged wrongful imprisonment in that country is one having a merely conjectural value. Hence the value of the matter in dispute in a proceeding to compel by mandamus the Secretary of State to seek to obtain $500,000 damages from the German Empire in redress of petitioner's alleged wrongful imprisonment while on a visit to that country does not exceed the sum of $5,000. United States ex rel. Holendorff v. Hay, 24 Sup. Ct. 681, 682, 194 U. S. 373, 48 L. Ed. 1025.

MATTER IN ISSUE

The "matter in issue" in a former action is that on which plaintiffs' cause of action is based, and which defendant denies by his pleadings. Kerr v. Blair, 118 S. W. 791, 793, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 349.

The issues in a cause are the points in dispute between the parties on which they put their cause to trial, and the matter in issue is that matter on which plaintiff proceeds by his action, and which defendant controverts by his pleading. Bowen v. W. O. Eaton & Co., 89 N. E. 961, 964, 46 Ind. App. 65.

The first essential of the rule of res judicata is the identity of the "matter in issue," which is defined to be that matter on which plaintiff proceeds by his action, and which defendant controverts by his pleadings. Leroy v. Collins, 180 N. W. 635, 636, 165 Mich. 380.

The matters which plaintiff must allege in his declaration and the defendant deny in his plea are necessary "matters in issue." In an action on a liquor dealer's bond, whether the dealer's failure to comply with the provisions of the statute in applying for a license was a "matter in issue" is to be determined by deciding whether the licensee's failure to comply with the provisions is a matter the state must allege and the licensee deny. State v. Corron, 62 Atl. 1044, 1052, 73 N. H. 434, 6 Ann. Cas. 488.

MATTERS IN STATUTE

As used in Const. art. 4, § 19, providing that every act shall "embrace but one subject and matters properly connected therewith, which subject shall be expressed in the title," the word "subject" indicates the thing about which the legislation is had, and the word "matters" the incident or secondary things necessary to provide for its complete enforcement. Board of Com'rs of Marion County v. Scanlan, 98 N. E. 801, 802, 178 Ind. 142.

As used in a constitutional requirement that every act shall embrace but one subject and matters properly connected therewith, which subject shall be expressed in the title, the word "subject" refers to the thing about which the legislation is had, and the word "matters" includes subordinate and incidental things relating to the same general subject. The title of an act was "An act to amend sections 1, 4, and 5, of an act entitled 'An act concerning street railroad companies, granting additional rights and powers therein specified and matters relating thereto, and declaring an emergency.' * * *" It embraces the general subject of street railroad companies and gave power to acquire ground for the construction of lines for the transmission of electricity for light, heat, and power, and was not violative of the constitutional provision. Mull v. Indianapolis & C. Traction Co., 81 N. E. 657, 659, 169 Ind. 214 (citing State v. Gerhardt, 44 N. E. 469, 145 Ind. 439, 33 L. R. A. 313; Maule Coal Co. v. Partenhimer, 55 N. E. 751, 57 N. E. 710, 155 Ind. 101; Parks v. State, 64 N. E. 862, 159 Ind. 211, 59 L. R. A. 190).

MATTER OF ADMINISTRATION

The power to compel an administrator to fulfill a contract of conveyance of real estate of his intestate is a "matter of administration," within the Constitution, defining the jurisdiction of the probate court. Servis v. Beatty, 32 Miss. 52, 87.

New York Charter (Laws 1897, p. 1, c. 378), creating a number of departments, among which was the department of highways, by section 458 (page 160) provides that the commissioner at the head of each department "may organize such bureaus as he shall from time to time deem necessary." Greater New York Charter (Laws 1901, p. 166, c. 466) § 388, vested in the city of New York all the powers and duties conferred on the commissioner of highways of the city of New York by the charter of 1897, and devolved upon the president of the borough as "matter of administration" certain powers and duties to be executed pursuant to the provisions of the act. Laws 1901, p. 636, c. 466, § 1543, provides that no head of a bureau, holding a position in the classified municipal civil service subject to competitive examination, shall be removed, unless he has been allowed an opportunity of making an explanation. Held, that the charter of 1901 conferred on the president of the borough of Manhattan the same powers possessed by the commissioner of highways under the charter of 1897; that the organization of bureaus is "matter of administration" within the meaning of the charter of 1901, and under such charter the president of the borough of Manhattan had power to organize a bureau of highways, and to appoint a head therefor; and that one appointed as head of such bureau was not subject to removal, except under the restrictions of section 1543. People ex rel. Collins v. Ahearn, 86 N. E. 474, 475, 198 N. Y. 441.

MATTER OF CONTRACT

The term "matters of contract," as used in Const. art. 7, § 40, which declares that justices of the peace shall have jurisdiction exclusive of the circuit court, in all matters of contract where the amount in controversy does not exceed $100, embraces an action for unliquidated damages for a breach of contract. Smith v. Taylor, 134 S. W. 634, 97 Ark. 424.

MATTER OF COUNTERCLAIM

Under a plea of payment in an action for price of printing defendant cannot show what, under a lease, was due him from plaintiff for excess power furnished; this, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 500, 501, being "matter of counterclaim," to be pleaded as such. T. J. Hayes Printing Co. v. Springer, 123 N. Y. Supp. 240, 242.

MATTER OF FACT

The word "fact," as used in the proposition that representations must consist of "matters of fact," distinguishes "fact" from mere matters of opinion. Brown v. South Joplin Lead & Zinc Min. Co., 92 S. W. 699, 704, 194 Mo. 681.

MATTER OF FORM

The delivery of an indictment to the court by the foreman of the grand jury in the absence of the other jurors, if a defect at all, is "in matter of form only," within the meaning of U. S. Rev. Stat. § 1025, providing that no indictment presented by a grand jury shall be deemed insufficient nor the trial, judgment, or other proceeding thereon be affected by any such defect which shall not tend to the prejudice of the defendant, it not being disputed but that the indictment was found and returned into court as a true bill. Breese v. United States, 33 S. Ct. 1, 8, 226 U. S. 1, 57 L. Ed. 97.

The omission of the signs for dollars and cents, in the recitals of alleged false entries in reports, and misnomer of the reports in an indictment charging directors of a national banking association with making false entries in a report to the Comptroller of the Currency, within the denunciation of Rev. St. § 5209, are matters of form within the meaning of Rev. St. § 1025, for which the indictment is not to "be deemed insufficient." United States v. Potter, 56 Fed. 88, 95.

MATTER OF IMPRESSION OR OPINION

"Evidence which is characterized as 'matter of opinion' is predicated upon the existence or nonexistence of a fact, while 'matter of impression' or 'understanding' is only a deduction drawn from the assumption of that fact, so that, while the former may rise to the standard of evidence, the latter is universally rejected as such." Cross v. Aby, 45 South. 820, 822, 55 Fla. 311 (quoting and adopting the definition in Chaires v. Brady, 10 Fla. 808; citing 1 Wigmore, Ev. §§ 658, 726-728; 4 Words and Phrases, p. 3444; Tait v. Hall, 12 Pac. 391, 71 Cal. 149).

MATTER OF INDUCEMENT

See Inducement.

MATTER OF LAW

Refusal of a judge sitting in bankruptcy to sanction an arrangement between the bankrupts and certain of their creditors and persons who had received preferential transfers of the bankrupts' property, in the legitimate exercise of discretion, did not present a "matter of law" reviewable on a petition for review authorized by Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 24b, 30 Stat. 553. Mulford v. Fourth Street Nat. Bank, 157 Fed. 897, 85 C. C. A. 225.

MATTER OF LEGAL AVOIDANCE

The term "matters of legal avoidance," as used in the statement that a recognizance is in the nature of a conditional judgment, subject only to such matters of legal avoidance as may be shown by plea, or to such matters of relief as may induce the court to remit or mitigate a forfeiture, refers to such matters as are entirely consistent with the truth of the facts stated in the record and furnish a legal excuse for the failure of the defendant to appear according to the condition of his recognizance. The sureties, for example, show, in answer to the scire facias, the death of the principal before the time for his appearance had arrived, or that he had been arrested under other process issued at the instance of the state, or that he had become insane. All pleas of this kind are not only consistent with the truth of what is averred in the record, but they are predicated on the assumption of such truth. State v. Morgan, 48 S. E. 604, 606, 136 N. C. 593.

MATTER OF PROBATE

"The proceeding to establish or prove the claim against the executors is essentially an independent suit inter partes and not a 'matter of pure probate jurisdiction.'" Farmers' Bank of Cuba City, Wis., v. Wright, 158 Fed. 841, 850 (citing and adopting Broderick's Will, 21 Wall. [88 U. S.] 503, 22 L. Ed. 599; Farell v. O'Brien, 25 Sup. Ct. 727, 199 U. S. 89, 110, 50 L. Ed. 101).

Code Civ. Proc. § 1678, authorizing a court of probate to order distribution of a decedent's estate, though some of the heirs, legatees, or devisees had conveyed their shares, applies only where no question arises on the distribution as to the conveyances having been made; and, where the fact of conveyance is disputed or its validity is in issue, the question is not within probate jurisdiction; "matters of probate" including the determination of the persons succeeding to the estate of a decedent, either as heir, devisee, or legatee, the amount to which each is entitled, and the construction of the will, but not including a determination of claims against heirs or devisees for their portion arising subsequent to decedent's death. In re Howe's Estate, 118 Pac. 615, 617, 161 Cal. 152.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1639, providing that on the death of an executor his accounts may be presented to and settled by the court in which the estate of which he was executor is being administered, and that upon petition of his successor such court may compel the personal representatives of the deceased executor to render an account of the administrator of their testator, and to settle such account as in other cases, is a "matter of probate," jurisdiction of which may, under Const. art. 6, § 5, be conferred upon the superior court, sitting in probate. King v. Chase, 115 Pac. 207, 209, 159 Cal. 420.

MATTER OF PUBLIC CONCERN

See Public Concern.

MATTER OR THING

Within the rule that a court has no power to acquire jurisdiction of a party by service of notice outside its territorial limits except where the court is dealing with some "matter or thing" within its territorial jurisdiction, it has been held that marriage is such a "matter or thing," so that, if a spouse is a bona fide resident and the other spouse is absent, the court may require jurisdiction by extraterritorial service. Watkinson v. Watkinson, 58 Atl. 384, 389, 67 N. J. Eq. 142.

Defendants, in payment of property bought of plaintiff, transferred bonds maturing November 27, 1913, and secured by a trust deed of Iowa property, and by a contract of guaranty agreed "if said bonds were not paid at maturity," and the trust deed was foreclosed, to be present at the sale and bid a specified amount for the property. In the bonds was a reservation of the right to pay them before maturity, and in the trust deed it was provided that, if default was made in the payment of interest, the principal, as well as the interest, should become due at the election of the trustee. On the back of the bonds was a trustee's certificate that the bonds were issued in conformity with the trust deed. The word "maturity," as used in the agreement, was the maturity as fixed by the trust deed, and not the one specified in the bonds. Binz v. Hyatt, 98 S. W. 637, 200 Mo. 299.

A note payable with interest from maturity contained a blank space after the word "maturity," and the payee after execution filled up such space by writing therein the word "date," so that the note called for interest after "maturity date." Held, that the alteration was not a material change which would prevent recovery on the note. "Maturity" and "maturity date" mean the same thing. Baldwin v. Haskell Nat. Bank (Tex.) 124 S. W. 443.

Where a note bearing a given date was payable four months after, it reached its "maturity" four months after date. Seabury v. Sibley, 66 N. E. 603, 183 Mass. 106.

MAXIM

A "maxim," says Coke, "is so called because its dignity is chiefest, and its authority the most certain, and because it is universally approved by all." Coke, Litt. 11a. Again he says: "A maxim is a proposition to be of all men confessed and granted without proof, argument, or discourse." Id. 67a. "Maxims," says Sir James Mackintosh, "are the condensed good sense of nations." Christman v. Linderman, 100 S. W. 1090, 1092, 202 Mo. 605, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1205, 119 Am. St. Rep. 822.

"A 'maxim' is a proposition to be of all men confessed and granted without proof, argument, or discourse." Felver v. Central Electric Ry. Co., 115 S. W. 980, 983, 216 Mo. 195 (quoting Lord Coke).

Justinian said that the "maxims of the law" are these: "To live honestly, to hurt no man, and to give every one his due." City Trust, Safe-Deposit & Surety Co. of Philadelphia v. American Brewing Co., 67 N. E. 62, 174 N. Y. 486.

MAXIMUM

The word "maximum" is defined as meaning the greatest, superlative of great; the greatest quantity or value attainable in a given case. Manaca v. Ionia Circuit Judge, 110 N. W. 75, 77, 146 Mich. 697.

MAXIMUM RATE

The term "maximum rate," as used in a statute authorizing the fixing of a "maximum rate" to be charged for gas and electricity, means a "reasonable rate with permission to the party furnishing the service to do business at an inadequate profit or at a loss, if he desires." Trustees of Village of Saratoga Springs v. Saratoga Gas, Electric Light & Power Co., 107 N. Y. Supp. 341, 361, 122 App. Div. 208 (dissenting opinion of Judge Kellogg).

MAY

Must construed as may, see Must.

Shall construed as may, see Shall.

As permissive or mandatory

The word "may" is usually only permissive or discretionary. State v. Stepp, 59 S. E. 1068, 1070, 63 W. Va. 254.

The word "may" means "must" whenever third persons or the public have an interest in having the act done or have a claim de jure that the power shall be exercised. Smalley v. Paine, 116 S. W. 38, 39, 102 Tex. 304.

"The word 'may' is construed to mean 'shall,' whenever the right of the public or third persons depends upon the exercise of the power or performance of the duty to which it refers." Montgomery v. Henry, 30 South. 507, 509, 144 Ala. 629, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 656, 6 Ann. Cas. 965 (quoting and adopting definition in Wheeler v. Chicago, 24 Ill. 105, 76 Am. Dec. 736).

"May" does not mean "shall," and is not so construed in private contracts. It is only in the case of statutes by which public rights are involved that this construction is sometimes adopted ex debito justitiæ. Northwestern Travelling Men's Ass'n v. Crawford, 126 Ill. App. 468, 480.

It is true that "may" oftentimes means "must," but it always retains its primitive meaning unless common fairness and the rights of the parties litigant demand that it be supplanted by "must," or unless it is used in a sentence which creates an exception in favor of the public. Chicago, W. & V. Coal Co. v. People, 114 Ill. App. 75, 112; Id., 73 N. E. 770, 214 Ill. 421.

In a contract for the construction of part of a sewer, a clause provided that "if an emergency demands . . . he [the engineer in charge] may make alterations in any part of the work." Held, that this clause was for the benefit of the commonwealth alone, and that the word "may" was to be construed according to its usual meaning, and not to mean "shall." National Contracting Co. v. Commonwealth, 86 N. E. 639, 640, 641, 183 Mass. 89.

Same—Deed

A bargain and sale deed to a half interest in a mine in consideration of $1 and the doing of necessary assessment work to hold the claim at the grantees' expense also provided that the grantees might work and develop the mine at their own cost, and that all gold or proceeds taken therefrom for 20 years should be divided equally among the parties; that is, each to have one-third thereof. Held, that the provision for working the mine apart from the doing of the assessment work was a mere license to be exercised by the grantees, or not, at their election; the word "may" not being construed to mean "must." Shaw v. Caldwell, 115 Pac. 941, 942, 16 Cal. App. 1.

On the same day that a testator executed his will he made a deed to a trust company, executor under the will, conveying all of his real estate on certain trusts. The ninth clause of the deed provided that after the testator's death the trustee "may" use as much of the income from the property, or the proceeds of its sale, as may be necessary in defending any proceedings brought to invalidate the trust. The will was made subject to the provisions of the deed, with a scheme for the disposition of the property conveyed by the deed if it should be set aside. Testator had a substantial amount of personal property which was disposed of by the will. No proceedings were brought to set aside the deed, except so far as its validity was involved in the controversy as to the validity of the will. Held, that a contention that items in the executor's account for payments made by the executor for expenses of defending the estate from claims which were deemed unjust, of proving the will, and resisting an attack on it, should not be allowed out of the personalty, because the word "may" in the ninth clause of the deed means "must," requiring such expenses to be paid from the trust estate, is untenable, in view of other clauses of the deed, in which the grantor drew distinctions between "may" and "shall." Hampden Trust Co. v. Leary, 72 N. E. 88, 89, 186 Mass. 577.

Same—Insurance

A provision in the constitution and laws of a mutual benefit association that a certain amount shall be paid on the death of a member of a certain grade, and one-half of the amount "may" be paid to a member of that grade who shall become permanently disabled from attending to his business or gaining a livelihood, and is destitute of means of support when he shall arrive at the age of expectancy, is mandatory as to the payment of the permanent disability benefit; the word "may" to be read as "shall." Supreme Council Catholic Benevolent Legion v. Grove, 96 N. E. 159, 162, 176 Ind. 356, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913.

Same—Instructions

An instruction, in an action to recover an accident benefit, that an accidental cause is such as "may" happen by chance is erroneous, as suggesting that chance is not always necessary. Smouse v. Iowa State Traveling Men's Ass'n, 92 N. W. 53, 54, 116 Iowa, 436.

The word "may," in an instruction in a personal injury case that the jury may allow plaintiff for pain, inconvenience, or impairment of enjoyment for such time as the same may continue in the future as shown by the evidence, is capable of being construed by the jury to mean "might," and therefore authorized them to allow plaintiff for pain, inconvenience, and impairment of the enjoyment which the evidence showed might continue in the future, which was merely possible, not for what the evidence showed was reasonably certain to continue. Such an instruction is erroneous. Haas v. St. Louis & S. Ry. Co., 90 S. W. 1155, 1157, 111 Mo. App. 706 (following Ford v. City of Des Moines, 75 N. W. 630, 106 Iowa, 94).

The word "may," in an instruction on the measure of damages for personal injuries that the jury will award plaintiff such sum as shall compensate him for the mental and bodily pain and suffering endured by him consequent on the injury and for the mental and bodily pain which "may" be suffered by him in the future by reason of such injuries, if any, and for any permanent injuries suffered by plaintiff, if he has suffered any such permanent injury, means "must," and the instruction does not permit the jury to award compensation for future pain and permanent injury, unless the same is reasonably certain to follow as a result of the injury. O'Keefe v. United Ry. Co. of St. Louis, 101 S. W. 1144, 1147, 124 Mo. App. 613.

Where, in a personal injury case, the evidence shows that plaintiff will be wholly disabled from performing the work in the business in which he was engaged at the time of the accident, an instruction that plaintiff, if entitled to recover, is entitled to compensation for loss of time in his business which "he may hereafter lose, if any, by reason of" the injuries, is proper, for the word "may" means "shall." Caplin v. St. Louis Transit Co., 89 S. W. 338, 339, 114 Mo. App. 256.

Possibility indicated

"May" comprehends the idea of probability, and also the thought of what is, with more or less certainty, to be expected." It also comprehends, in one of its usable senses, the idea of possibility, and, so used, becomes equivalent to the expression "might possibly"; hence an instruction authorizing a recovery for suffering "which plaintiff may hereafter suffer and endure," if any, "as shown by the evidence on account of his said injuries," was not objectionable on the ground that the word "may" based the recovery on possible instead of probable suffering. Dean v. Kansas City, St. L. & C. R. Co., 97 S. W. 910, 918, 199 Mo. 386 (quoting Reynolds v. St. Louis Transit Co., 88 S. W. 50, 189 Mo. loc. cit. 421, 107 Am. St. Rep. 360).

In an action for injuries, an instruction authorizing the jury to award damages resulting from such suffering as the injuries "may" cause plaintiff was not erroneous by the use of the word "may"; the same being definitive of the proper rule that such damages may be allowed as are reasonably certain to follow the injury. Halley v. St. Joseph Light, Heat & Power Co., 91 S. W. 163, 115 Mo. App. 652.

In an action for injuries, an instruction allowing damages for such pain and anguish as plaintiff had already suffered, and which "he may hereafter suffer," was not erroneous by reason of the use of the word "may," on the ground that it gave room for speculation and conjecture. Robertson v. Hammond Packing Co., 91 S. W. 161, 162, 115 Mo. App. 520.

An instruction that plaintiff, if she establishes her right to recover, will be entitled to recover such damages "as she may have received," is not erroneous in the use of the word "may"; it being used by the judge to express the possibility of the existence of such damages, not including any element of probability. Henry v. Omaha Packing Co., 115 N. W. 777, 780, 81 Neb. 237.

The word "may," used as an auxiliary verb, has a wide scope of meaning, into which the idea of mere possibility enters; but it also comprehends the idea of probability, and also the thought of what is with more or less certainty to be expected, and whether it is to carry the one thought or the other often depends on the context. In an action for injuries, an instruction that in estimating the damages the jury may consider plaintiff's diminished capacity for earning money, if any, and on account thereof make such allowance as may be fair and just for any loss they may believe from the evidence he has sustained in the past by reason thereof, and for any loss they may believe he may sustain in his future earnings by reason of such diminished earning capacity, is not erroneous, for the reason that "may" means "possibly might," so as to authorize a recovery for loss of time, and also for diminished earning capacity during the same period, and for loss of what he "may" sustain in the future. Reynolds v. St. Louis Transit Co., 88 S. W. 50, 53, 189 Mo. 408, 107 Am. St. Rep. 360.

An instruction in a personal injury action that the jury, in assessing the damages, may consider the character of the injury, if any, sustained by plaintiff, the pain and suffering, if any, endured, and "which will be endured," if any, as the result of the injuries; if any, etc., properly limits a recovery for the suffering endured, and for such suffering as the evidence discloses he will endure in the future, since the word "will," as employed in the instruction, must have been understood in its proper sense as referring to the unconditional existence of the fact, and not in the sense of "may," which imports a mere possibility. Scally v. W. T. Garrett & Co., 104 Pac. 325, 326, 332, 11 Cal. App. 138.

MAY (In Constitutions as Permissive or Mandatory)

In constitutional provisions, "may" should be read "must" when the intention so requires, and should be interpreted as mandatory and not directory. Henry v. State, 39 South. 856, 893, 87 Miss. 1.

The word "may," as used in Const. S. D. art. 5, § 18, providing that writs of error and appeals may be allowed under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, was evidently used, in its proper sense, as permissive, and not in the sense of must or shall. Mau v. Stoner, 83 Pac. 218, 220, 14 Wyo. 183 (citing McClain v. Williams, 78 N. W. 72, 10 S. D. 332, 43 L. R. A. 287, 289).

Const. art. 4, § 25½, providing that the Legislature "may" provide for the division of the state into fish and game districts and "may" enact appropriate legislation for the protection of fish and game therein, is mandatory, and commands the Legislature to enact necessary legislation touching the care and custody of game with reference to local conditions, which require special legislation for particular localities. Ex parte Prindle, 94 Pac. 871, 873, 7 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 223.

Const. § 138, provides that each county having a city of 20,000 and a population, including the city, of 40,000 or more may constitute a judicial district; and when its population reaches 75,000 the General Assembly may provide that it shall have an additional judge, and such district may have a judge for each additional 50,000 above 100,000. Held, that the word "may," as used in such section, was not to be construed "must," so as to make the section mandatory; the Legislature being required, in creating a new district under such section, to have due regard to the business, as well as the territory and population. Scott v. McCreary, 147 S. W. 903, 904, 148 Ky. 791.

The words "shall" and "may," as used in the Utah Constitution, providing that certain officers "shall be conservators of the peace, and may hold preliminary examinations," are used advisedly, and each is to be understood in its usual and ordinary sense, and a statute conferring jurisdiction on other officers to act as committing magistrates is not in conflict with the Constitution. State v. Shockley, 80 Pac. 865, 868, 29 Utah, 25, 110

Am. St. Rep. 639 (quoting and adopting 8 Cyc. p. 586).

The word "may," where it appears in the Const. art. 10, §§ 223-226, relative to the penitentiary and prisons, forbidding the leasing or hiring of convicts, authorizing the employment of convicts on public works, and providing that the Legislature "may place the convicts on a state farm or farms and have them work, thereon under state supervision exclusively * * * and may buy farms for that purpose," is not mandatory, and the Legislature is not required to place convicts on a state farm nor to buy a farm for that purpose, and it is within its power to work the convicts on leased lands. State v. Henry, 40 South. 152, 154, 158, 87 Miss. 125, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 340.

MAY (In Statutes as Permissive or Mandatory)

The word "may," when used in a statute, is sometimes construed as mandatory, but more frequently as directory. State ex rel. Coleman v. Blair, 151 S. W. 148, 151, 245 Mo. 680.

When the word "may" is in a statute made for the benefit of persons, it is not simply permissive but mandatory or compulsory. Trall v. Trall, 49 S. E. 431, 434, 56 W. Va. 594.

The word "may" in statutes usually indicates that the act to which it refers is discretionary, rather than mandatory, and will be so construed, unless the context indicates a different meaning. Halfacre v. State, 79 S. W. 132, 133, 112 Tenn. 609.

Whenever third persons or the public have an interest in having done that which is prescribed by the Legislature, then the act is mandatory, even though words permissive, as "may," are used, instead of words mandatory, as "shall." Lapsley v. Merchants' Bank of Jefferson City, 78 S. W. 1095, 1096, 105 Mo. App. 98.

The word "may" when used in a statute means "must," whenever third persons or the public have an interest in having the act done, or have a claim de jure that the power shall be exercised. Smalley v. Paine, 116 S. W. 38, 39, 102 Tex. 304.

Where permissive words, such as "it shall be lawful," or "may," are used in a statute in respect to courts and officers, such words will be regarded as imperative, in cases where the public or individuals have a right to demand the exercise of the power conferred. Ex parte Young, 95 S. W. 98, 102, 49 Tex. Cr. R. 536 (citing Lewis' Sutherland, Stat. Const. § 636; Tarver v. Commissioners' Court of Tallapoosa County, 17 Ala. 527; Mitchell v. Duncan, 7 Fla. 13; David v. Levy, 24 South. 589, 119 Ala. 241; Smith's Petition, 5 Pa. Dist. R. 465).

The word "may" is peremptory, when used in a statute, where the public or an individual has a right de jure, that the powers conferred by the act should be exercised. Graham v. City of Tusculumbia, 42 South. 400, 401, 402, 146 Ala. 449 (quoting and adopting Tarver v. Commissioners' Court of Tallapoosa County, 17 Ala. 527).

Ordinarily the word "may" is employed in a statute to express the idea that a discretion may be exercised, and that the performance of the act is not imperative, or that the power or authority conferred is not exclusive, but cumulative and permissive; and whether it is to be construed as mandatory is to be determined from the apparent intention; but the word "may" will be construed to mean "shall" whenever the rights of the public or third persons depend on the exercise of the power or the performance of the duty to which it refers, and such is its meaning in all cases where the public interests and rights are concerned, or a duty is imposed on public officers and the public or third persons have a claim de jure that the power shall be exercised. Deming v. Metropolitan Engineering & Construction Co., 136 S. W. 740, 742, 154 Mo. App. 540 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4421).

"May" sometimes is equivalent to "must" or "shall," and is then mandatory, but it usually denotes permission or discretion. To decide between these meanings in any given case, the context and whole legislative scheme must be taken into consideration. Bass v. Doughty, 63 S. E. 516, 517, 5 Ga. App. 458 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4420, et seq.).

The words "authorize" or "may," as used in a statute, are sometimes construed as mandatory in effect, though permissive in form, as where a statute provides for the doing of some act required by justice or public duty; but, where they confer or recognize a discretionary power, a mandatory construction will not be given to them. Whitley v. State, 68 S. E. 716, 723, 134 Ga. 758.

The word "may" should primarily be taken in its ordinary meaning and be regarded as permissive only, but its meaning is to be determined in each case from the apparent intent of the statute in which it is employed, so that in all remedial statutes, or whenever the rights of the public or of third persons depend on the exercise of the power of a court or public officer or the performance of a duty and a claim de jure that the power may be exercised exists, it should be construed to mean "shall." State ex rel. Nicomen Boom Co. v. North Shore Boom & Driving Co., 103 Pac. 426, 429, 55 Wash. 1 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, pp. 4420-4447).

"May," as primarily and ordinarily used in a statute, is permissive, and not peremptory; but it may be given the imperative meaning if that was the obvious intention. State v. School Dist. No. 1, Edwards County, 108 Pac. 136, 80 Kan. 667.

While the courts have never hesitated to construe "may" as "must," or "shall," when the context and policy of the law demanded that interpretation, the legislative intention must plainly appear before such judicial correction will be made. Ostrander v. City of Richmond, 101 Pac. 452, 453, 155 Cal. 468.

Ordinarily the word "may," in construing the statute, is permissive, but it is often construed to be mandatory, and generally so when it is employed to delegate a power, the exercise of which is important for the protection of public or private interests. Queeney v. Higgins, 114 N. W. 51, 136 Iowa, 573.

The word "may" in a statute will be construed to mean "shall," whenever the rights of the public or third parties depend on the exercise of the power or duty to which it refers, and such is its meaning in all cases where public interests and rights are concerned, or a public duty is imposed on public officers, and the public or third persons have a claim de jure that the power shall be exercised. Binder v. Langhorst, 85 N. E. 400, 402, 234 Ill. 583.

Where neither the clear intent of the Legislature nor public policy requires that the language of a statute shall be given a mandatory construction, the word "may" therein is not equivalent to "must." Town of Hempstead v. Lawrence, 122 N. Y. Supp. 1037, 1040, 138 App. Div. 473.

Words like "may," "must," "shall," etc., are constantly used in statutes without intending that they shall be taken literally, and in their construction the object evidently designed to be reached limits and controls the literal import of the terms and phrases employed. Fields v. United States, 27 App. D. C. 433, 440.

The word "may" ordinarily denotes permission and not command. But where used in a statute concerning the public interest, or affecting the rights of three persons, it will be construed to mean "must" or "shall." Georgia, F. & A. R. Co. v. Sasser, 60 S. E. 997, 130 Ga. 394 (citing Birdsong v. Brooks, 7 Ga. 88; Weems v. Farrell, 33 Ga. 419).

In construing statutes, the term, "may" may be considered as mandatory and as meaning "shall" or "must," and "shall" or "must" may be construed as directory only, in order to effectuate the legislative intent. In re Chadbourne's Estate, 114 Pac. 1012, 1014, 15 Cal. App. 363 (citing Estate of Balentine, 45 Cal. 699; Hayes v. County of Los Angeles, 33 Pac. 766, 99 Cal. 74; Suth. St. Const. 634; Wallace v. Feeley [N. Y.] 61 How. Prac. 225; Merrill v. Shaw, 5 Minn. 148 [Gil. 113]; In re Thurber's Estate, 56 N. E. 631, 162 N. Y. 244; Stone v. Pratt, 35 N. Y. Supp. 519, 90 Hun, 39; First Nat. Bank of Seneca v. Lyman, 53 Pac. 125, 59 Kan. 410; Cooke v. Spears, 2 Cal. 409, 56 Am. Dec. 348; People ex rel. Chipfield v. Sanitary Dist. of Chicago, 56 N. E. 953, 184 Ill. 597).

In a statute the word "may" may be construed in a mandatory sense only where such construction is necessary to give effect to the clear policy and intention of the Legislature; and, where there is nothing in the connection of the language or in the sense or policy of the provision to require an unusual interpretation, its use is merely permissive and discretionary. Where, by the use in other provisions of the statute of the word "shall" or "must," it appears that the Legislature intended to distinguish between these words and "may," "may" will not be construed as imperative. Carlin v. Freeman, 75 Pac. 26, 27, 19 Colo. App. 834.

Adoption of by-laws

The word "may," as used in Hurd's Rev. Stat. 1903, p. 473, § 6, providing that the directors or managers of a corporation "may adopt by-laws for the government of the officers and affairs of the company," means "must"; the words "may" and "shall" are frequently used interchangeably in order to express the legislative intent; and one may be used for the other, if, by so doing, the legislative intention can be determined. Manufacturers' Exhibition Bldg. Co. v. Landay, 76 N. E. 146, 148, 219 Ill. 168 (citing Wabash, St. L. & P. Ry. Co. v. Binkert, 106 Ill. 298).

Appointment to office

As used in Laws 1903, p. 202, c. 113, § 4, providing that city government shall be vested in a mayor and council, to consist of five members, a clerk, treasurer, marshal, and police judge, who "may" be one of the justices of the peace of the precinct in which the town is situated, the word "may" should not be construed to mean "shall" or "must." Hence the mayor of a city of the third class was not limited to the elected justices of the peace for his selection of a police justice. State ex rel. Purdin v. Gault, 105 Pac. 242, 243, 56 Wash. 140 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4420).

The word "may," as used in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 45, providing that trustees may be (1) individuals who are respectively competent * * * and reside in or have an office in the judicial district within which they are appointed, or (2) corporations * * * having an office in the judicial district, etc., is equivalent to "shall," in the sense that the section allows a trustee to be chosen from but two classes, viz., persons of a certain sort or corporations, making the provisions mandatory. In re Seider, 163 Fed. 138.

Ky. St. § 4313, providing that the fiscal court of any county wherein the roads are worked by taxation "may," at its first regular term after the act takes effect, and every two years thereafter, appoint a supervisor of roads, does not make the appointment of the supervisor mandatory, but leaves the matter to the discretion of the fiscal court, which discretion cannot be controlled by mandamus. O'Connor v. Weissinger, 134 S. W. 1127, 1129, 142 Ky. 452.

The word "may," as used in Civ. Code Prac. § 298, providing that the appointment of a receiver "may" be done on motion of a party to an action who shows a right to the property involved, and that it is in danger of being lost or removed, is not equivalent to "must." McClure v. McGee, 108 S. W. 341, 342, 128 Ky. 464.

Richards Primary Bill (Laws 1911, c. 201) § 112, provides that any party elector wishing to become a candidate for an appointive government position may file his written application for the official party indorsement with the secretary of state after any primary election date and before the following general election date. Section 113 requires the secretary of state to keep a record of such applications, and prepare and mail lists thereof, within 10 days after the general election date, to each member of the party state central committee. Section 114 requires the party state central committee to meet on the second Tuesday of December to determine who shall receive the official party indorsement for appointive positions, and certify such indorsement to the appointing officer and the secretary of state. Held, that the provision of section 112 that any candidate may file his application before the general election date is mandatory, and a party committee cannot give the official party indorsement to a candidate filing his application after the general election, or who files no application, since the provisions of the law are not for the benefit of candidates, but to promote and protect the public welfare; and "may" means "must" when third parties or the public have an interest in having the act done authorized by the permissive language. State ex rel. Cook v. Polley, 139 N. W. 118, 121, 30 S. D. 528.

Assessments on stock

The word "may," as used in Rev. Code, § 2750, providing that the directors of any corporation formed or existing under the laws of the state, after one-fourth its capital stock has been subscribed, may, for the purpose of paying expenses, conducting business, or paying debts, levy and collect assessments upon the subscribed capital stock thereof, etc., does not mean "must." Wall v. Basin Min. Co., 101 Pac. 733, 738, 16 Idaho, 313, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1013.

Assignment of mortgage

"In a statute the word 'may' can be construed only in a mandatory sense, where such construction is necessary to give effect to the policy and intention of the Legislature; and, where there is nothing in connection with the language nor in the sense or policy of the provision to require an unusual interpretation, its use is merely permissive and discretionary." B. & C. Comp. § 5362, provides that mortgages "may" be assigned by an instrument in writing, and recorded, etc. Section 5367 provides that a note secured by a mortgage on real property can be transferred by indorsement, and, if the mortgage was recorded, the same, on payment of the note, may be transferred of record by the owner of the note by proving the fact to the satisfaction of the recorder, and delivering the note to such officer. Section 5368 provides that no mortgage shall be satisfied except by the person appearing on the records to be the owner thereof. Held, that the use of the word "may," in section 5362, showed a design not to repeal section 5367; the action simply prescribing, in section 5368, the method for recording assignments by separate writings. Barringer v. Loder, 81 Pac. 778, 780, 47 Or. 223.

Authorizing suit

The word "may," used in Code Civ. Proc. § 732, providing that any person aggrieved by waste may bring an action therefor, is not a mandatory term, except when it is construed to mean "must"; and it is never thus construed where there is nothing in the connection of the language or in the sense or policy of the provision to require an unusual interpretation. Isom v. Rex Crude Oil Co., 74 Pac. 294, 140 Cal. 678.

In Act April 10, 1879 (P. L. 17) § 5, providing that in case of nonpayment of installments of stock, premiums, dues, or interest by borrowing stockholders for six months, their payment may be enforced by proceeding on their securities according to law, the word "may" should be construed as a word of permission. Workingman's Loan & Building Ass'n of Altoona v. Heaton, 82 Atl. 78, 80, 233 Pa. 178.

Appeal

"May" should be construed in a mandatory sense in a statute providing that any person aggrieved by a decision or order of the board of school directors may, within 30 days after the rendition of the decision or order, appeal to the county superintendent, and such appeal is a condition precedent to the right of a teacher to sue for breach of his contract by the board of directors. Van Dyke v. School Dist. No. 77 of Lewis County, 86 Pac. 402, 403, 43 Wash. 235.

The word "may," in Code, § 254, providing that the judge, on accused showing his inability to pay for a transcript on appeal, "may" order the same at the expense of the county, should be read "must," in view of the change made in the former statute as embodied in Code 1888, § 5029, by omitting the words "if in the opinion of the judge justice will be thereby promoted," and the judge must order the transcript at the expense of the county on accused showing his inability. State v. Goodsell, 113 N. W. 826, 827, 136 Iowa, 445.

Calling family meeting

Under article 1341 of the Civil Code, referring to the family meeting to be held to fix on behalf of minors the terms of sale, and providing that, at the instance of the tutors and curators of such minors, the judge may call a family meeting, the fact that the judge "may" at the instance of the tutors and curators, call the meeting was not intended as excluding authority in the judge to do so at the instance of other parties in interest or of his own motion. Tobin v. United States Safe Deposit & Savings Bank, 39 South. 83, 35, 115 La. 366.

Compensation for services and expenditures

Under a statute providing that the guardian ad litem for an infant party "may" be allowed compensation for his services and necessary expenditures in litigation, to be fixed by the court, and to be paid out of the body of the estate or property in controversy, if the infant has no available property out of which such payment can be directed by the court, the word "may" should not be construed as "must," but should be held to confer on the court a broad discretion as to whether an allowance should be made and to what extent. In re McNaughton's Will, 118 N. W. 967, 1004, 138 Wis. 179.

The general rule that, where public authorities are authorized to perform an act for the benefit of the public, or for an individual who has a right to its performance, the word "may" is interpreted as meaning "must" has no application to Gen. Laws 1901, § 8024, providing that county treasurers shall be allowed by the board of county commissioners of their respective counties, as full compensation for their services for the county, the following salaries, etc., provided, that the county commissioners "may" allow the following sum or as much as they deem necessary for clerk hire, where a county treasurer employed a deputy to assist him, as the question of public benefit through an appropriation for clerk hire can be determined by nobody but the board of county commissioners. Roth v. Board of Com'rs of Ness County, 77 Pac. 694, 69 Kan. 667 (citing Phelps v. Lodge, 55 Pac. 840, 60 Kan. 122).

Costs

The word "may," as used in New York Code Civ. Proc. § 3247, making the person beneficially interested, in an action brought, liable for costs to the same extent as if plaintiff, and providing that, where costs are awarded against plaintiff, the court may by order direct the person so liable to pay them, means the same thing as the word "shall," and the liability of the person beneficially interested for costs is absolute. Nelligan v.

Groth, 110 N. Y. Supp. 619, 620, 126 App. Div. 444 (citing People v. Board of Sup'rs of Otsego County, 51 N. Y. 401).

Detachment of municipal territory

A statute providing for detaching unplatted land from the corporate limits of a city, which provides that, if the court shall find the existence of the necessary facts and conditions, it "may" grant the decree, "falls within the rule that, whenever public interests or individual rights call for the exercise of a power given to courts or other public officers, the language used in conferring the power, although permissive in form, is in effect mandatory." Hunter v. City of Tracy, 116 N. W. 922, 924, 104 Minn. 378.

Dismissal of action

"The word 'may' is sometimes permissive only; sometimes it is imperative. Legislative intent determines whether it is directory or mandatory. According to its natural and usual signification, the word 'may' is enabling and permissive only, and so it must be interpreted where no right of or benefit to the public, nor right of persons other than the one upon whom the permission is conferred, depends upon giving to it the obligatory meaning; but the word is interpreted to mean 'shall' or 'must' whenever the rights of the public or of third persons depend upon the exercise of the power or performance of the duty to which it refers. In those cases where the public or persons possess the right to require that the power conferred by the word 'may' be exercised, the word is imperative and mandatory, being the equivalent of 'shall' or 'must.'" Code Civ. Proc. Mont. 1895, § 1004, subd. 6, providing that an action "may" be dismissed by the court, when, after verdict or final submission, the party entitled to judgment neglects to demand and have it entered for more than six months, is mandatory. State ex rel. Stiefel v. District Court, 96 Pac. 337, 338, 340, 37 Mont. 298 (quoting and adopting definition in Montana Ore Purchasing Co. v. Lindsay, 63 Pac. 715, 25 Mont. 24).

Divorce

The word "may," as used in section 13, c. 64, Code 1906, providing that in certain cases, where divorce from bed and board is decreed, an absolute divorce "may" be granted after certain requirements are fulfilled, means "shall." Chapman v. Chapman, 74 S. E. 661, 664, 70 W. Va. 522 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, 4420).

Enforcing orders of commission

In a statute providing that the orders of a commission "may" be enforced by mandamus, and that, upon proof that an order has been made and has not been complied with after notice thereof, the court "may" issue a mandamus to enforce it, the word "may" means "must." Trustees of Village of Saratoga Springs v. Saratoga Gas, Electric Light & Power Co., 107 N. Y. Supp. 341, 366, 122

App. Div. 203 (dissenting opinion of Judge Kellogg).

Innholder's License

An innholder's license, granted in May instead of the month of April, is valid; the provisions of Rev. Laws 1902, c. 100, § 12, and chapter 102, § 4, providing that licenses "may" be granted in April, to take effect on the 1st of May, being directory. Cheney v. Coughlin, 87 N. E. 744, 745, 747, 201 Mass. 204.

Insurance

Rev. St. 1898, § 1952, provides that life insurance companies whose members are entitled to share in the surplus cumulations "may" make distribution thereof annually or once in two, three, four, or five years, and in determining the amount of surplus to be distributed there "shall" be reserved an amount equal to the net value of the outstanding policies. The section is the same as Laws 1870, p. 107, c. 59, § 14, the purpose of which, as appears from instructions to the legislative committee which reported the bill, was to afford proper "protection to policy holders" by safeguard against insolvency of insurance companies by requiring the cumulation of the reserve fund. Held, that the use of the word "shall" in the section in relation to the reserve fund is imperative, while "may" in relation to distribution of the surplus is permissive, and having been so construed by the state officials and insurance companies for more than 30 years, the license of an insurance company will not be revoked for deferring the distribution of the surplus more than five years. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Host, 102 N. W. 579-584, 124 Wis. 657, 4 Ann. Cas. 413.

Jury trial

Rev. Laws, c. 189, § 16, in its literal wording plainly leaves the option of a jury trial to the discretion of the court. But when read in connection with its legislative origin, supplemented by the practice that prevailed under the original statute, if a jury trial is seasonably claimed, "may" should be construed to mean "shall." Hubbard v. Lam-burn, 75 N. E. 707, 709, 189 Mass. 296.

The word "may," in the borough act of April 24, 1897 (P. L. p. 291), providing that in all cases where a fine or penalty shall exceed $20, etc., there may be a trial by jury, is mandatory in effect, and not permissive only. Borough of Vineland v. Denofio, 65 Atl. 837, 838, 74 N. J. Law, 326.

License to practice profession

The right to practice law given by Code 1906, c. 119, is not a de jure right, and the word "may" employed therein, in the provision that the Supreme Court "may on production of a duly certified copy of the order of the county court grant a license," will not be construed as synonymous with "shall," and, where on application it is shown on objection thereto that applicant is not of good moral character, his application will be denied. In re Application for License to Practice Law, 67 S. E. 597, 601, 67 W. Va. 213.

In Rev. Codes, § 1842, as amended by Laws 1909, p. 192, providing that the board of medical examiners may, either with or without examination, grant a license to any physician licensed to practice by a similar board of any other state, who holds a certificate of registration showing that an examination has been made by the proper board of any state in which an average grade of not less than 80 per cent. was awarded, and who is the holder of a diploma from a medical college in good standing, the word "may" is not to be construed as equivalent to "must." Barton v. Schmershall, 122 Pac. 385, 389, 21 Idaho, 562.

The word "may," as used in Revised Amended Greater New York Charter, § 1089 (Laws 1901, p. 1774, c. 718), providing that at the close of a teacher's third year of continuous successful service the city superintendent "may" make a license permanent, is not used in the sense of "must." It is used in a permissive and not a mandatory sense. People ex rel. Finigan v. Board of Education of City of New York, 94 N. Y. Supp. 61, 62, 106 App. Div. 101.

The word "may" in P. L. 1898, p. 122, § 6, as amended by P. L. p. 396, § 2, providing that the State Board of Registration and Examination in Dentistry shall register as licensed dentists all persons who shall successfully pass the examination, and that the board "may" also without examination issue its license to any applicant furnishing satisfactory proof that he has been duly licensed in any state after full compliance with its dental laws, is not synonymous with the word "shall," but is permissive, and whether the board will license an applicant without an examination is discretionary. Saxenmeyer v. State Board of Registration and Examination in Dentistry, 75 Atl. 175, 176, 79 N. J. Law, 427.

Limitations

Comp. Laws 1897, § 2921, provides that if, at any time after the incurring of an indebtedness or liability or the accrual of a cause of action against him or the entry of judgment against him, the debtor shall have been or shall be absent from or out of the territory, the time during which he "may" have been or may be out of the territory shall not be included in computing limitations. Held, that the use of "may" in connection with "have been" precludes the application of the terms to anything future. "They are the equivalent of has been; the only difference being that in one case the expression is in the certain or indicative form, and in the other in the contingent or potential form. They both refer to a condition completed in present time," and the statute is retrospective in operation. Orman v. Van Arsdell, 78 Pac. 48, 49, 12 N. M. 344, 67 L. R. A. 438.

Gen. St. 1902, § 1131, providing that, in case of the death of plaintiff, his executor and administrator "may enter" within six months and prosecute a suit, is not an absolute limitation on the discretionary power of the court to permit an entry to be made after that time upon good cause shown. Hatch v. Bushy, 59 Atl. 422, 423, 77 Conn. 347.

Luggage

Under Wilson's Rev. & Ann. St. 1903, § 709, providing that luggage may consist of any articles intended for the use of a passenger while traveling or for his personal equipment, the term "may" is used in the sense of "must" or "shall." Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. Zwirtz, 73 Pac. 941, 942, 13 Okl. 411.

Marking ballot

Act June 10, 1898 (P. L. 480) § 22, provides that the elector "shall" prepare his ballot by marking a cross above the name of a party if he desires to vote for every candidate of that party, otherwise by a mark opposite the party named. As amended by Act April 29, 1903 (P. L. 345), the section now reads: "If he desires to vote for every candidate of a political party, he may make a cross," etc. Held, that the employment of the word "may" in the amending clause gives no larger privilege as to the way of marking the ballot than the word "shall" in the original clause. Appeal of Dailey, 81 Atl. 655, 656, 232 Pa. 540.

Marriage ceremony

In Comp. St. 1907, c. 52, § 8, providing that every judge and justice of peace, and every preacher, authorized by the usages of the church to which he belongs to solemnize marriages, may perform marriage ceremonies, the word "may" is mandatory as to justices of the peace who are given a fee therefore by section 11, c. 28, but is permissive as to clergymen and judges of the higher courts. The ordinary meaning of the word "may" is permissive, and it should receive that interpretation, unless the rights of the public or third persons depend upon the power conferred, or it is necessary, to give effect to the clear intention of the Legislature, that it should be construed as mandatory. Douglas County v. Vinsonhaler, 118 N. W. 1058, 1062, 1063, 82 Neb. 810.

Meetings of board

The word "may," in Gen. St. 1901, § 612, providing for calling special meetings by a district board or on petition of 10 resident taxpayers, is permissive. State v. School Dist. No. 1, Edwards County, 103 P. 136, 80 Kan. 667.

Mining

The word "may" is used in a permissive not a mandatory, sense in Mills' Ann. St. § 3162, providing that the relocater of an abandoned lode claim may sink the original shaft deeper than it was at the time of abandonment. Carlin v. Freeman, 75 Pac. 26, 27, 19 Colo. App. 334.

Mortgage foreclosure

Under the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 2396), providing that the affidavit of service on the mortgagor of notice of foreclosure sale by advertisement "may" be made by the person making the service, such person alone can make the affidavit. Deutsch v. Haab, 119 N. Y. Supp. 911, 912, 135 App. Div. 756.

Municipal expenditures

It is a familiar doctrine that, where a statute confers a power to be exercised for the benefit of the public or of a private person, the word "may" is often treated as imposing a duty, rather than conferring a discretion. The word, as used in Extra Sess. Acts La. 1877, p. 47, providing that all the revenues of a city of each year shall be devoted to the expenditures of that year, provided that any surplus of said revenues "may" be applied to the indebtedness of former years, is merely permissive as to the surplus, and does not contractually dedicate the surplus of any year to payment of claims of years prior to that year but subsequent to 1877. The word, in such act, is used in special contradistinction to the word "shall." United States v. Thoman, 15 Sup. Ct. 378, 380, 156 U. S. 353, 39 L. Ed. 450.

Notice of dishonor of note

L. O. L. § 5929, provides that the notice of dishonor of a note may be in writing or oral, and section 5936 requires such notice, where the person giving and the person to receive reside in the same place, to be sent the day following dishonor, while section 5946 provides that delay in giving notice is excused when caused by circumstances beyond the control of the holder. Held, that the word "may" in the first section should be construed as "must," and that the person giving the notice must give it in writing or orally, and hence the impossibility of giving oral notice does not under the last section excuse delay; notice by mail being practicable. Price v. Warner, 118 Pac. 173, 174, 60 Or. 7.

Powers of trustee

Laws 1896, p. 573, c. 547, § 86, provides that a trustee of property during the life of the beneficiary "may" execute a lease of real property for a term not exceeding five years, without application to the court. It is also declared that, if any such trustee has leased property before June 4, 1895, for a longer period than five years, the Supreme Court on the trustee's application "may" confirm the lease by an order binding on all persons interested in the trust estate. Held, that the legislative intent in the first provision was to extend rather than restrict the powers of the trustee, so that a five-year lease executed in 1900 by a trustee of the life beneficiary containing an option for renewal was enforceable against the trustee and could not be construed as though it read: "A trustee shall not execute and deliver a lease of such real property for a term exceeding five years without application to the court." Weir v. Barker, 98 N. Y. Supp. 732, 734, 104 App. Div. 112.

Private way

Pub. St. 1882, c. 189, § 20, provides that a party desiring to have a private way laid out shall file a petition with the county commissioners. Section 25 provides that, when the premises are situated entirely in one town, the petition may be made to the selectmen, or mayor and aldermen, thereof. The word "may," in the last section, does not mean "must." Eldredge v. Norfolk County Com'rs, 70 N. E. 36, 37, 185 Mass. 186.

Probate proceedings

Code, § 141, providing that any person interested under any will filed in the office of the register of wills prior to June 8, 1898, "may offer the same for probate as a will of real estate," is permissive, and not mandatory. Young v. Norris Peters Co., 27 App. D. C. 140, 145.

The power of modification or revocation conferred by Gen. St. 1902, § 203, providing that any court of probate "may" modify or revoke any order or decree made by it ex parte, before any appeal therefrom, and, if made before the final settlement thereof, upon the written application of any person interested therein, etc., is one that, on an application in a prescribed manner, "may," not must, be exercised. Appeal of Murdoch, 72 Atl. 290, 291, 294, 81 Conn. 681, 129 Am. St. Rep. 231.

The word "may," as used in West Virginia Code 1906, § 3259, providing that if, after administration is granted to a creditor or other person than a distributee, any distributee, who shall not have before refused, shall apply for administration, there may be a grant of probate or administration in like manner as if the former grant had not been made, means "must." Butcher v. Kunst, 64 S. E. 967, 971, 65 W. Va. 384 (quoting Hutcherson v. Priddy, 12 Grat. [53 Va.] 85).

Comp. Laws 1897, § 9310, provides that, when a will shall have been duly proved and allowed, the probate court shall issue letters testamentary to the person named executor therein, if he is legally competent, and shall accept the trust and give bond. Section 9317 provides that if an executor shall reside out of the state, or shall neglect to render his account or perform any decree of the court, or abscond, etc., the probate court "may" remove such executor. Section 50, subd. 1, requires words and phrases used in statutes to be construed and understood according to the common and approved use of language. Held, that a nonresident alien is not absolutely disqualified from serving as executor, but his nonresidence is ground for the exercise of a discretion in the probate judge in the matters of appointing him or revoking his letters, and the word "may" should not be held to mean "shall." Breen v. Kehoe, 105 N. W. 28, 29, 142 Mich. 58, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 349, 113 Am. St. Rep. 558.

Proceedings against insolvent debtor

The word "may" is used ordinarily as a word of permission, rather than of command. Bankruptcy Act (Act U. S. 1898, c. 541, § 11), providing that a suit founded on a claim from which a discharge would be a release, pending against a person when a petition is filed against him, shall be stayed until after an adjudication or dismissal of the petition, and, if he is adjudged a bankrupt, such action may be further stayed until 12 months after the adjudication or until the question of discharge is determined, effects a peremptory stay only until the adjudication is made, and leaves the further stay within the discretion of the court in which the action is pending. If Congress had intended that a further stay in case of an adjudication should be peremptory, the use of the word "shall" instead of "may" would have made its meaning clear. Rosenthal v. Nove, 56 N. E. 884, 885, 175 Mass. 559, 73 Am. St. Rep. 512.

The clause in 2 Gen. St. 1895, p. 1723, § 11, providing that the court "may" direct the discharge of an insolvent debtor on making and filing an assignment of his property as therein provided, is regarded as mandatory. Compton v. Calvert, 72 Atl. 29, 30, 77 N. J. Law, 358 (citing Weeks v. Buderus, 39 N. J. Law, 448).

Proceedings relating to school districts

Acts 31st Leg. c. 12, § 50, requires county commissioners, in organized counties not subdivided, to divide their counties into convenient school districts, so that no district shall be thereafter created having an area of less than 16 square miles or more than one school for white children and one for colored children for each 16 square miles of territory or major fraction thereof, except that the commissioners "may" reduce the area of any common school district and create such additional districts as may be necessary, provided that no district shall be reduced to contain less than 9 square miles of territory, and that no new district shall thereafter be created having a less area than 9 square miles, and that the area of school districts having an outstanding bonded indebtedness shall not be reduced until after such indebtedness has been fully discharged. Held, that the word "may," as so used, did not confer a mere discretion, but imported an imperactive obligation, and hence a division of a county in such a manner as to place in the district containing the county seat 200 sections of land, making that district 20 miles long, and including the best of the lands in the county, when the territory did not exceed 60 scholastics in number, and giving to no other district more than 35 sections of land, constituted an illegal exercise of power which was subject to review by the courts. McLaughlin v. Smith, 148 S. W. 288, 289, 105 Tex. 330.

Primarily and as ordinarily used in a statute, the word "may" is permissive rather than peremptory, but it is sometimes regarded as synonymous with "must," as, for instance, where public officers are authorized to perform an act for the benefit of the public or for an individual who has a right to its performance. In the statute relating to school district meetings, which provides special meeting may be called by the district board or upon a petition signed by ten resident taxpayers of the district, the word "may" is used in its permissive sense. The word should always be given its ordinary meaning, unless the other terms and provisions of the statute compel the other view. State v. School Dist. No. 1, Edwards County, 103 Pac. 136, 80 Kan. 667 (quoting Pelphs v. Lodge, 55 Pac. 840, 60 Kan. 122).

Proving ownership of estray

In Rev. Codes 1899, § 1575, providing that the person taking up an estray and the claimant of the property may go before a justice of the peace to have determined the rights of the parties, the use of the word "may" is not decisive of the meaning of the statute, and the word "may" will be construed to mean "shall," when the context or purpose of the statute requires it. It was the object of the section to provide a convenient and speedy method of proving ownership and at the same time protect the person holding the estray from liability for erroneous decision as to ownership. Mills v. Fortune, 105 N. W. 235, 236, 14 N. D. 460.

Public improvements

The word "may," as used in 1 Starr. & C. Am. St. (2d Ed.) p. 858, c. 24, par. 430, providing that a sidewalk ordinance may require all owners of abutting lots to construct a sidewalk in front of their respective lots, etc., should be read "shall." Pierson v. People, 68 N. E. 383, 386, 204 Ill. 456.

"Words which, in their ordinary acceptation, and when interpreted exclusive of the context and the subject-matter, imply a discretion or power, such as 'may,' 'it shall be lawful,' and the like, become, in the construction of statutes, mandatory, where such is the legislative intent." Under a statute providing that, on making changes of a street, it shall be lawful for the municipal authorities in any such city to make or cause to be made a proper award for damages, etc., the duty of the city to make the award in such case is mandatory. Clark v. City of Elizabeth, 40 Atl. 616, 622, 61 N. J. Law, 565 (citing and adopting Maxwell, Interp. of St. 218, 219, Board of Sup'rs of Rock Island County v. United States ex rel. State Bank, 4 Wall. 435, 446, 18 L. Ed. 419).

Civ. Code 1902, § 1881, provides that the county supervisor "may" advertise for "bids for working highways by contract." Held to give such officer discretion, and the city council of a city under a general charter giving it the same powers over streets as county officers have over highways is not required to advertise for bids in county newspapers for the paving of streets. Dillingham v. City of Spartanburg, 56 S. E. 381, 382, 75 S. C. 549, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 412, 117 Am. St. Rep. 917, 9 Ann. Cas. 829 (citing Minor v. Mechanics' Bank, 1 Pet. [28 U. S.] 46, 7 L. Ed. 47).

The Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 147, c. 153), as amended by St. 1905, p. 63, c. 67, provides that whenever a contemplated improvement in the opinion of the city council is of more than local or ordinary public benefit, or whenever the total estimated costs exceed one-half the total assessed value of the lots fronting on such proposed work, the city council "may" make the expense chargeable on a district. As originally drawn, the act required the trustees of the city to order payment of a portion of the expense from the city treasury if the estimated cost of the improvement exceeded one-half the assessed value of the property. St. 1880, pp. 159, 160, 170, c. 151, amended the act so as to confer discretionary power on city councils. The amendments of 1891 (St. 1891, p. 196 et seq., c. 147) are similar in this respect. Held, that the Legislature intended to confer a wide discretionary power, and that the word "may" would not be construed to mean "shall," so as to require the expense of a street improvement to be made chargeable on a district where the estimated cost exceeds one-half the assessed value of the lots fronting on the proposed work. Ostrander v. City of Richmond, 101 Pac. 452, 453, 155 Cal. 468.

St. 1896, c. 40a, subc. 42, § 925—223, provides that when a city council shall order paving or repaving of a street in which gas, water mains, or sewers have been previously laid, the council "may" require service pipes to be first laid to the curb line, and that no street shall be paved or repaved by order of the council unless the water, gas mains, service pipes, necessary sewers, and connections shall, as required by the council, be first laid in that portion of the street so to be paved or repaved. Held, that the word "may" should be treated as permissive and not mandatory, and that a city council therefore had power to order the paving of a street without requiring water, gas, service pipes, and sewer connections to be laid before the pavement. Barber Asphalt Co. v. City of Oshkosh, 121 N. W. 603, 140 Wis. 58.

"Whether the word 'may,' in a statute, is permissive or obligatory depends in a great measure on the true intent and object of the Legislature in making the enactment. It means 'must' whenever third persons or the public have an interest in having the act done or have a claim de jure that the power shall be exercised." The provisions of Acts 24th Leg. Sess. (Laws 1895, p. 213, c. 132), constituting a special road law for certain counties, that the commissioners' court "may" condemn land in the same manner that a railroad company can condemn land for a right of way is mandatory, and does not merely confer on the commissioners' court a discretionary power to proceed under the railroad law. Plowman v. Dallas County (Tex.) 88 S. W. 252, 256 (quoting and adopting definition in Rains v. Herring, 68 Tex. 468, 5 S. W. 369).

The word "may" is not to be construed as "must" or "shall," but merely as permissive and discretionary with the city, in an ordinance providing that the grade of alleys, not otherwise fixed, at the points of intersection with streets whose grades are established by the ordinance, shall be the same as said streets, and continuous from one street to the next, but between any two adjacent streets along the line of the alley vertical curves of grade "may" be used, when necessary to facilitate drainage or afford better access to property along the line of said alley, etc., for in interpreting statutes and ordinances the word "may" should not be construed to mean "must" or "shall," for the purpose of creating or determining the character of private rights. Kelley v. City of Cedar Falls, 90 N. W. 556, 557, 123 Iowa, 660.

Under Acts 1891, p. 323, c. 118 (Burns' Ann. St. 1901, § 4291), providing that after receiving bids for the improvement of a street, in case all bids are rejected as unsatisfactory, then the common council "may" order work to be done by the street commissioner, the total cost of the work not to be in excess of the lowest bid or that the common council "may" readvertise for bids for the work, the council must either order the work done by the commissioner, or readvertise for bids for the work, and they are not at liberty, after accepting one of the number of bids submitted, for street work, on subsequent reconsideration and rejection of the bid, to accept the proposal of another bidder submitted at the same time as the bid rejected, but with a change of material, all of which was done without readvertisement for bids. Where power is given to public officers, and the public interest or individual rights called for its exercise, the language used, though permissive in form, is in fact peremptory, and the intent of the Legislature in such cases is not to declare a mere direction, but to impose a positive and absolute duty. Zorn

v. Warren-Scharf Asphalt Paving Co. (Ind.) 81 N. E. 672, 675 (citing Rock Island County v. United States ex rel. State Bank, 4 Wall. 435, 18 L. Ed. 419).

A waterworks system in a village of the fourth class was extended to supply all the inhabitants except four. Relator was the only one of the four to insist that it be extended to supply him, and he sued for mandamus. The cost of the extension would be less than $500. Village Law (Laws 1897, p. 434, c. 414) art. 9, § 224, as amended by Laws 1903, p. 307, c. 181, § 1, provided that a system of waterworks established under the article shall be under the control of the board of water commissioners, and that the board shall keep it in repair, and "may" extend the mains within the village, if the expense in any one year, in a village of the fourth class, shall not exceed $500, and that a board "may," in lieu of extending the mains, etc., use the amount specified in improving the existing system. The original cost of the system, which was met by an issue of bonds, relator being taxed for interest thereon, was $20,000, and there were 150 residences or places of business. The board had no money on hand to make the extension. Held, that the word "may," as used in the phrase "may extend" in any one year, etc., though permissive, would be construed "must," especially in view of the permissive character of "may" used in the last sentence of the statute, giving an alternative use of the money. People ex rel. Hilliker v. Pierce, 119 N. Y. Supp. 21, 23, 64 Misc. Rep. 627.

The term "may," as used in Laws 1900, p. 1302, c. 571, providing that the city of Buffalo "may" enlarge and embank the Buffalo river, implies a discretion in the city and places no absolute duty on it of improving such river. White v. City of Buffalo, 115 N. Y. Supp. 1021, 1023, 131 App. Div. 531.

The word "may" must be construed as "shall," when an act of the Legislature can be thereby upheld, if a contrary construction would render it obnoxious to a constitutional inhibition. The converse of this must be likewise true, and Denver City Charter, art. 7, § 31, providing that the city council shall pass an assessing ordinance after recommendations of the council for improvements have been reviewed by the board of public works, is to be construed as meaning that the council may pass such an ordinance. City of Denver v. Londoner, 80 Pac. 117, 121, 33 Colo. 104 (citing Board of County Com'rs of Pueblo County v. Smith, 45 Pac. 357, 22 Colo. 534).

The words "may" and "shall," when used in a statute, will sometimes be read interchangeably, as will best express the legislative intent. The word "may" will be construed to mean "shall," when the public or third person have a claim that the power ought to be exercised; but, when the word "shall" is used where no right or benefit to any one depends on its imperative use, that word may be held directory merely, and by legislative intention to be used synonymously with the word "may." Act May 29, 1889, entitled "An act to create sanitary districts and to remove obstructions in the Des Plaines and Illinois rivers" (section 23), provides that the sanitary district constructing a channel to carry water from Lake Michigan may correct, modify, and remove obstructions in the Des Plaines and Illinois rivers, wherever it shall be necessary so to do to prevent overflow or damage along such rivers, and "shall" remove the dams at Henry and Copperas creek, in the Illinois river, before any water shall be turned into the said canal; also that if the canal commissioners "find at any time that an additional supply of water has been added to either of said rivers, by any drainage district or districts, to maintain a depth of not less than six feet from and dam owned by the state, to and into the first lock of the Illinois and Michigan Canal at LaSalle, without the aid of any such dam, at low water, then it shall be the duty of said canal commissioners to cause such dam or dams to be removed." The dams were constructed by the canal commissioners at a great expense, and their destruction would greatly injure navigation. It was held that the word "shall" should be construed as "may," so that the removal of the dams at Henry and Copperas creek by the sanitary district is not mandatory, but depends on the question of necessity, and that it is the duty of the canal commissioners to preserve and protect the dams until the conditions stated result. Canal Com'rs v. Sanitary Dist. of Chicago, 56 N. E. 953, 956, 184 Ill. 597.

Punishment of criminals

Reformatory Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 118) § 10, divides persons who may be sentenced thereunder into two classes, viz., males between 10 and 16 years of age, and males between 16 and 21. Section 11 provides that a boy between 10 and 16 years of age "shall be committed" to the reformatory; while section 9 provides that both classes "may be sentenced" to the reformatory. Section 10 declares that in all criminal cases tried by a jury, where it is found that the defendant is between 10 and 21 years of age, the jury shall not fix the punishment, unless it shall also appear that defendant has been previously sentenced to the penitentiary, or that the offense is a capital one, and Parole Law, § 1 (Hurd's Rev. St. 1909, c. 38, § 498), excepts from its application treason, murder, rape, and kidnapping. Held, that the parole law was not intended to destroy by implication the application of the reformatory act to males between the ages of 10 and 21, convicted of rape; but that the word "may," in section 9 of the reformatory act, should be construed to mean "must"; and hence a boy of 19, on being convicted of rape, could not be properly sentenced to the penitentiary. People v. Smith, 97 N. E. 649, 650, 253 Ill. 283.

Code 1899, c. 160, § 2, providing that in any other criminal cases than in cases of sentence to death or to the penitentiary the court "may postpone" the execution of the judgment, where a writ of error lies, the word "may" means "shall," and a person convicted of misdemeanor is entitled as matter of right to suspension of the execution of the judgment pending application for a writ of error. Ex parte Doyle, 57 S. E. 824, 62 W. Va. 280.

The word "may," in Rev. Codes 1899, § 8246, providing that, where the punishment imposed by the jury in the verdict is under the limit prescribed by law for the offense of which defendant is found guilty, the court "may" receive the verdict and render judgment for the lowest limit prescribed by law, is mandatory, and it is the duty of trial judges to receive such a verdict and enter judgment thereon. State v. Barry, 103 N. W. 637, 639, 640, 14 N. D. 816.

The word "may," as used in Acts 1897, p. 73, c. 53, § 8, providing that the board of managers of the Indiana reformatory may terminate the imprisonment of certain inmates when the rules and requirements of such reformatory have been obeyed and performed according to the provisions of the act, must be understood in its usual acceptance and as granting to such board permission, liberty, or discretion to terminate such imprisonment, and not as imposing on the board a duty to be performed in all cases, whether such board believes the person imprisoned entitled to his discharge or otherwise. Should the clause of the act be construed as mandatory, all discipline in the institution would inevitably be overthrown, and the board be exposed to innumerable and constantly recurring legal controversies with the inmates over the question of the right to a discharge. Terry v. Byers, 68 N. E. 596, 598, 161 Ind. 360.

Receivership

In Rev. Codes, § 4381, providing that the court may require an undertaking from an applicant for a receivership, "may" does not mean "must." Lee v. Stevens, 127 Pac. 680, 681, 22 Idaho, 670.

Reference

The word "may," as used in Rev. St. 1898, § 2864, providing that all or any of the issues in an action may be referred, is not used with reference to public rights or interests, or where the public or a third person have a claim de jure that the power shall be exercised. So it is not an instance where by the rules of statutory construction a permissive word shall be given the mandatory significance of "must" or "shall." When a permissive word is not so used in the statute, it must be taken in its literal sense. The privilege of the statute in question is designed for the convenience of both the court and parties. Hence the statute authorizes a reference in the discretion of the court, and does not entitle a party to a reference as a matter of right. Hart v. Godkin, 100 N. W. 1057, 1058, 122 Wis. 646.

Regulation of freight rates

Under a railroad charter providing that, when the aggregate amount of dividends declared shall amount to the full sum invested and 10 per centum per annum thereon, the Legislature "may" so regulate the tolls and freights that not more than 15 per centum per annum shall be divided on the capital employed, and the surplus profits, if any, etc., the word "may" is permissive. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Indiana ex rel. Ketcham, 24 Sup. Ct. 767, 769, 194 U. S. 579, 48 L. Ed. 1124.

Under Loc. Laws 1847, p. 77, creating a corporation with power to construct a railroad between certain points, and with the right to fix its transportation rates until the stockholders had received in dividends an amount equal to the sum invested and 10 per cent. per annum thereon, when the Legislature may regulate the rates, the word "may" cannot be construed to mean "shall." Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. State ex rel. Ketcham, 65 N. E. 401, 406, 159 Ind. 438.

Specific performance

Under Civ. Code, art. 1926, the obligee in a contract for the sale of land is entitled to damages, or specific performance, at his option, and by article 1927 he is entitled only to damages in ordinary cases, but "may" be awarded specific performance in cases where damages would be inadequate relief. Construing these two articles together and reading the word "may" in conjunction with the word "entitled," to which it stands in correlation, the word "may" must be given the meaning of "shall." Girault v. Feucht, 41 South. 572, 573, 117 La. 276.

Taxation

In Pol. Code, § 3804, requiring that any taxes paid more than once, or erroneously or illegally collected, may by order of the board of supervisors be refunded by the county treasurer, the word "may" means "shall." Stewart Law & Collection Co. v. Alameda County, 76 Pac. 481, 482, 142 Cal. 660.

Pol. Code, § 3804, provides that any taxes, penalties, and costs paid more than once, or erroneously or illegally collected, may, by order of the supervisors, be refunded. Held, that the duty to refund was mandatory; the word "may" being construed to mean "must," under the rule that, where persons or the public have an interest in having an act done by a public body, the word "may" is to be so construed. Brenner v. City of Los Angeles, 116 Pac. 397, 400, 160 Cal. 72.

L. O. L. § 937, gives the county court the authority and powers of county commissioners to transact county business. It is authorized by subsections 3 and 4 to establish, vacate, or alter highways, and provide for the erection of bridges. By subsection 7, to determine the amount of revenue to be raised for county purposes, and to levy the rate necessary therefor; and by subsection 9 it is given the general management of county property, funds, and business, where the law does not otherwise provide. Acts 1903, p. 262, which remodeled the entire road system of the state, repealing all previous legislation on the subject, did not in terms repeal section 937; but it was amended by Acts 1909, p. 296, so as to provide, in section 34 (L. O. L. §§ 6320, 6321), that the county court "may" levy a tax, not to exceed 10 mills on the dollar, which shall be set apart as a general road fund. Held that, while the word "may," when referring to a ministerial public duty, is often construed as "shall" or "must," the ordinary import of the word is directory, and as the later legislation does not in terms attempt to infringe on the authority of the county court its provisions must be regarded as merely cumulative, and it rests within the discretion of the county court to make the levy provided for in section 34. Kime v. Thompson, 118 Pac. 174, 175, 60 Or. 183.

The word "may," as used in a statute providing that a tax collector "may" notify a nonresident taxpayer of the time and place at which he will receive payment of the tax, and that the time shall not be less than 20 or more than 40 days from the time when the notice is mailed, in view of the summary method of proceeding against property for taxes, is used in the mandatory sense of "must." Brush v. Watson, 69 Atl. 141, 142, 81 Vt. 43.

It is well settled that the word "may" or the words "it shall be lawful" are peremptory when used in a statute conferring authority to do certain acts, where the public or an individual has a right de jure that the powers conferred by the act should be exercised. Where a judgment was obtained against a city on a debt which arose prior to the Constitution of 1875, pursuant to a statute authorizing the city to levy taxes to pay the debt, the city must levy a tax to pay a judgment within the limitation as to the amount of levy provided by Const. 1901, § 218, and on its refusal the judgment creditor is entitled to compel the levy by mandamus. Graham v. City of Tusculum, 42 South. 400, 402, 146 Ala. 449 (quoting and adopting definition in Tarver v. Commissioners' Court of Tallapoosa County, 17 Ala. 527).

In a statute which provided that a board of supervisors "may, if deemed advisable," levy a special tax to pay a certain indebtedness, the language was peremptory. Where power is given to public officers in such lan-gauge, if the public interest or individual rights call for its exercise, the language, though permissive in form, is in fact peremptory, and what they are empowered to do for a third person the law requires shall be done. The power is given, not for their benefit, but for his. It is placed with the depository to meet the demands of right and to prevent a failure of justice. It is given as a remedy to those entitled to invoke its aid who would be otherwise remediless in all such cases. The intent of the Legislature which is the test is not to devolve a mere discretion but to impose a positive and absolute duty. United States v. Cornell Steamboat Co., 137 Fed. 455, 458, 69 C. C. A. 603 (quoting and adopting definition given in Rock Island County v. United States ex rel. State Bank, 4 Wall. [71 U. S.] 435, 18 L. Ed. 419).

The word "may," in a statute, will be construed to mean "shall," where the subject-matter is one in which the public have an interest to be protected or promoted by the exercise of a power or the performance of a prescribed duty by a public officer, unless the context shows that the word was used in its primary signification. However, as used in Galveston city charter, section 56, providing that suit may be brought to collect taxes, is not mandatory. Brummer v. City of Galveston, 76 S. W. 428, 429, 97 Tex. 93 (citing Smisson v. State, 9 S. W. 112, 71 Tex. 222).

Trial

The word "may," in Rev. St. 1899, § 748, providing that upon the conclusion of the evidence either party "may" move the court to instruct and the court "may" of its own motion give instructions, is not used in a mandatory sense, and the court is not required to give instructions in a civil action, where no instructions are requested. Hall v. St. Louis & S. Ry. Co., 101 S. W. 1137, 1140, 124 Mo. App. 661.

The word "may," as used in Rev. St. 1899, § 748, providing that the court "may" of its own motion give instructions on any point of law arising in the cause, is permissive and not mandatory. Wilson v. Kansas City Southern Ry. Co., 99 S. W. 465, 466, 122 Mo. App. 667.

Where the statute provided that the court of chancery "may," in will contest suits, direct an issue of fact as in other cases, the word "may" is equivalent to "must" and the court is required to direct an issue of devisavit vel non whenever demanded; the word "may," in a statute, when it concerns the public interest or the rights of individuals, being mandatory and equivalent to "must" or "shall." Hill v. Barge, 12 Ala. 687, 693.

"May," as used in a statute providing that a trial court "may order a view," etc., implies a discretion. Commonwealth v. Chance, 54 N. E. 551, 552, 174 Mass. 245, 75 Am. St. Rep. 306 (citing and adopting Com- monwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. [59 Mass.] 295, 298, 299, 52 Am. Dec. 711).

Trying title to office

Where an individual seeks relief of a private nature under Hurd's Rev. St. 1905, c. 112, § 1, providing that, when a person unlawfully holds an office in a corporation created by the state, "the Attorney General or state's attorney, either of his own accord or at the instance of 'an individual, 'may' present a petition to any court of record of competent jurisdiction" for leave to file an information in the nature of a quo warranto, it was held that the only discretion vested in the prosecuting officer is to determine whether the documents presented to him are in proper legal form, and whether evidence is presented sufficient to establish the person's prima facie right to the relief. It was urged that any such construction would result in holding that the word "may," in the language quoted, means "may" in cases where only the public interest is at stake, and means "shall" where private interests are involved, and that it would be an anomaly to hold that the same word in the same sentence of a statute may mean one thing when applied to one class of cases and another thing when applied to another class, but the court was of the opinion that this presented no serious difficulty, stating that, when the Legislature extended the right to private individuals to assert private rights by this proceeding, it is apparent that it was intended that they should have an opportunity to seek redress for their wrongs by making application to a court, or judge thereof, for leave to file an information; that the duty resting on the state's attorney to sign and present a petition for leave to file an information in the nature of a quo warranto, where evidence of facts is properly presented to him by a proposed relator, which shows prima facie that the relator is legally entitled to the relief, in reference to a private right, which would be afforded him by a judgment in his favor in a quo warranto proceeding, is an absolute one, and it followed, therefore, that, where he declines to act for any reason other than that the facts, evidence of the existence of which is presented to him, do not warrant the relief which the proposed relator seeks, or that the petition and affidavit or affidavits presented to him are not in proper legal form, his declaration is an abuse of his discretion, conceding that his construction of the statute be correct, and such an abuse of discretion as amounts to a refusal on his part to exercise his discretion at all and to a refusal to perform the duty enjoined upon him by the law. People v. Healy, 82 N. E. 599, 602, 230 Ill. 280, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 603.

Venue

The word "may," as used in Gen. St. 1894, § 5186, which provides that, where defendant is a nonresident and plaintiff proceeds by attaching his property, the action may be brought in any county where defendant has property liable to attachment, is not mandatory, and cannot be construed as meaning "must." Clements v. Utley, 98 N. W. 188, 189, 91 Minn. 352.

The words "may be brought," as used in Kirby's Dig. § 6067, providing that an action against a corporation "may be brought" in certain counties, have the meaning of "shall be brought," and are mandatory. Spratley v. Louisiana & A. Ry. Co., 95 S. W. 776, 777; 77 Ark. 412.

The words "may be brought," as used in Kirby's Dig. § 6068, providing that an action against a railroad company or an owner of a line of mail coaches or other coaches, for injury to person or property, may be brought in any county through or into which the road or line passes, have the meaning of "shall be brought," and are mandatory. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Jaber, 107 S. W. 1170, 1171, 85 Ark. 232.

The word "may," as used in Code, § 3214, subd. 7, providing that where a circuit court judge is interested in a case which, but for such interest, would be within the jurisdiction of his court, the action may be brought in any county in an adjoining circuit, was not used in the sense of "may only," or "must," but thereunder a circuit court judge may bring an action in the circuit court of any county in his circuit in which the defendants reside. Harrison v. Wissler, 36 S. E. 982, 983, 98 Va. 597 (quoting and adopting Thompson v. Roe ex dem. Carroll, 22 How. [63 U. S.] 422, 434, 16 L. Ed. 391, and citing and adopting Minor v. Mechanics' Bank, 1 Pet. [26 U. S.] 46, 64, 7 L. Ed. 55).

Same—Change of venue

Gen. St. 1909, § 5650, provides that, where it shall be made to appear that the judge is interested in the subject-matter or is otherwise disqualified, the court may, upon application of either party, change the place of trial. Held, that "may," as used, means "must," and, where the necessary facts have been made to appear, a change of venue is not a matter of discretion of the court, but a right in the party applying therefor. Jones v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 109 Pac. 1077, 1080, 83 Kan. 44.

The word "may" in Rev. Codes 1899, § 6652, providing that a justice of the peace may before trial, on motion, change the place of trial in certain cases, should be construed to mean "must." Walker v. Maronda, 106 N. W. 296, 297, 15 N. D. 63.

Under Laws 1891, c. 50, amending section 7312, Comp. Laws, providing that a criminal action prosecuted by indictment may, at any time before trial is begun, on the application of defendant, be removed from the court in which it is pending, whenever it shall appear to the satisfaction of the court, by affidavit, that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had, the word "may" will be construed as imperative, where an affidavit presented by accused sufficiently alleges prejudice of the presiding judge. State v. Henning, 54 N. W. 536, 538, 8 S. D. 492.

The Legislature, by using the term "shall grant a change of judge," in Sess. Law 1907-08, c. 68, art. 1, § 10, p. 592, instead of the term "may, on application of either party, change the place of trial to some court where such objection does not exist," in view of the construction of the word "may" in the case of Kansas Pacific Ry. v. Reynolds, 8 Kan. 630, did not render the statute in that respect any more mandatory, and there can be no special significance in the use of the word "shall" instead of the word "may." State ex rel. Smith v. Brown, 103 Pac. 765, 24 Okl. 483.

Withdrawal of plea

Code, § 5337, providing that at any time before judgment the court "may" permit a plea of guilty to be withdrawn and other plea or pleas substituted, is mandatory. State v. Hortman, 97 N. W. 981, 982, 122 Iowa, 104.

MAY BE

The term "may be," in a will providing that the trust "may be" ended when the testator's eldest child comes to 21 years of age, or, being a daughter, is married, implies necessarily that the trust may or not be then terminated. Hence, until it has been terminated by the act of the parties or of a court of competent jurisdiction, the trust will endure so as to conserve the title and interest devised, to the ends intended by the settlor. Davis v. Dovey (Ky.) 85 S. W. 725, 726.

The rule appears to be settled that where the term "may be" is used in statutes, unless the contrary appears from the context, it is to be construed as meaning in the future. Bohart v. Anderson, 108 Pac. 742, 743, 744, 20 Okl. 82, 20 Ann. Cas. 142 (citing Board of Commissioners of Pitkin County v. Aspen Mining & Smelting Co., 32 Pac. 718, 3 Colo. App. 223; Shoemaker v. Smith, 37 Ind. 128). 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4447).

Civ. Code, § 3193, provides that an acceptance of a bill of exchange must be in writing, and "may be made" by the acceptor writing his name across the face of the bill with or without other words. Held, that the phrase "may be made" indicates that the section is permissive, only, and that any other written acceptance clearly disclosing the drawee's intention to accept will constitute an acceptance. Hughes Bros. v. Rawhide Gold Mining Co., 116 Pac. 969, 971, 16 Cal. App. 293.

Where testator bequeathed a sum to his daughter, but provided that the amount should "may be" owing on his books should be deducted therefrom, and about $20,000 was charged against her at the time, but no advancements were made thereafter, the words quoted referred to advancements already made. In re Bresler's Estate, 119 N. W. 1104, 1107, 155 Mich. 567.

"May be revived," in equity rule 56, prescribing the procedure to revive a suit on the death of a party, the expression "may be revived" should be read "must be" or "shall be," and one entitled to revive a suit in equity, which has abated by the death of a party, is not authorized to proceed therefor by motion, but must follow the procedure prescribed by rule 56 by filing a bill of revivor, or a bill in the nature of a bill of revivor. Dillard's Adm'r v. Central Virginia Iron Co., 125 Fed. 157, 159.

MAY BECOME

"The phrase 'may become' prima facie refers to the future." Haspel v. O'Brien, 67 Atl. 123, 218 Pa. 146, 11 Ann. Cas. 470.

MAY COME

Code, § 841, describing embezzlement by a receiver as the fraudulent conversion to his own use of property which "may come" into his possession by virtue of his employment, comprehends property in the hands of the receiver before the passage of the act, but embezzled thereafter. Fields v. United States, 27 App. D. C. 433, 439.

MAY CONTINUE IN SESSION

The expression "may continue in session," etc., in Baltimore City Charter (Laws 1898, p. 359, c. 128) § 216, declaring that the city council shall meet on the Thursday next after the third Monday in May, 1899, and upon the same day in each year thereafter, and may continue in session for 120 days, and no longer, in each year, provided that they may so arrange their sittings that the same may be held continuously or otherwise, does not mean that at the end of the 120 days, or at the end of the year during which the council meet that number of days, all unfinished business must come to an end, and be again gone over from the beginning to give it effect. Bond v. City of Baltimore, 74 Atl. 14, 16, 111 Md. 364.

MAY DEDUCT

Though the words "may deduct," as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 1903, as amended by Laws 1904, p. 1285, c. 515, providing that, in an action for wrongful death, plaintiff "may deduct" from the amount recovered the expenses of the action, the reasonable funeral expenses of the decedent, and his commissions upon the residue, confer a mere power, the power is given without limitation as to the persons in whose favor it may be exercised, and the observance of the statute is therefore not merely discretionary but is rendered necessary by the scope of the statute and its clear intent and purpose. In re McDermott's Estate, 99 N. Y. Supp. 829, 49

Misc. Rep. 402 (citing Pelletier v. Saunders, 67 N. C. 261; In re Thornton's Estate, 5 Ohio Dec. 151).

MAY FRAME CHARTER

The provision in the state Constitution that cities of a specified class "may frame a charter for its own government" means that a city of such class may frame a charter for the government of itself as a city, which includes all that is necessary or incident to the government of the municipality, but not all the power that the state has for the protection of the rights and regulation of the duties of the inhabitants in the city, as between themselves. Nor does the Constitution confer unlimited power on the city to regulate, by its charter, all matters that are strictly local, for there are many matters that are local to a city, requiring governmental protection which are foreign to the scope of municipal government. State ex rel. Garner v. Missouri & K. Telephone Co., 88 S. W. 41, 43, 189 Mo. 83.

MAY HAVE

Where a witness replied to a question concerning his former testimony, "I don't know; I may have," the words "may have" were not necessary or even probably intended as a statement that his best recollection was that he had so testified, but rather that he had no recollection whatever about it. The answer seems to be a statement that he did not know and had no recollection. Higgins v. Shepard, 70 N. E. 1014, 1015, 186 Mass. 57.

Plaintiff gave defendant railroad company a receipt reciting that it was in full satisfaction of all claims and demands whatsoever which plaintiff "has or may have" against defendant by reason of damages to plaintiff's land from the overflow of water, etc., for all expenses caused by the overflow, for the conveyance of a parcel of land over which the overflow was, and for a general release, and providing that a deed and release should be executed. Held, that the receipt only provided for the release of the existing claim for damages caused by the overflow, and not for future claims for such damages. McCabe v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 124 N. Y. Supp. 652, 654, 189 App. Div. 698.

"May have suffered" is a form of the verb 'to suffer,' descriptive of completed action, and, so far as tense is concerned, is the equivalent of the past tense, indicative mood, 'has suffered.' This latter form of the verb may be substituted for that used without change of meaning." An instruction authorizing the jury to allow damages for any permanent injuries plaintiff "may have suffered" by reason of the injury in question, if any, was not objectionable as permitting the allowance of such damages based on mere probability or conjecture. Ballard v. Kansas City, 86 S. W. 479, 480, 110 Mo. App. 391.

MAY HOLD COURT

The words "may hold court," as used in Const. art. 7, § 11, empowering the Legislature to authorize judges of circuit courts to hold court for each other, do not limit the power of circuit judges to the exchange only to hold a regular term of the circuit court, but permit the Legislature to authorize a judge of one circuit to make orders at chambers in another circuit, and conduct generally the business in such circuit which a judge is authorized by law to transact. In re Southern Wisconsin Power Co., 122 N. W. 801, 808, 140 Wis. 245.

MAY LIMIT

The words "may limit," as used in the New York Motor Vehicle Law, which prohibits the operation of motor vehicles in closely built up districts at a greater speed than a mile in six minutes, and provides that the municipal authorities may limit, by ordinance, the speed of motor vehicles on public highways, are equivalent to the words "may still further restrict." A city or village is thus authorized to enact an ordinance prescribing a lower rate of speed within its territorial jurisdiction than that permitted by the general law itself, and the driver of a motor vehicle at a speed in excess of the lower rate, but not in excess of a mile in six minutes, is subject to prosecution, for violation of the ordinance only; but a person operating an automobile at a greater speed than a mile in six minutes, though within the limits of the municipality, is still liable to punishment under the general law. People ex rel. Hainer v. Keeper of Prison of Seventh District Magistrates' Court of City of New York, 83 N. E. 44, 46, 190 N. Y. 315.

MAY NEED

See As She May Need.

MAY PERMIT

The term "may permit," in equity rule 67, as it stood prior to the amendment of May 15, 1893, as given in 149 U. S. 793, 18 Sup. Ct. III, cannot properly be held to mean "may require" or "may compel," and the rule, as amended, providing that on due notice given, as prescribed by previous order, the court may, in its discretion, permit the whole or any part of the evidence to be adduced orally in open court on final hearing, does not require the court to require an unwilling party to so adduce evidence and forego his right to use the methods prescribed by the rule prior to the amendment. Hyams v. Federal Coal & Coke Co., 152 Fed. 970, 973, 82 C. C. A. 324.

MAY THEN BE

See As It May Then Be.

MAY USE

An agreement by one party to furnish and by the other party to purchase all the coal of a stated kind the second party "may use" in the operation of a mine and reduction works during a limited time is valid and binds the purchaser to take from the seller all the coal that may be needed or required in the conduct of such business during the time specified. Golden Cycle Mining Co. v. Rapson Coal Mining Co., 188 Fed. 170, 183, 112 C. C. A. 95.

MAY WISH

See As She May Wish.

MAY 1ST, 2 PER CENT., OR JULY NET

Terms of sale, "May 1st, 2 per cent., or July net," mean that the purchaser may pay on or before the earlier date and save the discount, that if he does not care to do so by losing the discount he has additional time within which to pay, and that the bill is not due except at option of purchaser until July 1st. Howes & Howes v. Union Mfg. Co. (Ky.), 113 S. W. 512, 513.

MAYHEM

See also, Maim.

Under Code 1896, § 5095, providing that one who "unlawfully, maliciously and intentionally cuts, bites or strikes off an ear" of another person is guilty of "mayhem," the injury to the ear must be such as disfigures to ordinary observation, as distinguished from a wounding which simply maims the member. Green v. State, 44 South. 194, 151 Ala. 14, 125 Am. St. Rep. 17, 15 Ann. Cas. 81.

MAYOR

As judicial officer, see Judicial Officer.

"The word 'mayor' first occurs in English history in 1189, when Richard I substituted a mayor for the two bailiffs of London. The Romans styled such officer 'prefectus urbi,' and originally the English title for such officer was either 'ballif' or 'portreeve,' just as the sheriff was 'shirreeve'; i. e., sheriff." "It is said that the word 'mayor' comes from the old English word 'maier,' which means 'power,' 'authority,' and not from the Latin 'major,' meaning greater. He represents the power and authority of the town, and the duty of presiding at meetings of the town commissioners is only one of the duties he exercises. While the power and duties of 'mayor' may vary according to the charter of the town or the laws of the state, it is probably without any exception his duty to execute the laws and local regulations of his city and to supervise the discharge of their duties by the subordinate officers of the city government." State v. Thomas, 53 S. E. 522, 523, 141 N. C. 791 (quoting 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4450).

The general municipal act of March 13, 1883 (St. 1883, p. 93, c. 49), divides cities into six classes, provides for a mayor in the first four, makes him in the fourth class a member of the council, with the right to vote only in case of a tie, and in the last two classes requires the council to elect one of its members president, imposing on him the duty of signing all ordinances preliminary to publication, but giving him no veto power, and not requiring him to perform the duties of a mayor. Act March 27, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 190, c. 129), entitled, "An act to require ordinance and resolution passed by the city council or other legislative body of any municipality to be presented to the mayor, or other chief executive officer of such municipality, for his approval," provides (section 1) that every ordinance imposing a penalty passed by the council shall before it takes effect be presented to the mayor for his approval, and that, if it fails to receive his approval, it shall be lost, unless on its return it receives the votes of three-fourths of all the members, "provided that . . . this section shall not apply to cities in which the mayor is a member of the city council, or other governing body," and provides (section 4, p. 191) that in municipalities in which there is no mayor the duties imposed on said officer by the provisions of the act shall be performed by the president of the board of trustees, or other chief executive officer of the municipality. Held, that to prevent injustice and absurdity, the proviso in section 1 should be made to read "mayor or other chief executive," or the word "mayor" should be held to include all executive officers similarly situated, and thus prevent a construction giving the veto power to the president of the board of trustees of cities of the fifth and sixth classes, when it is denied to the mayor of cities of the fourth class. City of San Buenaventura v. McGuire, 97 Pac. 526, 527, 8 Cal. App. 497.

MAYORDOMO

A "mayordomo" is an officer in charge of an irrigation water system under the laws of New Mexico. Candelaria v. Vallejos, 81 Pac. 589, 595, 13 N. M. 146.

MEADOW

The term "meadow" included salt marshes and beaches. Sandiford v. Town of Hampstead, 90 N. Y. Supp. 76, 82, 83, 97 App. Div. 163.

MEAL

See Coarse Meal.

If a single sandwich satisfies the desires of a person, it constitutes a "meal," and the keeper of a hotel has the right to serve liquors to him with such meal, under Laws 1897, p. 234, c. 312, § 31, cl. "k," providing that the keeper of a hotel, being the holder of a liquor tax certificate, may sell liquor on Sunday to his guests with their meals. In re Cullinan, 87 N. Y. Supp. 660, 662, 93 App. Div. 427.

In the manufacture of corn meal for culinary purposes, the corn is first kiln-dried, then cracked or ground between rollers, and afterwards bolted. A product made by the same rollers but set farther apart so as not to crush the grain so finely, and with the corn not kiln-dried, and the product not bolted, but merely passed between the rollers and then loaded in the cars, and variously known as "cracked corn," "chop," "coarse meal," was not in the ordinary acceptation of the term "meal," and was properly distinguished from meal in apportioning cars among shippers. State ex rel. Crandall v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 101 N. W. 23, 24, 72 Neb. 542.

MEAN TIME

"Mean solar time" is arrived at by the motion of a fictitious sun called the "mean sun," which is imagined to move with perfect uniformity, being sometimes behind the true sun and sometimes in advance of it. This time changes with the longitude, and, in a country of the magnitude of the United States, the difference of time between places caused much difficulty in the regulation of the movements of railway trains. About the year 1883 the principal railroads of the United States adopted an arbitrary standard for the purpose of securing uniformity in the operation and connection of their trains. Under this system the country was divided into four sections, eastern, central, mountain, and Pacific, approximately 15 degrees in width from east to west, and the time of the central meridian of each section was adopted as the uniform railroad time for the entire section. Globe & Rutgers Fire Ins. Co. v. David Moffat Co., 154 Fed. 13, 20, 83 C. C. A. 91.

MEANDER

MEANDER CORNERS

"Meander corners" hold, as declared by the rules of the United States Land Office, the peculiar position of denoting a point on line between landowners without usually being the legal terminus or corner of the land owned. Where meander corners of a government survey are lost or obliterated, they must be restored in accordance with the circulars of the United States Land Office. Kleven v. Gunderson, 104 N. W. 4, 6, 95 Minn. 246.

MEANDER LINE

Generally "meander lines" are lines which course the banks of navigable streams or other navigable waters. Chapman & Dewey Land Co. v. Bigelow, 92 S. W. 534, 537, 77 Ark. 338.

The point to which the water of a navigable stream usually rises, in an ordinary season of high water, is the "meander line" which forms the boundary of the title of the government. State v. Portland General Electric Co., 98 Pac. 160, 162, 52 Or. 502.

"A 'meander line' is not a line of boundary, but one designed to point out the sinuosity of the bank or shore and a means of ascertaining the quantity of land in the fraction which is to be paid for by the purchaser." Sherwin v. Bitzer, 106 N. W. 1046, 1047, 97 Minn. 252 (quoting and adopting definition in Whitaker v. McBride, 25 Sup. Ct. 531, 197 U. S. 510, 49 L. Ed. 857).

A "meander line" is not a boundary line, but is designed to point out the sinuosities of the bank or shore of a river to ascertain the quantity of land in a fractional subdivision, except where such line is run and monuments erected, so that in the absence of such monuments the fact that a stream has been meandered does not limit the title of a grantee of the riparian land to the meandered line instead of to the thread of the stream. People v. Economy Light & Power Co., 89 N. E. 760, 767, 241 Ill. 290.

"Meander lines" are run in surveying fractional portions of the public lands bordering upon navigable rivers, not as boundaries of the tract, but for the purpose of defining the sinuosities of the banks of the stream. Seabrook v. Coos Bay Ice Co., 89 Pac. 417, 418, 49 Or. 237.

"The 'meander lines' run along or near the margin of waters are run by the government surveyors for the purpose of ascertaining the exact quantity of the upland to be charged for, and not for the purpose of limiting the title of the grantee to such meander lines." McDade v. Bossler Levee Board, 33 South. 628, 630, 109 La. 625 (quoting and adopting definition in Hardin v. Jordan, 11 Sup. Ct. 811, 838, 140 U. S. 380, 35 L. Ed. 428).

A "meander line" is not established as a boundary, but is a line drawn along the shore of water disregarding its minor sinuosities, and is not used to mark the limits of land, but to determine the number of acres for which the government will demand payment; and, when payment for such acreage is made, the purchaser's title exists to the water's edge, though there be small unmeasured tracts lying outside the meander line. Barringer v. Davis, 120 N. W. 65, 68, 141 Iowa, 418.

"A 'meander line,' in an official survey, is not a line of boundary, but, as said in Horne v. Smith, 15 Sup. Ct. 988, 159 U. S. 40, 40 L. Ed. 68, is used 'as a means of ascertaining the quantity of land in the fraction which is to be paid for by the purchaser.'" Tolleston Club of Chicago v. Lindgren, 77 N. E. 818, 820, 39 Ind. App. 448.

A "meander line" is not a boundary line, where it substantially represents a water line, and the surveyed tracts actually abut on a body of water proper to be meandered under the rules governing public survey, and in such case the title of the abutting owner extends to the actual water line, at least if it existed at the time the survey was made. Owners of land bounded on a nonnavigable lake or on a body of water, the banks of which were meandered in the original government survey, have no title to the submerged bed of such lake or body of water. Wright v. City of Council Bluffs, 104 N. W. 492, 493, 130 Iowa, 274, 114 Am. St. Rep. 412.

The court judicially knows that "meander lines" are unsatisfactory as the basis for determination of boundaries. The "meander lines" running along or near the margin of waters are run for the purpose of ascertaining the quantity of the upland to be charged for and not for the purpose of limiting the title of the grantee to such meander line. Kleven v. Gunderson, 104 N. W. 4, 6, 9 Minn. 246 (citing Hardin v. Jordan, 11 Sup. Ct. 808, 140 U. S. 371, 35 L. Ed. 428; St. Paul & P. Ry. Co. v. Schurmeier, 7 Wall. [74 U. S.] 272, 19 L. Ed. 74; 5 Words and Phrases, 4452).

A government survey or plat of a township selected by the state under the swamp lands act (Act Cong. Sept. 28, 1850, c. 84, Stat. 519) showed that a certain part of the survey was not laid out into sections and subdivisions, and that the surveyed part was separated from the unsurveyed part by a meandered line, the unsurveyed part being designated as "sunk lands" and in the surveyor's field notes described as low, wet lands. The township was patented to the state according to the official plats of the survey. Held, that a "meandered line," being an ordinary line bounding a body of land, there was nothing to show that the sunk lands was a body of water, though temporarily covered with water, and under the patent the entire township passed to the state as swamp lands. Chapman & Dewey Lumber Co. v. Board of Directors, St. Francis Levee Dist., 139 S. W. 625, 628, 100 Ark. 94.

In an interference involving the invention of a machine for mechanically transferring a cigar "bunch" from the mould to a wrapping mechanism by which the wrapper is applied to the cigar "bunch," and in which the machines of the parties showed different species of transferring device, the term "means," in the issues calling for the combination with the wrapping mechanism of "means for transferring the bunches from the mould to the wrapping mechanism," was a generic term, and applicable alike to the transferring device of each party. Lecroix v. Tyberg, 33 App. D. C. 586, 591.

"Means" signifies a plan or method of procedure. Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Beezley, 101 S. W. 1051, 1052, 46 Tex. Civ. App. 103.

In a patentee's claim reading, "In a sewing machine a back guide, around which the goods are adapted to be held, a needle co-operating with said back guide, means for reciprocating said needle longitudinally and means for causing said needle to recede laterally from said back guide after its point has entered the material," the word "means," describing the word needle as an element of the combination, refers to some mechanism other than the needle, the latter being separately specified as one element, so that the claim is not infringed by a machine embodying all the elements of the combination, but in which defendant's needle is slightly inclined, and the path in which its point reciprocates passing the back guide is nearer thereto than is the like path of its shaft, and the reciprocation of which is longitudinal. Lewis Blind Stitch Mach. Co. v. Premium Mfg. Co., 163 Fed. 950, 955, 90 C. C. A. 310.

The word "means," as used in Rev. Codes 1899, § 8042, providing that, when an offense may be committed by the use of different "means," the "means may be alleged in the alternative in the same count," is to be defined as synonymous with the word "agency" or "instrumentality." The fraudulent appropriation of property or the secreting of it with a fraudulent intent to appropriate it as described in Rev. Codes 1899, § 7462, defining "embezzlement," are different acts or facts that may constitute the crime of "embezzlement," and are not the "means" of committing the offense. State v. Lonne, 107 N. W. 524, 525, 15 N. D. 275.

A wall in course of construction is not "works," "ways," nor "means," within the New York Employers' Liability Act (Laws 1902, p. 1748, c. 600), making an employer liable for injuries caused by defective works, ways, or means. Ripp v. Fuchs, 113 N. Y. Supp. 361, 364, 129 App. Div. 321.

In Rev. St. § 5444, providing that every officer of the revenue, who, by any means whatever, knowingly admits or aids in admitting any goods on payment of less than the amount of duty legally due thereon, shall be punished, if the "means" adopted by him was to accept a duty that did not belong to him, and to take advantage of his knowledge that his performance of that duty would be recognized by his superior officer, that would be quite as much of a "means," within the meaning of the statute, as if he had departed from a duty regularly laid on him. United States v. Rosenthal 128 Fed. 766, 774.

The expression "means at his command," used in a charge in a prosecution for murder asserting the proposition that, in order to justify a killing under a claim of self-defense, the slayer must have resorted to all reasonable "means at his command," consistent with his own safety, to avoid the necessity of taking human life, is equivalent to the expression "means in his power." King v. State, 44 South. 941, 942, 54 Fla. 47.

A system of perforated pipes in a building, connected with valves outside the building for the use of firemen, constitute a "means of preventing and extinguishing fires," within the provisions of Greater New York Charter, Laws 1897, p. 263, c. 378, § 762, providing that the owners of manufactories, office buildings, etc., shall provide such fire hose, fire extinguishers, and other means of preventing and extinguishing fires as the fire commissioners may direct. Lantry v. Hoffman, 105 N. Y. Supp. 353, 354, 55 Misc. Rep. 261.

MEANS OF KNOWLEDGE

See Equal Means of Knowledge.

"Means of knowledge" plainly within reach of stockholders by the exercise of the slightest diligence is in legal effect equivalent to knowledge." Cole v. Birmingham Union Ry. Co., 89 South. 403, 405, 143 Ala. 427 (quoting and adopting definition in Jesup v. Illinois C. R. Co., 43 Fed. 483).

The existence of public records of deeds, access to which is easy, and which would disclose that a trustee's representation that he had sold trust property worth $2,200, so as to net less than $600, was fraudulent, since the "means of knowledge" are equivalent to knowledge. A clue to the fact, which, if followed up diligently, would lead to a discovery, is, in law, equivalent to discovery, equivalent to knowledge. Irwin v. Holbrook, 73 Pac. 360, 363, 32 Wash. 349.

MEASURE

See Board Measure.

Under a statute giving mayors of certain cities power to veto any measure passed by the board of aldermen, a mayor has no power to veto the election of a police justice by the board of aldermen, since such an election is not a measure. Rich v. McLaurin, 35 South. 337, 83 Miss. 95.

The word "measure," in Const. art. 4, § 1, providing that an initiative petition shall "include the full text of the 'measure,'" and as it is used in Laws 1907, p. 400, § 2, providing that the initiative petition "shall be attached to a full and correct copy of the title and text of the 'measure,'" etc., means an act as it comes from the hands of the Legislature at the close of the session, complete so far as it is concerned, and does not necessarily include the title of the act. Palmer v. Benson, 91 Pac. 579, 581, 50 Or. 277.

Const. art. 5, § 6, providing that any measure rejected by the people through the powers of the initiative and referendum cannot be proposed by the initiative within three years thereafter by less than 25 per cent. of the legal voters, relates to constitutional amendments proposed by the Legislature or initiated by petition of the people and bills or acts initiated by the Legislature or by the people by an initiative petition; and a question submitted to the electors for acceptance or rejection by means of a joint resolution of both houses of the Legislature, being neither a constitutional amendment nor initiated bill, is not a measure rejected by the people through the power of the initiative and referendum, as contemplated by the Constitution, so as to prevent the initiation of substantially the same measure within three years by less than 25 per cent. of the legal voters. In re Initiative Petition No. 2, "The New Jerusalem" Proposition, 109 Pac. 823, 824, 26 Okl. 548.

MEASURED IN THE WALL

In an action for bricks sold for the construction of a building, plaintiff claimed that they were sold to be "measured in the wall," defendant, that they were to be counted in the wall; the number of rows being multiplied by the number of bricks in a row. Held, that it was competent to show by the testimony of persons in the trade, what the expression "measured in the wall" meant, and that the measurement allowed 21½ bricks to a cubic foot of wall; this not being an attempt to establish a custom. Welsh v. Huckestein, 25 Atl. 138, 152 Pa. 27.

MEAT

See Cured Meat; Fresh Meat.

In Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 275, 30 Stat. 172, the provision for "meats of all kinds prepared or preserved," includes cooked poultry and game, in tins, and also goose livers prepared as pâté de foie gras. James P. Smith & Co. v. United States, 168 Fed. 462.

Duck meat in tins, some salted and dried, and some packed in oil, is not "poultry * * * dressed," within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule G, par. 278, 30 Stat. 172, but is rather classifiable as "meats of all kinds, prepared or preserved," under par. 275, 30 Stat. 172. Kwong Yuen Shing v. United States, 177 Fed. 605, 606.

MECHANIC

Laborers or mechanics, see Laborers.

"Mechanic," once synonymous with "artisan," is now commonly restricted to a workman who is skilled in constructing, repairing, or using machinery. State v. City of Ottawa, 113 Pac. 391, 393, 84 Kan. 100.

In its broadest sense, a "mechanic" is any one who is a skilled worker with tools. Jackson v. State, 117 S. W. 818, 819, 55 Tex. Cr. R. 557.

Architect or draftsman

Under Revisal 1905, § 2016, giving mechanics and laborers lien for work done upon buildings, an architect who furnished plans and specifications for a building is not entitled to a lien, having neither performed labor upon it, nor being a "mechanic"; the term as used in the lien laws meaning a person skilled in the practical use of tools. Stephens v. Hicks, 72 S. E. 313, 314, 156 N. C. 239, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 354, Ann. Cas. 1918A, 272 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4457).

Barber

A barber is a "mechanic," within the meaning of the exemption laws. Ex parte Caldwell, 118 N. W. 133, 136, 82 Neb. 544; Terry v. McDaniel, 53 S. W. 732, 733, 103 Tenn. 415, 46 L. R. A. 559.

Civil engineer

A civil engineer is not entitled to a lien for wages earned by him in the construction of a railroad, under Rev. St. art. 3312, being neither a "mechanic," "laborer," nor "operative." Gulf & B. V. R. Co. v. Berry, 72 S. W. 1049, 1050, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 408.

Contractor or master builder

Under Const. 1898, art. 229, providing that "all persons, associations of persons, and corporations pursuing any trade, profession, business or calling, may be rendered liable to such tax (a license tax) except clerks, laborers clergymen and school-teachers, those engaged in mechanical, agricultural and mining pursuits," the phrase "those engaged in mechanical, agricultural and mining pursuits" includes a corporation engaged in such pursuits, since the article of the Constitution applies to both persons and corporations. According to Worcester's Dictionary, a "mechanic" is one employed in mechanical or manual labor, and "mechanical" is defined to be "employment in manual labor." Taking the phrase "engaged in mechanical pursuits" according to these definitions, it is clear that the Constitution is to be construed as intending to relieve from license those persons who are engaged from day to day in the performance of manual labor, in mechanical or agricultural pursuits, and that the master builders and contractors who employ men to do the work which they merely superintended should, like other professional men, pay the license tax. State v. O. C. Hartwell Co., 41 South. 444, 447, 117 La. 144 (citing Theobalds v. Conner, 7 South. 690, 42 La. Ann. 789; State v. McNally, 12 South. 117, 45 La. Ann. 45; City of New Orleans v. O'Neill, 10 South. 245, 43 La. Ann. 1182; Roy v. Schuff, 24 South. 788, 51 La. Ann. 86; City of New Orleans v. Bayley, 35 La. Ann. 545; City of New Orleans v. Lagman & Son, 10 South. 244, 43 La. Ann. 1180; State v. Dielehschnelder, 11 South. 823, 44 La. Ann. 1116; State v. Comptoir National D'Escompte de Paris, 26 South. 91, 51 La. Ann. 1272).

The mechanic's lien act of 1883 (Acts 1883, p. 140, c. 115) and amendments thereto (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, §§ 8295-8307), giving a lien to "mechanics, laborers, and materialmen," does not give a lien to contractors or subcontractors. Fleming v. Greener (Ind.) 90 N. E. 73, 75.

Painter

The term "mechanics" includes painters. A fire insurance policy is not made void by the use of a gasoline torch by a painter for the purpose of burning off paint from the building insured, where the work has continued for less than the 15 days allowed by the policy for repairs. Garrebrant v. Continental Ins. Co., 67 Atl. 90, 92, 75 N. J. Law, 577, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 443.

Seaman

Defendant was a contractor engaged in constructing for the United States jetties near Cape May harbor, extending from the shore into the open sea. The jetties were built up with stone, thrown overboard from barges, which were towed across Delaware Bay, anchored, and as needed towed to the jetties and warped along while being discharged. As crews of such barges defendant employed engineers, boatmen, and hookmen, selected for their seafaring experience, who operated the barges and also discharged their cargoes. The work done and the time required to do it depended on tide, wind, and weather, which ordinarily required variable hours of service on the part of the men. Held, that such men were seamen, with the rights of such, including the right to a lien on the vessel for their wages, and could not be classed as laborers or mechanics, within the meaning of Act Aug. 1, 1892, c. 352, § 1, which makes it unlawful for any contractor for government work to require or permit any laborer or mechanic employed by him thereon to work more than eight hours in any calendar day, except in case of extraordinary emergency. Breakwater Co. v. United States, 183 Fed. 112, 114, 105 C. C. A. 404.

Subcontractors

The mechanic's lien act of 1883 (Acts 1883, p. 140, c. 115) and amendments thereto (Burns' Ann. St. 1908, §§ 8295-8307; Burns' Ann. St. 1901, §§ 7255-7267), giving a lien to "mechanics, laborers, and materialmen," does not give a lien to contractors or subcontractors. Fleming v. Greener (Ind.) 90 N. E. 73, 75.

MECHANIC ARTS

Employed in mechanic arts, see Employé.

MECHANICAL BUSINESS

See Manufacturing and Mechanical Business.

MECHANICAL CONTRIVANCE

See Vehicles and Other Mechanical Contrivances.

The words "scaffolding" and "mechanical contrivance" include any contrivance made of parts erected or used for support in or about the particular kinds of work mentioned in the statute. Koepp v. National Enameling & Stamping Co., 139 N. W. 179, 184, 151 Wis. 302.

Box

A box or floor in which concrete is spread in laying concrete floors is a "mechanical contrivance," within Laws 1897, p. 467, c. 415, § 18, providing that persons employing or directing another to perform labor in the erection, repairing, or altering of a building shall not furnish, for the performance of such labor, any mechanical contrivance which is unsafe. Michael v. Standard Concrete Steel Co., 105 N. Y. Supp. 131, 132, 55 Misc. Rep. 255.

Buggy

A "buggy," consisting of a tongue about 14 feet long, with two large wheels at its rear end, connected by an axle, used to move iron beams in the construction of a building, is not a "mechanical contrivance," within the meaning of the Employers' Liability Act (Laws 1897, p. 467, c. 415, § 18), requiring persons employing others to perform labor in the erection of a building to furnish safe and suitable mechanical contrivances. Pluckham v. American Bridge Co., 79 N. E. 1114, 186 N. Y. 561; Id., 93 N. Y. Supp. 748, 750, 104 App. Div. 404.

Jack

Labor Law (Consol. Laws 1909, c. 31) § 18, provides that a person employing or directing another to perform labor in the repairing of a house, building, or "structure" shall not furnish, erect, or cause to be furnished or erected, for such labor, scaffolding, "holsts," stays, or other mechanical contrivances which are unsafe, and which are not such as to give proper protection to a person so employed or engaged. Held that, where a car repairer was injured by the breaking of the handle of a ratchet jack with which the body of a freight car had been holsted to permit repairs on the trucks, as the body was being lowered, the jack, while not a "holst" within the statute, is nevertheless a "mechanical contrivance" furnished by the railroad company for plaintiff's use, and the car was a "structure" as to which the jack was being used; and hence the defective jack was within the statute. Corbett v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 135 N. Y. Supp. 137, 139, 151 App. Div. 159.

MECHANICAL CORPORATION

The Pioneer Pasteurizing Company, authorized by its articles of incorporation to engage in the business of buying, manufacturing, and dealing in milk, cream, butter, cheese, and other dairy products, and pasteurizing and treating said milk, and packing, storing, handling, and selling said products so pasteurized and treated, is not exclusively a manufacturing or mechanical corporation, within Const. art. 10, § 38, and its stockholders are therefore liable for its debts. Meen v. Pioneer Pasteurizing Co., 97 N. W. 140, 141, 90 Minn. 501.

MECHANICAL EQUIVALENT

A "mechanical equivalent" is a thing which performs the same function, and performs that function in substantially the same manner, as the thing to which it is alleged to be an equivalent. Maunula v. Sunell, 185 Fed. 535, 539 (quoting and adopting the definition in Walk. Pat. [4th Ed.] § 354, and citing National Hollow Brake Beam Co. v. Interchangeable Brake Beam Co., 106 Fed. 693, 45 C. C. A. 554; New Departure Bell Co. v. Bevin Bros. Mfg. Co., 64 Fed. 859; National Typographic Co. v. New York Typograph Co., 46 Fed. 114; Columbus Watch Co. v. Robbins, 64 Fed. 384, 12 C. C. A. 174; Ide v. Trorlicht, Duncker & Renard Carpet Co., 115 Fed. 137, 149, 53 C. C. A. 341; Shelby Steel Tube Co. v. Delaware Seamless Tube Co., 151 Fed. 64).

The term "mechanical equivalent," as used in the patent law, means that each of the ingredients comprising the invention covers every other ingredient which in the same arrangement of the parts will perform the same functions, if that was well known as a proper substitute for the one described in the specification at the time of the patent. Denning Wire & Fence Co. v. American Steel & Wire Co. of New Jersey, 169 Fed. 793, 803, 95 C. C. A. 259; American Steel & Wire Co. v. Denning Wire & Fence Co., 160 Fed. 108, 120.

"The term 'mechanical equivalent,' when applied to the interpretation of a pioneer patent, has a broad and generous signification. When applied to a slight and almost immaterial improvement, it has a very narrow and limited meaning. When applied to that great majority of inventions which falls between these two extremes, its significance is proportioned to the character of the advance or invention under consideration, and it is so interpreted by the courts, as to protect the inventor against piracy and the public against unauthorized monopoly." Universal Brush Co. v. Sonn, 146 Fed. 517, 529 (quoting National Hollow Brake Beam Co. v.

Interchangeable Brake Beam Co., 106 Fed. 693, 45 C. C. A. 544); Simmons Mfg. Co. v. Southern Spring Bed Co., 140 Fed. 606, 672 C. C. A. 174 (quoting and adopting the definition of Judge Sanborn in National Hollow Brake Beam Co. v. Interchangeable Brake Beam Co., 106 Fed. 710, 45 C. C. A. 561); Sanders v. Hancock, 128 Fed. 424, 463 C. C. A. 163; Mallon v. William C. Greaves & Co., 137 Fed. 68, 79, 69 C. C. A. 48.

The rule applicable to the determination of equivalency under the patent laws depends upon the importance and the breadth of the original invention, and does not depend upon the question whether it was the first in the field relating to that subject, but upon the degree of advancement which the invention has made in newness of discovery and utility, for there may be as much merit in bringing on a large illumination from a feeble start as in the conception of the first beclouded idea which may have originated in the course of study and discovery along that line. American Can Co. v. Hickmott Asparagus Canning Co., 142 Fed. 141, 145, 73 C. C. A. 359 (quoting and adopting Penfield v. Chambers Bros. & Co., 92 Fed. 630, 638, 34 C. C. A. 579).

MECHANICAL ESTABLISHMENT

MECHANICAL MEANS

The phrase "by mechanical or other means," as used in the statute making it a misdemeanor for any person not licensed to record or register, by mechanical or other means, bets or wagers on trials of speed, etc., embraces something outside the mechanical class, and covers the registration of such bets by means of the initials or private marks of the parties written on cards. State v. Villines, 81 S. W. 212, 213, 107 Mo. App. 593.

MECHANICAL PIANO PLAYER

As musical instrument, see Musical Instrument.

MECHANICAL PURSUIT

Work on a turpentine farm is not a "mechanical pursuit," within the meaning of Pen. Code 1895, § 1039, providing that convicted shall not be employed in such mechanical pursuits as will bring the products of the labor into competition with the product of free labor. McDonald v. State, 64 S. E. 1106, 1113, 6 Ga. App. 339 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4462).

The trade of a barber is a "mechanical pursuit," within the meaning of Const. art. 8, § 1, exempting persons engaged in mechanical pursuits from an occupation tax; and hence Acts 30th Leg. 1907, p. 273, c. 141, imposing a license tax on barbers, is invalid. Jackson v. State, 117 S. W. 818, 819, 55 Tex. Cr. 557.

According to Worcester's Dictionary, a "mechanic" is one employed in mechanical or manual labor, and "mechanical" is defined to be "employment in manual labor," and it has been held that master builders and contractors who employ men to do the work which they merely superintended are not engaged in "mechanical pursuits." State v. C. C. Hartwell Co., 41 South. 444, 447, 117 La. 144 (citing Theobalds v. Conner, 7 South. 690, 42 La. Ann. 789).

MECHANIC'S LIEN

See Incumbrance; Public Record. Filing, see File.

A mechanic's lien is in the nature of, and has been likened to, a notice of lis pendens and to an attachment. Sawyer v. Shick, 120 Pac. 581, 582, 30 Okl. 353.

Mechanics' liens are purely a creation of statute in this country, and were unknown to the common law, and the principle on which the statutes were originally enacted was to subject land to a lien for material and labor expended in the construction of buildings which have by being placed on the land become a part thereof. Joplin Supply Co. v. West, 130 S. W. 156, 159, 149 Mo. App. 78.

A "mechanic's lien" is a pure creation of statute, and compliance with statutory requirements is necessary to its validity. Tenth Nat. Bank of Philadelphia v. Smith Const. Co., 87 Ala. 872, 873, 218 Pa. 581 (citing Wharton v. Real Estate Inv. Co., 36 Atl. 725, 180 Pa. 725, 57 Am. St. Rep. 629; Knelly v. Horwath, 57 Atl. 957, 208 Pa. 487).

A mechanic's lien is purely a statutory creation, and can only be maintained by a substantial observance or compliance with the provisions of the statute. Whatever is made necessary to the existence of the lien must be performed, or the attempt to create it will be futile. A substantial adherence to the terms of the statute in the notice of lien is indispensable. Russell v. Hayner, 130 Fed. 90, 92, 64 C. C. A. 424 (citing Phillips, Mech. Liens [3d Ed.] § 9).

A mechanic's lien is at most only a tentative charge against the property it purports to bind, and is liable to be defeated for lack of technical sufficiency, as well as by showing that the indebtedness or some considerable part thereof is not owing. Beebe v. Redward, 77 Pac. 1052, 1055, 35 Wash. 615.

"A 'mechanics' lien' is a statutory lien upon buildings and other improvements on realty, favoring certain classes of workmen, to secure them priority or preference of payment of compensation for work or materials." Tommasi v. Archibald, 100 N. Y. Supp. 367, 372, 114 App. Div. 838.

A "mechanic's lien" is a modern statutory right created to encourage the erection of improvements, and to protect those whose labor and material enter into their construction. Hammond v. Darlington, 84 S. W. 446, 449, 109 Mo. App. 333.

The "mechanics' lien" is a creature of the statute. It exists on certain conditions, independent of any special contract. It is unknown to the common law, and is a cumulative remedy which may be concurrently pursued in connection with the ordinary actions for the collection of debts. Filing the claim does not create, but simply establishes, the lien. It changes an inchoate and defeasible right to a lien into a fixed and definite incumbrance. A mechanic who files a claim for lien does not thereby release his debtor from personal liability. So, too, a subcontractor, to whom the contractor has given an order on the owner, may still enforce his rights under such order after he has filed his claim. It is a cumulative remedy which may be concurrently pursued in connection with the ordinary actions for the collection of debts. Alberti v. Moore, 93 Pac. 543, 547, 20 Okl. 78, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1036 (citing Ehlers v. Elder, 51 Miss. 495; Boisot, Mechanics' Liens, 496; Phillips, Mechanics' Liens, § 9; 27 Cyc. p. 432).

"A 'mechanic's lien' is a statutory quasi mortgage founded upon consent." Cummings v. Consolidated Mineral Water Co., 61 Atl. 853, 855, 27 R. I. 195 (citing Briggs v. Titus, 13 R. I. 138; Blackmar v. Sharp, 60 Atl. 852, 23 R. I. 412).

"A 'mechanics' lien' is additional security given by statute on certain conditions, but does not in any way abrogate the contract between the workman and his employer. * * * The lien proceedings are in rem against the land, and the common-law action is in personam against the employer;" and a subcontractor may prosecute a petition for a mechanic's lien simultaneously with an action at law against the contractor. Hunt v. Darling, 59 Atl. 898, 399, 26 R. I. 480, 69 L. R. A. 497, 3 Ann. Cas. 1098.

A "mechanic's lien" is a security for "extras" supplied under the terms of the contract, though the original contract price, independent of such extras, has been paid. Zollars v. Snyder & Lacey, 94 S. W. 1096, 1097, 48 Tex. Civ. App. 120.

"A mechanic's lien on chattels, as on real estate, is simply a security for the payment of a debt. Without indebtedness to the mechanic there can be no lien. * * * The lien is commensurate with the amount due." Tenney v. Anderson Water, Light & Power Co., 48 S. E. 457, 458, 69 S. C. 430 (quoting Phillips, Mech. Liens, § 493).

MEDICAL DEGREE

The words "without having legally received the medical degree," in section 153 of the public health laws (Laws 1893, p. 1547, c. 661, as amended by Laws 1895, p. 257, c. 398, and Laws 1905, p. 994, c. 455), providing that one shall be guilty of misdemeanor who shall append the letters "M. D." to his name or assume or advertise the title of doctor, so as to convey the impression that he is a legal practitioner "without having legally received the medical degree," or without having received a necessary license, mean without having received a medical degree such as legally entitled the holder to practice. People v. Somme, 104 N. Y. Supp. 946, 947, 120 App. Div. 20.

MEDICAL EXAMINATION

A "medical examination" of an applicant for life insurance within a receipt of the first annual premium, which recites that an application has been made, that the first annual premium has been collected, provided the application is approved, and in that event the insurance will be in force from the date of the medical examination, is a final examination, and not an examination to be retained by the examiner, under an agreement with the applicant, contemplating a subsequent examination, but the applicant may decline to submit to another examination, and thereby make the examination final. *Northwestern Mut. MEDICINAL PREPARATION

The expression "medicinal preparation" as used in Tariff Act March 3, 1883, c. 1, Schedule A, 22 Stat. 494, means such articles as are of use, or believed by the prescriber to be of use, or used for the purpose of curing or alleviating, or palliating or preventing, some disease or affection of the human frame. Dodge & Olcott v. United States, 1 Fed. 624, 625.

Adeps lanæ anhydrous

The term "medicinal preparations," Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 68, includes adeps lanæ anhydrous and adeps lanæ cum aqua, which are highly finished products of wool grease, are used principally in therapeutics, are sold generally in the drug trade, and are used to some extent in salves and medicinal soaps. Zinkelsen Co. v. United States, 167 Fed. 812, 313, C. C. A. 624.

Creolin-Pearson

Creolin-Pearson is not a medicinal preparation within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 68. Merck & Co. v. United States, 147 Fed. 896.

Chrysarobin

"Chrysarobin" is dutiable as a drug advanced in value, under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 20, and not as a "medicinal preparation," under paragraph 68. Levi v. United States, 140 Fed. 12.

Fruit juice

Fruit juice which has been concentrated and medicated but is not used by itself as a medicine, but as an ingredient in the preparation of a medicine, is not dutiable as a medicinal preparation under paragraph 75, Tariff Act Oct. 1, 1890, c. 1244, § 1, Schedule A, 26 Stat. 570. C. B. Richard & Co. v. United States, 147 Fed. 891, 892.

Gaduol

The commercial meaning of the term "medicinal preparation" is the same as its ordinary meaning, viz., a substance used solely in medicine and prepared for the use of the apothecary or physician, to be administered as a remedy in disease. Gaduol, an extract of cod liver oil, which, in the form in which imported, is not prepared for the use of the apothecary or physician, and which is not dispensed in that form, is not a "medicinal preparation," under the Tariff Act, but is dutiable as a "chemical compound." United States v. Merck & Co., 136 Fed. 817, 69 C. C.

A. 472; Merck v. United States, 126 Fed. 438, 439.

Gelatin capsules

Gelatin capsules containing balsam are dutiable as "medicinal preparations," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 68. United States v. Lehn & Fink, 172 Fed. 171, 178.

Guarana

"Guarana," a medicinal drug consisting of a dried paste in the form of sausage-shaped rolls, this being the crudest state in which it is ever imported, and which before being used as a medicine must be further prepared, is not dutiable as a "medicinal preparation," under paragraph 68, Schedule A, § 1, c. 11, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, but is free under the provisions of paragraph 548, Free List, § 2, c. 11, of said act, for articles "which are drugs and not edible and are in a crude state." Cowl v. United States, 124 Fed. 475, 478.

Glycerophosphate of lime

Glycerophosphate of lime, though occasionally dispensed medicinally, is almost always used with other drugs in preparing elixirs. Held, not a "medicinal preparation," but a "chemical compound," within Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, para. 3, 67. A. Klipstein & Co. v. United States, 167 Fed. 535, 536, 93 C. C. A. 67.

Hexamethylenetetramin

Hexamethylenetetramin is a "medicinal preparation" in the preparation of which alcohol is not used, within the meaning of paragraph 68, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A. Lehn & Fink v. United States, 147 Fed. 640.

Paraldehyde

Paraldehyde, though produced from aldehyde, which is a by-product in the distillation of alcohol, but contains no alcohol, is a "medicinal preparation" in the preparation of which alcohol is not used, within the meaning of Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 68. Merck & Co. v. United States, 147 Fed. 895.

Rose water

Orange flower water and rose water are not dutiable as medicinal preparations under paragraph 68, Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, but as unenumerated manufactured articles under section 6 of said act. Euler & Robeson v. United States, 147 Fed. 765, 768.

Scammony resin

Scammony resin, prepared from gum-scammony, or scammony root, and used principally in compounding medicines, is dutiable as a "drug advanced in value or condition," under Tariff Act July 24, 1897, c. 11, § 1, Schedule A, par. 20, rather than as a "medicinal preparation," under paragraph 67. United States v. Martin, 155 Fed. 264, 285.

Tincture of iodine, tincture of arnica, and spirits of camphor, when sold in sealed bottles, though commonly used as domestic remedies, are, nevertheless, "medicines," within Pharmacy Law (Laws 1900, c. 667) § 200 (now Public Health Law [Consol. Laws, c. 45]), prohibiting, under penalties, the sale of medicines or poisons except in the presence and under the supervision of a licensed pharmacist. State Board of Pharmacy v. Matthews, 90 N. E. 966, 967, 197 N. Y. 853, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1013.

Same—Cigars and tobacco

"Tobacco" "in its manufactured form of cigars, cigarettes, smoking tobacco, chewing tobacco, snuff, and the like, cannot be said to be in any sense a drug or medicine," so as to be a proper subject of sale on Sunday. Penniston v. City of Newnan, 45 S. E. 65, 66, 117 Ga. 702.

Same—Food

The fact that the substance employed as a remedial agent may have value as a food, and a tendency to build up and restore wasted or diseased tissue, will not deprive it of its character as a "medicine," if it is administered and employed for that purpose. State v. Bresee, 114 N. W. 45, 47, 137 Iowa, 673, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 103.

A "condiment" is a "food" and not a "medicine." The "International stock food" is a "food or condiment" within the meaning of the Kentucky pure food law (Laws 1906, p. 282, c. 48), and its sale is subject to regulation thereunder. Savage v. Scovell, 171 Fed. 566.

Same—Intoxicating Liquors

A registered pharmacist may sell drugs and medicine containing intoxicating liquor or alcohol without a license authorizing him to sell liquor, provided the drugs and medicines are so compounded that they cannot be used as a beverage. Tonic bitters containing 30 per cent. alcohol, and capable of being used as a beverage, held a beverage, and not a medicine, and hence could not lawfully be sold by a pharmacist without a license to sell intoxicating liquors. McNiel v. Horan, 133 N. W. 1070, 1071, 153 Iowa, 630.

MEDIUM

Many scholars and successful business men sincerely believe in spiritualism, and of being able, not by all, but through the instrumentality of a particular few naturally qualified persons called "mediums," to converse with and be advised by the spirits of departed friends, and believe they recognize the voices and handwriting of the dead. It has been held that the mere fact that one entertains such belief is not evidence of want of testamentary capacity. Wait v. Westfall, 68 N. E. 271, 276, 161 Ind. 648.

Under article 598, Pen. Code, 1879, providing that, in order to reduce a homicide to manslaughter by reason of insulting words or conduct of the person killed towards a female relative of the party guilty of the homicide, it must appear that the killing took place immediately upon the happening of the insulting conduct, or as soon thereafter as the party killing may meet with the person killed after having been informed of the insult, the word "meet" signifies that the parties were brought into such proximity as would enable the defendant, to act in the premises, whether he was armed or unarmed. *Gillespie v. MEETING OF MINDS

An assent is evidenced by a proposition emanating from one side and acceptance of it on the other, such proposition and acceptance together constituting what is called a meeting of the minds, and, where a meeting of the minds does not appear, there is no contract.

Wm. J. Lemp Brewing Co. v. Secor, 96 Pa. 636, 639, 21 Okl. 537.

A "meeting of minds" essential to constitute a contract is the agreement reached by the parties and expressed, and the "meeting of minds" is not determined by the secret intention of the parties, but by their expressed intention, which may be wholly at variance with the former, and the understanding of one of the parties to the agreement is immaterial. Hudson v. Columbia Transfer Co., 100 N. W. 402, 403, 137 Mich. 255, 109 Am. St. Rep. 679 (citing Brewington v. Mesker, 51 Mo. App. 348; 9 Cyc. pp. 244, 578).

MEETING POINT

A contract under which defendant carried United States mail required it, at "meeting points," to transfer to connecting train the mail which was to be forwarded by such trains. Held, that a "meeting point" was one where the defendant's mail route met another, as established by the government, and not a station upon the defendant's route separated by a half mile from another mail route, although trains from the latter ran over said half mile to the station and there connected with, and received mail from, the trains of the defendant. Johnson v. Boston & M. R. Co., 38 Atl. 267, 69 Vt. 521, 522.

Of city council

A provision in the charter of a city that the legislative authority of the city shall be vested in a council, consisting of a mayor, two aldermen elected from each ward, and the city recorder, made the various officers named "members" of the city council within the meaning of other statutory provisions. Blain v. Chippewa Circuit Judge, 108 N. W. 440, 444, 145 Mich. 59 (dissenting opinion).

Of Congress

"When we speak of a member of Congress, we refer to one who is a component part of the Senate or House of Representatives; one who is in office—not out of office; one who is sharing the responsibilities and privileges of membership." The words "member of Congress," as used in the first provision of Rev. St. § 1781, making it a criminal offense for a member of Congress, or any officer or agent of the government, to agree to receive or receive a bribe for procuring or aiding to procure for another any contract, office, or place from the government, do not include a person elected to the office of Senator of the United States until he has been accepted as member by the Senate of the United States and has assumed the duties of the office. United States v. Dietrich, 126 Fed. 676, 678, 681.

Of corporation

A resolution of the board of directors of a corporation which empowers the corporation to sell its lands to "members" of the corporation authorizes a sale to the shareholders who are not directors and is valid. Davis v. Nueces Valley Irr. Co., 126 S. W. 4, 6, 103 Tex. 243.

Consol. Laws, p. 1381, c. 23, § 3, subd. 8, provides that the term "member of a corporation" shall include every person having a right to vote for the election of directors, other than a person having the right to vote only on a proxy. Section 23 provides that, "unless otherwise provided in the certificate of incorporation," every stockholder shall be entitled at every meeting to one vote for every share standing in his name on the books. Section 24 provides that the certificate of incorporation may provide that, at all elections of directors, each stockholder shall be entitled to as many votes as will equal the number of his shares multiplied by the number of directors to be elected, and that he may cast all of such votes for a single director, or may distribute them among the number to be voted for, or any two or more of them, as he may see fit, which right, when exercised, shall be deemed cumulative voting. Held, that the phrase "unless otherwise provided in the certificate of incorporation," at the beginning of section 23, does not relate only to cumulative voting permitted by section 24, but permits the certificate of incorporation to provide what voting right classes of stockholders shall possess; and as it is lawful for different classes to agree that one class shall have no right to vote on questions relating to the management, and such agreement does not contravene public policy, the Legislature did not intend to compel every class to hold the right to vote, or prohibit formation of a corporation depriving preferred stockholders of voting power. People ex rel. Browne v. Keonig, 118 N. Y. Supp. 136, 137, 133 App. Div. 756.

Of family or household

Person of the family synonymous, see Person.

The "members" of a man's family are his wife and children. The phrase certainly does not, as usually understood, include the servants who may be casually employed in his kitchen. Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W., of New Jersey, v. Gandy, 58 Atl. 142, 147, 63 N. J. Eq. 692.

A member of a fraternal beneficiary society lived with friends, none of whom were dependent on him; and, while he paid no board, they expected compensation at his death. Held, that the wife of the person in whose home the member lived was not a member of his family, within Laws 1895, p. 440, c. 86, § 1, relating to payment of death benefits. Supreme Commandery, U. O. G. O., v. Donaghey, 72 Atl. 419, 75 N. H. 197.

A party to be a member of a family within the meaning of the homestead article of the Constitution must be a member in good faith. A man and his wife purchased two lots, not exceeding half an acre, in a city, in 1885, and resided there until their death, in 1898. They had two children, one a son, married in 1876, and the other a daughter, married in 1887, and who resided with her parents until her death, in 1889, leaving two children. Her husband with one child removed to a home of his own, but his daughter remained with her grandparents under the understanding that they were to educate and support her as long as she lived, which they did until the death of the grandmother in February, 1893, and the grandfather in September of the same year. There was no legal adoption of such granddaughter by either of her grandparents. Held, that such granddaughter was a member of the family of her grandfather at the time of his death. Adams v. Clark, 37 South. 734, 736, 48 Fla. 205.

The constitution of a fraternal order provided that, on the death of a member, the person designated as beneficiary should be entitled to the benefit fund, provided the beneficiary should "be one or more members of his family or * * * related to or * * * dependent" on him. A certificate issued to a member designated his wife as beneficiary. Subsequently the parties were divorced. The member died without exercising his right to change the beneficiary. Held, that the wife was entitled to the benefit fund.—Schmidt v. Hauer, 111 N. W. 966, 967, 139 Iowa, 531.

The word "person" as used in Rev. St. Mo. 1899, § 570, providing for service of a summons by leaving a copy of the petition and writ at defendant's usual place of abode with some person of his family, is synonymous with the word "member" as used in a return showing that a copy of the writ and petition was left with a member of defendant's family. The words may be used interchangeably. One could not be a person of a family without being a member, nor could he be a member without being a person. Colter v. Luke, 108 S. W. 608, 609, 129 Mo. App. 702.

Of fire department

Under Civil Service Law (Laws 1899, p. 809, c. 370) § 21, as amended by Laws 1904, p. 1694, c. 697, providing that no person holding a position who shall have been a member of a volunteer fire department shall be removed from such position except for cause shown after hearing, a coroner's clerk, who became a member of the fire department for the express purpose of taking advantage of the act, and who was not a resident of the district in which he became a member, was not a "member of a volunteer fire department" within the meaning of the act. People ex rel. Schulum v. Harburger, 116 N. Y. Supp. 994, 995, 132 App. Div. 280.

The word "firemen" in the statute of 1902 (P. L. 1902, p. 793), for the purpose of providing and maintaining a fund to pension "firemen" and their families, is synonymous with "members of the fire department." A lineman, a watchman, and a veterinary surgeon, who are members of the Newark Paid Fire Department, are entitled to membership in the corporate association organized by the department under the provision of the statute of 1902 (P. L. 1902, p. 793), for the purpose of providing and maintaining a fund to pension "firemen" and their families. Leffingwell v. Klersted, 65 Atl. 1029, 1030, 74 N. J. Law, 407.

Of Indian tribe

32 Stat. 641, relating to the Choctaws and Chickasaws commonly known as the "Supplemental Agreement," section 3, defines the word "member" as used in the "Supplemental Agreement" as meaning a member or citizen of the Choctaw or Chickasaw tribe of Indians in Indian territory and does not include freedmen. Frame v. Bivens, 189 Fed. 785, 788.

Of Legislature

In Const. art. 3, § 15, providing that no bill shall be passed unless it shall have been printed and placed on the desks of the members in its final form at least three calendar legislative days prior to its final passage, the word "members" means the members of the Legislature, not the members of the Senate and Assembly, merely as such, and is sufficiently complied with where a bill originating in one house is printed and placed on the desk of each member of both houses and every amendment made thereto as printed and placed on the desks of the members of the house in which the bill originated is also printed and placed on the desks of the members of the other house, so that the bill in its final form is on the desk of each member of each house of the Assembly for at least three days prior to its final passage. People ex rel. Hatch v. Reardon, 77 N. E. 970-972, 184 N. Y. 431, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 314, 112 Am. St. Rep. 628, 6 Ann. Cas. 515.

Of police force

The chief of police of a city is a "member of the police force" of the city, and amenable to an order established by the board of police examiners, created by the charter of the city, providing that no member of the police force should be permitted to be a delegate to any caucus or take part in any political canvass. Brownell v. Russell, 57 Atl. 108, 104, 76 Vt. 328.

MEMBERSHIP

See Certain Ascertained Membership.

"Membership" in a social and beneficial association is in itself a personal right, especially when the purposes of the association include amelioration or improvement of the condition under which the members obtain their livelihood, and the holder of such a right is entitled to be protected in its enjoyment against any unauthorized act or proceeding on the part of his fellow members, either as individuals or in their official or collective capacity, by which his enjoyment of such right will be impaired or destroyed. Dingwall v. Amalgamated Ass'n of Street Railway Employees of America, 88 Pac. 597, 599, 4 Cal. App. 565.

MEMBERSHIP CORPORATION

A building association organized under Laws N. Y. 1851, p. 234, c. 122, as amended, for the purpose of aiding its members in acquiring real estate, making improvements thereon, and the accumulation of a fund to be returned to its members who do not obtain advances on their shares when the funds to the credit of the share shall amount to $100, the par value thereof, is not a "stock corporation" as defined by General Corporation Law (Laws 1892, p. 1801, c. 687) § 3, subd. 2, defining a "stock corporation" as one having stock divided into shares, but is a "membership corporation" in which the corporation entity discharges its duties by acting as trustee for funds contributed by the members to mature the shares and seeing that the moneys contributed by the members under their mutual agreements are properly used in maturing the shares, and the demands of equity can only be satisfied by holding each member to his contract, not so much with the corporation as with the individual members. Preston v. Reinhart, 96 N. Y. Supp. 851, 852, 109 App. Div. 781.

Under a statute defining a "membership corporation" to mean "a corporation hereafter incorporated under this chapter, or heretofore incorporated under any law repealed by this chapter, but does not include a membership corporation created by special law," and defining a cemetery corporation as "any corporation heretofore created for cemetery purposes, under a law repealed by this chapter or hereafter created under this article," a cemetery association organized under a prior special law not repealed by the later law is not a "membership corporation" within the meaning of the later law. In re Owens, 79 N. Y. Supp. 1114, 1115, 79 App. Div. 236.

MEMORANDUM

As contract, see Contract.

By reason of any memorandum, see By Reason of.

Statute of frauds

A "memorandum" of a contract must include all its material features, so that no resort to parol testimony is necessary, except to show the situation of the parties and the application of the language to the subject-matter. The memorandum of a contract within the statute of frauds, may consist of several distinct writings, provided they are so related that the particular paper signed by the party to be charged can be held to be an approval of the other documents in which the terms of the contract are set forth. One employed under a verbal contract, void under the statute of frauds, was discharged. He subsequently wrote to his employer a letter reciting the terms of the contract. The employer replied by letter reciting: "As for the talk I had with you when you applied for the situation, I expected much from you. That is why I offered you a large salary." Held, that the employer did not consent to the terms of the contract as stated by the employé, essential to constitute a sufficient memorandum to bind him. Gulfport Cotton Oil, Fertilizer & Mfg. Co. v. Reneau, 48 South. 292, 293, 94 Miss. 904, 136 Am. St. Rep. 607.

The phrase "note or memorandum," as used in the statute of frauds, does not mean written evidence must be comprised of a single statement, but that letters, telegrams, bills, receipts, or other forms of writing evidencing the contract of the parties may constitute the note or memorandum within the statute. There was a sufficient "note or memorandum" of a contract of sale to charge the buyers under the statute of frauds, where they wrote: "We have examined the corduroys thoroughly, and find we cannot possibly use them. Those goods were sold to us at first." "We do not mean to cancel our order on" them, etc. "If you have perfect goods on hand to deliver to us, we are ready to accept same at prices sold"—though the letters were written after the sale and in terms repudiate the buyers' liability for an alleged breach of warranty. J. Spencer Turner Co. v. Robinson, 105 N. Y. Supp. 98, 101, 55 Misc. Rep. 280.

A memorandum to satisfy the statute of frauds must contain the substantial terms of the contract, expressed with such certainty that they may be understood from the contract, or some other writing to which it refers, without resort to parol evidence. A memorandum of a contract of sale of personality need not, to be sufficient within the statute of frauds, fix the place of delivery, since, in the absence of such a stipulation, the law fixes the place of delivery. A written acceptance of a written offer to sell personality is not necessary, to constitute a sufficient memorandum under the statute of frauds. A memorandum of a contract of sale of personality, as evidenced by a letter by the buyer reciting, "Beg to confirm purchase of * * * 90 B/S cotton * * * at 12 cents f. o. b. * * * September delivery," and a letter written by the seller reciting: "Your confimation of the purchase of one bales cotton delivery. You make it September delivery, when it should be October. I am willing to put up margin for faithful performance of contract," etc., is a sufficient "memorandum," within Code 1906, § 4779, providing that a contract of sale of personality is invalid unless some memorandum in writing is made and signed by the party to be charged. Willis v. Ellis, 53 South. 498, 499, 98 Miss. 197, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 1039.

However sufficient as a memorandum of a sale to satisfy the statute of frauds might be, a paper purporting merely to be a statement of account charging M. with $4,000 as the price of lots, and crediting him with $250, and containing a printed direction, signed by him, for the deed to be made to him, is not such, where the money was paid and such instrument given after the promise to M. that a contract of sale of a particular character containing the full terms of the proposed purchase was to be executed. Colonial Park Estates v. Massart, 77 Atl. 275, 278, 112 Md. 648.

A "memorandum" of a contract for the sale of land failing to state the consideration is not a sufficient "memorandum or note in writing" to satisfy the statute of frauds. Bradley Real Estate Co. v. Robbins, 103 S. W. 777, 778, 7 Ind. T. 94.

The "note or memorandum" required by the statute of frauds is such a written declaration of the parties to the agreement as will relieve the court from relying on parol evidence to ascertain the subject of the contract. It need not state the terms of the contract as to the consideration, which may be proved by parol even if to do so involves a contradiction of the memorandum. It may consist of two or more writings signed by the party to be charged shown to refer to the same subject-matter and describing the subject of the contract so that it may be identified. Campbell v. Preece, 118 S. W. 373, 374, 133 Ky. 572 (citing Camp v. Moreman, 82 S. W. 179, 84 Ky. 635).

A memorandum of an agreement for a lease for a longer term than one year must contain the terms of the lease, the time it is to begin, the conditions upon which it is executed, and must set forth the respective rights, duties, and obligations of the parties. McKnight v. Broadway Inv. Co., 145 S. W. 377, 382, 147 Ky. 535.

The mere indorsement and deposit for collection of a check tendered in payment for a right of way is not a sufficient "memorandum," within Revision 1906, § 976, which requires a conveyance of an interest in land to be in writing. Leach v. Fosburgh Lumber Co., 75 S. E. 716, 717, 159 N. C. 532; Moore, Keppel & Co. v. Ward, 76 S. E. 807, 808, 71 W. Va. 393, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 390.

A mere indorsement of the name of the owner of property on the check given by a prospective purchaser for earnest money is not a note or memorandum in writing, as required by the statute of frauds. Koenig v. Dohm, 70 N. E. 1061, 1064, 209 Ill. 468.

Defendant gave plaintiff an order for goods amounting to $329.60, November 25, 1910, having previously given two other orders, and also one of later date. There was no sufficient memorandum to satisfy the statute of frauds, because not signed by defendant. On January 11, 1911, defendant by letter requested plaintiff not to ship any goods before March 10, 1911, or some time later, and on receiving a bill, dated March 27, 1911, again wrote requesting plaintiff not to ship any goods for the present stating that the amount called for by the bill was more than he had ordered or would want and requested shipment of one-half of the amount with the September dating; otherwise, he could not accept the goods. Held, that such letters, not being physically attached to the memorandum, could not be used in connection therewith to make out a sufficient "memorandum" of the sale within the statute of frauds. Roaring Spring Blank Book Co. v. Lesser, 133 N. Y. Supp. 1032, 1033, 75 Misc. Rep. 617.

A letter from a vendee to a vendor stating but a part of the terms of a parol contract for the sale of land is not a "memorandum of the oral contract," which will take the contract out of the statute of frauds. Bogigian v. Booklovers' Library, 79 N. E. 769, 770, 193 Mass. 444.

Where letters from the vendors' agent to a person who represented the purchaser in some capacity, either as agent, broker, or go-between, and from the vendors' agent to a bank which was to hold the deed in escrow, contained the names of the parties to the sale, the description of the property, the consideration, and all the terms and conditions of the sale, the letters constituted a sufficient "memorandum" to satisfy the statute of frauds. Bronx Inv. Co. v. National Bank of Commerce of Seattle, 92 Pac. 380, 381, 47 Wash. 566.

Where letters passing between buyer and seller of certain goods did not disclose the kind or quantity of goods or purchase price, and contained no reference either to memorandum made by salesman at the time he received an order or to an invoice made by the seller when the goods were shipped, and it was impossible from the letters to ascertain the terms of the sale, they were insufficient to constitute a "memorandum," within the statute of frauds. Evans v. Pelta, 131 N. Y. Supp. 411, 412, 146 App. Div. 749.

Letters addressed to a third person, stating and affirming a contract, may be used against the writer as a "memorandum" of the contract, and are sufficient evidence of the contract to warrant the court in giving effect to it. Nicholson v. Dover, 58 S. E. 444, 445, 145 N. C. 18, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 167 (citing Brown, Statute of Frauds, § 354a; Mizel v. Burnett, 49 N. C. 254, 69 Am. Dec. 744).

A letter admitting an oral agreement to buy land is insufficient under Rev. St. c. 113, § 1, par. 4, requiring such contracts to be evidenced in writing, where it fails to set up the terms previously agreed upon, and particularly omits any reference to the purchase price. Under Rev. St. c. 113, § 1, par. 4, requiring a contract for a sale of lands to be evidenced in writing, signed by the party to be charged, or his duly authorized agent, all essential terms of the contract must appear, including the amount of the purchase price where the contract contains a stipulation as to price, so that no part of the agreement need be proved by parol evidence. Thurlow v. Perry, 77 Atl. 641, 642, 107 Me. 127.

The entry in the seller's account book is not a memorandum signed by the party to be charged within Gen. St. 1906, § 2518, making contracts for sale of goods void, in the absence of certain circumstances, including a memorandum in writing of the contract signed by the party to be charged. United Hardware-Furniture Co. v. Blue, 52 South. 364, 366, 59 Fla. 419, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1038.

The note or memorandum required by Rev. St. c. 113, § 4, to make a sale valid as against the statute of frauds, need not be in a single writing, but it is sufficient if letters signed by the party to be charged or his agent contain by direct statement or by reference to letters written by the other party all the essential parts of the bargain. Weymouth v. Goodwin, 75 Atl. 61, 62, 105 Me. 510.

Mechanic's lien.

The word "memorandum," as used in a statute requiring a mechanics' lien claimant to file a written memorandum signed by him asserting his claim, has no peculiar meaning. The statute means no more than "a writing signed by him asserting his claim." Nor does the use of the word "claim" signify that the particulars of the contract or items of the account are to be set forth. This word obviously refers to the claim of a lien. The date when the job was completed or the pay became due need not appear in the absence of statutory requirement. The object of the memorandum required to be filed in the clerk's office is to give notice to the owner and persons dealing with the property that it stands charged with the payment of the bills for labor and material which went into it under such a contract as entitles the claimant to his lien. Baldwin v. Spear Bros., 64 Atl. 235, 236, 237, 79 Vt. 43.

MEMORY

See Disposing Mind and Memory; Sound Mind and Memory.

"Memory" is the power of retaining knowledge in the mind. State v. Coyne, 114 S. W. 8, 12, 214 Mo. 344, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 993.

The regularly kept and original books of a corporation identified as such by the proper custodians, and constituting the records of the business transactions of the corporation, required by Civ. Code, § 377, to be kept by all corporations for profit, are admissible in an action between other parties without further preliminary proof, as constituting the "memory" of the transaction of the corporation. Hurwitz v. Gross, 91 Pac. 109, 111, 5 Cal. App. 614.

MEN

See Bunco Men; Business Men; Masses of Men.

Rev. Codes, § 8536, requires iron-bonneted safety cages with doors in mine shafts over 300 feet deep to be used in lowering and hoisting the employes thereof, and that the doors must be closed "when lowering or hoisting the men." Held, that the words "the men" imported the singular as well, and that the statute required the closing of the doors during the hoisting or lowering of one or more of the men in the course of his employment, and was not complied with by a closing of the doors only when the shifts of men employed in the mine were being lowered or hoisted at the usual time of changing the workmen. Osterholm v. Boston & Montana Consol. Copper & Silver Mining Co., 107 Pac. 499, 502, 40 Mont. 508.

MENACE

As threat, see Threat.

"Menace" is defined as the show of an intent to inflict evil; a threat; indication of probable evil or catastrophe to come; that which menaces; an impending evil. Worley v. State, 71 S. E. 153, 155, 136 Ga. 231.

A "menace" is defined to be the show of an intention to inflict evil. It is to act in a threatening manner, and any overt act of a threatening character, short of an actual assault, is a "menace." Ross v. State, 68 S. E. 58, 59, 7 Ga. App. 732; Price v. State, 72 S. E. 908, 910, 137 Ga. 71 (quoting and adopting the definition in Cumming v. State, 27 S. E. 177, 99 Ga. 662).

To call a man a liar and raise a stick to strike him, if in anger, is a menace of violence, and constitutes a breach of a bond to keep the peace, under Pen. Code 1895, §§ 1238, 1239. Rumsey v. Bullard, 63 S. E. 921, 5 Ga. App. 802.

"Menace" is generally regarded as synonymous with "threat." It may have other meanings. On a prosecution for murder, an instruction that mere words or menaces, irrespective of how aggravating, do not of themselves constitute provocation for the commission of murder in any degree, was not objectionable on the theory that the word "menaces" was equivalent to an overt act, especially in view of an instruction in which the proper distinction between words and threats and overt acts was clearly drawn. Lynch v. People, 79 Pac. 1015, 33 Colo. 128.

Civ. Code, § 1569, defines "duress" as (1) the unlawful confinement of a person; (2) unlawful detention of the property of any such person; (3) confinement of such person, lawful in form, but fraudulently obtained. Section 1570 defines "menace" as consisting of the duress specified in subdivisions 1 and 2, and unlawful and violent injury to the person and property of such person, or injury to his character. Defendant demanded the right to purchase boxes from plaintiff at an alleged contract price, which contract, in fact, did not exist, but plaintiff refused to sell at less than practically the market price, which was higher than the alleged contract price. It was practically impossible to then buy the boxes elsewhere, and they were essential to the continuance of defendant's business, and defendant claimed it was coerced into paying the price charged therefor. Held, that some element of compulsion or threatened exercise of power over the person or property to compel payment must be present to constitute duress, and defendant was not compelled by duress to purchase and pay the price charged for the boxes. Standard Box Co. v. Mutual Bliscuit Co., 103 Pac. 938, 943, 10 Cal. App. 746.

MENINGITIS

See Eucephalo Meningitis.

MENS REA

"Mens rea"—guilty mind—while a necessary element of most criminal offenses, is, in some offenses, presumed from the facts proved. Brown v. State (Del.) 74 Atl. 836, 837, 7 Pennewill, 159, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 661.

MENTAL

MENTAL AGONY OR ANGUISH

Anguish as including, see Anguish.

"Mental anguish" is a high degree of mental suffering, and not mere disappointment or regret. Gerock v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 60 S. E. 637, 646, 147 N. C. 1; Hancock v. Western Union Tel. Co., 49 S. E. 952, 953, 137 N. C. 497, 69 L. R. A. 403.

The term "mental anguish," recognized by statute as a ground of action against a telegraph company, applies only to social and personal matters, and not to business affairs. The statute does not authorize recovery for vexation caused the sender of a telegram because of dishonor of a check for full ure to deliver the telegram in time. Capers v. Western Union Tel. Co., 50 S. E. 537, 538, 71 S. C. 29. Nor for worry over the possible loss of a position. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Shenep, 104 S. W. 154, 155, 83 Ark. 476, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 886, 119 Am. St. Rep. 145.

Mental anguish or suffering, as used in the statute authorizing a recovery of damages for mental anguish or suffering, means distress or serious pain as distinguished from annoyance, regret, or vexation. Mental anguish is intense mental suffering. Johnson v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 62 S. E. 244, 245, 81 S. C. 235, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1002, 128 Am. St. Rep. 905.

In order to recover damages under the "mental anguish" doctrine, it is necessary that the mental anguish suffered be real and with cause, and not merely the result of a too sensitive mind or a morbid imagination. Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Archie, 121 S. W. 1045, 1046, 92 Ark. 59.

Mental worry, distress, grief, and mortification are proper elements of mental suffering for which an injured person can recover; recovery not being limited to the form of mental suffering described as physical pain. Merrill v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co., 111 Pac. 534, 540, 158 Cal. 499, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 559, 139 Am. St. Rep. 134.

Allegations in a petition, in an action against a sheriff and his deputy, that they wrongfully and unlawfully entered into a house and premises occupied by plaintiff under a lease and dispossessed him, and put his household goods and personal property in the public highway, and so put plaintiff to great trouble and distress, properly authorize a recovery for humiliation and mortification, or any phase of "mental anguish," since the word "distress," being a generic term, includes anguish or suffering, both of mind and body, and since "humiliation" and mortification are simply phases of mental anguish. Perkins v. Ogilvie, 146 S. W. 735, 738, 148 Ky. 309.

Allegations that plaintiff was humiliated, mortified, and shamed by being put off a train at a place where she was compelled to expose her person in alighting showed "mental distress," though that was not alleged in terms. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hood, 118 S. W. 1119, 1122, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 834.

"Mental suffering" will be implied from illness accompanied by physical pain. International & G. N. R. Co. v. Johnson, 95 S. W. 595, 596, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 147 (citing Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Curry, 64 Tex. 85; Houston, E. & W. T. R. Co. v. Simpson [Tex.] 81 S. W. 353; Brown v. Sullivan, 10 S. W. 288, 71 Tex. 470; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Rubio [Tex.] 65 S. W. 1127). See, also, Ousley v. Hampe, 105 N. W. 122, 123, 128 Iowa, 675.

There is a clear distinction between "mental suffering" and "impairment of the mental faculties." Gagnier v. Fargo, 96 N. W. 841, 843, 12 N. D. 219.

MENTAL CAPACITY

"Mental capacity" to execute a deed does not mean that the grantor comprehends the legal effect of the words employed; but, in the nature and effect of the instrument as a conveyance of property is understood, he possesses sufficient mental capacity, and mere weakness of intellect from sickness or old age is no ground for avoiding a deed in the absence of fraud or undue influence. Moorehead v. Scovel, 80 Atl. 13, 15, 210 Pa. 446.

The test of "capacity" to make a deed is whether the grantor at the time fully understood, realized, and appreciated the probable results and consequences of the transaction. Corporation of Members of Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints v. Watson, 83 Pac. 731, 733, 30 Utah, 126.

The test of "mental capacity" necessary to make a valid deed is that the grantor is capable of understanding in a reasonable manner the nature and effect of the act in which he is engaged. The requisite mental capacity is present where the grantor is capable of understanding in a reasonable manner the nature and effect of the deed, and of comprehending and protecting his own interests in ordinary business affairs. Fitzgerald v. Allen, 88 N. E. 240, 243, 240 Ill. 90 (citing Ring v. Lawless, 60 N. E. 881, 190 Ill. 520).

No particular degree of mental capacity is essential to enable one to execute a deed; the test being whether the grantor had at the time sufficient mental capacity to understand the nature of the transaction, and assent thereto. Wampler v. Harrell, 72 S. E. 135, 138, 112 Va. 635.

To render a deed void on the ground of the grantor's mental incapacity, it must appear that his mental infirmity rendered him incapable of understanding the nature of his act, and mere infirmity of mind or body, not amounting to such incapacity to understand, is insufficient. Du Bose v. Kell, 71 S. E. 371, 376, 90 S. C. 196.

That a grantor was advanced in years and somewhat enfeebled in mind by sickness is not sufficient to make him mentally incompetent to execute a deed, where he had sufficient mental capacity to comprehend naturally the transactions in which he was engaged at the time the deed was executed. McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, 89 N. E. 645, 647, 241 Ill. 366.

One who is capable of exercising thought, reflection, and judgment, who knows what he is doing, and has sufficient memory and understanding to comprehend the nature and character of the transaction, has sufficient "mental capacity" to make a valid note. Rogers v. Rogers (Del.) 66 Atl. 374, 375, 6 Pennewill, 267.

The assignment by a father of his interest in his life policy to his son a few days before death is akin to a testamentary act, and the rules regarding mental capacity and undue influence applicable to a testator ought to be applied. Mental capacity of insured to make an assignment of life insurance means intelligence sufficient to understand the act he is about to perform, the property he possesses, what disposition he is making of it, and the persons and objects of his bounty. Borchers v. Barckers, 122 S. W. 357, 360, 143 Mo. App. 72.

Contributory negligence

"The word 'experience' means to have practical acquaintance with, which is equivalent to knowledge, and the word 'capacity,' in the sense in which it was used (in an instruction requiring of a boy the exercise of care and prudence equal to his capacity, etc.), means capability or skill as applied to the business in which he was engaged." And an instruction requiring a finding that plaintiff did not use such care and precaution as a person of his age and experience would have ordinarily used under the circumstances as a prerequisite to the finding of contributory negligence was proper, and not objectionable for failure to use the words "capacity," "age," "knowledge," and "experience." Stanley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 87 S. W. 112, 113, 112 Mo. App. 601.

An instruction on contributory negligence of a child having experience as to the dangers of playing upon a turntable, which requires the jury to consider "her age, intelligence, and capacity," is bad as omitting the element of "experience"; this element not being included in the term "capacity." Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Klinkrath, 81 N. E. 377, 378, 227 Ill. 439.

The word "capacity" does not include experience; and, when used with reference to mentality in an instruction on the law of ordinary care governing children, it means ability to learn by experience. Fowler v. Chicago & E. I. R. Co., 85 N. E. 298, 299, 234 Ill. 619.

Responsibility for crime

The test of mental capacity to commit crime is the power to distinguish moral or legal right from moral or legal wrong, and to recognize the particular act charged as moral or legal wrong. State v. Jackson, 69 S. E. 883, 886, 87 S. C. 407.

Testamentary capacity

The words "mental capacity," while more general and perhaps less definite, necessarily include the idea expressed in the phrase "sufficient strength of mind and memory." Barricklow v. Stewart, 72 N. E. 128, 130, 163 Ind. 438.

The test of whether testator had sufficient mental capacity to execute a valid will is whether at the time he understood the nature of the transaction, and intelligently assented to the provisions of the will. Wampler v. Harrell, 72 S. E. 135, 138, 112 Va. 635.

The test of "mental capacity" sustaining a will is sufficient understanding to comprehend the nature of the transaction, the nature and extent of one's property, and to whom he desires to give it. Gibony v. Foster, 130 S. W. 314, 322, 230 Mo. 106.

MENTAL COMPETENCY

See, also, Mental Capacity.

"Mental competency" in a testator does not require the sagacity, analytical powers, astuteness, and soundness of judgment requisite to the making of just such a contract, in every instance, as an experienced, skillful, and shrewd man would make. It suffices that a person in making a will or executing an instrument to operate as one knows what property he has, and what he wants to do with it. Mere infirmity of mind and body is insufficient to overcome the legal presumption of mental capacity in one who has executed a will, deed, contract, or other instrument. Bade v. Feay, 61 S. E. 348, 350, 63 W. Va. 166.

Where in a will contest it was claimed that proponent, who was the residuary legatee, had exercised undue influence over testatrix in procuring the will, and it appeared that he superintended the making of the will and obtained therefrom a large portion of testatrix's estate, though he was not of kin to her, to the exclusion of many of her relatives, the term "mental competency" under such circumstances included the ability of testatrix to understand the meaning and effect of the residuary clause of the will. Cooper v. Harlow, 128 N. W. 259, 261, 163 Mich. 210.

MENTAL DISQUALIFICATION

Witness

A witness who has a "mental disqualification" is one who has not the capacity to receive, to record, and to recall impressions and to testify intelligently concerning them. Batterton v. State, 107 S. W. 828, 827, 52 Tex. Cr. R. 381 (quoting and adopting the definition in 2 Elliott, Ev. § 750).

MENTAL DISTRESS AND INJURY

See Mental Agony or Anguish.
As cruelty, see Cruelty.

MENTAL FACULTIES

See Impairment of Mental Faculties.

MENTAL INCAPACITY

See, also, Mental Capacity.

No definite rule can be laid down defining "mental incapacity" which will apply in all cases and on which the court can rely as a foundation for granting or refusing the prayer of a bill to set aside a conveyance. The mental incapacity, however, as a sole ground for setting aside a conveyance, must be such as leaves the person affected without understanding to know the consequences of his own act. Allen's Adm'r v. Allen's Adm'rs, 64 Atl. 1110, 1115, 79 Vt. 173.

MENTAL SUFFERING

See Mental Agony or Anguish.
As personal injury, see Personal Injury.

MENTAL UNSOUNDNESS

"Mental unsoundness" which exempts from responsibility for what otherwise would be an offense denotes a mind so far devoid of understanding that it is unable to distinguish between right and wrong, and is therefore without freedom of moral action. Commonwealth v. Hallowell, 72 Atl. 845, 846, 223 Pa. 494.

MENTALLY INCOMPETENT

The phrases "incompetent," "mentally incompetent," and "incapable," as used in article 15, c. 86, §§ 5485, 5486, Comp. Laws 1909, mean any person who, though not insane, is, by reason of old age, disease, weakness of mind, or from any other cause, unable, unassisted, to properly manage and take care of himself or his property, and by reason thereof would be likely to be deceived or imposed upon by artful or designing persons. Shelby v. Farve, 126 Pac. 764, 765, 33 Okl. 651.

The term "mentally incompetent to have the charge and management of his property," within the statute relating to the appointment of guardians, means mental incapability to do so. In re Streiff, 97 N. W. 189, 191, 119 Wis. 566, 100 Am. St. Rep. 903 (citing In re Leonard's Estate, 95 Mich. 295, 54 N. W. 1082).

MENTION

Any way mentioned, see Any.

Of dutiable articles

At the time of the arrival of claimant at the port of New York as a passenger from a foreign country, a treasury regulation provided that merchandise intended for sale and of the value of $500 or over could not be examined on the pier, but must be regularly entered at the custom house and appraised. Claimant in her declaration made on landing listed certain articles and "one trunk for public stores"; that being the place where imported merchandise goes for examination and appraisal. Later she filed regular written entry at the custom house, and with it duplicate consular invoice of the contents of the trunk, which consisted of dutiable merchandise of over $500 in value. Held, that the description in claimant's declaration was sufficient, and that her filing of the invoice at the custom house later was a compliance with Rev. St. § 2802, which requires all dutiable articles to be "mentioned to the collector" "at the time of making entry." United States v. One Trunk, 184 Fed. 317, 318, 106 G. O. A. 459.

Of after-born child

2 Rev. St. (1st Ed.) pt. 2, c. 6, tit. 1, art. 3, § 49, as amended by Laws 1869, p. 40, c. 22, provides that a child born after the making of his parent's will, not "provided for in any way mentioned in such will," shall take as if the parent died intestate. Held, that the words "in any way mentioned" indicate that the expression was to be used in the broadest possible sense, so as to cover any form of reference that showed that a testator had in mind the possibility of after-born children, and where a testator gave his estate to his wife to her own use, and that of her heirs forever, and provided that in case of her death during the lifetime of the testator leaving issue, the issue would take the estate, and, if the wife should die leaving no lawful issue, the estate should be divided in accordance with the intestate laws, and testator at the time of the execution of the will was a married man, but had no children, a child born after testator's death was mentioned in the will, and he was bound by it, and could not take as if the testator had died intestate. Stachelberg v. Stachelberg, 101 N. Y. Supp. 178, 180, 52 Misc. Rep. 22.

A testator, when without children, executed a will, which, after making certain specific legacies, left the residue of his estate to his wife, and after the birth of a son, but before the birth of two daughters, he added a codicil directing what disposition should be made of his property "in the event of the death of myself, wife, and child or children at one and the same time." Held, that there was no such "mention" of an after-born child as was contemplated by Rev. St. (1st Ed.) pt. 2, c. 6, tit. 1, art. 3, § 49, as amended by Laws 1869, p. 40, c. 22, providing that whenever a testator shall have a child born after the making of his last will, and shall die leaving it unprovided for, such child shall succeed to the same portion that he would be entitled to if his parent had died intestate, and hence the surviving daughters were entitled to share in his estate as the statute provides. Tavshanjian v. Abbott, 115 N. Y. Supp. 938, 940, 130 App. Div. 863.

Where a will made prior to the birth of any children devised testator's property to his wife, and provided that in case she should have any children at testator's death the will should remain unchanged, a child born prior to testator's death was "mentioned" in the will within the meaning of Ky. St. 1903, § 4847, providing that a will, made prior to the birth of a child, wherein any child testator might have is not provided for or mentioned, shall be construed as if the devise therein had been limited on the death of the child under the age of 21 years, unmarried and without issue, especially in view of sections 4842 and 4848, providing that certain classes of children and grandchildren who are neither provided for nor expressly excluded ed by the will, but only pretermitted, shall inherit as in case of intestacy. Logan v. Bean's Adm'r, 87 S. W. 1110, 120 Ky. 712.

Under Rev. St. 1895, art. 5345, providing that a will made when testator had no child living, wherein any child he might have is not provided for or mentioned, shall be void on the birth of a child, etc., whether the unborn child is mentioned in the will is to be determined by construing its language with reference to the circumstances and knowledge of the testator, the word "mentioned" meaning "referred to," rather than designated by name, and the failure to make provision must be accidental to avoid the will; and hence the will of a wife, executed when in an advanced state of pregnancy, which devised the bulk of her realty to her husband, and devised her undivided interest in her father's homestead to persons named, which devise was to be void in case of living issue born of her body, mentioned the unborn child, for she must have known the practical certainty that a child would be born to her, and the provision that the devise is to be void in case of issue born obviously refers to the expected child. Pearce v. Pearce, 134 S. W. 210, 214, 104 Tex. 73.

MERCANTILE

The word "mercantile," in its ordinary acceptance, means pertaining to the business of merchants, and is concerned with trade or the buying and selling of commodities. People v. Federal Security Co. 99 N. E. 668, 669, 255 Ill. 561; H. H. Kohlsaat & Co. v. O'Connell, 99 N. E. 689, 690, 255 Ill. 271.

"Mercantile" is defined thus: "Of or pertaining to merchants, or the traffic carried on by merchants, having to do with trade or commerce; trading; commercial." Carr v. Riley, 84 N. E. 426, 428, 198 Mass. 70.

The term "mercantile pursuits" in Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, making corporations principally engaged in such pursuits subject to the act, is to be given its common and generally understood meaning, and includes only corporations engaged in the buying and selling of commodities. Zugalla v. International Mercantile Agency, 142 Fed. 927, 930, 74 C. O. A. 97.

Bakery

The word "mercantile" means having to do with, or engaged in, trade, or the buying of commodities; and a corporation organized to make bakers' goods and restaurant supplies, and sell them, was organized for "mercantile purposes," within the tax law. H. H. Kohlsaat & Co. v. O'Connell, 99 N. E. 689, 690, 255 Ill. 271 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4477).

Building and loan association

The phrase "engaged principally in manufacturing, trading, printing, publishing, mining or mercantile pursuits," as used in Bankr. Act 1898, limiting corporations which may be forced into bankruptcy to such as are engaged principally in manufacturing, trading, printing, publishing, mining, or mercantile pursuits, is to be taken in its natural and usual meaning, and any corporation which does not come within such meaning cannot be put into bankruptcy. A building and loan association organized to accumulate a fund from contributions of its members from which loans were to be made to assist members in purchase of real estate, the profits of which business were divided among its members, is not a corporation engaged principally in trading or mercantile pursuits within the act. In re New York Building Loan Banking Co., 127 Fed. 471, 472.

Buying and selling stocks

A corporation engaged in buying and selling stocks and bonds is engaged in a "mercantile pursuit," within section 108 of the Revenue Law (Hurd's Rev. St. 1911, c. 120), prohibiting the state board of equalization from assessing companies organized for mercantile purposes. People v. Federal Security Co., 99 N. E. 668, 669, 255 Ill. 561.

Coalyard

A coalyard, wherein coal mined by its owner is cleaned, assorted, and stored and from which it is sold, is a "mercantile institution or establishment," within Child Labor Act (Hurd's Rev. St. 1911, c. 48), prohibiting the employment of a child under the age of 14 years in any mercantile institution or establishment, and is also a manufacturing establishment, factory, or workshop, since that phrase as used in the statute has the meaning given to it by the Child Labor Act of June 9, 1897 (Laws 1897, p. 90), defining the words "manufacturing establishment, factory, or workshop" to mean any place where goods or products are manufactured or repaired, dyed, cleaned or sorted, stored or packed for sale. Purtell v. Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., 99 N. E. 899, 902, 256 Ill. 110, 43 L. R. A. (N. S.) 193, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 835.

Production and supply of electricity

A corporation engaged in generating electricity, transmitting it, and selling power or light to consumers, is neither a "manufacturing" nor a "mercantile" corporation within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 3, and is not subject to adjudication as an involuntary bankrupt. In re Hudson River Electric Power Co., 173 Fed. 934, 941.

Production and transportation of gas

Bouvier thus defines "merchandise": A term including all those things which merchants sell, either wholesale or retail, as dry goods, hardware, groceries, drugs, etc. It is usually applied to personal chattels only, and to those which are not required for food or immediate support, but such as remain after having been used, or which are used only by a slow consumption. The Century Dictionary defines it: In general, any movable object of trade or traffic; that which is passed from hand to hand by purchase or sale; specifically, the objects of commerce; a commercial commodity or commercial commodities in general; the staple of a mercantile business; commodities, goods, or wares bought and sold for gain. A gas company which makes, transports through pipes, and sells gas to special customers within a limited area is not principally engaged in mercantile pursuits, within the meaning of Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 487, § 3. In re Hudson River Electric Power Co., 173 Fed. 934, 952.

Grain, bond, and stock broker

Where a corporation was organized to carry on a general stock, bond, grain, and brokerage business and was authorized to trade on its own behalf in stocks, bonds, grains, etc., and lease and dispose of real and personal property, it was subject to adjudication as a bankrupt corporation engaged in "trading or mercantile business." In re H. R. Leighton & Co., 147 Fed. 311, 314 (citing Coll. Law & Pr. Bankr. [5th Ed.] p. 64; In re Surety Guaranty & Trust Co., 121 Fed. 73, 56 C. C. A. 654; In re Pacific Coast Warehouse Co., 123 Fed. 749; In re Cameron, 96 Fed. 756; In re New York Building-Loan Banking Co., 127 Fed. 471; In re Snyder & Johnson Co., 133 Fed. 806; In re United States Hotel Co., 134 Fed. 225, 67 C. C. A. 153, 68 L. R. A. 588).

The business of a stockbroker may be carried on by a limited partnership, within Code Pub. Gen. Laws, art. 73, § 1, authorizing the formation of limited partnerships for the transaction of any "mercantile, mechanical, manufacturing or banking business," and declaring that the provision shall not authorize any such partnership for the purpose of making insurance; for sales and purchases of bonds, stocks, and other securities are mercantile transactions. Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Cahn, 62 Atl. 819, 825, 102 Md. 530.

Hotel

A corporation engaged principally in running hotels is not engaged principally in "mercantile" pursuits, so as to be liable to be adjudged an involuntary bankrupt. Tux-away Hotel Co. v. J. L. Smathers & Co., 30 Sup. Ct. 263, 264, 216 U. S. 439, 54 L. Ed. 558; In re United States Hotel Co., 134 Fed. 225, 227, 67 C. C. A. 153 (citing Hall v. Cooley, 11 Fed. Cas. 217).

Livery and boarding stable

A "merchant" is a person who is engaged in the business of buying and selling, one who buys in order to sell. A corporation organized to conduct a general livery and boarding stable business, and engaged in buying, keeping, and hiring its horses and vehicles for profit and keeping, feeding, and caring for the horses and vehicles of others for hire, not being engaged in buying and selling horses and vehicles or feed as a business, is not a trading corporation or one engaged chiefly in "mercantile" pursuits within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4, cl. "b," providing that such corporations may become bankrupt. Gallagher v. De Lancey Stables Co., 158 Fed. 381, 382.

A corporation, the principal business of which is the keeping of a boarding stable to feed and care for horses for hire, is not subject to adjudication as a corporation engaged principally in mercantile and trading pursuits; such term embracing corporations whose principal business is the buying and selling of goods in the ordinary course of trade. In re Willis Cab & Automobile Co., 178 Fed. 113, 114.

Lumber dealer

A firm engaged in buying standing timber in large quantities, and cutting and sawing the same, and selling the lumber, is engaged in a "trading or mercantile business," within Gen. St. 1902, § 2342, providing for the assessment of the property of any trading or mercantile business; "to trade" being to engage in the purchase or sale of merchandise, and the word "mercantile" being defined as of or pertaining to merchants, or the traffic carried on by them. Jackson v. Town of Union, 73 Atl. 773, 774, 82 Conn. 266.

Real estate dealer

The term "mercantile pursuits," as used in Bankr. Act 1898, § 4b, c. 541, does not include dealing in real estate. In re Kingston Realty Co., 160 Fed. 445, 447, 87 C. C. A. 406, reversing 157 Fed. 299.

Renting films for moving pictures

A corporation engaged principally in the business of renting films for moving pictures is not engaged in trading or a mercantile pursuit which renders it subject to adjudication as an involuntary bankrupt under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 4b, 30 Stat. 547, as amended by Act Feb. 5, 1903, c. 497, § 4, 32 Stat. 797. In re Imperial Film Exchange, 198 Fed. 80, 81, 117 C. C. A. 188.

Restaurant

A corporation operating a restaurant is not subject to adjudication as a bankrupt under Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, authorizing an adjudication against corporations engaged in "mercantile pursuits"; the dishes furnished not being merchandise, nor the proprietor a merchant engaged in "mercantile pursuits." In re Wentworth Lunch Co., 159 Fed. 413, 415, 86 C. C. A. 393.

A restaurateur is not a "trader," nor, so far as his business of cooking and selling food is concerned, is he engaged in "mercantile pursuits," within Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, authorizing involuntary proceedings against traders and persons so engaged. In re Excelsior Café Co., 175 Fed. 294, 296.

MERCANTILE MARINE

Rev. St. § 4233, providing that steam vessels, when towing other vessels, shall carry two bright, white masthead lights, vertically, in addition to their side lights, which shall be of such a character as to be visible on a dark night with a clear atmosphere for at least 5 miles and show a uniform unbroken light over an arc of the horizon at 20 points of the compass, applies only to the navy and mercantile marine of the United States, "mercantile marine" being used to mean the merchant service or business of commerce at sea, and does not apply to steam vessels engaged in towing on inland rivers. Beck v. Johnson, 169 Fed. 154, 164.

MERCHANDISE

See Dutiable Merchandise; Lawful Merchandise; Stock of Goods, Wares, and Merchandise; Stock of Merchandise.

Any article of imported merchandise, see Any.

Goods, wares, and merchandise, see Goods.

Other merchandise, see Other.

"Merchandise" has a very extended meaning and usually means personalty used by merchants in the course of trade, but may include every article of traffic. Mara v. Branch (Tex.) 135 S. W. 661, 662; Whitewater Mercantile Co. v. Devore, 109 S. W. 808, 809, 180 Mo. App. 339.

"Merchandise" is defined as anything movable, customarily bought and sold for profit. H. H. Kohlsaat & Co. v. O'Connell, 90 N. E. 689, 690, 255 Ill. 271 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4482).

Rev. St. § 2766, provides that: "The word 'merchandise' as used in this title may include goods, wares and chattels of every description capable of being imported." United States v. Fifty Waltham Watch Movements, 139 Fed. 291, 294.

Baggage

As baggage, see Baggage.

In Rev. St. § 3082, prescribing a penalty for importing or bringing into the United States any merchandise contrary to law, the term "merchandise" is not restricted to general merchandise as distinguished from personal baggage, especially in view of section 2766, declaring that the word "merchandise" may include goods, wares, and chattels of every description capable of being imported, and sections 2799 and 2802, showing that wearing apparel and other personal baggage are embraced within the term. United States v. Chesbrough, 176 Fed. 778, 781.

Carriages, wagons, etc.

The term "merchandise" in the Bulk Sales Law does not include wagons or other appliances used in a retail coal business. Bowen v. Quigley 130 N. W. 690, 165 Mich. 337, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 218.

Fruit

Fruit is "merchandise" within Code Miss. 1906, § 1367, prohibiting the keeping open of a store on Sunday for the purpose of disposing of wares or merchandise. This term covers all kinds of personal property which is ordinarily bought and sold. City of Gulfport v. Stratakos, 43 South. 812, 90 Miss. 489, 13 Ann. Cas. 855 (citing Blackwood v. Cutting Packing Co., 18 Pac. 248, 76 Cal. 212, 9 Am. St. Rep. 199).

Furniture and fixtures

A fire policy on a stock of merchandise for a specified sum, and on store and furniture and fixtures for a specified sum which stipulates that the entire policy shall be void if the subject of insurance be incumbered by chattel mortgage, is not invalidated, as to the insurance on the furniture and fixtures, by the execution of a chattel mortgage on the "stock of merchandise" and improvements, the mortgage not covering the furniture and fixtures; "stock," in mercantile law, being defined as "the goods which a tradesman holds for sale or traffic," and "merchandise" being defined to be "the objects of commerce." Spring Garden Ins. Co. of Philadelphia v. Brown (Tex.) 143 S. W. 292.

Horse or stallion

A sale of horses, wagons, harnesses, coal bags, forks, shovels, baskets, stoves, sleigh runners, chutes, and books pertaining to a retail coal business was not a sale of "merchandise," within Bulk Sales Law (Pub. Laws 1905, No. 223), providing that sales in bulk of any part or the whole of a stock of merchandise, or merchandise and fixtures pertaining to a business, otherwise than in the ordinary course of trade, shall be void, etc. Bowen v. Quigley, 130 N. W. 690, 165 Mich. 337, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 218.

Insurance

Insurance is not an article of merchandise, or manufacture, or one of the necessities of life, within the laws against engrossing, prohibiting combinations among dealers in merchandise or manufacture or necessities of life. Harris v. Commonwealth, 73 S. E. 561, 563, 113 Va. 746, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 458, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 597.

Labor and services

Code, § 5060, prohibiting any combination to regulate the price "of any article of merchandise or commodity or to fix * * * the amount or quality of any article, commodity or merchandise to be manufactured, mined, produced or sold," does not, when construed as required by section 48 by giving to the words and phrases the meaning of approved usage of the language, cover combinations to fix the price of skilled or unskilled labor, and does not prevent physicians from combining to fix charges for professional services; the word "merchandise" referring primarily to those things which merchants sell, and the word "commodity" qualified by the words "manufactured, mined, produced, or sold," not including labor either skilled or unskilled, though the word "commodity" primarily means a convenience, profit, benefit, or advantage, and, in reference to commerce, comprehends everything movable—that is, sold or bought—except animals. Rohlf v. Kasemeier, 118 N. W. 276, 277, 140 Iowa, 182, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1284, 132 Am. St. Rep. 261, 17 Ann. Cas. 750.

Lumber, logs, and posts

Logs to be got out are "merchandise" within the statute of frauds. Crosby Hard-Wood Co. v. Tester, 63 N. W. 1057, 1058, 90 Wis. 412 (citing Hanson v. Roter, 64 Wis. 622, 25 N. W. 530).

Though the word "merchandise," as used in Acts 1903, p. 92, regulating the sale of "goods, wares and merchandise" in bulk, is not to be taken in such a restricted sense as to exclude the usual and customary accessories of a mercantile or trading establishment, when a sale in bulk is made of the whole, the statute is not applicable to a sale of substantially all the lumber manufactured by one who operates a sawmill at which trees are manufactured into lumber. Cooney, Eckstein & Co. v. Sweat, 66 S. E. 257, 133 Ga. 511, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 758.

Placer gold

The word "merchandise," defined in Rev. St. § 2766, as including goods, wares, and chattels of every description capable of being imported, is sufficiently broad to include placer gold. Six Parcels of Placer Gold v. United States, 76 Pac. 473, 475, 8 Ariz. 389.

Ship

A steamship owned by a corporation and plying between domestic ports is taxable as "merchandise," under St. 1903, p. 452, c. 437, § 84. The term "merchandise" also includes general objects of traffic and commerce, together with stocks or shares in incorporated companies. As used in the statute of frauds, the words "goods" and "merchandise" are sufficiently comprehensive to include promissory notes. The Century Dictionary states that "real property, ships, money, stocks and bonds are not merchandise," but the word may be used in different senses, and in any case of doubt the context throws much light on its meaning, and the meaning of "merchandise," as gathered from the context and the purpose of the act in which it occurs, is broad enough to include ships. New England & Savannah S. S. Co. v. Commonwealth, 81 N. E. 286, 288, 289, 195 Mass. 385, 11 Ann. Cas. 678 (citing Tisdale v. Harris, 20 Pick. [37 Mass.] 9, 13; Baldwin v. Williams, 3 Metc. [44 Mass.] 365, 367).

Tools and implements

A fire policy "on 'merchandise,' consisting principally of clothing made and in process of making and materials for same," covers the stock in trade and all articles necessarily or conveniently used in the business, and embraces tools and implements of the business as conducted by insured. Oklahoma Fire Ins. Co. v. McKey (Tex.) 152 S. W. 440, 441.

Undertaker's caskets, etc.

"Merchandise," within the bulk sale law (Pub. Acts 1905, No. 223), means such things as are usually bought and sold in trade by merchants, and includes caskets, steel vaults, robes, and casket hardware used in an undertaker's business. People's Savings Bank v. Van Alsburg, 131 N. W. 101, 102, 165 Mich. 524.

Wool

Wool owned by a manufacturing company, bought abroad and entered for warehousing in a United States bonded warehouse, is "merchandise," within St. 1900, c. 490, pt. 3, § 41, which provides for levy of an excise on domestic corporations, based on the value of merchandise, etc., which if owned by a natural resident would be liable to taxation. Farr Alpaca Co. v. Commonwealth, 98 N. E. 1078, 1079, 212 Mass. 156.

MERCHANDISE BROKER

A "merchandise broker" is one who negotiates the sale of merchandise without having it in his possession or control. "He is simply an agent with very limited powers, and with reference to right to receive payment it is universally held: 'A broker has, ordinarily, no authority to receive payment for property sold by him for his principal, and a purchaser who pays the broker does so at his own risk.' Such payment does not discharge him from liability to the principal, unless the authority of the broker to receive payment be express or may reasonably be implied from the circumstances." J. M. Robinson, Norton & Co. v. Corsicana Cotton Factory, 90 S. W. 305, 306, 124 Ky. 435, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 474, 14 Ann. Cas. 802 (quoting and adopting definition in Story, Ag- § 34; and citing Mechem, Ag. § 949; Graham v. Duckwall, 8 Bush [71 Ky.] 12; Selpie v. Irwin, 30 Pa. 513; Higgins v. Moore, 34 N. Y. 417; Basset v. Lederer [N. Y.] 1 Hun, 274; Crosby v. Hill, 39 Ohio St. 100).

MERCHANDISE ENTITLED TO DEBENTURE

See Entitled to Debenture.

MERCHANDISE NOT IN EXISTENCE

A crop of olives, nearly matured at time of contract for sale thereof, is not within Civ. Code, § 1768, providing that one who agrees to sell merchandise, "not then in existence," warrants that it shall be sound and merchantable at the contemplated place of production, and as nearly so at the place of delivery as can be secured by reasonable care, or section 1771, providing that one who sells or agrees to sell merchandise "inaccessible to the examination of" the buyer thereby warrants that it is sound and merchantable. Kenney v. Grogan, 120 Pac. 483, 435, 17 Cal. App. 527.

MERCHANT

See Commission Merchant; Court Merchant; Custom of Merchants; Forwarding Merchant; Law Merchant; Lumber Merchant; Permanent Merchant; Public Merchant; Transient Merchant.

A "merchant" is one who buys and sells goods of all or any kind. Commonwealth v. Payne Medicine Co., 127 S. W. 760, 763, 138 Ky. 164.

"Merchant" is defined as any one who buys and sells any species of movable goods for gain or profit. H. H. Kohlsaat & Co. v. O'Connell, 99 N. E. 689, 690, 255 Ill. 271 (citing 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4482).

The word "merchant" is defined as "one who is engaged in the business of buying commercial commodities and selling them again for the sake of profit, especially one who buys and sells in quantities or by wholesale," or "a shopkeeper" or "storekeeper." Carr v. Riley, 84 N. E. 426, 428, 198 Mass. 70.

A statutory provision empowering cities to impose license taxes upon "merchants," and to enact ordinances for the regulation and enforcement of such taxes, authorizes city councils to impose penalties upon agents and employes of such merchants who assist in carrying on an unlicensed business. City of Emporia v. Becker, 90 Pac. 798, 799, 76 Kan. 181, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 946.

Laborer distinguished

Within Act Cong. May 5, 1892, c. 60, 27 Stat. 25, providing for the deportation of Chinese laborers and defining "merchant" as a person engaged in buying and selling merchandise at a fixed place of business, which business is conducted in his name, and who during the time he claims to be engaged as a merchant does not engage in the performance of any manual labor, except such as is necessary in the conduct of his business as such merchant, a person who at the time of his arrest was working as a servant in a boarding house, and who since coming to the United States had worked as a cook and delivery man in a store in which he had no interest, was a laborer and not a merchant. Mar Sing v. U. S., 187 Fed. 875, 877, 70 C. C. A. 213.

It has been held that a Chinese person engaged in keeping a restaurant and lodging house is a "laborer"; that a Chinese person whose occupation was that of a laundry man is a laborer within the meaning of the Chinese Exclusion Laws; that a Chinese person owning an interest in a mercantile firm, but not engaged in conducting it, who is also a cook in a restaurant of which he is part owner, is a laborer and not a merchant under such laws; and that a Chinaman who from the date of his landing in this country, although he has an interest in a mercantile business, is a laborer. Act Cong. Nov. 3, 1893, c. 14, amending Act May 5, 1892, c. 60, "to prohibit the coming of Chinese persons into the United States," does not restrict the meaning of the word "laborers," as used in the prior acts, so as to enlarge the privileged classes. United States v. Yee Gee You, 152 Fed. 157, 158, 159, 160, 81 C. C. A. 409.

Farmer

A farmer selling the products of his farm produced by his own labor is not a "merchant, grocer, or dealer in wares and merchandise, or a trader in any business," within Pen. Code, art. 199, prohibiting such persons from bartering or permitting their places of business to be open for traffic on Sunday. Hanks v. State, 99 S. W. 1011, 1012, 50 Tex. Cr. R. 577.

Foreign corporation

A foreign corporation engaged in the publication of school books, which has obtained a contract from the state text-book commission to furnish all the school books of the state, as provided by Acts 1899, p. 423, c. 205, and which has contracted with the dealers within the state to establish depots for the sale of school books in the state is a "merchant" doing business within the state, as defined by Acts 1903, p. 655, c. 258, § 27, and is therefore liable to a tax on the average value of its capital invested in its stock of merchandise kept on hand for sale within the state; the term "merchant" being defined by the statute as including all persons, copartnerships, or corporations engaged in trading or dealing in any kind of goods, wares, or merchandise, whether the same be kept on hand for sale or be purchased and delivered for profit as ordered. American Book Co. v. Shelton, 100 S. W. 725, 731, 117 Tenn. 745. A state is not precluded by the commerce clause of the federal Constitution from imposing a merchants' tax upon a nonresident manufacturing corporation which has selected a city of that state as a distributing point, and has secured a local transfer company to take charge of its products when shipped to that point, assort them, store them in a warehouse, and make delivery in the original packages to the customers of the manufacturer, either as expressly directed by it, or under general directions in favor of its recognized and approved customers, whose names were furnished to the transfer company, since, under such circumstances, the goods, when stored in the warehouse, were no longer in transit, but had reached their destination, and were held in the state for sale. American Steel & Wire Co. v. Speed, 24 Sup. Ct. 365, 366, 192 U. S. 500, 48 L. Ed. 538.

Fruit dealer

The keeper of a fruit stand, from which he sold fruit on Sunday, was a merchant engaged in selling merchandise, etc., on Sunday, within Code 1906, § 1367, providing that a merchant, shopkeeper, or other person shall not keep open his store on Sunday for the purpose of disposing of any wares or merchandise, goods, or chattels. City of Gulfport v. Stratakos, 43 South. 812, 90 Miss. 489, 13 Ann. Cas. 855.

Itinerant optician

"Merchant" is defined by Webster, Dict. as "one who traffics on a large scale, especially with foreign countries; a trafficker; a trader; * * * one who keeps a store or shop for the sale of goods; a shopkeeper." A merchant has also been defined as "one whose business is to buy and sell merchandise; one who buys to sell again, who does both, not incidentally or occasionally, but habitually, as a business." An itinerant optician, who merely prescribes and collects for spectacles, and has his orders filled and charged to him by a supply house, is not a merchant. City of Waukon v. Fisk, 100 N. W. 475, 476, 124 Iowa, 464 (quoting Jewel v. Trustees of Sumner Tp., 84 N. W. 973, 113 Iowa, 47, 49).

Manufacturer

The words "merchants" and "dealers," according to common understanding, mean something different from the word "manufacturers." The former are generally employed to designate persons engaged in the business of buying and selling merchandise or other personal property in the usual course of trade; the latter to designate those engaged in the business of making or producing articles for use or sale. Union County Nat. Bank, Liberty, Ind., v. Ozan Lumber Co., 179 Fed. 710, 715, 103 C. C. A. 584.

A "manufacturer" is one engaged in making materials, raw or partly finished, into wares suitable for use. A "merchant" is distinguished from a manufacturer, in that he sells to earn a profit, and the manufacturer sells to take profit already earned. A manufacturer of agricultural implements is not a "dealer" or "merchant," within Acts 1909, c. 479, § 3, and Assessment Act 1907 (Acts 1907, c. 602) §§ 8, 26, 27, providing for taxation of dealers and merchants; sales being made only to jobbers and commission men, and the only profit taken being for manufacturing the articles sold. Chattanooga Plow Co. v. Hays, 140 S. W. 1063, 1069, 125 Tenn. 148.

A manufacturer of acetylene gas lighting systems who sells through soliciting agents is not a "merchant" or "dealer" within Kirby's Dig. § 516, which provides that section 513, which makes void notes given in ordinary form for the price of patented machines, etc., shall not extend to merchants and dealers who sell patented things in the usual course of business; the words "merchant" and "dealer" meaning persons engaged in the business of buying and selling merchandise or other personal property in the usual course of trade. Ensign v. Coffelt, 145 S. W. 231, 234, 102 Ark. 668.

Member of firm

The term "merchant" is defined by Act Cong. May 5, 1892, c. 60, as amended by Act Nov. 3, 1893, c. 14, as a person engaged in buying and selling merchandise at a fixed place of business, which business is conducted in his name, and who, during the time he claims to be engaged as a merchant, does not engage in the performance of any manual labor, except such as is necessary in the conduct of his business as such merchant. The names of any of the partners need not appear in the company name under which a Chinese grocery is actually conducted at a fixed place of business, in order to constitute them merchants within the meaning of the definition. Tom Hong v. United States, 24 Sup. Ct. 517, 519, 193 U. S. 517, 48 L. Ed. 772.

Oil dealer

A "merchant" is a person whose business it is to buy and sell merchandise and who habitually trades in merchandise. 2 Bouv. Law Dict. 155. A merchant's license contemplates that the merchant is to have a fixed place of business within a county or city, consisting of a store or shop for the sale of goods. Brown's Case, 36 S. E. 485, 98 Va. 369. An oil company engaged in the business of refining and distributing oil and selling it to local dealers from tank wagons, and not from a fixed place of business, is not a "merchant" as that term is generally understood, and cannot, by voluntarily paying a state license as a merchant, prevent the assessment of a specific tax against its business. Standard Oil Co. v. City of Fredericksburg, 52 S. E. 817, 820, 105 Va. 82.

A corporation selling oil drawn from stationary tanks owned by it, and from a wagon tank driven about town, is a "merchant," within an ordinance defining a merchant to be a person dealing in the selling of goods, wares, and merchandise at any store, stand, or place occupied for that purpose. City of Troy v. Harris, 76 S. W. 662, 663, 665, 102 Mo. App. 51.

Salesman or solicitor of orders for goods

Under the treaty of November 17, 1880 (22 Stat. 826), and the treaty of March 28, 1894 (28 Stat. 1210), providing that Chinese persons entitled to come into the United States, when provided with the certificate prescribed by Act Cong. July 5, 1884, c. 220, 23 Stat. 115, are Chinese subjects, being officials, teachers, students, merchants, or travelers for curiosity or pleasure, and under Act Nov. 3, 1893, c. 14, § 2, 28 Stat. 8, defining the term "merchant," as used in the exclusion acts, as a person engaged in buying and selling merchandise at a fixed place of business, which business is conducted in his name, and who does not engage in manual labor, a person described in his certificate as a "salesman" is not a merchant, who is entitled to remain in the United States; a "salesman," as defined by the Standard Dictionary, being a man who sells goods in a shop or store or by canvassing, and being generally accepted to mean a person who sells goods for a merchant, and not to mean the merchant himself. United States v. Gin Hing, 76 Pac. 639, 640, 8 Ariz. 416.

Defendant took orders for groceries which he sent to a wholesale grocery firm, which shipped the goods to their own order and sent a bill therefor accompanying the bill of lading to their agent with directions to deliver only as paid for. Such agent received the goods and removed them to his warehouse, where the bulk was broken and the different packages for each customer segregated and delivered to them through defendant on their paying the price to defendant, and he delivered the money to such agent. Held, that defendant was a "merchant" as defined by Rev. St. 1899, § 8540, declaring every person who shall deal in the selling of goods, wares, and merchandise at any store, stand, or place occupied for that purpose to be a "merchant," and was therefore within a town ordinance prohibiting any "merchant" carrying on business without first having obtained a license. Town of Canton v. McDaniel, 86 S. W. 1092, 1096, 188 Mo. 207.

A "merchant" is one engaged in the business of buying commercial commodities and selling them again for the sake of profit. He is one who traffics or carries on trade, especially on a large scale; one who buys goods to sell again, and any one who is engaged in the purchase or sale of goods; a trafficker; a trader. Under Code, § 700, giving to cities and towns the power to define by ordinance who shall be considered transient merchants, and to regulate, license, and tax their sales, a city may impose a license fee on one engaged in taking orders for goods on his own account, and subsequently having the orders filled by a wholesale house, and the goods shipped to him for delivery; he paying the wholesale price and collecting the retail price from his customers. City of Cedar Falls v. Gentzler, 99 N. W. 561, 562, 123 Iowa, 670.

MERCHANT APPRAISER

The "merchant appraiser" appointed by the collector of customs is an expert, selected as an emergency arises, upon the request of the importer for a reappraisal. He is not a clerk nor an agent nor a person employed in the customs department within the meaning of the civil service act, nor is he an officer of the United States. Hand v. Cook, 92 Pac. 3, 10, 29 Nev. 518 (quoting and adopting Auffmordt v. Hedden, 11 Sup. Ct. 103, 137 U. S. 310, 34 L. Ed. 674).

MERCHANTABLE

Marketable synonyms

"Marketable" and "merchantable" are practically synonymous. In an action for breach of contract to purchase hay, in which defendants alleged that plaintiff agreed to sell them merchantable hay, and that the hay shipped was not as represented, a request by plaintiff to an expert witness: "State whether or not this hay you saw there is considered as marketable hay here in Baker City, compared with other kind that is sold here"—was not objectionable; the persons who "considered" the hay merchantable being himself and those who, according to his previous testimony, he had seen purchasing such hay at Baker City. Eaton v. Blackburn, 88 Pac. 303, 304, 49 Or. 22 (citing Webster's International Dict.).

Corn

The term "merchantable," as used in the rule that a buyer of corn is entitled to merchantable corn, means corn of such quality as to be reasonably fit for the ordinary purposes to which such corn is put, and free from marketable defects, so as to be salable in the market at an average or ordinary price. Atkins Bros. Co. v. Landa, 95 S. W. 949, 950, 119 Mo. App. 119.

Hay

See Good Merchantable Hay.

Lumber

The words "merchantable lumber, mill run," are not in common use and have no settled, judicial meaning. They are peculiar to the lumber trade or business and have a special meaning well understood by persons engaged in such business, and in an action on a contract for the purchase of lumber at a specified price per 1,000 for "merchantable lumber, mill run," evidence is admissible to show the meaning of the words. Barnes v. Leidigh, 79 Pac. 51, 52, 46 Or. 43.

Timber

The term "merchantable timber," within a contract to sell land warranted to contain 100,000,000 feet of "merchantable timber," while not limited to timber that could be reduced to board measure and manufactured into lumber at a profit, is limited to timber capable of being measured in board feet when sawed or cut for the purpose of utilization. Broad River Lumber Co. v. Middleby, 194 Fed. 817, 819, 114 C. C. A. 521.

"The term 'merchantable' means fit for the market, of such a quality as will bring the ordinary market price." A deed of "merchantable" timber had reference to such timber as would bring the ordinary market price at the time the deed was executed. Liston v. Chapman & Dewey Lumber Co., 91 S. W. 27, 29, 77 Ark. 116 (quoting and adopting Webst. Dict. and Black Law Dict.; and citing Andrews v. Wade [Pa.] 6 Atl. 48).

A contract for the sale of all merchantable pine timber, 10 inches in diameter and over, on a described tract of land, was not void for uncertainty, "merchantable" being used to describe the quality and determinable by experts with approximate certainty. Lee Lumber Co. v. Hotard, 48 South. 286, 287, 122 La. 850, 129 Am. St. Rep. 368.

A contract to sell the "merchantable pine timber" upon a certain tract of land to be sawed into lumber by the vendor according to the directions of the purchaser, and to be delivered at Richmond, is a contract that the lumber shall be merchantable, and that the timber will make merchantable lumber. Ragland v. Butler, 18 Grat. (59 Va.) 323, 335.

Title

The term "merchantable title" does not necessarily import a clear and perfect record title, and is not of such clear and definite meaning that one contracting to sell standing timber and to give such a title may not assert as a defense for not giving such title that he was ignorant of its meaning, and when the contract was executed stated to the vendee that, if it meant a perfect title or one good of record, he would not sign, because he could not furnish such title, and that thereupon the vendee told him that a general warranty deed was all that was wanted, and that that was what was meant by the term, and that he signed in reliance on such assurance.—Hughes v. Adams, 119 S. W. 134, 136, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 197.

MERE POSSIBILITY

The rights of living remaindermen, children of the life tenant, in a deed to one for life with remainder to the "heirs of her body," are not "mere possibilities" within Civ. Code, § 700, declaring that a mere possibility, such as the expectancy of an heir apparent, is not an interest of any kind, but they are estates in fee to vest in the future in such of them as survive their mother. Los Angeles County v. Winans, 109 Pac. 650, 652, 18 Cal. App. 257.

MERGER

Corporations

While there is a distinction recognized by most authorities between a "merger" and a "consolidation" of corporations, these terms are not always used with strict accuracy. Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Doyle, 100 N. E. 278, 281, 256 Ill. 514.

There is a distinct difference between a consolidation and a merger of two companies. In a consolidation, both go out of existence as separate corporations, and a new corporation is created, which takes their place and property; while in case of a merger one loses its identity by absorption in the other, which remains in existence, and succeeds to its property, and issues its own stock to the stockholders of the merged company. Lee v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 150 Fed. 775, 790. See, also, Kent v. Common Council of City of Binghamton, 81 N. Y. Supp. 198, 200, 40 Misc. Rep. 1 (2 Bouv. Law Dict. 175; Webst. Int. Dict. 914). Irvine v. New York Edison Co., 128 N. Y. Supp. 297, 299, 143 App. Div. 344; Central University of Kentucky v. Walters' Ex'rs, 90 S. W. 1066, 1069, 122 Ky. 65; Wasley v. Chicago R. I. & P. Ry. Co., 147 Fed. 608, 614.

The Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company incorporated in Virginia and having its principal offices in Richmond, with power given by its charter to "consolidate with itself" other corporations, entered into an agreement of "consolidation and merger" with a company owning connecting lines, incorporated in other states, which agreement provided that the stock of the second company should be retired and canceled, and stock of the Coast Line Company issued in its place; that all the stock, property, and franchises of both should be merged, united, and consolidated, "so as to form a merged, united and consolidated company"; that "said merger, union, and consolidation shall be into the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company, which is to continue the name of the consolidated company"; and that its office should remain in Richmond. Under such agreement the stock of the second company was canceled, but stock previously issued by the Coast Line Company remained outstanding, and such company took charge of and operated all lines previously owned and operated by either company, without any change in its management or control. Held, that such agreement effected a merger, and not a consolidation, and that the Coast Line Company continued to exist as a Virginia corporation. Lee v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co., 150 Fed. 775, 784.

A consolidation takes place when two companies are extinguished and a new one created taking over the holdings of those passing out of existence. It differs from "merger," which occurs when a thing of lesser importance is absorbed by one of greater importance. Both merger and consolidation, however, are equally productive of union, which means agreement, concord, harmony, and may exist without either merger or consolidation. Ramsey v. Hicks, 87 N. E. 1091, 1099, 44 Ind. App. 490.

Estates

A "merger," at law, is defined to be where a greater estate and a less coincide and meet in one and the same person, in one and the same right, without any intermediate estate. The less estate is immediately annihilated, or, in the law phrase, it is said to be merged—that is, sunk or drowned—in the greater. The rule in equity is the same as at law, with this modification: That at law it is invariable and inflexible; in equity it is controlled by the expressed or implied intention of the party in whom the interests of estate unite. Bagley v. McCarthy Bros. Co., 104 N. W. 7, 9, 95 Minn. 286 (quoting 5 Words and Phrases, p. 4492).

"Merger," in law, is accomplished when two or more estates comprising the whole legal and equitable interest unite in the same person; but in equity such union does not effect a merger, unless such was the intention of the parties, and when equity requires it. Citizens' Permanent Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Rampe, 116 N. Y. Supp. 597, 600; Dudley v. People's Trust Co., 107 N. Y. Supp. 930, 933, 57 Misc. Rep. 230 (quoting Asche v. Asche, 21 N. E. 70, 113 N. Y. 232).

Where a greater and a lesser estate coincide and meet in the same person and in the same right, without any intermediate vested estate, the lesser is immediately annihilated, and is said to be "merged." Tolsma v. Adair, 73 Pac. 347, 348, 32 Wash. 383 (quoting and adopting definition in Anderson's Law Dict. 671; 2 Bouv. Law Dict. [Rawle's Rev.] 400, 401).

"Merger" is essentially a matter of intention, and where the intention to merge does not exist the doctrine is not operative. Four sisters and four brothers being seised in fee of a tract of land, the sisters conveyed their undivided interests amounting to one-half of the fee to their brothers, three of whom, being of age, executed four several bonds to their sisters and gave them collectively a mortgage on the premises to secure a portion of the purchase money. The brother, who was a minor at the time the mortgage was given and who did not join therein, came of age within two years after the giving of the mortgage, and lived for more than thirty years thereafter and died, devising his one-fourth interest to his three brothers who made the mortgage. The entire fee of the premises subsequently vested in two of the brothers by virtue of their individual holdings and under the will of their deceased brother, and by a conveyance by their surviving brother, and in the years 1891, 1895, and 1903, made three mortgages upon the premises. One of the brothers died intestate, and his interest in the premises descended to his heirs at law, who are his surviving brother and his nephews and nieces, children of his deceased brothers and sisters. The surviving brother and the nephews and nieces are the owners of the interest in the mortgage of one of the sisters, as well as being owners of the fee. As against the mortgages of 1891 and 1895, there was no "merger" of their interest in the original mortgage to the sisters and the title to the fee in the lands. Shreve v. Harvey, 70 Atl. 671, 676, 74 N. J. Eq. 336.

The rule is absolute at law that a "merger" takes place when a greater estate and a lesser coincide and meet in one and the same person, in one and the same right, without the intervention of any other or outstanding right or title. Under such circumstances, the lesser estate is annihilated or merged into the greater. The doctrine of merger springs from the fact that, when the entire equitable and legal estates are united in the same person, there can be no occasion to keep them distinct, for ordinarily it would be of no use to the owner to keep up a charge upon the estate of which he was seised in fee simple; but, if there is an outstanding, intervening title, the foundation for the merger does not exist, and, as a matter of law, it is so declared. It therefore appears that, in order to effect a merger so as to extinguish the lesser estate, there must be a union, in the same person, of both the equitable and legal titles, without an intervening right operating to prevent a merger. Curry v. Lafon, 113 S. W. 246, 250, 133 Mo. App. 163 (citing Stantons v. Thompson, 49 N. H. 272; Jones, Mortg. [6th Ed.] § 848).

"Merger" occurs 'when a greater estate and a less coincide and meet in one and the same person, in one and the same rights without any intermediate estate.' The rule in equity is the same as at law, with this modification that at law it is inflexible, whereas in equity it is clear that a person may become entitled to an estate subject to a charge for his own benefit, and if he chooses can hold the estate and keep the charge alive. It becomes a question of intention in the person in whom the two interests are vested." Where a purchaser assumed the payment of notes executed by the vendor, secured by a mortgage on the premises, and conveyed the premises to a third person subject to the mortgage, and this person afterwards acquired the notes, the equitable estate was merged in the legal one, thereby extinguishing the mortgage and the debt secured. Wonderly v. Glessler, 93 S. W. 1130, 1133, 118 Mo. App. 708 (quoting and adopting Bassett v. O'Brien, 51 S. W. 108, 149 Mo. 389).

A "merger of estates" occurs, as declared in Civ. Code 1895, § 3106, when "two estates in the same property unite in the same person in his individual capacity, the less estate [being] merged in the greater," or where, as was held in Lowe v. Webb, 11 S. E. 845, 85 Ga. 731, two or more persons, having, as tenants in common, a life estate in realty, acquire in common the absolute fee thereto. "The doctrine of 'merger of estates' rests upon actualities, not upon mere possibilities. Coincidence of two independent estates presently held by one and the same person or class of persons is a necessary prerequisite to merger. No merger can take place until such identity of person and of present interest in point of fact exists." Luquire v. Lee, 49 S. E. 834, 838, 121 Ga. 624 (citing Stringfellow v. Stringfellow, 37 S. E. 767, 112 Ga. 494, 497; Bardwell & Co. v. Edwards, 45 S. E. 40, 117 Ga. 825; 1 Wash. Real Prop. [6th Ed.] § 368; Knowles v. Lawton, 18 Ga. 476, 63 Am. Dec. 290; Cole v. Grigsby [Tex.] 35 S. W. 690; Asch v. Asch [N. Y.] 18 Abb. N. C. 82; Bomar v. Mullins [S. C.] 4 Rich. Eq. 80; Johnson v. Johnson, 7 Allen [89 Mass.] 196, 83 Am. Dec. 676).

Rights are said to be "merged" when the same person who is bound to pay is also entitled to receive. This is more properly called a confusion of rights or extinguishment. Muscogee Mfg. Co. v. Eagle & Phenix Mills, 54 S. E. 1028, 1031, 126 Ga. 210, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1139 (quoting Bouvier Law Dict. word "Merger," subtitle "Of Rights"; and citing Rawle, Covenants [5th Ed.] § 223; Sibley v. Beard, 5 Ga. 550; Fields v. Willingham, 49 Ga. 344; Willis v. McGough, 56 Ga. 198; Civ. Code 1895, § 3106; Goodell v. Bennett, 22 Wis. 535; Brown v. Metz, 33 Ill. 339, 85 Am. Dec. 277; Silverman v. Loomis, 104 Ill. 137; Waterbury v. Head, 12 N. Y.
